If I were led to offer myself for mission work, I should prefer to join the C.I.M. to any other mission. You may assure all those who support this mission by their prayers and money that all they give is carefully and prayerfully expended. Should there be any who are desirous of coming to this country in the C.I.M., you can tell them—and let there be no mistake made—that if they expect rich living, fine houses, or a large salary, they had far better remain where they are, as they would be very greatly disappointed. But if they are prepared to trust in the Lord for all things, to live humbly, to be looked upon as fools by many foreigners, then let them come; and I assure them that they will receive a warm welcome upon their arrival from the members of the Mission, and from many who have not the honour of being connected with it.

While I do not say that ladies are not wanted in China, I would point out the great need for more young men. Ladies can do a great deal certainly, but they cannot travel about the country as freely as men can; therefore I would urge upon you to send more men, and quickly too.

It is absolutely necessary for the C.I.M. to purchase land and build a house in I-Chang, as many members of the Mission pass through who have no place to stay in; it should be a station for a married couple. Land, being in great demand, is dear. I just mention this hoping you may know some of the Lord's people who would be glad to give for the special purpose. I have not spoken to Mr. Taylor about this, but I think you will find my statement to be correct.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MARCH 5.

KEEPING THE SABBATH. Neh. xiii. 15—22.
GOLDEN TEXT, Exod. xx. 8.

NEHEMIAH seems to have remained at Jerusalem from the 20th year of Artaxerxes to the 32nd year (v. 14, xiii. 6), and then to have returned to the king. How long he remained in Persia cannot be known, but evidently long enough for very serious evils to develop in Jerusalem. The vigorous measures of reform described in this chapter were effected after his return. It is impossible to tell in what year. The conjecture that it was in the year B.C. 426—that is, eighteen years after the previous lesson—is based upon the idea that about six years would be required for the growth of such abuses. In the meantime Ezra seems to have passed away, for Zadok is mentioned as Scribe (13). Artaxerxes Longimanus still reigns in Persia. It is not improbable that Malachi appeared about this time, for some of the abuses were such as he so earnestly denounced (comp. 10 with Mal. iii. 8).

The subject of this lesson is the desecration of the Sabbath, and the stern measures which Nehemiah adopted.

How the Sabbath was profaned (15, 16).—In three ways: (1) By toil. Nehemiah personally "saw" in the country round about Jerusalem the people treading their winepresses. The winepress was a large vat about eight feet square and a foot deep, in which the grapes were trodden by feet of men (Isa. lxiii. 3), and the juice flowed through an aperture into a smaller vat, from which it was collected in vessels.—Prof. C. H. Toy. (2) By traffic. The produce of the land was brought in from the country to Jerusalem for storage or sale on the Sabbath day. (3) By encouraging foreign dealers (16). Tyre was one of the cities of Phœnicia, situated on the coast of the Mediterranean, north-west of Jerusalem. It was a great commercial city (Ezek. xxvii.), but as wicked as it was prosperous. It was a fearful abuse that such people were allowed to make the Sabbath a day of traffic in the city of Jerusalem. There was every necessity for Nehemiah's stern measures of reform.

What led to this abuse.—It is always profitable to see how an evil begins. Trace it to its source. To avoid the more serious evils we need to avoid the comparatively trifling beginning. (1) Tobiah and Sanballat seems to have taken advantage of Nehemiah's absence, and to have secured an alliance with Judah. The attitude which Nehemiah had taken against these men may have been deemed too severe. Eliashib, the high priest, was more yielding. They had claimed to be friends, why should he not treat them as such? Hence, Tobiah had a chamber set apart for him in the temple court (5—7), and a grandson of Eliashib was married to a daughter of Sanballat (28). So the abuses began with the formation of these unholy alliances. (2) The result of this was the neglect of temple worship. Tithes were withheld, and the Levites were compelled to forsake their sacred service, and to earn their living by their own toil (10—12). How seriously their evil associations have corrupted them! (3) Other abuses followed, including a return to the evil of mixed marriages, which Ezra had reformed (Ezra ix. 10). Sabbath desecration was a companion evil. It was as foolish as it was wicked. It was a repetition of the very sin for which the nation had been judged and the city destroyed before (Jer. xvii. 20—27). They were deliberately sowing the same seed which produced that harvest of ruin.

How Nehemiah corrected it (17—22).—He began by reproving the nobles (17). Possibly they had not committed the actual sins, but they had connived at it in others, had not condemned it, nor used their influence against it. We are guilty of the sin which we allow when we have power to prevent it. Their sin was inviting further wrath upon Israel (18). All sin is folly. As surely as fire burns, so surely does sin destroy. Reproof was followed by action. The measures Nehemiah took were characteristic of the man. He was full of energy, determination, courage, and exercised his authority wisely. Those who would profane the Sabbath were not allowed to enter the city, for the gates were shut (19) and guarded (22). Nor were they allowed to be outside the walls. Nehemiah's threats were not empty words (20, 21). The prayer with which the lesson closes is another characteristic of the man. He never lost the consciousness of his relation to God, and of God's nearness to him. Prayer and effort were combined, so that all he did was done by God's direction, and owed its success to God's blessing.

This lesson is an important one for to-day. Sabbath desecration and its accompanying neglect of the sanctuary (Lev. xix. 30) are becoming far too common. False ideas of liberty are working incalculable mischief. That is not liberty which involves disobedience to God's law. The Sabbath law is not abrogated if the day of its observance is changed. It is a law of God, but based upon the physical, as well as the spiritual, needs of man. No nation can ignore it without serious and disastrous consequences. A Paris correspondent of the New York World said in 1867, Sunday here "is the day they work the hardest." Only those who have seen can "know the sequences of this feverish activity. There is not an old stonemason, or an old shoemaker, or an old carpenter, or any other old artisan in Paris. An artisan five-and-forty years old is generally so completely worn out that he is fit for nothing." They are no friends of the nation who would counsel the profanation of this day.

Beware of the beginnings of this evil. Many a ruined career began by preferring a walk to the Sunday-school on Sunday afternoon.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 26.—1 KINGS XXII.

God's children will pierce themselves through with many sorrows, if they ally themselves with his foes. What though 400 men professing to be inspired cry Peace, peace. There can be no peace to the wicked. Better a thousand times to be Micaiah, in prison and hated, yet bearing uncompromising witness against stiff-necked iniquity, than to sit beside it without rebuking it as Jehoshaphat did. In the judgment of the ages and of God the prophets who dare to stand alone, and to endure any suffering rather than yield their countenance to the sin of high places, are they who shine like stars. The ivory house of Ahab and the cities that he built have perished, but this simple noble protest is a fountain of life and blessing. Oh, my soul, dare to stand and live alone with God!

When we have set ourselves in a way that is not good, and do not want to know the truth, many voices speak to assure us which deceive us to our doom. Micaiah puts this into a bold metaphor, when he speaks of a lying spirit being commissioned by God. The plain truth is that when men refuse the Spirit of God, they are given over to the spirit of falsehood by the very necessities of the case. Do not hide from a true knowledge of yourself. Judge yourself, nay, ask God to judge you, that you be not judged. Even though you can hear nothing good of yourself, but only evil. It is better so. You may yet be saved from the chariot-washing at the foot of Samaria. No disguise will avail to avert the unerring arrow bearing the summons of God.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27.—2 KINGS I.

Ahaziah's messengers necessarily passed Jerusalem on their way to Ekron. It was therefore a direct insult to Jehovah to ask the help of the heathen oracle. As Elijah said, it was as if there were no God in Israel. See how the pride of man rages against the will and way of God! But in vain! The strongest regiments that come up against Him and his servants shall be broken in pieces. Around Elijah there was an invisible cordon of angels, as real as the soldiers of Ahaziah; and so it is with all who live by faith. These are unhurt in lions' dens, unsinged by flames, hidden in the secret of his pavilion, safe folded beneath his feathers. No weapon that is forged against them can prosper, and every tongue that rises in judgment against them they condemn.

These successive fifties perished because they shared in the contemptuous arrogance of their monarch, but as soon as one man spoke in a different tone, the awful destruction of would-be captors stayed. With the froward He shows Himself froward, with the merciful, merciful.

But how different the dispensation in which we live. Referring to this scene, the Saviour said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of; my mission is not to destroy, but to save. We should breathe the spirit of our age, the age of the Holy Ghost, of revealed love, of grace abounding over sin. The fire in which we must believe is that of Pentecost, which destroys not souls but sin. Oh, that we had the power of calling it from heaven, to consume sin and transform sinners! "Thou Spirit of burning, come."

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28.—2 KINGS II.

One of the greatest chapters of the Old Testament. Here we see how a man who one day lay on the desert sands and wished to die was translated that he should not see death. A special vehicle was sent to bring him home to his father's palace! Oh, you who are sitting in the shadow of death, there are days of rapture and transfiguration in store for you, only be still and wait patiently. Your God will come. The waters of sorrow shall pass before you, and the fire shall bear you to your home. Be strong; yea, be strong.

They two! How close their kinship! Each noble, but in a different way, one supplying the other's lack. Who can estimate the blessing of such fellowship, tested and tried by repeated experiences borne in company? The older man by repeated invitations gave the younger the chance of dropping off, if he wished, and the tenacity of his purpose showed the quality of his soul. Difficulties in Christian living frequently suggest our turning back. But if we comply, we miss the radiant vision and mighty endowment. Let us dare to persevere, with undeviating, unswerving faith, till we are clothed in living power.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1.—2 KINGS III.

How strange it is that, after the terrible lesson received in his alliance Ahab, that Jehoshaphat again drifted into alliance with his son. Ah, experience is not enough to keep us from making fatal mistakes. Nothing but the grace of God and daily watchfulness can avail for that. But even when we have turned aside from Him, God will not desert us, and will answer our appeal for help as He did for these kings and their armies.

In all God's gifts there is the need for co-operation. He alone can send the water, but we must trench the ground. We must prepare the receptacles, which He alone can fill. It is for us to erect buildings, to organise the machinery, to gather meetings, to invite men to hear the Word, to prepare and deliver the message, to build up Sunday-schools, and the other adjuncts of mission and church work; but the living water can only come by the way of the throne. Its advent is often unannounced. There is neither wind nor rain. A gracious influence suffuses the congregation. Heads are bowed, tears fall silently, lives are changed. God's heritage is refreshed, many confess what He has done for their souls. Let us pray for that, doing our work carefully and abundantly, not stinting time or pains in digging the ditches, assured that God will do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think.

THURSDAY, MARCH 2.—2 KINGS IV.

Elisha's ministry was one of redemption. He was ever counter-working the effects of sin and evil. In this he is a type of Jesus, who is "the universal Remedy of all evil broken forth in nature and the creature; the Destruction of misery, sin, darkness, death, and hell; the Resurrection and Life of all fallen nature; the unwearied Compassion, the long-suffering Pity, the never-ceasing Mercifulness of God to every want and infirmity of human nature" (W. Law).

Thus does Jesus fill our empty vessels with the Holy Ghost. He puts no limit on their number or size, but always stands ready to fulfil all our need, only lamenting when there is not a vessel more. God's only limitation is that which we impose by our mischief. His oil will never stay so long as we have empty vessels to bring.

So also does Jesus come into our hearts, when we make Him welcome; and coming, He gives life, and life more abundantly—first the life of birth, and then life through death. The law cannot revive dead souls. It lies impassive on their faces. But He communicates it, as a spark from his own body. And Jesus does more. He turns the poison into food, extracting the harm that we had carelessly gathered for ourselves; and multiplies our slender resources, so that they avail for many.

There is a "but" in every life, which is meant to bring us to God. The little maid was "the interpreter," the one of a thousand, who spoke true and health-giving words. Let no one forsake their post in a godless household, because there may be some Naaman, whose life will be given back from death as the result of some simple testimony for God.

The aristocratic sinner has his own notions of the treatment he merits. It is sorely against the grain for the officer, the courtier, the child of fashion to be treated like any ordinary sinner. "Behold I thought" figures very largely with us all. And we must take care not to minister to that kind of pride. Elisha had a special reason in the course he adopted in dealing with this imperious nature. But where the leprosy of sin is eating out the heart and there is no other hope, humility will succeed to rage. Sorely wounded, the soul will gladly catch at any means of cure, though it be bathing in the despised Jordan.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4.—2 KINGS VI.

Though an host should encamp against us, our hearts need not fear. More are they for us, than those against us. This made the prophet so calm in the midst of danger. He was able with the greatest composure to lead this army to Samaria, where he introduced them to the man whom they had come to seek, and where he fed them on New Testament principles. For the same reason he sat quietly in the house, when the king was meditating his death.

Our blessed Lord was always conscious of the environing presence of these horses and chariots of fire. He had only to ask the Father, and He would give Him twelve legions of angels. He reminded his judge that he could have had no power at all, unless it had been given him.

And we also are ministered to. And may God give us the open eye, that we may behold the unseen, and walk as those to whom the mysteries of the eternal world are unveiled.

A Roman Catholic Mission.

BY REV. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

I know that Roman Catholics have always countenanced efforts for arousing the enthusiasm of their people, and keeping them strongly bound to their church; but not until recently have I had an opportunity of seeing how they do their work. To begin with, they announced their work a fortnight before it began as a "mission"; the information was only conveyed to the public by means of large bills posted on the walls which enclose the church, no hoarding or shop window that I noticed contained one of them; the preachers were to be "the Redemptorist Fathers," but no name was given. The nature and object of a mission were explained on the bills, as well as the times and character of the services stated. A mission is an "extraordinary grace"; by attending to it thousands have been saved, by neglecting it many have been lost. "A mission is a message from Almighty God to his children to put them in mind that there is but one thing necessary, the salvation of their souls." This good true note is unfortunately spoiled by other words which make man his own saviour; nevertheless, one could not but be glad to see on a bill displayed that "the one thing necessary is the salvation of the soul."

THE OPENING SERVICE.

I did not care to go to mass; I wanted to hear how and what the "Fathers" preached, so I went to an evening service, and on the way heard a few of the passionately earnest sentences of a band of Salvationists who were in the open air close to the Catholic church. Theirs was a moving congregation, and therefore must have been a fairly large one from first to last. Inside the church some sixty or seventy persons were present, when the "Fathers," one young, one aged, entered with five or six attendants, one of them a local priest. Most of the congregation, which ultimately numbered about 200, came in late. The young "Father" ascended the steps of the "altar," and began in a monotonous low sing-song voice some kind of prayer, in which the people joined him, only one word of which could I distinguish, the word "Hail."

Then he spoke a few sentences on the subject of our Lord's sorrow—why was He in such anguish of soul? "Because the sins of the whole of mankind were laid upon Him, and He had to make satisfaction to the justice of his Father." Again some unintelligible prayer, followed by a few sentences of exhortation touching our Lord's sufferings. "If our Lord carried our sins, how ashamed and grieved we ought to be on account of them!" The sentence that struck me most was one in which, if I rightly caught it, the "Father" spoke of our Lord's sufferings as having been aggravated by his mother, who stood by his cross powerless to aid him. The congregation joined in the devotional part of this early service with perfect familiarity, as if it was an ordinary thing. Next came a hymn, sung very sweetly to an old Methodist tune, all joining as they sat. I say an old Methodist tune, but possibly the Methodists derived it from the Roman Catholics.

THE OLD "FATHER'S" SERMON.

The sermon really was that of the old "Father." Half an hour had been occupied with the devotional service, but the sermon took fifty minutes! Let that be noted in these days when idle Protestants who are ignorant of their indebtedness to preaching lazily wish that their ministers would give them ten or fifteen minutes' sermons. He stood on the steps of the altar, with his biretta on his head, with no book of any kind to refer to, and with no notes to aid his memory.

Having reminded his audience that he had treated of the subject of sin the night before, he announced "the sacrament of penance" as his subject then. You could do nothing with sin until it had been confessed; a man must be sorry for it and cease to commit it, or there could be no pardon. Two ways were possible for getting at the condition of a sinner's heart; God might have given his ministers power to read the thoughts, and thus the priest might have passed down the aisle of the church granting to one sinner whose state of mind was right the gift of absolution, and withholding it from another whose state of mind was wrong. Failing that, the sinner might confess his own sin. Christ commanded as much when He gave the power to remit sins; for how can the priest remit if he does not know?

"But it is degrading to confess your sins to a fellow mortal." And here the "Father" felt he had to grapple with the ingrained hatred of confession which characterises a Protestant nation, but he attacked it in a very unsatisfactory way. He could only quote the Fathers, and lay special emphasis on the fact that the most popular book written by Augustine was his "Confessions."

WHY DO THE PEOPLE NOT COME IN?

From this point he branched out to inquire why the people do not come in to receive the ministrations of the Church. "They have the Scriptures as well as we," he said—a statement which seemed to me to have more truth on one side of it than on the other, and which I thought rather accounted for the people staying away than being a perplexing element in the question of why they stayed away. Then, again, he said, the Church herself is always beautiful, fair and glorious as a city set upon a hill. Why, then, do the people not come to her? "Because of the bad lives of so many Catholics." And now began some speaking which was as plain and downright as any that Latimer or Spurgeon ever indulged in. He said he had "given missions" in all parts of England and Scotland for the last twenty-five years, and he was grieved to have to testify that in every place he went to some of the worst characters were Catholics. He was sometimes ashamed to be known as a Catholic, and would be glad if he could hide himself, or veil his identity.

WHY NOT RETURN TO THE CHURCH?

In illustration of this point he told an anecdote of some family which had once had communion with the Church, but whose father, when he died, had left them in charge of Protestants. The "Father," feeling it to be his duty to try and recover the eldest son, called upon him, and found him reading the newspaper. When asked why he did not return to the Church, he closed his paper, and said: "I cannot argue the matter with you; you are a man of learning, and I should get the worst of it. But if you want to know why I do not return to the Church, look out at the window here and see that gang of young fellows playing at pitch-and-toss. They are some of the most disreputable citizens we have, and they are all Catholics." The "Father" admitted he was silenced, and could only take up his hat and walk away.

THOUSANDS CONFESS, AND YET GO TO HELL.

The admission of such manifest and painful inconsistency, of course, brought up the question, "Then what is the use of confession?" A question which enabled the preacher to pin his hearers in a tighter corner than ever. The inconsistency came from a "bad confession," a point which was illustrated by another anecdote, and one well calculated to impress a predisposed audience. A young woman who was dying was visited by a brother, who congratulated her on her nearness to heaven, and asked her, when she had entered it, to pray for him. To his horror, she replied she was not going to heaven, but to hell; for in her girlish days she had been guilty of some sin of which she had not frankly unbosomed herself to the priest, had made "a bad confession." Her brother rushed off for a priest, but when they came she was dead.

This necessity for full confession was driven home farther by another story quite as impressive as the former, which seemed to show that to an honest priest the work of obtaining full confession from "a poor sinner" was a burden to his own heart. Ordinary humanity would say so. There once fell from the "Father's" lips, the words "Jesus Christ made atonement for our sins," but then the man-made condition of confession to a priest before pardon could be enjoyed took away its effect.

At the close of his sermon, parts of which were delivered with great animation, and sometimes too loudly to be distinctly heard, the "Father" fell upon his knees at the foot of the altar steps, and invoked "our blessed Lord" in an impassioned prayer, apparently extemporaneous, but which it was difficult to follow, because his back was turned toward the congregation. Then followed singing by the whole congregation, more paternosters than I managed to count, the burning of incense, and the elevation of the Host. I came away grieved to think how hard man had made that which is easy, how difficult of attainment that which God had brought nigh, and had offered without money and without price. There was a tone of hardness, of forcing and driving, about the sermon, which was not pleasant, and which appeared to me to come from the hard ungracious teaching delivered as the teaching of the Church. I should say that an ordinary English audience would resist and resent such a mode of address, and that it would never make a convert.

THE CONNELLAN MISSION.

Rev. Thomas Connellan is engaged in a lecturing tour through the Midlands and in some of the towns in Scotland. On Feb. 7 Mr. Connellan spoke to a large meeting in Leicester. The subject of his address was "The Confessional," and a considerable number of Roman Catholics were present. They were very quiet, and even respectful in their demeanour, but one of their body, the local schoolmaster, came on to the platform at the conclusion of the address, and put some questions to the lecturer. The questions were replied to, and after the meeting some Roman Catholics awaited the lecturer at the door and bade him good night.

Mr. Connellan lectured in Northampton on Feb. 9, and again things passed off quietly. Indeed, a member of the Town Council stood up in the body of the hall and, in seconding a vote of thanks to the lecturer, complimented him on the Christian spirit he had displayed towards his former co-religionists.

Things did not pass off quite so pleasantly in Carlisle, however. A controversy has been raging in that town for some weeks in reference to some convent dungeons which Rev. Jacob Primmer exposed, and an angry feeling has been growing, especially among the lower orders of Roman Catholics. Mr. Connellan gave two Gospel addresses in the Drill Hall on Sunday, Feb. 12, and the large hall was crowded on both occasions. Although large numbers of Roman Catholics were present, both meetings were perfectly orderly. On Monday Mr. Connellan lectured on the "Religious Condition of Ireland," Mr. Henry Carr being in the chair. He had not spoken for five minutes when it was evident that an organised opposition had to be faced. The lecturer gave a series of facts, with names, places, dates, &c., and professed his willingness to afford any further information required. Some of the facts seemed to pinch some of the audience severely; the women being even more demonstrative than the men.

On Tuesday night Mr. Connellan lectured on "Why I left the Church of Rome," and the hall was packed in every corner long before the hour fixed for commencing. Fully three thousand people were jammed together within the walls, and almost as many had to turn away from the doors. Roman Catholics were present in large numbers, and a band of woman had taken up a position in front of the platform with school-girls to form a choir. All expected there would have been rough work, but the coolness of the lecturer (most likely the presence of the Lord Jesus, whose aid he asked for in his opening sentence) kept the meeting quiet to the close.

Mr. Connellan's method was certainly well conceived. He held a Douay Bible in his left hand, and quoted first the teaching of the Council of Trent, then contrasted with that the express words of the Roman Catholic Version. For example, on the question of mediators, he said: "There are other mediators of intercession in heaven besides Jesus Christ; such as angels, and saints, and especially the Virgin Mary" (Council of Trent, Sess. 25). Paul says: "There is one God, and one mediator of God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. ii. 5). "Jesus saith to him, I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh to the Father but by Me" (John xiv. 6).

This was the method adopted throughout, and it seemed to take the Roman Catholics entirely aback. There was scarcely any interruption, and during his concluding remarks on Christ's Priesthood, using Hebrews vii. and ix. for his text, a pin might have been heard to drop.

THE EVANGELISTS' HOME, BIRMINGHAM.—A friend who recently visited Rev. Joseph Odell writes:—"During my stay, I had an opportunity of looking into the work, and I was delighted with what I saw. So far, seventy young men have gone from the Home to preach the Gospel in England and abroad. They work on unsectarian lines, and their labours have been wonderfully blessed. Mr. Odell is about to build a large hall in a thickly-populated part of Birmingham, to gather in the neglected masses. He would not lack the means he so much needs to proceed with this undertaking, were his work more widely known."

The Late MRS. PENNEFATHER,

FOUNDER OF THE DEACONESSES' INSTITUTION, MILDMAY.

THIS century has produced more than its quota of illustrious men and women. As it nears its end, one by one they are being mustered out of service into rest. Poets, statesmen, divines, missionaries, are passing out of sight. What a long line of worthies the nineteenth century has already garnered in, and it is not yet complete!

Among the noble names which have become household words, none stands higher than that of Catherine Pennefather. No one will be more missed or more genuinely mourned. Wherever the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ has been proclaimed, there will be lonely and heavy hearts when the tidings reach them that she has passed away.

At three score and fifteen her heart was as fresh and her interest in her life-work as keen as most have at the beginning. She bore her years and infirmities with such a grace that they seemed to those who loved her only added charms. Her death came as a surprise to those who lived in daily contact with her, for up to the few days preceding her last illness her bright and buoyant spirits had lost none of their elasticity, her sound and well-balanced judgment none of its vigour, and her intense longing for God's glory rather increased as her bodily strength failed. Many perplexing questions regarding the work had to be settled at the side of her couch only a few weeks before her death. In those decisions her wisdom, her unselfishness, and loving consideration in every detail were seen by those who knew all it cost her. She had a remarkable grasp of all departments of her many-sided work. She was the constant counsellor and trusted friend of every worker, as well as of the Superintendents of Departments and Heads of Missions.

Mrs. Pennefather was the youngest daughter of the late Rear-Admiral the Hon. James Wm. King. She was born in Angley, Kent, February 9, 1817. In 1847, she was married to Rev. Wm. Pennefather, youngest son of Baron Pennefather, of the Court of Exchequer of Ireland. Mr. Pennefather was then incumbent of Mellifont, near Drogheda, where they spent several years, doing what they could to alleviate the wretchedness and ignorance of that priest-ridden people. Mr. Pennefather's health failing, he accepted a living at Wilton, in Buckinghamshire, where he and his life companion found a field quite needy and suited to their wishes. They soon set in motion activities which changed "this waste land into a garden." In December, 1852, they removed to Barnet, where they initiated the line of work which developed into the present well-known institutions of Mildmay. On April 4, 1864, they began their life-work; having removed from Barnet to St. Jude's, Mildmay, London. Here Mr. Pennefather entered upon his duties as Vicar, and here he remained till his death in 1873.

It is impossible to separate these two as founders of the Deaconesses' Institution; it was given to Mrs. Pennefather to carry out what they planned together with perfect unanimity of thought and feeling. His name is just as much interwoven with Mildmay as hers, although for twenty years the work has been solely under her care.

Not much is known of her early life, but all that is known is interesting as throwing light upon her character. At the age of twelve she was a very earnest Christian, though she never could tell the exact date of her conversion. At fifteen she became a Sunday-school teacher, and from that time till her death she was always in active Christian work. She gave full sixty years of constant and consecrated service to God for the poor and sinful of all classes. Few show such a vigorous and healthful type of Christianity as hers. Her life seemed to be formed upon the great principles laid down by Christ, and these were her rule of action in little as well as great things; thus her character grew into symmetry and beauty.

She was very fond of books, and took great pleasure in learning. Botany was a favourite pursuit, and she never lost her interest in flowers. While young, she made herself acquainted with the wild flowers of Kent; studied their habits and knew their haunts. A friend who spent many holidays with her, later in life, says that after her eyesight had nearly failed her, they were in the north, and she interested herself in the wild flowers brought to her, holding them in the best light and passing her hand lovingly over them, feeling the texture and shape of the leaves, asking questions, using the eyes of others, and thus finding their proper classification. She also had artistic tastes, and painted very well.

If she had devoted her time to literary work, she doubtless would have been a poet of no mean rank. She has written many beautiful hymns and poems. One poem, entitled "Conflict and Choice," throws light upon the struggle which led to the choice of her life-work. She took an intelligent interest in all that was going on in the world, as well as in her own particular work. She conversed with ease, and the charm of her imagination and humour made her a delightful companion. She had a large store of reminiscences, which the young workers delighted to call out.

While she shrank from the least publicity for herself or her workers, yet she believed that woman's powers and abilities ought to be employed for the good of mankind. She started her Deaconess work in the face of opposition. "Yet having obtained help of God it still continues." Indeed, very few women who have been before the public during the last thirty years can show results like these, accomplished in the most quiet manner.

When her husband died, twenty years ago, many fears were felt lest the work should fail, but she showed herself equal to the emergency. She assumed the direction of the Deaconess work, and suggested that a small local board of control or finance committee of gentlemen should be empowered to look into the management of every department, and that they should be consulted in case of an unusual outlay of money. She thought it unnecessary to have a ladies' committee in addition to her own staff of superintendents. All accounts were to be looked into by a qualified accountant.

In accordance with this policy, clearly outlined by her, the work has been carried on for twenty years with most satisfactory results. She has been very fortunate in the Christian gentlemen who have constituted the board of control, while the growth of the work begun, and the development of new branches, are the best monuments to her wise direction.

The new branches of work need not be enumerated. The missions have been constantly increasing in number and strength. Two new hospitals have been added, and have been in successful operation for a number of years; the one at Bethnal Green was recently reopened with greatly enlarged facilities. For the character of these hospitals enough praise cannot be given. Bethnal Green Hospital is, in the most emphatic sense, a mission hospital. It is connected with a very flourishing medical mission, also established by the efforts of the elect lady. Two other medical missions have been opened as well as the Convalescent Home at Barnet and the Mildmay Home at Margate.

The foreign field has by no means been neglected. At this time one of her deaconesses is on her way to open a new medical mission in the Holy Land; another is en route for Jamaica; while a third has arrived in China, and is about entering on work in a new province. These three were taken from the tried workers; and twenty-six from the Training Home at The Willows have recently swelled the ranks of those who had before entered upon this field.

Another subject for anxiety among the friends of Mildmay, at the death of the founder of the Conference Hall, was that of the Annual Conference. While a few thought it could not go on, Mrs. Pennefather never for a moment hesitated, but urged that all the steps should be taken for the usual Conference in June. She planned for this, and wrote to the gentleman who undertook the responsibility, giving some hints as to one or two points which had been arrived at by experience:—

One thing I am sure you will be aware of, is the extreme tenderness and delicacy of the "Unity of the Spirit" in the meetings, the least jar of divided feeling (by whatever cause) seems to vibrate through many hearts and check the full current of blessing. . . . The original difficulty started by good and great men with regard to conferences, and by them considered insuperable, was the immense variety of opinion in the Christian Church. The successful meeting of that difficulty has been accomplished only by rising so high that all opinion was left at the foot of the Mount and one voice heard, "This is my beloved Son; hear Him." . . . May I touch one other point? The object of the addresses is not theological teaching, but spiritual lifting and advancement in the Christian life—a step nearer God and nearer to one another has been the desired attainment.

That the Conferences has realised this ideal, given twenty years ago, all who have enjoyed them can attest. It is difficult properly to estimate the spiritual power that has gone forth from the Mildmay Conference. It has been emphatically a "rallying point" for those who believe in the unity of God's people and the integrity of God's Word. Any influence that breaks down the barriers that separate believers is an influence greatly needed. Loyalty to one's own branch of the Church Universal has been proved here to be consistent with the most cordial sympathy and loving unity with all who love God and desire his glory.

The Association of Female Workers was organised by Mrs. Pennefather at the request of many ladies of different branches of the Church. Of this organisation she was the beloved president, till death removed her on January 12 of the present year.

It is, however, in the organisation and management of the Deaconesses' Institution that Mrs. Pennefather's remarkable power has been best seen. The principles upon which she chose her field of operation were not based upon worldly policy. This is quite apparent from the location chosen for her first mission. Bethnal Green was one of the most degraded districts of London, and the work was commenced during the cholera of 1866. From that time the needy and destitute parishes have always enlisted her interest.

Mrs. Pennefather was especially fitted for this important work both by nature and grace. She was a woman of unusual symmetry of character; she was self-reliant, well balanced, and endowed with a judgment that was masculine in its comprehensive grasp, combined with a mind that applied itself to detail with facility, and a heart of rare tenderness and love. Men of good, sound judgment sought her counsel and deferred to her opinion.

Her kind consideration for the poor was a marked characteristic, and this was impressed upon every deaconess. Her interest in every case of conversion or reform was quite touching. Nothing seemed to refresh her so much as to hear of blessing in the missions. Her prayers were sought for the difficult cases, and she would remember them by name and inquire for them long after. She has left a large staff of well-trained workers who will be sure to carry on the work in the same loving spirit and mindful of her strong desires. The words she wrote to the workers when the death of Mr. Pennefather seemed to fall with such crushing weight are very fitting to her faithful band now she if gone:—

There is one thought pressing on me night and day. It is that of our responsibility. The signal mercies of bygone days have fastened many eyes upon us, and now it seems the world and the Church are drawing near, like King Darius of old to the confines of our sorrow and saying with him, "Is thy God able to deliver thee?" You and I have to give the answer, while demons and angels stand by to hear. Blessed be his name; others beside Daniel can say, "My God hath sent his angel and shut the lion's mouth." I think our God would have even more than this from us. He would have us, like Abraham, account that He is able out of death and desolation to raise up such a harvest of blessing as eternity alone can measure; and because we believe this to go forward without any faltering in our faith or any collapse in our work. . . . "Believe ye that I am able to do this?"

A full chorus from all her trusted and faithful band comes, "Yes! we do believe." In this faith her work will move on without any falter or collapse.

A CHARACTERISTIC MEMORIAL.

of the late Mrs. Pennefather has been provided in the volume of extracts from her addresses to Bible classes and elsewhere, published by Mr. Elliot Stock, under the title of "That Nothing be Lost." There is an extract for each day in the year, and in some cases a poem is given instead of a prose passage. The title suggests "fragments," but the extracts are weighty enough and substantial enough to deserve a more suggestive designation. As samples, we quote the selections given for February 20th and 23rd; both of these are strikingly appropriate as setting forth the special forms of service that Mildmay and its institutions have rendered to the churches of this generation:—

February 20.

"The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." If only people would remember this verse, we should not hear so much nonsense about sects and diverse opinions, and the disputings that bring souls into endless perplexities. Do we want to gather with Christ, and to help those who are coming to join the ranksof the Prince? Then let us talk about the King and the laws of the kingdom; not of this or that mode of worship; not of meats and ordinances; not stumbling over minor points in which Christians do not agree, nor entering upon subtle questions, which only bewilder; but keeping before those we teach this broad view of great principles.

Speak much of righteousness, peace, joy in the Holy Ghost. For we should remember that the subjects of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ are to be characterised by these three things, righteousness, peace, joy. We shall be a very holy people if we belong to Him, for his kingdom is "righteousness"; we shall be a very loving people, for his kingdom is "peace," peace with God, and peace in our hearts towards all; and we shall be a very joyful people, because his kingdom is "joy,"—joy in the Holy Ghost. Do you not think that if we kept these three simple points before our minds and the minds of those we teach, we should avoid a great deal of disputation? Would it not be better if questions which engender strife were kept in the background, and these primary things brought to the front? The admission to the kingdom, the laws of the kingdom, the future of the kingdom, would surely give us enough to talk about without distracting our thoughts with unprofitable controversies.

February 23.

What a blessed thought it is, when ministering to sick ones, that you are doing what the Monarch of the Kingdom did when down on earth! Of all the vast multitude that intruded on his leisure and broke in upon his moments of rest, He did not reject one, and he had something to do individually with every sufferer. I think those who have much dealing with sick ones may be greatly cheered by the sympathy of Jesus in this work. In the weariness which long nursing produces, and when watching by dying beds, there is for them a special consolation. Ministering to the sick was the voluntary service to which Jesus devoted a large portion of his life on earth. Oh! dear friends, never regard this as an inferior part of service. It frightens me to hear such a word applied to nursing work, or to any little acts of kindness done to the men and women around us. Can it be inferior when our Lord chose to do it? Do you not think that by stepping forward Himself to do it He has imprinted upon it such a glory that the most advanced saint may deem it an honour to follow in the Master's steps?

THE LATE ADOLPH SAPHIR, D.D.

As a memorial to this gifted Hebrew Christian minister a few of his friends decided that anything in the shape of a graven or a molten image, a painted window or monumental brass, would be very unsuitable; and that the best way to honour his memory would be to circulate some of his writings, instinct as these are with reverence for Holy Scripture, and manifesting great spiritual insight and firm grasp of truth. About £300 have been contributed by less than fifty subscribers, and 2000 copies of his early work, "Christ and the Scriptures," are in process of distribution, chiefly amongst students preparing for the ministry of the Word. A considerable number of copies of his latest published book, "The Divine Unity of Scripture," have now been acquired, and will be sent to ministers and students with discrimination; and other books will be selected for the same purpose. These works are well fitted to prove an antidote to much of the irreverent and shallow criticism now prevalent within the professing Church.

Bible-loving people will do well to help the committee in furthering this gratuitous circulation of Dr. Saphir's writings in this perilous age, when so many are "giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils" (1 Tim. iv. 1).

The hon. secretary of the committee is Mr. C. E. Greenwood, Elim, Coper's Cope-road, Beckenham, S.E.; and the hon. treasurer is Mr. Richard H. Hill, 3, Lombard Court, Lombard-street, E.C.

The Anti-Opium Convention.

THE "call to prayer," issued in connection with last week's anti-opium meetings, awakened a good response, and many came together to wait upon God in the matter, hence the various prayer meetings were hearty and earnest.

At the ladies' meeting on Tuesday morning, mentioned briefly in our last, Mrs. Terrell presided, and Mrs. Bryson, of Tientsin, touchingly told something of what she had witnessed of the ravages of opium in China. Miss Petrie, B.A., Miss Headland, and Lady Dodsworth, spoke on various aspects of the question, while Miss Soonderbai Powar concluded with a characteristic plea on behalf of her sisters in India.

Rev. J. S. Adams presided over the afternoon prayer meeting, when Rev. C. P. Hard, from the Central Provinces, India, and Mr. Hutton, of Chin Kiang, China, described facts as they had seen them.

Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE said in the course of a stirring address: There are deep lessons, singularly appropriate to the present question, in Luke xix. 12-27; we have there three distinct classes: unprofitable servants, faithful servants, and enemies. The enemies were the scribes, pharisees, lawyers, and priests, who, being at first enemies, ended by becoming crucifiers and murderers. We see in the Gospel of John three stages in this development of hate. First in John xi. 48, we find self-interest is alarmed; then in John xviii. 40, we see that Barabbas is preferred to Christ, that is sin, and sinful indulgence is chosen; and lastly, in John xix. 12, we see that worldly policy has much to do with the giving up of Jesus to the cross. I believe that these represent the motives and forces lying at the root of the opium evil, and concerned in maintaining the traffic, notwithstanding the appalling ruin wrought thereby in India, China, and the East generally.

We may not stay to consider the unprofitable servants, who may be taken to represent those professing Christians who fail to use their legitimate influence and raise their voices against what has been proved to be an intolerable evil and a crying iniquity. Then we have the faithful servants, the friends of the absent Lord. These use their gifts and talents, trading with what is his until He returns. We, as servants of the Lord Jesus, have our place and influence in the government of this country, and faithfulness to Him demands we should make the utmost possible use of the power entrusted to us. True, we are a little flock, as our Lord Himself termed us, but with God on our side victory is with us and we shall yet be more than conquerors.

Later in the afternoon Sir Matthew Dodsworth, Bart. (who has done good work in the cause in Yorkshire), presided at a delegates' conference, when a large number spoke, making practical suggestions as to opening up fresh localities, enlisting the aid of temperance and missionary workers, and utilising the Press in the spread of information.

The evening was devoted to a prayer meeting, at which Mr. E. Priestman presided, and in which many friends took part.

On the second day a prayer meeting was held in the morning, and in the afternoon the annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic took place.

THE EXETER HALL DEMONSTRATION.

In the evening a public demonstration was held in Exeter Hall.

Sir JOSEPH W. PEASE, Bart., M.P., who presided, said the committee had thought it right to call the meeting a few months earlier than usual in order that their protest might have some effect upon the new Parliament. The last Parliament passed a resolution declaring that the opium traffic was morally indefensible, and it was sincerely to be hoped that the new Parliament would confirm and strengthen that resolution. Some concessions had been obtained from former ministers, but these were not sufficient. They wished to stop the sale of opium to China. In the present Parliament there were several ministers who were favourable to their views. They had the Churches at their back, and he laid more stress upon that support than upon that of Cabinet Ministers. What they had to fight in reality was not so much public opinion here as Indian officialism. If they had the officials of India with them a way would soon be found for the suppression of the traffic. At the same time, there was cause for encouragement at the progress they had made.

Rev. C. C. FENN, of the C.M.S., moved that "This meeting enters its indignant protests against the declaration of the Secretary of State for India that the opium revenue, which is derived from poisoning and debauching the Chinese people, cannot be dispensed with, solely because an enormous profit is still derived from this immoral manufacture and traffic. In view of the vote of the House of Commons, which has stigmatised this traffic as 'morally indefensible,' and of the declaration of the present Prime Minister, in his last Midlothian Campaign, that it is 'associated with very much of bloodshed and of shame in our former history,' this meeting calls upon Her Majesty's Ministers, at once, to suppress it, and thereby put an end to what Mr. Gladstone, on the same occasion, deplored as 'the human misery and sin engendered in the interval caused by delay' in dealing with this 'abuse,' which has 'fattened, thriven, flourished, from year to year, and generation to generation.'" The speaker went on to give extracts showing that the unanimous testimony of missionaries is that opium smoking is an unmixed curse. The statement that the Chinese smoked the drug with impunity was nothing less than pure and undiluted nonsense. The whole traffic was a huge national crime, and must be swept away for ever.

Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, in the course of a vigorous speech, said that the time for argument was at an end. He declined to discuss the sophisms by which men defended the traffic. The statement that any evil was a necessity was the deadliest form of atheism. The people of India must not be punished for our sins. It is a shame and an abomination if we, with all our wealth, cannot govern India without manufacturing a revenue

OUT OF THE DAMNATION OF CHINA.

Our extravagant pension lists, and many other sources of reduction of expenditure, would cover the loss of the opium revenue many times over. The Government does not hesitate, without our leave, to spend millions of money for the purpose of killing people. Suppose they spend a little now for saving life. If it were true that any missionaries upheld the Governmental vice and liquor and opium traffics in India, it only showed the demoralising effect of association with Anglo-Indian officials. The Chinese missionaries were absolutely unanimous on this question. When he was a little boy, he remembered his blood being curdled by reading an account of the temples of the King of Dahomey being built on a foundation of the skulls of his enemies, but he never thought that he should live to see the day when the temple of Christianity in India would be reared upon the skulls and bones of murdered Chinese. This infamous traffic must be brought to an end, and brought to an end at once.

Rev. W. S. SWANSON, D.D., said: I do not believe that the Christian conscience of this country is dead, but the conscience needs to be awakened. There is a sad lack of information on this matter. We pass any amount of resolutions, but that is the end of it. The time for resolutions has gone, that of action has come. What are we going to do about it? Passing on to speak of his own observations and experience in China, the speaker gave a terrible account of the evils of opium, and added: No man who has spent a quarter of a century in China, who has seen things as they really are, will say, or has ever said, that the opium trade is anything but an unmitigated curse. On the ground of eternal righteousness between man and man, we demand that this soul-destroying traffic be put an end to.

A REMARKABLE REVELATION.

Mr. W. S. CAINE, M.P., moved that, "This meeting would urge upon the Indian Government the necessity, in the interest of the peoples of India, of protecting them against the spread of the insidious vices of opium-eating and opium-smoking, by the adoption and vigorous enforcement of administrative measures, based on the fundamental principles that the sale of opium and other poisonous drugs ought to be restricted to medical and scientific use, in accordance with the principle recognised in the legislation of the United Kingdom, and that discretionary powers for such sale should be entrusted only to responsible and carefully selected persons, who possess adequate knowledge of the deleterious properties of these drugs, who can readily be called to account for any improper use of the discretion conferred upon them, and whose remuneration in no degree depends on the amount of their sales." The most striking part of his telling and vigorous address was when Mr. Caine read the following confidential circular issued by the Commissioner of Excise, N.W. Provinces and Oudh, to all commissioners and collectors in these provinces:—

Sir,—You are already aware that henceforth the chandu and madak smoking is absolutely prohibited on the premises licensed for the sale of the drug. It is impossible to doubt that this prohibition will be followed by the opening in many places of unlicensed places of resort where smokers can obtain the facilities which they require, and that such places will have to be kept under observation, both for general reasons and also with a view to prevent the use of illicit opium. As the law now stands, the authorities have no power to suppress consumption on premises where opium or its preparations are not sold. There is nothing in the law to prevent anyone opening a saloon for the accommodation of opium smokers who bring their own chandu. He can supply pipes and lamps and service, and charge a fee for their use, and the law cannot touch him, unless he is detected selling opium or its preparations, or found in possession of more than the legal quantity. On this point the opinion of the Board of Revenue is that it is not altogether advisable that such places should be suppressed. Collectors should watch such establishments carefully so as to prevent the sale thereat of illicit opium. The known conditions of chandu smoking render the maintenance of some common place for the consumption of the drug an almost absolute necessity. No effort should be made to suppress such places, as it is better that they should be known, and thus be liable to supervision.

A more direct defiance of superior orders (commented Mr. Caine) was never committed by a Lieutenant-Governor than the issue of this confidential circular. It is a clear incitement to every holder of an opium licence throughout India to start a smoking den next door to his shop, putting it under the charge of a nephew or cousin, who would "supply pipes, lamps, and service" with absolute safety, assured by the Lieutenant-Governor that "the law cannot touch him," and that "no effort should be made to suppress him." I hear from all over India that dens of this kind are being freely started, especially in the North-West Provinces.

A PLEA FOR HER SISTERS.

Miss SOONDERBAI POWAR followed with one of her characteristic pleas, telling of what she herself had seen and known of the sad effects of opium pills and other preparations of the drug among her own people in India. Her spirit seem tinged with the sadness of some little disappointment. Last winter when here she had been so well received, that on returning to India she had told her people (oblivious of the slow motion of our nations and rulers in such matters) that England was aroused and would stop the wrong being done, but alas, coming back to this country she found things just as they were and nothing done. Having pathetically told of the recent death of her little niece through a dose of opium administered by a nurse, she concluded by saying that just as Christ waited at the grave of Lazarus, and said, "Take away the stone!" so He is waiting now, and saying to the churches of England, "Take away the stone of the opium traffic!" When that is done, He will say, "India, come forth! China, come forth!"

Sir MARK STEWART, Bart., M.P., followed, giving some statistics indicating a serious increase in the consumption of opium in India. He concluded by suggesting a Royal Commission to ascertain the facts, but the audience, weary of delay, and feeling probably that sufficient information already exists, met this with clamorous shouts of "No! No!"

Mr. RAJU NAIDU said he had come from Madras to bear witness on behalf of the native Christians to the evil, the unmitigated evil, of the opium. As a native he had gone in and out among his people, and he knew the facts as possibly some missionaries do not know them. The speaker proceeded to show by startling instances how opium provokes crime, and concluded with a stirring plea for the abolition of the traffic in this vile poison.

Mourning in Manitoba.

REV. G. COOK (C.M.S.) writes acknowledging the kindness of British Christians who have enabled him to finish the church which he has erected at Staggville, Kinosota, Manitoba. He says:—"The season of Christmas and New Year was very cold, but we managed to minister pleasure to the little ones. I was disappointed in not being able to give a magic-lantern exhibition, my lamp having failed me."

Mrs. Carpenter (Rose Cottage, Compton Bishop, Axbridge, Somerset), who sends us this communications, adds: "A letter dated Jan. 12 tells me that Mrs. Cook has died, leaving an infant and seven other children; the eldest, aged nineteen, is a daughter, upon whom falls all the care of this motherless family. The letter breathes a spirit of patient submission to the Divine will, but we all are touched by the plaintive appeal, 'Remember us in your prayers.' I know that Mr. Cook's own children are in want of clothing; his expenses have of late been very heavy. I am hoping to send a parcel of material to him, and shall be grateful for any contributions towards purchasing the same."

The Revival in Ireland.

IN AND AROUND BALLYMENA.

In our issue of Dec. 29, we gave an account of the remarkable work of Mr. D. Rea, who has been carrying on evangelistic services in and near Ballymena for some months past. In a recent letter to a friend, Mr. Rea says:—

"The news of the work in Ballymena created such an interest and thirst for the Word in the hearts of so many in the neighbouring districts that I felt deeply impressed to take a preaching tour within a circuit of about six or eight miles. I commenced at a place called Ballywatermoy, and from there went to Glarryford, about three miles further round; next I went to a village called Clough. These places were all remarkable scenes of blessing—scenes that I am not able to describe. We had generally four meetings each day. Many gave up work to attend the meetings, which were packed hours before the time; some did not get home till two o'clock in the morning.

"It was so blessed to see Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, and Open and Close Brethren, so-called, etc., all united and pleading with God for hours for blessing upon their families, relatives, and neighbours.

"I want specially to tell you about my last four weeks at a village called Broughshane, about four miles from Ballymena, situated at the entrance of a beautiful valley, called the Braid Valley, about six miles in length and two or three in breadth. Efforts were made to keep me out of this village and district. The minds of the people had been influenced against my going there by plausible arguments, saying that I had been rending family ties in other places, etc. I had been promised the use of the Court House, but when I went, found it and all other places closed against me, except a little room that held about a hundred people.

"This was nearly filled the first night, and on the third night there were almost as many outside as inside. The power and presence of God came down so mightily upon us that I could hardly get the meeting separated at the close. I held up my Bible, and said it was strange to see the dear people standing outside on a cold winter's night, and all the places in Broughshane shut against the Gospel. The Lord was pleased to use this word, and we had the Court House and several large stores open the next night.

"The first night in the Court House there was hardly standing room, and soon there were hundreds unable to get in. On Lord's Day night we could hardly get near the door an hour before the time, and the crush was so great at last that a policeman and some others took hold of me and pulled me in almost over the heads of the people. When I had done speaking, the numbers standing outside pleaded with me to speak to them through the window, but this I was unable to do, being completely exhausted, as I had been preaching at the other end of the valley, where a large place was also crowded. There also numbers could not get in, and the cries of the anxious were heard above my speaking. Several had walked twelve miles to the meeting, and had to return the same distance at night; and the scene on some occasions was most touching. I had once to stop speaking, owing to the cries and even wails of anxious souls; that night about twenty professed to pass from death unto life before the meeting separated.

"The second Lord's day at Broughshane the people were gathering at 3.30 p.m., and the meeting did not commence till 7. We dared not open the door of the Court House, the crowd was so great that we feared an accident, but as the night was calm a platform was erected for me outside. We asked the anxious to go inside after the meeting was over, and we had a remarkable time of blessing for some hours.

"It was solemn to see rooms in country places packed with people at one o'clock in the day to hear the Gospel, and young men walking four miles to the prayer meeting in the early hours of the morning, to be spoken to about their souls. A young man, a Roman Catholic, walked eleven miles to be at the meeting on Lord's Day week, and found peace on his way back at four o'clock the next morning."

Mr. Rea is about to go to Kells, a place six miles further on. We would ask the prayers of readers that this work of God and manifestation of his power may spread and deepen.

A REMINISCENCE OF 1859.

The foregoing account of revival in and around Ballymena recalls to our memory the interesting fact that a considerable part of the first issue of The Revival (which was the forerunner of The Christian), published on July 30, 1859, was taken up with reports of the remarkable manifestations of spiritual interest then occurring. In a lengthy narrative from Ballymena, by an eye-witness, there is a very interesting passage partly relating to a convert from Broughshane, where, as will be seen by the preceding letter, the labours of Mr. David Rea have been so richly blessed. We think our readers will be glad to have this extract reproduced from The Revival:—

"I had a brother with me, and we were both asked to speak or address a meeting to be held on the morrow (Lord's Day). He half consented, our hearts were so full, so I expected to be able, out of a full heart, to tell of Jesus: but, my dear brother, when I drew near to the meeting-place (a large quarry) and saw about 5000 people, my heart sank within me, and I felt as if God said this to me: 'Stand back; don't imagine you have anything to do with this people, so just stand aside and let Me act, for the work is all mine.' I thank his name I was enabled to say, 'Go on, Lord God, and do thine own work, and to Thee, not unto us, be all the praise and the glory.' And, brother, He did work; I think about fourteen or fifteen souls in that meeting of three-and-a-half hours were laid prostrate on the earth yelling for mercy.

"When I got forward to look, a young man, a new convert, was addressing the crowd in a clear voice, and most earnest deportment; he was an unlearned and ignorant man, truly, but I 'took knowledge of him, that he had been with Jesus.' He was about eighteen years of age, I suppose; he could not speak five words together grammatically, and had those five words been put together according to the rules of grammar for him, he, even then, could not pronounce them in plain or intelligible English, the accent and language of that part being so peculiar. But, oh, brother, the Gospel of Christ proceeded from his mouth and his heart, and power and unction accompanied him. In describing this man I also describe four or five speakers who followed, all burning to tell sinners of Him who forgave and blotted out all their sins by his own blood. They may have varied their illustrations, but all tended to the one object—to exalt Jesus—not the cold technicalities of Providence, the Good Being, the Deity, the Most High—all true in their way, but these are not the warm expressions of loving hearts. Nothing short of Jesus, the blessed Jesus, God the Father and his Holy Child Jesus, will satisfy these wondrous men.

"Near the end of the preaching, one old man stood up to address the multitude; he was a remarkable-looking man. I was beside him before he rose. A dealer in rags would not have given more than sixpence for all the clothes he had on his person. He bore the marks and tokens of a 'hard liver,' a confirmed drunkard. He spoke something to the following effect, as nearly as I can remember:—'Gentlemen,' and he trembled as he spoke, 'Gentlemen, I appear before you this day as a vile sinner. Many of you know me. You have but to look at me and recognise the profligate of Broughshane. You know I was an old man hardened in sin; you know I was a servant of the devil, and he led me by that instrument of his, the spirit of the barley. I brought my wife and family to beggary more than fifty years ago; in short, I defy the townland of Broughshane to produce my equal in profligacy, or any sin whatever; but, ah, gentlemen, I have seen Jesus. I was born again on last night week, I am therefore a week old to-day, or about; my heavy and enormous sin is all gone, the Lord Jesus took it away, and I stand before you this day, not only a pattern of profligacy, but a monument of the perfect grace of God! I stand here to tell you that God's work on Calvary is perfect—yes, I have proved it—his work is perfect. He is not like an architect who makes a drawing of a building, and then he looks at it, and he takes out this line and that, or makes some other alteration, and frequently alters all his plan, and even when the building is going on he makes some other change—but God drew out the plan of salvation, and it was complete, and he carried it out with his blessed Son Jesus, and it is all perfect, for had it not been so, it would not have been capable of reaching the depth of iniquity of ——, the profligate sailor of Broughshane.'

"While listening to this speaker, various cases of God smiting to the earth occurred. I looked around in the direction of a small crowd surrounding a woman, and was attracted by seeing a little boy of about twelve or fourteen years, standing at the head of this woman: he was in earnest prayer for her, and truly his shoes were off his feet, he was barefooted, and he said, 'Lord Jesus, you know I do not know how to pray to you; you know I do not know how to say one word pleasing to you; but you have forgiven my sins, and oh, I ask you to show this woman your loving heart, and that you are willing to forgive her her sins also.'"

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

The evangelists of our society are seeing rich results in the gathering in of men and women to Christ. During the month of January we have had Gospel meetings in forty-six places in Ireland, and I give you a few extracts of letters from some of the workers.

Our movable wooden hall has been erected at Killyman, co. Tyrone, and meetings began January 3. Mr. David Hunter writes on Jan 30, urging a further continuation of the mission, and says, "We are having the most wonderful work of grace that has been known in this neighbourhood, and the work is deepening. For years it was impossible to get the young men of Killyman out to such meetings, but some nights last week there were 500 in the Gospel Hall. Last Sunday night, as Mr. Peat was preaching the felt presence of God seemed to be realised. Tears were running down the cheeks of numbers, and hundreds remained for the after-meeting which lasted for nearly two hours. Even then scores were unspoken to. A large number profess to have been converted to God."

Mr. Montgomery, of Belfast, writes, same date:—"I went on Saturday to Killyman. At the meeting last night scores of young men and women decided for Christ, and such out and out decisions I have never seen. The work is simply marvellous. It was the largest after-meeting I ever saw."

Another evangelist, Mr. Carleton, has been holding meetings in county Tipperary and in county Limerick. In some places several Roman Catholics have attended, and not without encouraging results. In Rathkeale and Ballingrane, co. Limerick, clergymen write of blessing. From the latter, Rev. M. Hynes writes on Jan. 27: "Many young people have decided for Christ, and some older people, too, have found a Saviour."

Fairview, some miles from Lurgan, is a country district, and it has been moved of the Lord. A lady who had invited our mission, writes urging the extension of the mission:—"I write in the name of many aroused souls who live for some miles around. The Lord is working mightily, especially amongst the aged and those who may not for years have had their feet in God's house."

Mr. Gilpin writes on January 17:—"The work is marvellous in such a priest-ridden place as this. Come and see the grace of God in saving sinners like us. The fields are white, and real labourers few; let Mr. Robinson abide with us."

We are not without interesting work amongst Roman Catholics, but deem it wiser to refrain from publishing details at present.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND STEBBINS.

Many will thank God, and are even now thanking Him, for sending his servant, Major Whittle, to Enniscorthy. The large Roman Catholic population and their extreme bigotry fully account for the Meeting House (kindly lent by the Friends) never being filled to overflowing. The mission commenced on February 12th, and on the 17th Major Whittle, Miss Whittle, and Mr. Stebbins left for Athlone. The latter were assisted in the singing of the hymns by a choir of about forty members.

It was among the young men and the children that during the mission the power of God's Spirit seems to have made itself most apparent. At an after-meeting for men only, over twenty-eight stood up and testified their desire to become followers of the Lord, while many more rose to confess that they had found the Saviour, some only the evening before during the evangelist's gentle and pleading address.

The two children's meetings also were greatly used of God in stirring up young hearts to seek Him. This made itself evident in the number of children who returned to the evening meetings to seek a fuller knowledge of God, and confess that they too felt their need of a Saviour.

The Christians were strengthened and helped, not only by being brought nearer to God through the Word so clearly and faithfully preached, but by being led to seek Him more earnestly in prayer on behalf of those dear to them who were still far from the Kingdom. F. M. C.

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL.

Two weeks' special services have been conducted at Bangor, co. Down, by these brethren, which have been signally owned of God. The sweet singing of Mr. J. Ritchie Bell (who was assisted by a large choir) proved a wonderful attraction, and not a few have spoken of it as a channel of Divine stimulus, comfort, and joy.

Personal dealing began on the fourth night, and every night after numbers remained as inquirers. The after-meeting on the closing night was one never to be forgotten in Bangor, being made memorable by a band of young men coming out decidedly for Christ. Great was the joy among the Christians that night.

To the Christians the afternoon Bible-readings were most helpful. Mr. Smith was clearly taught of God to feed the sheep, and his searching, powerful words one felt were being fastened like a nail in a sure place by the Master of Assemblies. The young people's meetings were most encouraging. There was an urgent request for the evangelists to remain a third week, but arrangements for Monaghan Mission had been completed, and it was not possible. S. G. M.

COMING EFFORTS.

The Moody-McNeill mission committee, Dublin, which carried out the mission in October and November last, are anxious, with the blessing of God, to promote the evangelisation of Ireland by conducting missions in the provincial towns under the same honoured servants of God who were working with Mr. Moody. For this purpose they have appointed an executive committee to arrange the details and co-operate with local committees in the various places to be visited.

Rev. John McNeill and his fellow-worker, Mr. Burke, cannot, owing to their engagements in Scotland, go to Ireland until March, and, unless a change can be effected in their arrangements, can only remain there for two months. Major Whittle and Mr. Stebbins have been conducting missions in various country towns during January and February.

On every side there are open doors, and there never was a time when the people of Ireland were more ready to receive the Word of God. Is it not our duty or rather our privilege to send forth labourers into this part of the Master's vineyard. Mr. Robert Cotter, Secretary, Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, will be glad to receive communications.

WHITECHAPEL LADS' INSTITUTE.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the Working Lads' Institute and Home, Whitechapel, was held in the lecture-hall of the institution on Thursday, the Lord Mayor presiding. The secretary stated that the total attendance at the evening classes was 149. The average attendance at the weekly lectures and entertainments was 400, and the total number benefited by the institute since its commencement was nearly 6,000. The committee acknowledged with gratitude the generous contributions from the City Corporation and the livery companies. To meet current liabilities a sum of £1,000 was required.

The Lord Mayor said he considered institutions such as this amongst the most useful and beneficial, and he had never seen one better equipped for carrying out the many objects it had in view. From experience he knew the absolute necessity that existed for such safeguards of the youth of the present day, and he hoped they would take every advantage of the opportunities and blessings this home afforded. It was a great Christian, educational, and social centre, and he believed it would add pleasure to their life and be a happiness hereafter. He was not one of those who altogether approved of muscular Christianity, but he rejoiced to know that they indulged in so many athletic exercises and pursuits. He wished the institute every success in its good work, and believedit would enable many to make their way in the world.

Mr. Judd and Rev. Dr. White having spoken, the Lady Mayoress distributed the prizes for the evening classes, swimming and athletic sports.

SOLDIERS AT ALEXANDRIA.

In the eighth annual report of Miss Robinson's Soldiers and Sailors' Institute, Alexandria, Rev. T. R. Lawrence, the superintendent, says:—"Besides those soldiers who frequent the Institute because they look upon it as a home, and value the opportunities of attending religious services and classes, there are many who say, 'I must come here because there is no other place.' By which they mean there is not another respectable place of resort where there is 'welcome without temptation.' This fact was again proved when the fleet was here in the spring, and when, sad to say, the sleeping accommodation of the institute was far too small for the needs of the sailors."

Miss Robinson, in a "memo." added to the report, draws attention to the fact that a building debt still embarrasses the work. She says: "When, in June next, Mr. Lawrence relieves me from further responsibility as to current expenses, this debt will still remain my care, and until this is cleared the permanence of the institute cannot be considered secure. At the very idea of the trustees selling off the property, people exclaim, 'Oh, you must not think of such a thing!' 'It would be a thousand pities.' 'This place is far more urgently needed than any institute in England can possibly be.' But the point is, what will they do to avert such a catastrophe?

"Will friends generously assist me in a special effort I hope to make this year to clear off the sum owing? If they could hear the hearty testimony of Mr. Hind Smith and others who have called on me after a visit to Egypt, as to the usefulness of our Institute, I should not ask in vain for help to continue such a work. A thousand pounds would make it safe, as there is no other encumbrance or mortgage on the property."

More troops are now being despatched to Egypt. The men are sent to Cairo, and the Institute is full of wives and children from a regiment which was stopped on its way home from India.

AMONG THE HIGH ALPS.

In the February issue of "A Voice from Italy," Rev. Wm. Meille describes deeply interesting mission work among the high Alps of the Waldensian Valleys. He rays: "From Serre Veit we went to Rima, close to La Balme. The village looks literally perched over the torrent. The schoolhouse is actually in a perpendicular line with the course of the water, and the outer wall is supported by a great beam, which would be left in mid-air but for two fastenings at the point where the building joins the 'strada maestra.' Main road, indeed! only narrow, tortuous, rutted, muddy passages, serving by turns as stream and gutter, a stone here and another there peeping out of the water puddles or manure heaps, defying description. Yet this is the rendezvous of the village people, the scene of their daily life. Here the road is barred by a cow being bled in public; there, branches of larch are being cut up for firewood; elsewhere a man, with a load on his head, waits his turn to put his batch of bread, which is to last him all winter, into the common oven.

"The hour of meeting had come, and the schoolroom was filled, nay, overcrowded to such a degree that the lights were almost put out by the heavy atmosphere. Yet the people did not seem inclined to go away. How pretty these school buildings are! Some are built above the village, sheltered by a great rock; others boldly placed on a promontory; some are smoked, others whitewashed; their massive tables and antiquated benches, residue of the old churches, some of them bearing the date 1752, are the advance guard of a primitive civilisation. At five o'clock lessons are over, and the teacher sends off a girl or boy through the village, calling out, 'A la prierò,' and the inhabitants with their children gather to listen to the reading of a chapter, and offer up a prayer. It is the Waldensian 'Muezzin' cry which calls us together at La Mayère, a place we reached with difficulty, owing to the steep slopes, made more slippery and difficult by the layer of pine needles and the ever-thickening mist.

"In like fashion a meeting was summoned at Ribba, where the people contemplate emigrating in a body to America, seeing that for three months of the year, on account of their situation—close on 5000 feet above sea level—the sun deserts them. And now the mist has disappeared and snow is falling. It has been falling for twelve hours continuously, and it is already more than fifteen inches deep. At Praly, the pathways had completely disappeared. 'There will be nobody at the meeting to-night, I think,' said I. The pastor, whose affectionate cordiality has been very precious to me, smiled, for he knew his flock. Over one hundred people, from all quarters, provided with leggings and lanterns, braved every obstacle in a way which was natural enough to them, but which filled me with gratitude and admiration. And what a blessed hour we spent in that well-heated church! How heartily the hymns were sung, for there are few churches in our valleys where they sing so well as at Praly, thanks to the pains taken by their teacher! And what a picturesque and touching sight it was to see all the lights disperse in various quarters after the meeting, like an army of fireflies, across the great white plain and away into the mountain mists!"

PERSECUTION OF THE STUNDISTS.

Dear Sir,—A letter has reached me from a reliable and well-informed friend living in South Russia, who writes as follows:—

"I have private intelligence from 'X.' that in a short time extraordinary measures are to be taken against the Stundists in the whole of South-western Russia. It is not yet precisely known what these measures are, but secret instructions have been sent to the local police to furnish certain statistics. It is believed by 'X.' that a certain time (until Easter) is to be given to the Stundists to return to the Orthodox Church, after which all who refuse to do so are to be sent in small detachments, men, women, and children, into banishment to Eastern Siberia and the Caucasus."

When I was in South Russia lately I learned, on good authority, I believe, that the Stundists number about 200,000 souls, all told. Are there any people more worthy of being continually remembered in our prayers than these who are under such fierce persecution for righteousness' sake? Let me recommend them to those of your readers who love to attend the noonday prayer meeting as often as they find opportunity, as subjects for special prayer daily, at these meetings wherever they are held.

I remain, &c.,

MR. WOOKEY IN CHICAGO.

In spite of snow and ice, Mr. Moody's Tabernacle was crowded on Feb. 2 with a deeply interested and enthusiastic audience to listen to Mr. J. B. Wookey's story of Dr. Barnardo's work in England. The little boys who accompany Mr. Wookey have all been rescued from a life of destitution, and their musical performances on hand bells and bagpipes were enthusiastically received. Mr. Wookey was listened to with tender interest, as he told his pathetic narrative, during the recital of which not a few were moved to tears. At the close of Mr. Wookey's address, a collection of nearly 200dols., made up in the smal' gifts of the many, was handed in as an expression of warm sympathy with Dr. Barnardo's work among children.

Mr. Wookey is holding meetings in many of the principal churches of the city, after which he will travel East through Pennsylvania to Philadelphia and New York. He asks the earnest prayers of the reader that God will open many doors, and give to the boys and himself favour in the hearts of Christian people everywhere.

Miss Cusack in Liverpool.

Miss Cusack delivered one of her telling lectures on Monday week in Hope Hall, Liverpool, to a densely packed audience of about two thousand persons. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. Bramley-Moore.

The lecture was on the whole well listened to and enthusiastically applauded. Miss Cusack not only pointed out the curse of the Church of Rome, and showed how she was gradually led to see the falsity of that Church, but set forth very distinctly the glorious news of a finished salvation brought nigh to the sinner by Christ Jesus. There were a number of Roman Catholics present and three priests of the Roman Catholic Church.

MADAME TEL SONO.

Dear Sir,—I understand that a kind notice of my intended visit to England appeared in your paper some few weeks before leaving America, where I have been most kindly received for Jesus' sake as well as for the work He has given me to do for Him among my fellow countrywomen. It is but right that I should now tell you of my arrival in London, where, as well as in the provinces, I intend to tell the story of my life and my method for reaching my benighted sisters with the glorious Gospel.

It will be necessary for me to leave England early in May, and in order to make the most of my time I shall be glad to accept invitations to private and public meetings specially arranged for the enhancement of my work.

I have introductions to many prominent ladies and gentlemen in all parts who, I have reason to believe, will give a hearty welcome as becometh saints to their sister from the far East, who out of love to her people makes bold to count on their assistance according to the injunction (Rom. xvi. 12).

I am at present somewhat unsettled, and would therefore be glad if all communications should be referred to my recording secretary, Miss McLean, who has lived many years in Japan. Her address is Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, Belgravia, S.W., where I shall (on due notice) be glad to meet those desiring to see me in connection with my work.

Will interviewers from the leading secular and Christian journals kindly note that I can only see them on Saturdays between ten and twelve noon?

Yours faithfully,

Tel Sono.

[London readers will be interested that Madame Tel Sono will address a meeting at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W. this (Thursday) afternoon at 5 p.m.]

MRS. BAEYERTZ AT WINCHESTER.

God is visiting Winchester with a very remarkable outpouring of his Spirit in connection with the mission of Mrs. Baeyertz at the Soldiers' Home, Hyde-street. The mission is only about half through, and though we are conscious that there never existed greater need of care in reporting mission work than to-day, yet I venture to write with a very joyful confidence as to the results of this effort to reach saint and sinner. After many years' service as an evangelist myself, and, therefore, regarding such missions from a critical standpoint, I cannot but cry, "Truly, God is in our midst of a truth."

From the very first meeting there have been souls every night, and while experience has taught the workers here not to unwisely tabulate results, yet all hearts are gladdened by the apparent deep work of grace which the professing converts exhibit. Most of these are men and women in the full sense of the word, and not easily excited juveniles; and to see a dozen staid men, or twenty or thirty women at a time, broken down in soul, and bowed before God, seeking and accepting forgiveness of sin, is rare enough in these superficial days to cause our hearts to exclaim, "'Tis of the Lord."

A deep, quiet solemnity, and a sense of the Divine power and presence have rested upon all the meetings. There has been no working upon the emotional side of the nature only, but a fearless denunciation of sin, of faithful declaration, of God's wrath upon the persistent rejecter of the Gospel. The Word of God has been closely adhered to, and carefully expounded. The atonement, the Blood of Christ, its efficacy, its fulness, its freeness, has been the only salvation preached. Every modern refuge of lies has been exposed, Christ Jesus the sinner's only Saviour has been nightly uplifted, and Calvary has been shown to be the trysting place "where heaven's love, and heaven's justice meets."

Members from every section of the Christian Church have gathered every afternoon constantly increasing numbers to listen to holiness teachings on Bible lines. Human theories have found no place here. God's Word has been the only text book.

THE NIGHT OF THE BETRAYAL.

By the late Mr. Richard J. Mahony.

Hell has gone forth in power,
And ye should wake and weep:
Could ye not watch one little hour!
This night is not for sleep.

Earth trembles in the scale,
Yet knows not of the fight,
And if her fearful foe prevail,
It will be always night.

Unpitying as the grave,
Fierce as the winter breeze,
And mightier than the mountain wave
That sweeps o'er midnight seas,

The Prince of Darkness came:
Woe to the hated race!
What man can meet that brow of flame,
Or live before his face!

No seraph's sword of light,
Reddened in righteous wrath,
Flashed downward from the crystal height
To bar his onward path.

No trumpet's warning cry
Rose through the silent air,
No battle shout went forth on high
From guarding squadrons there.

Slept on the mountain's breast;
Beneath, the tender breath of night
Hushed moaning woods to rest.

Yet ne'er shall blackest night
Such deepened horror know,
While stars look down on Olive's height,
Or Kedron's waters flow.

For who shall tell his woes,
Whose grief out-gloomed the night,
When his strong love, bright star! arose,
O'erfilling heaven with light?

The gentlest heart on earth
Must taste her sharpest woe;
The tender plant of heavenly birth
Hell's fiercest blast must know.

King! of the wounded breast:
King! of the uncrowned brow:
What faithful heart shall bring Thee rest?
What arm shall aid Thee now?

Lo, sheathed in shining light,
Heaven's wondering warriors stand,
With pinions closed for downward flight,
Waiting their Lord's command.

But never comes that word,
That night knows yet no dawn,
And still must each impatient sword
Sleep on each thigh, undrawn.

Not angels' deathless feet
May dare the darkening path,
Arched by the thunder clouds that meet,
Heavy with coming wrath.

Alone his steadfast eye
Can cleave the rolling gloom,
Where that dread sentence flames on high,
The sinner's death of doom.

Oh! all ye stars of light
Veil all your glowing spheres;
Weep out your radiance; drown the night
In dew of heaven's tears.

Poor Earth! Go mourn beneath
Thy withered roses now;
Thy thorns alone may twine the wreath
To crown the Victor's brow.

Firmer than Carmel's might,
When the long-leaping tide
Shivers its thousand shafts of light
Far up his patient side,

His will unshaken stands,
Though that wild sea of wrath,
Upsurging to its outmost bands,
Breaks foaming on his path.

Soft breezes of the West,
That, sighing as ye go,
Bear ever on, with kindly breast,
Each whispered human woe;

Here droop your wings and die,
Low murmuring at his feet;
Then rise and bear his victor cry
Up the long golden street!

High heralds of his birth,*
Make his new honours known!
Tell how the Blood, despised on earth,
Sparkles before the throne!

Lo! struck from star to star,
The gracious echoes fall
To this poor world that rolls afar,
Lowest and last of all;

Soft, as from weeping skies
Drops the sweet summer rain,
Yet clear through all earth's Babel cries—
Hear them, ye sons of men;

Nor thrust his mercy back,
Who claims your hearts to-day.
Oh! kiss his feet. Their wounded track
Hath crimsoned all the way.

PARIAH CHILDREN IN MADRAS.

The difficulties which missionaries have encountered in India through the prevalence of caste, no doubt suggested to some of the great pioneers of missions in that vast country the idea of overcoming caste distinctions, by enlisting in the ranks of Christianity a number of converts taken from high-caste circles. Whatever prosperity attended mission effort in this direction, in the hands of its noblest advocates and workers—Duff, of Calcutta; Wilson, of Bombay; Anderson, of Madras; and Noble, of Masulipatum—it cannot be said that any success worth mentioning has followed in our own generation. A system which seeks to Christianise a country by gaining first the influential and powerful classes is doomed, in the nature of things, to disappointment and failure. As in all other experiences, throughout the Christian centuries, you must begin with the common people. As the largest adhesions to Christian teaching in the first century were gathered from the slaves of the Roman Empire, we may take it for settled that great ingatherings to Christ will come from the lowest grades of society. Hence the importance of reaching the pariahs of India with the Gospel; if you gain them you will soon break up the caste system; disabilities which beset them on every side as pariahs disappear when they become Christians; then no one will dare to dispute with the converted pariah his free use of the village well, or his contact with higher caste people at every point of social custom; then what becomes of this artificial and unnatural system? It must be broken up.

To raise the pariah socially as well as religiously, is a pressing question; and to elevate him religiously is to lift him higher in the social scale. A collector in the Civil Service thus describes the pariahs:—"They are always badly nourished; clad, if at all, in the vilest of rags; eaten up with leprosy and other horrible diseases; untaught, uncared for, and unpitied."

Mr. W. Raju Naidu, of Madras, who has been moved to attempt special mission work amongst these poor "out-castes" in Madras, has been in England for a few months this winter, aiding in the Anti-Opium movement. On his return shortly to his native land, he is anxiously desirous to give himself up entirely to this unattractive but greatly needed department of service, and to do so systematically, by reaching the children of pariahs as well as grown-up people. To endeavour to mould the minds and hearts of the young he esteems of the highest importance, and, therefore, some school acccommodation appears essential to the accomplishment of his design.

We heartily commend the enterprise to the support and sympathy of Christians of all denominations, being well assured of Mr. Raju Naidu's earnestness and integrity. The sum of £200 per annum would suffice to meet the expenses contemplated in this special effort.

HIGH CHURCHISM IN WALES.

IN the current number of the Geniues, the Welsh quarterly, Dr. Herber Evans, ex-chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, in the course of a brilliant article on "Cymru Fydd," refers to this subject. Dealing with the dangers besetting Young Wales he says:—"There is danger also from the superstition arising from the teaching of the High Churchmen. The clergy of bygone Wales, if careless and apathetic, were Protestants to a man; but now there are in our midst dozens teaching that Protestantism is a greater sin than Popery, and that the confessional is a true and real aid to spiritual religion. Our children are arrayed in white garments, and taught to perform the ceremonies of bending the head, and of turning this way and that according to the regulations; they are prepared for the Papacy, for it is thither their leaders are going, one after the other. Our fathers knew nothing of these players in the parish churches, who now spread their ritualism by means of leaflets and catechisms, as dangerous to the souls of our children as are poisoned sweetmeats to their bodies."

GRAY'S YARD INSTITUTIONS.

THE report of this West-End work covers a period of seventeen months, and tells of hard, earnest, resultful toiling amongst old and young. Mr. P. Gough, on behalf of the Ragged Church, describes the deepening interest in the Sunday morning and afternoon services, when 250 to 500 tramps and casuals listen to the Gospel.

"I could mention, if space permitted, many very interesting cases of persons who came into our midst for the meal, as they were very hungry, but went away satisfied, as they have afterwards told me, with the Bread of Life. Some of these cases I have not heard of until months and even years afterwards. Only recently two men, altogether strangers to me, at different times stopped me in the streets of London, just to tell me how thankful to God they were that they were compelled to go to Gray's Yard for bread, as God had blessed the message of the Gospel to their souls' salvation."

Miss Habershon supplies additional facts as to the men helped, and also as to the mothers' meeting, soup kitchen, and lodging-house.

The ragged schools are reported on by the various superintendents:—"It would surprise a great many West-enders, some of them living within a stone's throw of Gray's Yard, if they knew the kind of homes that many of these children come from. Dear rent and scarcity of work, added to the great evil of drink, too often produce a state of things where common decency is scarcely possible. This is not the case by any means with the homes of all our children, but it is so in not a few."

Notwithstanding all difficulties and discouragement a very real work is going on amongst the children.

"The relief committee meets every Monday morning, to inquire into the cases of those casuals who are seeking an opportunity of regaining their former position in life, many of whom having fallen so low need a helping hand to give them a fresh start. Special efforts are made to reach the lads who attend our Sunday services, and many of whom—young boys even—lead a miserable existence, loafing about in the day, earning a penny or two here and there, just enough to enable them to pass the night at some of the cheap lodging-houses.

"Many of those who come under our notice have been in better positions in life. One was an Indian merchant, sent on to our committee from a friend in Mincing-lane, another a solicitor whose name is still on the rolls, and many others. In many cases their sad condition is due to drink or gambling, but it is often through no fault of their own. The loss of employment through illness is frequently the cause of their distress."

In these various branches most valuable and useful work is being done which surely deserves well of the West-enders whose neighbours these poor are. The hon. sec. of the mission is Mr. A. G. Fraser, 22, Gloucester-place, Portman-square, W.

CONSTANTINOPLE SAILORS' REST.—The ninth report shows that about three thousand sailors visited the Rest last year, and over a thousand ships were visited for mission purposes. Scriptures and religious literature were given away, and much blessing attended the work. Miss Green-Armytage says:—"The boat which was so generously given by our kind friends, Mr. and Mrs. Parker Jervis, of Clifton (the former of whom entered into rest at the beginning of the year), has been in full and constant use ever since. The name 'Grace' given her by them has been appropriate in every way." Communications regarding the work may be sent to Major Robert L. Long, the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

"PLEASANT SUNDAY AFTERNOONS."

THIS movement is making encouraging headway throughout the country, and is evidently meeting a felt need among the masses of the people who have not hitherto been drawn to the ordinary church services.

Last Sunday the institution found a footing at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, where services are held on Sunday under the direction of Dr. Barnardo. On this occasion there was a large, though not a crowded attendance of men. Addresses were given by Mr. Henry Thorne and Mr. John Blackham, the founder of the P.S.A. There is a danger at present, in some places, of these gatherings becoming mere occasions of social entertainment without due seriousness of purpose and programme. We are glad to note that at the Edinburgh Castle the spiritual element will have full scope; it will be conducted on strictly Evangelical lines and Bible instruction will be a prominent feature.

Much interest was evoked, and Mr. Blackham was invited back to take part in the meeting of next Sunday afternoon. His subject will be "The A B C of the P.S.A." He asks the prayers of our readers, not only on behalf of this meeting, but that the movement generally may be preserved on right and sound lines, and may become a growing power for good in the country.

ALEPPO FREE DISPENSARY.

DEAR SIR,—I shall be thankful if you will allow me space to call attention to this work, and to state briefly some reasons for thinking it worthy of support. I am, of course, myself the more interested in it as my sister is the wife of Dr. Altounyan, who gives freely his skill and time, and is anxious to make his medical work a handmaid of the Gospel; but the reasons which I would offer are apart from this.

Aleppo is a large and important town, having a population of about 120,000, of whom about four-fifths are Mohammedans, the remainder being chiefly Roman Catholics or members of the old Armenian Church, with one congregation of Reformed Armenian Christians. The latter have a native pastor, who sympathises with Dr. Altounyan's effort, and gives what assistance he can. In this large community there is nothing in the nature of a hospital, except the few beds in Dr. Altounyan's free dispensary.

Aleppo lies within the sphere generally recognised as allotted to the American Mission Board, and it has been visited occasionally by some of their missionaries, but they have never settled there, nor entered on serious work.

It has been made matter of reproach to Christian missions that so little has been done to carry the Gospel to the Mohammedan races. This reproach many, it is hoped, will be anxious to roll away.

It is more and more recognised that as far as human means are concerned medical missions afford one of the most powerful levers for opening closed doors, and are in full accord with the mind and method of the Master.

In this case the work has been begun, and the testimony of the Bible Society's agent shows that there is abundant promise of good results. I shall be glad to furnish reports to any of your readers who may desire them. They can communicate with me through Rev. T. W. Brown, D.D., secretary of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, 32, The Avenue, Bedford Park, Chiswick.—Yours faithfully,

EDW. P. RIDDALL, Clerk.

Gospel Work in Cherbourg.

REV. C. H. NINNIM writes of the work carried on at Cherbourg under the auspices of the French Wesleyan Missionary Committee:—

"Cherbourg has a population reaching nearly 40,000 inhabitants, besides about 3000 troops. Meetings are held every night in one or other of our halls, and there is a marked spirit of inquiry among many who attend. Moreover, we are thankful to say that among the many who have of late experienced a change of heart are several young men and elderly persons, some of whom were infidels and others drunkards.

"The glad tidings of salvation have been proclaimed in our halls, on board ship, and in the chamber of the sick; and Bibles and tracts have been distributed on a large scale. We have just begun a mission in one of the suburbs where several hundred men are employed as stone-breakers. More than two hundred of these attended our last meeting and listened most attentively. Our work with the British sailors has also been blessed of God.

"Our committee is doing all that lies in its power to support these undertakings, but it cannot do what it would. Hence English help is always welcome."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

AN International Convention of Christian Endeavour is being arranged for July next in Montreal. It is anticipated that at least 25,000 Endeavourers will be present.

The formation of branches of the Y.P.S.C.E. in connection with Congregational churches at Bishop's Stortford, Soresby-street, Chesterfield, Shaftesbury, and Stanley. There are now upwards of 470 branches in this country.

It has been definitely settled that the next British Convention of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour will be held in Bradford during the first week in June. Dr. F. E. Clark, United States, the founder of the movement, will take part in the proceedings.

A Y.P.S.C.E. was started in December in the London Street Mission, Dockhead, S.E., has already been the means of bringing out many young people and winning others. Mr. Bustin, the manager of the mission, declares he has found the society the greatest possible help in the whole work.

A convention of local societies was held in West-street Baptist Chapel, Dunstable, on Feb. 16. A conference in the afternoon, presided over by Rev. F. J. Flatts. Papers on the C. E. Pledge, prayer meeting, consecration meeting, and work of committees were read. Addresses followed by Revs. J. B. Morgan and F Thompson. At a public meeting in the evening addresses were given by Revs. F. J. Flatts, J. T. Frost, J. B. Morgan; Mr. T. J. Hobbs presiding.

City of London Bible Class Union.

THE annual meeting of this Union was lately held at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street. The chair was taken by Mr. Charles Selincourt, the head of one of the City firms who give their hearty support to every good work. The leading wholesale houses were well represented by principals and members of the Union. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor gave an earnest and spiritual address on the faithfulness of God unto those who fully trust Him, and gave his own rich experience of forty years, during which time God did fulfil his promises. He also recommended the consecutive study of God's Word to his hearers.

Rev. A. Boyd Carpenter spoke of the practical use of the Bible in all affairs of life, political and commercial, and how every difficulty could be made to succumb to the power of the Word in our lives. His stirring address was listened to with rapt attention. The concluding address was by Rev. H. E. Stone, who spoke from a knowledge of City life and its temptations; and he urged his hearers, if they were not right with God, to get right, for those who attempted to shape their own course in life it was useless with eternity in view.

At the conclusion of the meeting there was a Social Gathering, and supper was served in the Library, where numbers of the young men and their friends repaired, and where they concluded a very interesting and profitable evening. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. F. W. Beetham, 47, Wood-street, E.C.

A WELCOME GIFT.—A friend called recently at the Bible House to leave there a cheque for £1000. It was a touching as well as a valuable gift. It formed part of the portion saved up for a beloved daughter who had been removed to the home above. The father regarded her portion as sacred to the Lord who had provided for his child. He asked that the share assigned to the Bible Society might be utilised, as the committee might judge best, for some extension of its work, particularly, if that could be arranged, for some fresh development of Bible work for girls and women. He wished to be able to follow the work taken up by his prayers, and he desired that his act should be made known, as it might lead other parents to do likewise and thereby to extend and perpetuate the new work attempted.

GREAT YARMOUTH SERVANTS' TRAINING HOME.—From the eleventh annual report of work carried on at Rampart House, Great Yarmouth, we learn that the committee is endeavouring, by a few months' training, to equip girls of fourteen or fifteen for more efficient domestic service. In very few cases are the girls able to pay anything, so the expense devolves on those who are interested in such work. When the girls are placed in service, they continue to be visited by the matron, and when attending the Bible-classes held in the mission-room attached to the Home, they are sometimes invited to stay to tea, and by this means a mutual interest is maintained. Arrangements are also made for servants requiring a rest and change or sea air to be boarded in the Home, and rooms are set apart where Bible women or other Christian workers may lodge for a time. Copies of the report and further information may be obtained from the Matron, Miss Constable, at the Home.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S SUPPER AND SACRAMENTALISM.

Dear Sir,—I have followed with much interest the correspondence which has sprung out of your attempt to bring in Scriptural views with reference to that un-Scriptural and ill-used word "sacrament." Of course, you were prepared for the usual difference of thought, and opposition from many quarters, and from divergent motives.

Perhaps even more suggestive than "an old Aryan root," and also interesting, may be the following list of the places where, and where only, I think, the Vulgate has rendered the Greek word mustêrion by sacramentum, Ephesians i. 9; iii. 3, 9; v. 32 (very suggestive); Coloss. i. 27; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Rev. i. 20 and xvii. 7.

In all Latin Christianity at least (though not in that exclusively) has been seen the tendency to transform the blessed simplicity of the Lord's Supper into "holy mysteries" to be administered by specially authorised persons. Yours faithfully,

J. G. Halliday.

Dear Sir,—I did not see your note of February 9 in time to remark on your allusions to me in your last issue. Permit me, in the first place, to say that I am not "Rev.," as you style me, and that in speaking about the administration of the Lord's Supper I was speaking as a lay member of the Church of England. I cannot quite follow you in your distinctions between "Sacramentalism and Sacrificialism." I would readily admit that "souls are being deceived to their destruction by being led to trust sacraments instead of Christ," but this is quite a different question to that which you have raised as to the meaning of the word "sacrament" and the administration of the Lord's Supper by ordained persons. Mr. Chapman has well expressed what many of us feel on this matter.

I am at present staying at Ridley Hall. Those who know it, and who have had the privilege of being acquainted with its Principal, Mr. Handley Moule, would regard it as one of the strongholds of Evangelical Protestantism. Yet, according to the proposition which you have put forward, much of the teaching given here "would bring us down close to the Pagan roots of Papal error." I do not think that you would state that in so many words, but you imply it, and your implication has pained more than one of the leading young men in Christian work in this University.

There are real evils all around us which we may combine to fight against. There are those, unhappily, who have exalted the Lord's Supper into an entirely false position.

Under such circumstances, is it worth while to spend time in quarrelling over minor differences which divide the Christian bodies? and, as I said in my first letter, may we not agree to differ?

Yours faithfully,

Charles F. Harford-Battersby, M.A., M.D.

Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

Dear Sir,—The difficulty brought forward by "A Churchman" is felt as a real one by many. Soon after my own ordination a county magistrate who attended my church occasionally told me he was kept from going to Holy Communion by the, to him, "too strong language" in the Confession. And many years ago the late Archdeacon of Carlisle, then incumbent of Trinity Church, Reading, said to me, "A., the Brethren get hold of the cream of our congregation." Lately I missed at Holy Communion one of my most regular attendants, and on asking him the reason he said, "Mr. Phelps, I will frankly tell you. The last time I went to the Lord's Supper at Trinity I never enjoyed the service so much before till the very close, when, after thanking God, who dost assure us (who have duly received these holy mysteries) thereby of thy favour and goodness towards us, and that we are very members incorporate in the mystical body of thy Son; and are also heirs through hope of thine everlasting Kingdom by the merits of the most precious death and passion of thy dear Son,' I was called upon to join thrice over in 'Have mercy upon us,' addressed to the Lamb of God. And my peace was all gone at once when I reflected, 'spite of God's assurance,' I have still to pray, 'Have mercy upon us.'" I could only say to him, "If your peace really rested on an inner feeling, and not on the finished work of Christ, I am not sorry it did go."

May I throw out in your columns two thoughts which appear to me to meet such difficulties, honestly felt often, and therefore to be met patiently and tenderly by those "over them in the Lord"?

First. Surely, James v. 16, "Confess your sins (R.V.) one to another and pray one for another that ye may be healed," teaches us the duty of intercessory prayer for our neighbours' sins. If each worshipper were a Daniel, "confessing my sins and the sin of my people Israel" (ix. 20); if each who use the Book of Prayer in common realised the full force of the Master's words, "When ye pray, say, Our Father"; "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet and pray to thy Father"; if each who rejoiced in the sense of forgiven sin, of burden rolled away, strove therefore to bear another's burden, how different would be our "public worship," whether in church, or so-called chapel, or even family prayers! Again, was Psalm ii. written by David as an unforgiven sinner? Is the burden, even of forgiven sin, a burden not intolerable? Am I to shrink from confessing to my God, I could not bear it? Am I to think of Calvary and not be grieved still that the pardon of my sins was purchased by the shed blood of Jesus? To say in effect though

"'Twas my sins that nailed to the tree Jehovah Tsidkenu ['tis] nothing to me," now that I am forgiven? Does that harmonise with Ezek. xvi. 63?

Secondly. Are "young converts" as a rule deeply conscious of the plague of their own hearts? Are they gifted with great spiritual intelligence? Is "lowliness of mind" one of the first fruits of the Spirit? My own remembrance of the first special revival in which I took part, more than thirty years age, would lead me to give an emphatic "No" to each of the questions above. Again, is not "mercy" an ambiguous word? The pardoned sinner who goes to his house justified needs not to say, "God accept the propitiation of thy Son for my sins" with the publican; yet surely it is very significant that always in his pastoral epistles, never in any other, does Saint Paul implore the "mercy" of God in his addresses. I believe the holiest saint feels most the need of "mercy." I shall never forget Canon Bardsley's upward gaze, as when expressing to him my hope (at the Church Congress at Stoke, 1876), that if never to meet again on earth we may hereafter, he simply said, "Through mercy." I felt it such a reflex of St. Jude's words, "Looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Yours very faithfully,

Arthur W. Phelps.

Amesbury Vicarage, Feb. 18.

Dear Sir,—"Ye do show forth the Lord's death till He Come," are the words of the Apostle received from the Lord directly (1 Cor. xi. 26). How do our friends (Quakers) get over this statement? It cannot be that the passing away of the Jewish age, with its temple, &c., could be made to mean that "He has come." Spiritually He was as much present with his disciples before the end of that age as he has been since—yea, perhaps more so. Besides, the Lord's supper was not only a spiritual one, neither can the coming be only spiritual; though I do not believe it had any spiritual or unreal meaning about it. But the literal and real presence of Himself at his coming would then no longer need the remembrance of Him, and such we are to look for, while remembering Him in the interval. Note the words in v. 20, "Ye cannot (Greek) eat the Lord's supper," neither the "one place," nor the "one body," nor the one ground, nor the one minister, ensures the ability to do this.

Yours faithfully, G. W.

Sir,—Your correspondence on the above subject is of great importance. After many years of careful observation of its results among all classes, and in several countries, I am persuaded that the misconception of Christ's teaching which so largely prevails, on what is called the Sacrament of the Supper, in the Christian Churches, must be held to be answerable for the ruin of thousands of souls.

Your correspondent, Mr. C. E. Chapman, writes that "to argue from the abuse of anything against the use of that thing is a dangerous and illogical form of argument," and he adds, referring to your recent note, that you are prepared to contemplate "a disobedience to Christ's commands." Now this form of argument is argument from assumption—that is to say, argument from that which does not exist! Mr. Chapman assumes that Christ "commanded" the perpetual observance of the ceremonial in question—which is the very point in dispute. Then, because some who challenge the existence of that "command" point to the widespread evil consequences to souls which have followed the setting up of a human tradition as though it were really a command of our Lord, he replies, "Oh, but the abuse of a thing is no argument against its use!"

Mr. Chapman has no authority for calling the members of the Society of Friends "misguided men." Nothing is easier than to substitute abuse for argument, and to bandy hard words. The position of a large number of the ministers of his own Church as regards the Bible and their own Prayer Book is so notoriously unfaithful that one is surprised to find him among those whom he must feel to be "misguided men," their own selves being the judges

The real question as to the Lord's Supper is this: Did Jesus Christ enjoin the ceremonial bearing that and other names as a perpetual ordinance of his Church? For myself, a humble student of the Scriptures, I do not hesitate to say that he did nothing of the kind. The spirit of ecclesiasticism, and that alone, has bound this burden of sacerdotal formalism upon the people, and is responsible for the blindness of destruction of a multitude of souls.

Yours faithfully,

Beta.

Pastor C. S. Adama van Scheltema, of Arnhem, Holland, writes:—"For more than forty years I have regretted that, say in the Heidelberg Cathechism and other books of popular instruction, the word 'sacrament' has remained. The heathen word could not but exercise an influence on behalf of Roman Catholic heathenism. . . . I look on baptism and the Lord's Supper, not as ornamental things, but as the heart of revelation—the Gospel, not by mediation of human language, but as a 'speaking' (Heb. xii. 24), intelligible to the personal conscience immediately, by the Father and by our King Saviour—a Gospel prepared by the symbols of the Old Testament to be the eternal gift for sealing the truth in the innermost recesses of every repentant soul."

INDIAN MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—In The Christian of December 15th you notice a proposal for a new missionary society for India on the model of the China Inland Mission.

In considering this question some time ago I discovered that the conditions are wholly different in India and China. It is very difficult to find unoccupied, or at least unclaimed, territory in India. I thought I had found an unoccupied province of three million souls. But upon my proposing to enter it, I found, like Fitz-James, that every shrub hid a bonnet or a spear. There were nearly fifty missionaries already in the province, and my proposition was most vehemently resented. These missionaries issued no report, and were not mentioned in any records or year-books that I had ever seen, though I had searched diligently.

Perhaps, however, a mission not to a territory, but to a class, could be useful. There are sixty million Mohammedans in India, and very few missionaries are at work among them. In the Madras presidency are two millions and two missionaries. In Mysore are 200,000, and in Ceylon 200,000 Mohammedans without an ordained missionary specially at work for them. Yours truly,

Ernest H. Bell,
Missionary S.P.G.

"A CIVIC CHURCH."

Sir,—We had a visit the other day from Mr. W. T. Stead, who did his best to interest us in his scheme for the establishment of what he calls a "Civic Church," but what he might just as well call a "Charity Town Council," for it seems to me that what he aims at is just a Charity Organisation Society. Certainly the Civic Church is a misnomer, and the name leads to a good deal of misunderstanding. Mr. Stead said several things which made me wonder what he really is. He spoke of the Roman Catholics as if they were quite on a level with Protestant Churches, and as if there should be no difficulty in their working together, and he said that although he never made Sensationalism an end, he did and would make it "a means to an end." That is, he approves of the Roman Catholic doctrine that "the means justify the end." This is a most dangerous and erroneous doctrine, which is, I think, doing a great deal in the present day to confuse the minds even of Christian people as to what is right and what is wrong.

I confess I was rather surprised to see the sort of people who supported Mr. Stead. There was a tendency on the part of the speakers to blame the Church for neglect of duty. All the talk was about the Church, and little was said about God, in whose hands the Church is but an instrument. Mr. Stead thinks on some points the world has more to teach the Church than the Church has to teach the world; but it seems to me that he wants the Church to mix up with a great many things she has nothing whatever to do with. Surely the Church has higher duties than attending to sanitary matters, providing free playgrounds, open spaces, free libraries (a very mixed blessing), cabmen's shelters, bands in the parks, etc. Some of these may be good enough, but they are not the sort of things which the Church should have directly to do with. The Church's work is spiritual, and, as one of the speakers reminded the meeting, unless we raise men and women morally, and change them spiritually, all our efforts are in vain.

The Church of Christ has already lost much of its power just because it has lost its position. It is now competing with the world in efforts to amuse the people. It is doing evil things, on the plea that these things keep people from doing worse. It is making desperate efforts to attract the people by sensational services, and all sorts of questionable expedients, all the time forgetting God, who alone is the source of all help and strength, and Jesus who alone can draw all men unto Him. . . . What we want are men filled with the Holy Ghost, full of love for souls and zeal for God's cause, to rouse the churches to a sense of their high calling, and to convince them of the folly and sinfulness of their worldly expedients.

Yours, etc.,

J. Forbes Moncrieff.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

Rev. C. Gore, the principal of Pusey House, is preaching a course of sermons to undergraduates on Sunday evenings, which are exceedingly well attended.

The principal of Wycliffe Hall (Rev. F. J. Chavasse) is also preaching a course of six sermons this term on the "Temptations of the Bible," which are being greatly valued by large congregations.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Y.M.C.A. was held on Monday, when a most encouraging report of the first year's work in the new buildings was presented by the secretary, Mr. J. Marshall Badger. The P.S.A. and the week evening Bible-class for men are prominent features in the work. The Archdeacon of London (Dr. Sinclair) and Mr. W. T. Paton (of the Polytechnic) addressed the very large and enthusiastic meeting, the rector of Exeter (Dr. Jackson) being in the chair.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey is holding evangelistic services at Magdalen-road Mission Hall this week in connection with a special mission there.

CAMBRIDGE.

The weekly meeting of the Cambridge University Missionary Union was held in the Henry Martyn Hall on Monday evening, Feb. 13, presided over by Principal Moule. Rev. H. A. Bren gave an interesting, forcible, and graphic account of his missionary labours in Bombay.

Rev. G. C. Grubb's mission terminated with a well-attended meeting of University men in the Guildhall on Sunday week. The missioner's address was based upon Mark xii., 34, "Thou art not far from the Kingdom of God." Very fearlessly has the missioner proclaimed the cardinal principles of Evangelical truth during his short stay amongst us.

Great regret is felt in many University circles at the inability of Canon Ainger to occupy the pulpit of St. Edward's Church.

An evidence of the keenness of the missionary spirit in the University is the existence of the "Mchwas," an inter-collegiate society of undergraduates pledged to work in the mission field in the future. Its president is Rev. J. Roscoe, missionary to Eastern Equatorial Africa. Weekly meetings are held, each member being responsible for the communication of information concerning some particular branch of the mission work. On February 17th Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby gave a most helpful address to this society on "Missionary work—its qualifications, preparations, and difficulties."

A Trinity B.A. has started for Delhi to replace the late Rev. Folliott Sandford, who died a short time ago. Mr. Sandford combined a gentle disposition with praiseworthy thoroughness in the pursuit of work for Christ. He graduated from St. John's College, and was for about two years a master at Rossall School. After four years' pastoral labour at Leicester, he joined the Cambridge Mission at Delhi. In a short year his course was run, and his death has been deeply mourned by friends far and near.

BIBLE STAND, CRYSTAL PALACE.

The work of distributing the Word of God through the agency of the Bible-stand goes on prosperously. The operations are almost entirely carried on by unpaid agents. Owing to the liberality of one of the committee and his family the income during the past year shows an increase of more than £200 over that of the previous year, thus enabling us to enlarge the Scripture circulation. It will be a matter for rejoicing if the Lord's stewards should this year enable us still further to increase the giving of the bread of life to perishing souls.

From the Bible-carriage in France 114,000 Gospels have been placed in the hands of the people. One hundred thousand have been sent through the post to Ireland to as many individuals.

William Hawke, Secretary.

The Crystal Palace, Sydenham, S.E.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The Zulu choir have just made a successful tour amongst the Y.M.C.A.'s of North Wales.

Bury Y.M.C.A. held its annual meeting last week. The report showed progress in every department.

The secretary of the West Branch, Savile Row, Regent-street, W., Mr. J. W. Holmes, has tendered his resignation.

Dean Lefroy will preach the annual sermon on behalf of the Norwich Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday, April 11, in Norwich Cathedral.

Archdeacon Sinclair preaches this day (23rd) at St. Peter's-upon-Cornhill, E.C., the annual sermon to young men, under the auspices of the City Y.M.C.A.

The Burton-on-Trent Men's P.S.A. (held in connection with the Y.M.C.A.) is steadily growing in numbers, and increasing its influence for good in the town. There are now 365 members enrolled.

A friend, who for the present wishes to remain anonymous, has expressed a desire to mark his appreciation of the work of the Central Y.M.C.A. by contributing £5000 towards liquidating the mortgage resting upon Exeter Hall.

During the last month the Redruth Y.M.C.A. has experienced a season of exceptional blessing. A series of missions have been conducted, and over one hundred have professed conversion and have been added to the various churches.

The Hackney Y.M.C.A. has just held a most successful "international reception." The German Y.M.C.A. choir sang hymns in their own tongue; speeches were delivered in as many as seven different languages, and a solo was given by a native of the Upper Congo.

The inter-provincial Y.M.C.A. Convention of Ontario and Quebec has just been held in Montreal. Interesting accounts were given of work in many parts of the Dominion. Rev. R. A. Torrey was present, and gave details of the work of the Bible Institute in Chicago.

A special meeting of the Stratford Y.M.C.A. members was held on Thursday week, when Mr. Morris, secretary of Croydon Association, read a paper entitled, "How shall the Y.M.C.A. better reach young men?" Several members took part in a discussion thereon afterwards.

The Archdeacon of London has promised to speak at the annual meeting of the Exeter Y.M.C.A. in April next, and to give an address at Exmouth in connection with the district conference of Y.M.C.A.'s in the South West of England, to be held in that town on Wednesday, April 19.

The eight new Y.M.C.A.'s just formed by Mr. George Holmes, missionary secretary, along the Mediterranean, and several of which give promise of excellent work, are much in need of magazines and other literature for their reading rooms. Papers forwarded to 20, Exeter Hall, will be sent on.

The committee of the German Y.M.C.A in London celebrated on Thursday last week the first anniversary of their "Kellner-Heim" (Christian Home for Waiters) at 44, Clipstone-street, Portland-place, W. The chairman was Mr. J. Steinte, of the Queen's Hotel, Eastbourne. The work of the central institution in Finsbury-square is being much blessed.

The Y.M.C.A. of Calgary, Alberta, Canada, has after a fitful existence been resuscitated. The town has a population of nearly 4000, composed largely of young men, consequently there is great need of a work of this kind. The general secretary is Mr. Joseph Ball, late of Winnipeg, Manitoba, who will be glad to be of assistance, in any way consistent with his official capacity, to persons who have young men relatives or friends in or near Calgary.

The Church of England Y.M.C.A. at Reading has just held its forty-sixth anniversary. Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, who presided, said that the association was intended as a rallying point for young Evangelical churchmen. He was thankful to say God had prospered and blessed it. The report showed a variety of good earnest work. Archdeacon Sinclair followed with a rousing address reviewing the religious condition of the country and insisting on need for work such as carried on by the association.

A large social gathering, in which over 750 young persons of both sexes participated, was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday evening last week, by invitation of Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Victor Buxton. Music and refreshments, together with an exhibition of scientific instruments, pictures, etc., preceded an address of welcome by the host; then followed a short programme of vocal and instrumental selections and recitations; and the proceedings, which were most successful throughout, were suitably closed with a bright and earnest address by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., M.A.

I hear (says the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian), that the authorities of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A. have obtained a promise from the Archbishop of Canterbury to speak at the forthcoming annual meeting. This is quite a new departure, and its significance is of much importance. For some little time past there has been a growing feeling of hostility amongst a certain section of Churchmen to what are called "undenominational" agencies. Archbishop Benson, however, does not sympathise with that view, for the Y.M.C.A. is of a most distinctly unsectarian character.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

The Duchess of Bedford has consented to open a sale of work early in March at the Finsbury Institute, 14, Finsbury-square.

Several London clergymen and ministers have promised to preach sermons in connection with the Y.W.C.A. week of prayer. Some will make offertories later on in aid of the central fund.

The Duke of Westminster has lent Grosvenor House for a meeting in April in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Conference, and has promised to preside. Lord Kinnaird and the Archdeacon of London will be among the speakers.

Miss Gorham begins this day in Edinburgh a series of special services for young women. These meetings, held in Free Assembly Hall, are expected to awake much interest. Many leaders in Y.M.C.A. work are taking a prominent part. Prayer is desired that much blessing may be granted.

The monthly conference of Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers was held at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, on Thursday, the 16th inst. The subject for consideration was, "How to make the Week of Prayer more effective." Mrs. Tottenham presided, and an address was given by Mrs. Howard, of Bickley. These conferences, which are held on the third Thursday on each month, are promoted by Miss Wingate, hon. superintendant of the Central Institute, and are felt to be very helpful.

A new branch of the Y.W.C.A. has been formed in Aldershot. Very suitable premises in which to commence such a work have been secured at a moderate rent in the excellent position of the Victoria-road. A certain amount of furniture has been kindly offered, so that some rooms in the house can be speedily prepared for use. It is estimated that from £60 to £80 per annum will be needed for working expenses (such as rent, taxes, wages, stationery, &c.), and an additional sum of £50 at least for completing the furnishing. The hon. secretary is Major E. Owen Hay, R.H.A., 19, Grosvenor-road.

THE LONDON Y.W.C.A.

The Council and Finance Committee of the London Young Women's Christian Association are endeavouring to make a forward movement. Those outside the Association have little idea how rapid has been the extension of the work during the past few years. The membership has doubled, and many new Institutes and departments of work have been started. The income has steadily increased, but not in proportion to the extension of the work. The result has been a deficit which has considerably hampered the efforts of the Society.

The friends of the Y.W.C.A. have resolved not to let this continue. To withdraw from much-needed and invaluable work is felt to be impossible. An effort is therefore being made to clear off the deficit and to strengthen the financial position of the London Association. A sum of £5000 was needed to remove the deficit and give an impetus to the work now in progress; and towards this amount more than £3000 has been already given or promised. Some of the promises are conditional upon the whole £5000 being raised. Those responsible for the work are hopeful of securing the amount named, and we cordially wish them success.

Dublin Visiting Medical Mission.

This mission, started in spring last year, is doing a good work in the dispensary, which is open three mornings a week, as well as one evening for men only. As the name implies, the sick are visited in their own homes, not only by the doctor, but also by a trained nurse and earnest lady helpers. The mission is entirely unsectarian. Amongst those who attend are found many Roman Catholics, and all alike have their cases treated, and all alike hear the message of God's love, the glad tidings of salvation, through the Lord Jesus Christ. Each day, before attending to their bodily diseases, a short Gospel address is delivered to those assembled.

The committee state that, in addition to the funds wanted for maintenance, £200 are required to buy out a middle landlord and effect a saving of £23 per annum. The address is 6, Chancery-place, Dublin.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Madame Thoumaian is addressing meetings in Scotland on the work of Armenian missions in Asia Minor.

Professor Drummond addressed a crowded meeting of students in Oddfellows' Hall, Edinburgh, on Sunday week.

Dr. Orr, Professor of Church history in the U. P. Theological College, has been appointed lecturer, for the next two sessions, of the Protestant Institute of Scotland.

Much interest has been awakened by the delivery of Dr. Pierson's missionary lectures in some of the principal towns in Scotland. The lectures will be published in book form.

A correspondent in Edinburgh draws our attention to the recent Episcopal mission in that city, and states that with a few exceptions it was "a huge effort to proselytise and sacerdotalise the people of Edinburgh." Most of the missioners were pronounced ritualists.

The first of this year's conventions for the deepening of the spiritual life was held in Dundee last week. Among the speakers were Revs. C. G. Moore, Dr. Elder Cumming, J. E. Houston, J. G. Gregson, J. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Robt. Wilson, and Dr. White. The gatherings were well attended.

The annual meeting of the United Evangelistic Association of Glasgow was held in St. Andrew's Hall last week, with a crowded attendance. The report of the various branches of the work showed that much blessing had been experienced during the year. Rev. John McNeill delivered a characteristically lively and eloquent address.

Dr. Fry, the new superintendent of the Edinburgh Medical Mission, son-in-law of the late Dr. Lowe, whom he succeeds, arrived in Edinburgh from India on Thursday week, and made his first public appearance there on Saturday week at the Gospel Temperance meeting in Carrubber's Close, where he was received with enthusiasm. Many workers from other missions in the city were present, and extended a hearty welcome to him.

IRISH NOTES.

In connection with the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance, Friday, March 17, will be observed as a day of prayer for Ireland.

In order to provide for non-churchgoers during the last nine years the Presbyterian Church built nine new churches in Belfast, costing £60,000, and spent £20,000 additional on school-houses.

A convention was held in the Friends' Meeting House in Dublin in unison with the London meeting. A petition to Parliament was adopted calling upon the Government to take steps to put an end to the opium traffic.

A four weeks' Gospel Mission has been held at Killylea, Co. Armagh, by Rev. Wm. Maguire and others, and a ten days' similar mission has been held at Castledermott, co. Carlow, by Rev. S. L. Webster and Mr. White.

On Sunday last, under the auspices of the Church of Ireland Temperance Society, 133 sermons were preached in that number of churches in Belfast and neighbourhood on the subject of temperance, and twenty-one sermons on the same topic were preached in the diocese of Ardfert.

During the past week missions have been held simultaneously in the Episcopal churches in Kingstown and neighbourhood. Rev. Frank S. Webster was the mission preacher at the Mariners' Church, Rev. Canon Wynne, of Killarney, at Christchurch, Rev. T. R. Robertson at St. John's Church, and Rev. Arthur J. Moore at the Parish Church, Glenageary. There have been good attendances and satisfactory results, many having professedly given their hearts and lives to Christ. Two meetings for men only, held in the Men's Christian Institute, were addressed by Rev. F. S. Webster, who made powerful appeals to the unsaved to put their "good intentions" into effect by deciding definitely and at once for Christ. There is no doubt that much good has been done amongst the formal church-goers of the town.

PALESTINE EXHIBITION.—The interesting exhibition recently on view at Brighton, illustrating the customs, manners, and scenes of Bible Lands, is being held for four days this week in Holborn Town Hall. The proceeds are to be divided among local charities.

EAST END UNEMPLOYED.—An unusually interesting gathering took place last Thursday evening at Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow Common, when 260 unemployed men were entertained to supper. Mr. Lakin preached the Gospel to them after the meal. On the following evening he spoke also, and many of these rough men were brought to their knees, and it is believed to the Saviour. Four hundred dinners are being given weekly to poor children.

Obituary.

MAJOR-GENERAL G. BURN.

This officer of the Madras Army died on Sunday within a few weeks of his 90th year. He was the son of Mr. Robert Burn, of the East India House, and entered the East India Company in 1819. In 1840 he was appointed to the Judge-Advocate's Department, having previously acted as Deputy Judge-Advocate several times. In 1861 he retired on a pension after forty-two years' service. During his long life he was never ill, and it was only a week before his death that he took to his bed. He passed away without suffering of any kind. He led an exemplary, godly life for many decades. Almost his last words before losing consciousness were addressed to one of the medical men in attendance, "Doctor, do you love the Lord Jesus Christ? Where would I be now if I had not learned long ago to trust Him?"

PASTEUR J. B. CRETIN.

The death is announced of the venerable French Baptist pastor, M. Jean-Baptiste Cretin. He was a brave worker in the cause of Christ, not being deterred by difficulty, contumely, or persecution. He came of Huguenot stock, and laboured for fifty years in many parts of France. When evangelistic work was "irregular" he was not terrorised by citation before the magistrate. He was eighty years of age when he died, at the beginning of the present month. In L'Echo de la Vérité M. Saillens has given a portrait and deeply interesting sketch of the deceased, whose death-bed was as beautiful as his life was devoted. In conversation with M. Saillens on the difficulties of the work, the dying pastor said, "Courage! all will go well." Recalling the expression, he said, "No; all will not go well (n'ira pas bien); but all will end well" (finira bien). And with him it was so, for he died declaring his faith in Christ.

MR. EDWARD W. THOMAS.

Mr. Edward W. Thomas died at his residence, Tollington-road, in his 70th year, on Friday last. As one of the most prominent figures of the present day in the social reformatory work of this country, his departure will be widely and deeply lamented. The work of reclaiming the fallen and friendless of our great cities has always received the support and sympathy of our readers, who have, from time to time, been made fully acquainted with the nature and progress of that branch of philanthropic labour which formed an absorbing power in Mr. Thomas's life. In 1889 we gave his portrait and a sketch of his life work. In addition to the special work of his own mission, Mr. Thomas conducted an extensive correspondence both at home and abroad, having become an authority on female reformatory work, while the institution over which he presided formed a model for the constitution of others of a similar character in various parts of England and the Colonies.

For a considerable time past his friends have seen with pain a marked decline in his powers; formerly a man of method and regularity, he showed signs of late of being unequal to the necessary detail and routine inseparably connected with the daily pursuit of the work among such a sad variety of life and character, much of which was of a lapsed and faulty kind; but no persuasion of his friends availed to induce him to relax his efforts even for a time, and he persevered until the hour of his departure. While nearing the approach of death he struggled more than once to resume his old place at his desk, always lying open in his bedchamber, to direct the work afresh or formulate some new plan for female rescue. In reply to the entreaty of an old and well-esteemed friend to be allowed to read to him one of the consolatory Psalms of David, he gently replied, "Nay, I am trusting in the Lord," and a moment after, "What of these fallen girls?" Very soon afterwards he experienced continued paroxysms of pain, and his last conscious effort in this life was to dictate incoherently to the writer of these lines a few earnest burning words to the inmates of the various homes, asking them to complete the work of their reclamation by becoming—all and altogether—Christians, true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ.

MR. R. A. MACFIE.

By the death in his eighty-third year of Mr. Macfie, of Dreghorn Castle, Colinton, the cause of missions loses a fast and firm friend. He was the eldest son of Mr. John Macfie, a magistrate and deputy lieutenant of Edinburgh, where he was born in 1811. For some years he was head of the firm of sugar refiners, Messrs. Macfie and Sons, of Liverpool, Greenock, and Edinburgh, and was at one time president of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce and a trustee of the Liverpool Exchange. For some years he represented Leith in the House of Commons. Amid all this activity of public life he was an earnest and devoted Christian, and being warmly interested in foreign missions took a somewhat prominent part in calling the great Foreign Missions Conference of 1888.

MISS PEACOCK, PAVENHAM.

On February 11 there died at Pavenham Miss Peacock, well known in the neighbourhood for her saintly character, and her life of active Christian helpfulness to many good works. We hope in an early issue to give her portrait and a short sketch of her life.

MISS E. JANE WHATELY.

Miss Whately, the eldest daughter of the famous Archbishop of Dublin, died on Sunday morning at Guernsey, where she had been wintering, at the age of seventy. Miss Whately was the eldest of the Archbishop's children, and perhaps the one who inherited the largest share of his special intellectual qualities. She wrote her father's Life in two volumes (afterwards compressed into one), but unfortunately the work had to be done at a time of much personal grief and anxiety, and the writer did not do herself full justice. Her "Cousin Mabel's Experiences" and "Cousin Mabel's Sketches"—conversations cast into a semi-dramatic form, in which theological and other subjects were discussed from the most uncompromising Evangelical point of view—have been much read in Evangelical households. She was a great traveller and linguist, and at one time used to winter regularly at Cairo with her sister, Miss Mary Whately, the well-known head and foundress of the Cairo Mission Schools. Her command of Italian enabled her to give informal Scriptural addresses to Italian navvies and masons working in Switzerland or elsewhere, and she had a very fair knowledge of Spanish, and a really good one of German and French. These accomplishments and this wider experience, joined to an inexhaustible flow of interesting and argumentative conversation, made her as interesting to a large circle of cultivated but above all Christian women, like-minded with herself, as her affectionate, faithful, and profoundly religious nature made her dear, and she will be keenly missed by many.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

A bill has been brought into the House of Commons and read a first time for the prohibition of the sale of inioxicating liquors to children.

The Liverpool Wesleyan Mission, which, under the superintendence of Rev. Charles Garrett, is doing a splendid work, keeps the temperance question well to the front.

Rev. W. Young, B.A., of Higher Broughton, Manchester, has accepted the post of hon. secretary to the Sunday Closing Association, in place of the late Mr. Edward Whitwell.

Dr. A. H. H. McMurtry, who has acted as editor of the Irish Temperance League Journal during the past four years, finds that, owing to the pressure of professional engagements, he must relinquish the post.

On the invitation of the Scottish Temperance League, a meeting of students attending the U.P. Divinity Hall was held in the Synod Buildings, Edinburgh, on the evening of Tuesday week. Many influential men were amongst the speakers.

Dating from Budapest, Reuter's agency says: The Nemzet states that an anti-brandy league has been formed in Szatmar-Comitat, and has so far been joined by the inhabitants of four villages, who abstain from the use of any spirituous liquors.

The annual meeting of the Gloucester Temperance Society was held in the Raikes Memorial Schools on Tuesday week. In the annual report Mr. R. Coad's mission in the Corn Exchange was stated to have been a great success, more than 200 pledges having been taken.

A representative of The Morning has discovered, on the road between London and Lewes, on a hill-top, a public-house, owned by a clergyman, who controls its management by appointing the manager, and seeing to it that he does not push the sale of liquor. The house is described as a "moral success," and that success, the writer says, "lies in that, rather than a village public-house, it is a village club."

Under the auspices of the Temperance League, a conference of representatives and workers was held at Exeter. The subject for discussion at the afternoon meeting was, "How can the temperance cause be best promoted in the district?" Rev. W. Justin Evans presided, and several speakers advocated a union of the three abstinence societies in Exeter. Rev. W. Stacey recapitulated various suggestions which he thought would promote total abstinence. A well-attended public meeting was held in the evening. Mr. H. B. Varwell, J.P., presided, and speeches were delivered by the Rev. W. Justin Evans, Mr. W. Thompson, Dr. R. W. Batten (chief physician of Gloucester Infirmary), and others.

Personalia.

Rev. W. E. Hurndall's address in future will be 6, Park-crescent, Keymer, Hassock, Sussex.

Archdeacon Blakeney is recovering from his illness, but will be unable to resume work for some time.

The Bishop of Winchester has been very ill indeed, but is now making steady progress towards recovery.

The late Mr. Thomson Hankey, of the Bank of England, has left a legacy of £300 to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

Mr. C. L. Boyer has resigned his post of superintendent of the Drift Branch of the Ragged School Union, and is no longer connected with the Society.

Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne, intends starting on February 25th, for this country. He hopes to be at the Keswick Convention, and probably some other conventions.

Canon Bell, of Cheltenham, has been, on account of weak health, on the verge of resigning his charge; but at the urgent requests of his people has consented to continue at his post.

Dr. Henry A. Stimson, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational Church of St. Louis, is to be the successor of Dr. William M. Taylor, at the Broadway Tabernacle, New York.

Miss Jessie Ackermann, president of Australia W.C.T.U., is spending six months in India, and later will go to South Africa. She has formed one hundred and eighteen local unions in Australia, four colonial and one national union. Seven thousand women have joined at her meetings.

Rev. F. J. Chavasse, M.A., Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, is preaching the mid-day Lent sermons this week in St. Paul's Cathedral, February 20 to 24 inclusive. On Monday he took for his text John xvii., 19 ("For their sakes I sanctify myself"), and dwelt upon separation, purification, and self sacrifice, as qualifications for the service of Christ.

Lady Henry Somerset is, we regret to hear, far from well, having never recovered from the effects of a chill caught on the evening of Miss Willard's reception at Exeter Hall. Regardless of this, she has gone on fulfilling her public engagements, until she has become all but prostrate. She has, however, been compelled to curtail her public work, and is now spending a few days at Reigate.

Dr. Sargood Fry is the new superintendent of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, in succession to the late Dr. Lowe. As the Quarterly Paper of the Society states, it has been no small trial to Dr. and Mrs. Fry and family, "to leave the loved work at Travancore, where they have been so happy—so helped of the Lord. At their Master's bidding, however, not in their own strength, but in His, they are coming to take up this much more difficult and responsible work."

Rev. D. Wynne Evans, of Llanelly, stands almost alone in the Welsh Congregational ministry, as an exponent of Scripture doctrine concerning the second coming of Christ. In the January issue of Y Dysgedydd (The Instructor) he had an article on the subject which attracted considerable attention. In the February Tywysydd y Plant (Children's Guide), published at Llanelly, there was a portrait and sketch of Mr. Evans, who is reported to be preparing for the press a book on the Second Advent, and thus to fill a real gap in the theological literature of the Principality.

Rev. Thomas Champness, many will be glad to hear, looked well and strong on Sunday week when preaching the anniversary services of the Central London Mission. His arms seemed free from pain and were used vigorously during the sermon. At the close of the evening service Mr. Champness said "The after-meeting will be conducted by Mr. Wakerley, as I am not such a strong man now as I hoped to have been; it is rather a trouble to me to think that I am not the man I once was; but, thank God, the strength has all gone in the Master's service."

THE BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION and the Society for the Study of Inebriety have both come to the conclusion that a Royal Commission should be appointed to consider the whole question of dealing with inebriates.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a mission to be held at North-hill, Cornwall, from February 19th to March 6th.—For an evangelistic mission amongst women in Edinburgh, commencing on Thursday, 23rd March.—For blessing on special services in Corn Exchange, Huntingdon, by Mr. W. R. Lane, from February 26th to March 3rd.—For special services at Mission Chapel, Theydon Bois, and at the Wesleyan Chapel, Thornwood Common, February 25th.—Prayer for a Mission in Market Hall, Hoylake, Cheshire, by Mr. James Wharton.—For blessing on a united mission at Worthing from March 4 to 13, by Mr. Henry Thorne.

Evangelistic Notes.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith will conduct an eight days' mission in Bloomsbury Chapel from Saturday, March 4, to Saturday, March 11.

Spalding.—Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker have concluded a twelve days' mission in this town. Great blessing has been received by believers, and several men and women have confessed Christ.

Mr. H. Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, has conducted a three weeks' mission at Wraysbury. Much interest has been aroused, believers have been strengthened, and unbelievers led to a saving knowledge of the truth.

Grimsby.—A successful mission has been held at Grimsby by Mr. George Hooper and others. Interesting gatherings were held for the fishermen on the pontoon, while special services were arranged late at night, after the closing of the theatres.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has, since leaving Waterford, held a good mission in various churches at Albany, N.Y. The children's meetings proved very remarkable, and large numbers, young men and women as well as children, professed conversion.

Cleckheaton.—The Y.M.C.A. Mission Band have held a very stirring mission in the Primitive Methodist Chapel. Christians of various denominations united heartily, and great blessing has been granted—a very large number professing a saving change.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a thirteen days' mission at Norwich, Lancashire, which embraced the Congregational, Baptist, Wesleyan, Primitive, and United Methodist Churches. The central services resulted in a large ingathering, especially from amongst the young.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—A fortnight's special mission has been held in Coronation Pit by Rev. David Knapp, with the help of a number of local friends. Great interest has been aroused and large congregations attracted. God has granted much blessing, and many sinners have been saved.

Mr. W. Harry Dawe has concluded a week's mission in City-road Congregational Church. Every night some entered the enquiry room, and at the closing meeting a large number professed to have received blessing during the mission. The joy was great in seeing good gatherings each night, but still greater in leading many to the Saviour.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey prolonged their stay in Wilmington, Del., for a third week in response to pressing requests. The attendant throngs have been great, and much real heart-searching work was done. Mr. Sankey's songs were received with great acceptance. After a two weeks' mission in Baltimore, the evangelists are to rest till the opening of the work in Chicago on May 1.

Mr. J. S. Brunning has concluded a fourteen days' mission in the United Methodist Chapel, Kingsworthy, Winchester Circuit. The congregations have been good throughout, and many have professed to accept Christ. In some instances whole families have been saved. Mr. Brunning is now conducting a mission in King's Somborne, on the other side of the Winchester Circuit.

The Evangelistic Mission.—Mr. C. Russell Hurditch rejoices in blessed revival scenes lately witnessed, both in Kilburn and Malden Halls. "I have," he remarks, "never seen anything so like the blessed Revival times of '59 and '60." At Stroud, where he has been speaking, a delightful mission has been held. All the Nonconformist ministers of the town united in the work, and especially in the after-meetings; while the midday prayer-meetings showed much unity and heartiness.

Last Sunday evening Mr. Price Hughes began a fifteen days' mission in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly. A house-to-house visitation of the neighbourhood has informed the residents of this special effort. It has been preceded by similar but shorter missions at Wardour and Cleveland Halls, in the course of which about 250 names have been taken, and there have been some exceedingly interesting conversions. During the fifteen days the services at St. James's Hall will be specially evangelistic, as well as those at Princes' Hall.

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have concluded an eleven days' mission in the Tolbooth Hall, Glasgow. The meetings have been very large, and much blessing was granted. Numbers came about the meeting stating that they had received blessing through the father, Richard Weaver, thirty-two years ago. The midday prayer-meeting was well attended, and it is believed many have been heaven-born and are now heaven-bound. Since finishing at Glasgow, the brothers Weaver have been holding short missions at Renfrew and Carlisle, whence they go on to Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. W. Sampson has held a delightful mission in Shifnal. Special prayer meetings were held, and both pastor and people were greatly encouraged. Hearty invitations were given by willing workers at nearly every house in the town. Large congregations assembled. At the service for the young in the afternoon of the first Sunday, numbers of elder scholars yielded to the strivings of the Spirit. At the evening service signs and wonders were again wrought. On the second Sunday, after morning service, the evangelist and workers went to the market-place, singing and witnessing for Jesus, thus winning general attention.

Cardiff.—Will God's people unite in thanking God for answered prayer in regard to the visit of Mr. W. R. Lane and Lord Bennett to Cardiff, especially with respect to the last two services at Wood-street Chapel? After addresses with great power on the consequences of sin, appealing to those present to yield themselves up to God, considerable numbers went into the enquiry room, and the plan of salvation was explained by the two evangelists. Many rose up testifying to the fact that they realised sin put away, and went away rejoicing. A hundred names are already given in as the result of the mission, and we have every reason to believe many more are enquiring their way to Him. God has indeed abundantly answered prayer.

Mr. James Wharton, of Barrow-in-Furness, has concluded a very fruitful mission in the Gospel Hall, John-street, Shrewsbury; the mission lasted for five weeks. Every night a band of Christians went out into the streets singing and preaching the Gospel. By this means many were led to the hall. The hearts of God's chileren have been filled with praise by the large gatherings, and seeing night after night fathers and mothers and young people taking their stand for Christ. One noticeable feature was the number of railway men that have professed conversion. Backsliders also have been restored; the solemnity of the meetings has been deepened by the sudden removal (after three days' illness) of one who had just been restored.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills has been conducting meetings in Grinnell and in Sioux City, Ia. In Grinnell the students of Iowa College were deeply interested, and held general and class prayer-meetings; a number were converted. There were also a large number of cottage prayer-meetings, and during the day there was a union prayer-meeting at the Baptist Church, as well as other meetings at the various churches. The service at Sioux City lasted over twelve days, and the results were most gratifying to all the pastors. All Protestant denominations except Unitarians and Episcopalians united in the movement, and at least forty churches shared in the results. Over a thousand cards were signed, and on every hand the results were recognised as most valuable. Mr. Mills's next engagements are at Des Moines.

RICHARD WEAVER IN LONDON.

THIS veteran evangelist has been with us since Sunday week at Malden Hall, Kentish Town, N.W., and God has signally owned and abundantly blessed his plain, practical, and powerful testimony in our midst. God's people have been cheered, backsliders have been restored, and unsaved ones have passed from death unto life. The mission was preceded by a week of special prayer, and each night a large band of workers went forth into the streets to invite the careless and godless ones in to hear the good old Gospel preached by this aged witness; and it has been our privilege to prove that God still hears and answers prayer, and that true "Christianity is not played out," neither has the preaching of "Jesus Christ and Him crucified" lost its charm and power.

On the first night the large hall was crowded, every nook and corner was occupied, and numbers had to stand on the landing and doorways, and God put his Divine seal of approval upon the first service in saving precious souls. Night by night through the week the hall has been filled, and sometimes many standing, and last night (Sunday, 19th) a large overflow meeting was held in the schoolroom, and many went away disappointed in not getting inside. A band of praying ones were pleading with God downstairs while the Word was being preached, and both upstairs and down the power of God was felt and seen in souls being broken down, and many deciding for Christ.

Mr. Weaver is giving his thrilling life-story, From the coal-pit to the platform, for two nights this week, and gives his closing address on Friday evening, the 24th.

Will fellow-readers of THE CHRISTIAN join us in hearty praise to our God and Father for past help and blessing, and pray that a crowning blessing may rest upon our closing services? Also pray for our honoured brother that he may be strengthened physically and still spared to the Church as a faithful and fearless champion of the Cross in this day of blasphemy and rebuke outside, and apathy and apostasy inside, the professing Church of God.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A special and united mission has just been concluded at Chichester.

Mr. T. Zerbib, missionary in Morocco, is coming to England this year on leave of absence.

The Bishop of Bedford addressed on Sunday week from 300 to 400 men in St. Peter's, Highgate Hill.

Canon C. W. Bardsley, who recently resigned the vicarage of Ulverston, intends to live in retirement at Oxford.

The question of clerical distress has been very seriously discussed at Convocation, both at Canterbury and York.

The February Special Meetings of the Church Pastoral Aid Society were held last week in the North of England.

Rev. E. N. Coulthard, of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, has been appointed to the Vicarage of St. James's, Bermondsey.

The Bishopric of British Guinea has been offered to and accepted by Dr. William Proctor Swaby, vicar of St. Mark's, Millfield, Sunderland.

The annual sermon of the Jews Society will be preached by the Bishop of Sodor and Man in Holy Trinity Church, Marylebone, in May next.

The Archbishop of Canterbury announces that the next Lambeth Conference will be held in 1897, which is the anniversary of the arrival of Augustine in Kent.

A petition to the Convocations of Canterbury and York is being circulated at Oxford protesting against the teaching of the "New Criticism" among the clergy.

Rev. F. J. Chavasse, Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, is preaching daily during the present week at the special Lenten services at St. Paul's Cathedral at a quarter past one.

Rev. Arthur William Jephson, of St. John's, Waterloo-road, has been appointed to the Vicarage of St. John's, Walworth, vacant by the death of Rev. George Toulson Cotham.

Rev. Harry Mitchell, Vicar and Rural Dean of Prescot, near St. Helens, has been nominated by the Bishop of Liverpool to an Honorary Canonry of Liverpool, vacant by the decease of the Rev. E. H. M'Neile, Vicar of St. Paul's, Princes-park, Liverpool.

Special services were held on Sunday week in celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the opening of the Seamen's Church, Prince-street, Bristol. In the morning the preacher was Rev. J. E. Brenan, Vicar of Emmanuel, Clifton. The attendance at the service included a good number of merchant sailors.

Archdeacon Farrar has arranged to have a special course of short sermons for business men at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Wednesdays in Lent, at 1.15. Rev. Edward Carr-Glynn preaches next Wednesday, March 1; the Bishop of London on the 8th; Rev. J. C. Welldon on the 15th; Canon Newbolt on March 22; and Archdeacon Farrar himself on March 29.

The building which is known as Verulam Chapel, Kensington, is about to pass again into the hands of the Church of England. Built more than half a century ago by the Congregationalists, who worshipped in it for a considerable period, it next became a proprietary chapel of the Church of England. Thirteen years since, however, the clergyman who was incumbent sold his rights to the Presbyterians, who did not, however, absolutely acquire the property, which the vicar of the parish has now arranged to purchase.

Says The Record:—The traffic in lithographic sermons seems still to be a brisk one. We have received several copies of a circular, dated from Stratford, in which a most comprehensive offer is made to clergy. They can have a course of two sermons a Sunday, but the purveyor also shows much business alertness in moving with the times, for he offers special sermons for "schools, harvest festivals, hospitals, clubs, missions, and for notable occasions, such, for example, as the great event now impending—the Royal Marriage." Who are his customers?

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. H. E. Fairbairn has accepted a call to Collier's-rents Church.

Rev. J. R. Bailey, of Halifax, has accepted the pastorate of Eccles Church.

Rev. W. J. Bain has resigned the pastorate of Lake-road Church, Keswick.

Rev. P. T. Forsyth has undertaken to act as secretary of the Theological Institute at Nottingham.

Rev. M. Lewis, who has been pastor of the Tideswell Church since 1875, has resigned his charge.

Cannon-street Church, Preston, reports a membership of 355, the largest total in the history of the church.

Rev. Charles J. Lidstone, late of Kennington Park, has accepted the oversight of Orange-street Church, Leicester Square.

Union Church, Plaistow, reports 552 members, an increase of one during the year. In the two Sunday-schools there are eighty-six teachers and 1123 scholars.

Sunday was observed in 169 churches in the metropolis as a "London Congregational Union Sunday," the claims of London being set forth by special sermons.

The lectureship of the Merchants' Lecture, vacant by the death of Dr. Henry Allon, has been accepted by Rev. Alfred Cave, D.D., Principal of Hackney College.

The church at Bishop Auckland is enjoying a growing vitality. The weekly-offering system has been adopted, and a Pleasant Tuesday Evening for the People commenced.

The annual conference of Latimer Church, East London, was held on Thursday last, the pastor, Rev. J. W. Atkinson, presiding. Encouraging reports of the numerous organisations connected with the church were read. The present membership is 600.

Mr. J. H. Morley, of Western College; Miss May H. Spence, B.A., of Belfast; and Miss A. T. Simmons have conditionally been accepted for foreign service by the London Missionary Society.

In Minnesota during the past five years fifty Congregational churches were organised, and of these only two, except in large cities, were planted in places where there was any other evangelical church.

The report read at the annual meeting of Norwood Congregational Church, Liverpool, showed that since 1882, when Rev. E. R. Barrett commenced his ministry, the number of church members, which stands at 482, has doubled.

At the annual meeting of the Congregational Church, Kensington, of which Rev. Silvester Horne is pastor, it was stated that there had been raised last year £5005; of this sum over £1900 was for foreign missions. The church will during this year celebrate its centenary.

Last Sunday evening Dr. Hiles Hitchens commenced a series of sermons on Christianity in Eccleston-square Church, Belgrave-road. The first of the series was on "Historical Christianity." Next Sunday evening Dr. Hiles Hitchens will speak on "Experimental Christianity."

BAPTIST.

Rev. G. D. Hooper, Hendon, has accepted a call to Luton.

Rev. E. G. Gange enters on his new charge at Regent's Park on March 5.

An elderate has been established at Woodberry Down Chapel, the need being felt for men specially set apart for spiritual work.

Rev. and Mrs. Evan Morgan have reached this country from China. This is Mr. Morgan's first furlough after nine years' labour in the mission-field.

Shoreditch Tabernacle (Pastor W. Cuff) reports ninety additions to church membership during the year, making the total 906. The income was £1,353.

The Baptists of France are making steady headway. They have two places of worship in Paris, with 600 members, many of whom were formerly Romanists.

At St. Mary-street, Newport, Rev. C. Ayliffe is doing valuable work. The membership now numbers fully 300; and the chapel, which seats between six and seven hundred people, is generally well filled. A very important rescue work, also carried on by the church, has been the means of saving many.

At Maindee, Newport, there have been showers of blessing. Since last August over one hundred persons have come forward as anxious souls. The chapel, seating eight hundred, is crowded to excess. On Sunday last ten came into the vestry seeking the Lord. No month has passed for sixteen years without blessing. Pastor, Rev. A. T. Jones.

Rev. E. T. Mateer, of East Dulwich, concluded a series of evangelistic services on Sunday week at the Baptist Tabernacle, Gosport. His addresses were wholly on Gospel lines, and were delivered with great energy and power. The Holy Spirit's presence was felt, and some hearers were converted, and many had their faith refreshed and strengthened.

The Judson Memorial Church, Washington-square, New York, built in memory of Adoniram Judson, the famous missionary, and the father of the present pastor, has now been opened. Some years ago, Dr. Edward Judson resigned the pastorate of a church in Orange, New Jersey, to work "down town" in New York. In a few years, success was so marked that he determined to build a people's church, and this, with funds raised chiefly by dollar contributions from the Baptists of the United States, he has now accomplished.

A month of anniversary services has been held at Wood Green Baptist Church, commencing on Sunday, Feb. 5. special preachers being Revs. G. P McKay, A. B. Middleditch, H. Trotman, Professor A. McCaig, and W. Cuff. At the annual meeting the membership was shown to number 350, forty-five being added during the past year, making a total during Mr. Haines' nine years' ministry of 508 additions. The Sunday-schools have 700 scholars and fifty teachers. The various organisations, including the mission stations at Green Lanes and Bowes Park, are in vigorous operation.

On Wednesday the annual meeting of Woodberry Down Chapel, N., was held. From the Year Book we find that 1892 began with a membership of 348. During the year thirty-nine have been admitted by baptism, thirty-three by profession and sixty-two by transfer, whilst twenty-four have been dismissed, three resigned, and three have died, leaving a total membership of 452, an increase of 254 since Rev. G. H. Morgan settled at Woodberry Down two years ago. The Year Book contains an account of a large amount of solid work in connection with the various branches. We note that the Sunday-school has now fifty-one teachers and 536 scholars on the books, with an average attendance of 391. The Band of Hope has 300 members, with an average attendance of 135. The Young Men's Bible Class has forty-six members, and the Mothers' Meeting 200 members, with an attendance of from 120 to 160.

METHODIST.

The United Methodist Church, Horwich, was burned down last week.

A new chapel and schoolroom has been opened by the United Methodists at New Mills.

Mr. F. Kent, who has done good work at Wandsworth-road, is going to York as an evangelist.

A new Primitive Methodist mission-hall has been opened at Templeborough, in the Rotherham district.

The Jubilee Mission Car has been travelling through Lancashire, and the John Wesley Car through Yorkshire.

Rev. G. Hargreaves, at present home from China, has undertaken the work at Hinde-street until Mr. Watkinson has recovered his health.

Ths mission hall at Cottenham-park, Wimbledon, has been purchased by the Wesleyans for £400, and services are to be commenced forthwith.

An important Wesleyan Conference Committee, to consider the question of junior classes, met in London last week. There are 65,000 young persons in these classes.

The fund to commemorate the jubilee of the formation of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society has reached £25,000, one-half of the sum which it is proposed to raise.

In the Isle of Man there are some sixty-nine chapels and other preaching places, with sitting accommodation for 15,000. Further accommodation having become necessary, a bold extension scheme is being launched.

As evidence of the success of the Central London Mission, it is stated that St. John's-square Society has 532 members, with 128 on trial and 119 in Junior Society Classes, making a total of 779, old and young, meeting in class. The Tuesday evening service is frequently attended by as many as 300.

The anniversary of the Wesleyan Clerkenwell mission has just been celebrated. At one of the meetings Rev. J. E. Wakerley said that last year was the best that had ever been experienced. Another "sister" is required to work in the district. Revs. Thomas Champness and Walford Green and Drs. Jenkins and Stephenson were among the speakers at the various gatherings.

There are 1323 Wesleyan Methodist local preachers in the three London districts. The question how best to utilise them is occupying the attention of leading ministers and others. Some time ago an attempt was made to draft the surplus men into country circuits not far from London, but this from various causes has broken down. The Methodist Council has appointed a committee to consider the question and bring up a scheme.

Rev. W. Burgess writes to the friends of the Hyderabad Mission:—"Our increase in native members last year is ninety-seven. We have now 409 Indian members, with 1068 on trial. The return of baptisms for the year is 579, the largest number it has yet been our privilege to record in any one year. Our Christian community has risen to 2250 or thereabouts. The outlook for the coming year is rich with promise. Nothing can stop our work now if our friends only sustain us. During the year we have planted the standard of the cross in sixteen new villages."

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. W. Murray, lately of Crook, has accepted a call to Penang, Straits Settlements.

Rev. David Fairweather, M.A., of Kinfauns, has finally declined the call to Regent-square.

Rev. A. B. Barkway, of Union Church, Liverpool, is at present laid aside from work by serious illness.

A home for young ladies in business has been formed in connection with Warrior-square Church, Hastings, with over fifty members.

The sum of £1,492 was contributed for foreign missions in connection with the self-denial week of the Presbyterian Church of England.

Dr. Pentecost's application for admission to the Presbyterian Church was laid before the Presbytery last week, and gave rise to an animated conversation.

At the annual meeting of the Camberwell congregation (Rev. J. Reid Howatt), encouraging reports were given from the session, Sunday-school, missions, and other agencies of the church.

Rev. Dr. McEwan has held a week of evangelistic services in his church in Clapham-road. The subjects of his addresses include "The Only Priest," "The True Confessional," and "The Real Purgatory."

Rev. Martin Lewis, of Gravesend, has, we hear, accepted the call to Queen's Cross Church, Aberdeen, in succession to Dr. G. A. Smith, who has been appointed to the Hebrew chair at the Free Church College, Glasgow.

Rev. F. Waudby, a Primitive Methodist minister in Sunderland, has accepted an invitation to take charge of Millwall Church, intending to enter the Presbyterian College, with a view to being received as a minister.

Rev. Dr. Mathews, General Secretary of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, left on Monday for a four months' visit to the Presbyterian Mission Stations in Syria and Turkey, embracing Damascus, Antioch, and Tarsus. The visit is in connection with the action of the Turkish authorities in hampering mission work.

The income of the Foreign Mission Fund of the English Presbyterian Church last year amounted to £28,000, the largest sum ever received in twelve months. This was in addition to the £2000 received from the Sturge trustees, and £10,000 paid by the executors of the late Mr. Barbour, for the support of a missionary in China.

The Presbyterian Church of England, Brunswick-street, Manchester, reports a total membership of 542, including 160 at the Mission Hall, Ardwick. It contributed in 1892, for all purposes, £1089, of which £125 was raised in the Mission Hall, and £175 for home and foreign missions and benevolence. There are 668 scholars in the Sunday-schools, taught by sixty-three teachers. There are also three temperance societies, with a total membership of 760.

The annual meeting of the Marylebone Presbyterian Church was held on Thursday. After tea Rev. R. M. Thornton, M.A., Moderator of the Session, summarised the work and progress of the congregation during the last year. The church roll has been purged of 196 names, and now contained the names of a few more than 600 communicants. The large audience-room, seating some 1500 people, was full night and morning on Sundays, and during the ten months in which Dr. Pentecost had been ministering, 132 new members had been added, most of them on confession of faith. Turning to the financial condition, the report of the treasurer showed most gratifying advance all along the line, and notably in the matter of the Foreign Missions. The congregation are waiting with some anxiety to know what the action of the Presbytery will be upon Dr. Pentecost's application for admission to that body, as his continuance with the congregation will depend upon that.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Mr. Bramwell Booth has returned to duty after his compulsory rest.

Colonel McKie's meetings in Belgium and Holland appear to have awakened great enthusiasm.

Colonel Sowton has opened the army halls in Copenhagen as free night shelters for the homeless of that city.

After completing his northern campaign, the General commenced on Monday week a similar tour in the south. The opening meetings at Brighton proved a great success.

At the recent farewell held at Wellington Barracks, Islington, nearly forty officers were committed to God on the eve of starting for Africa, South America, Jamaica, and other lands.

Commissioner Railton has opened the halls in Berlin as free shelters for destitute men. He reports that during the ten days that this has been going on eighteen hundred men have been sheltered in all, each receiving bread and coffee morning and evening.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mrs. Michelsen, wife of the missionary to Tongoa, New Hebrides.

In common with all our fellow Christians, we deplore the past misrule of Ireland, and rejoice in the desire and endeavour of all parties in the State to do generous justice to her now. We cannot, however, insert communications either for or against the measure now before Parliament, but we urge upon our readers the call to prayer from the venerable lady whose letter appears in our present issue.

The Pope's hearty approval of the bill cannot but make all Protestants cautious concerning it, and lead us to sympathise with our Irish brethren of all denominations, who, by a great majority, are intensely opposed to it. Its contemptuous repudiation by the Irish people in America is evidence that they seek to inculcate upon their countrymen at home nothing less than separation from Great Britain. But a bill which has taken seven years in preparation must not be rushed into law without giving the country time to understand its significance; unless, indeed, a judicial blindness overtake us for our sins at home and abroad.

Whatever our political views may be, and they are very varied, we can unite at the throne of grace in prayer for both Great Britain and Ireland, that the God of nations may overrule all for his own glory, giving us to prove his holy, acceptable, and perfect will, and to comprehend his wise and far-reaching purposes.

We regret that in the correspondence on Sacramentalism, a correspondent should have charged the Society of Friends with "disobedience to the commands of the Lord" in consequence of a "desire to emphasise the spiritual to the disregard of the outward and visible." This is not correct, seeing that the Friends hold the ordinances to have been intended to be temporary, and that in due course they passed away. We do not agree with their interpretation of Scripture on these points, but we must allow their consistency, which has been well defended in several letters to us. We cannot, however, extend this correspondence into a discussion as to the permanent validity of the two ordinances.

The Temperance Parliament, which sat last week, has apparently created a deep and healthy impression upon the mind of the country. It has conclusively shown that temperance men are not so widely separated from each other as some supposed, and that they are not full of impossible plans which each little section is determined to have carried out at the cost of every other section. A substantial working unity was manifested. If the great Parliament at St. Stephen's will consider what was said and done by the little Parliament at the Memorial Hall, we shall soon see some effective measures taken for turning us into a temperate nation.

One of the knottiest points, and one of the most important, considered by the "Parliament," was that of legislation as to drink-selling-clubs. The delegates called for the suppression of associations which exist solely for the purpose of supplying intoxicating drink to their members, or colourably for some other purpose. And where there are bonâ fide clubs which dispense intoxicating drinks, the demand was made for them to be placed under such legal regulations as would ensure their being bonâ fide clubs. We ourselves have been in numbers of so-called political clubs belonging to both political parties, where drinking, smoking, and billiard-playing were the occupation of the attendants, and the ostensible object for which they came together seemed to be lost sight of. It will be vain to close the public-house which is regulated, and leave the club open unregulated.

The Anti-Opium News for the current month says that "there are three great missionary societies in India which are having stupendous success, without parallel in the history of missions." They have three points of difference and three points of agreement. They differ in ideas of baptism, in church government, and in methods of work. They agree in their marvellous success, in their unanimous denunciations of the three great governmental crimes, and in the total abstinence of all their missionaries from narcotics and intoxicants. The societies are—the American Baptist Missionary Society, the American Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Salvation Army. Now, there can be no doubt that these parallels are striking, and worthy of the careful attention of our home societies. The lesson which our contemporary draws is perfectly right—if Christian societies are to be as successful as they ought to be they must have "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

But it seems to us that our contemporary might have gone on to inquire why these three societies have been so exceptionally successful, and why, according to its testimony, the rest have more or less failed. Two of the societies are American, and thus have no connection through their missionaries or in any other vital way with the country whose Government has sinned so grievously against India and China. They are unbiassed: and they are not associated with the ruling classes of India. For our English societies and their missionaries to condemn our national policy is to judge their countrymen and to be in antagonism with British representatives; and it is always a difficult thing to do this. "But the Salvation Army is British, and has done it?" Yes: the Salvation Army has the enormous advantage of never having had complicity with the drinking and smoking habits of the people; and it has had little or no connection with the Anglo-Indian class either here or in India. Its lowliness has been in part its protection.

These facts suggest another reflection. When England had freed her slaves, and had clean hands, she had power in quickening the conscience of America; the anti-slavery party of the States always looked across here for encouragement and support. Now it is America's turn to help us. We only pray that our societies at home and our missionaries abroad may be willing to learn from the facts (for such we presume they are) to which their attention has been so impressively called. No love of our country, and no friendship with British officials, should be allowed to prevent us from absolute loyalty to our Lord and Master.

The protest of the committee of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union against the action of the Decennial Missionary Conference in regard to the three great curses which British rule has inflicted upon India and China, will doubtless find a response in thousands of hearts which are yearning for the coming of God's Kingdom in those lands. Whatever explanation may be forthcoming from individual missionaries or from the conference as a whole, the fact remains that this important and representative conference did not throw the weight of its influence on the side of the efforts now being made in this country to remove three of the worst hindrances to missionary work. Such action will cool the rising ardour of the churches for missionary work, and give the enemy cause to blaspheme. This has been a sin of omission, and for many a year it will be quoted against missionaries and their work. In view of what is known of the effects of drink and opium, and of what will soon be published of the shameful illegalities carried on for the protection of immoral men, the negative attitude of the conference is nothing short of a calamity.

To those who are interested in the condition of the poor and the question of the necessary improvements in the Poor Law, we may commend an article in the February issue of The Newbery House Magazine which deals with the Austrian Poor Law system. It certainly appears that the working of the law in Austria admits of the nicest discrimination being exercised in the treatment of cases of poverty due to misfortune; and also allows of the more kindly treatment of old people and children. The Austrian plan seems worthy of careful study at the present time by all who may be enabled to help forward the movement for an amelioration of the existing state of things in these islands.

A new method of recruiting has been discovered in these days of change. Boys are formed into battalions and cadet corps for the purpose of infusing into them a military spirit, and ultimately leading them to enlist as soldiers. Lord Methuen regards "a cadet corps as one of the finest feeders of the army." The public who give funds to such a movement ought surely to remember these and similar words, which show that the movement is really military, not philanthropic; it is fostering militarism, which is one of the heaviest burdens, as it is one of the direst curses, of Europe. Our poor boys seem to be regarded as fit food for powder; for only a fortnight ago a magistrate declined to do anything to get back for his father a boy who had been sent from an industrial school into the army without the father's consent. Had a Roman Catholic, egged on by his priest, claimed a boy from Dr. Barnardo, perhaps the result would have been different.

The example which Bradford Nonconformists set some time ago, of making a house-to-house visitation of their town, promises to be followed by other great towns; Birmingham has decided to do it. We shall be curious to see the result. As might have been expected, the visitors at Bradford were generally received with courtesy; in only a dozen cases, eleven of which were villas, had they to endure rudeness. Such a fact points to an open door set before Christians. If the people do not come to the churches and chapels, they yet are willing to receive a visit from Christian men and women who are interested in them. As in every age, the poor are the most accessible.

A division of opinion revealed itself at Birmingham as to whether the Nonconformists should have a Council which should make itself felt in matters of political and social morality. A majority of the conference was in favour of the proposal, another strong indication of the power of "social Christianity." If this be wise, we are, nevertheless, sure that it will need the utmost efforts of spiritual men to keep it from absorbing the mind and energy of the churches, and turning them away from their grand distinctive work. This was the fear of Dr. Dale and the minority led by him.

In a pamphlet just published entitled, "The Three Vital Truths, according to the Bishop of Durham" (2d., Hawkins & Co.), Mr. Charles Underwood shows the difference between a very subtle form of error, and the plain teaching of Holy Writ. Analysing the Bishop's work, "the Victory of the Cross," he says:—

> Dr. Westcott designates as "the three truths which seem to be vital," (1) The fulfilment by the Incarnation of the original purpose of creation; (2) The distinction between the remission of sins, bringing with it the restoration of fellowship with God, and the remission of punishment as distinct from sin; and (3) The solidarity of humanity which is realised in Christ; and he judges that "The last will be of the greatest moment in the years to come."

Scripture knows no "solidarity of humanity," but distinguishes the race in general as in Adam from believers in particular as in Christ. Here is separation, not "solidarity" it is through sharing in Christ's death that we become partakers in his glorious life, and heirs of the eternal "solidarity."

A "solidarity" consequent upon the miracle of the Incarnation is an argument for universalism by which the unwary may be easily deceived. The Incarnation, however, was preliminary to the yet more wonderful mystery, the death of Christ, "the Just for the unjust." It is emphatically through the propitiatory work of the Cross that men are saved; for it declares God's mercy and righteousness, how He may himself be just and the justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus (Rom. iii. 21—26).

Bible Study for Christians.

No. III.

By Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, Birmingham.

VII. Do not neglect all commentaries.

A preacher of some note says, "Personally, I have never got any real good out of commentaries." If this is our experience, there is probably something wrong with us; or we have been unfortunate in our selection of particular writers. Of some commentators no doubt it may be said:

> The commentators each dark passage shun,
> And hold their farthing candle to the sun.

Personally, I would testify to receiving much benefit from such works as Dr. Trench's "Notes" on the Parables and Miracles, Dr. Morison's "Practical Commentary on St. Matthew's Gospel," Dr. Dale's "Lectures on the Ephesians." Specially would I recommend for English readers Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown's "Portable Commentary," published by Collins & Sons, Glasgow, and sold for 8s. nett, as a marvel of excellence and cheapness. The prejudice of some against commentators generally is clearly without proper foundation. The man preaching is edifying; the man commentating is unedifying. And yet the best preaching is commentating! The same Spirit who uses the preacher can use the commentator, making both luminous.

Of course, commentaries can be abused. So can sermons. Both can be made to be a substitute for our own spiritual thinking instead of a stimulus to it. God meant that the very humblest mind, the least endowed with learning, should have thoughts of its own when it comes into contact with Scripture; but assuredly He also meant that they should not be shut up to such things as they can discover of themselves, but should be able to avail themselves of the studies of those who have been life-long students of the Word. Only let us see to it that neither by our own thinkings nor by those of our fellows (often much abler and fuller than ours), do we exclude those voices of God which are seeking to reach our souls. He is so anxious to make Himself understood by us that He will use various vehicles for his voice if we are willing to let them be such and no more.

VIII. Study the Bible with the help of the Revised Version.

The best results of European Biblical scholarship for 270 years are given to us in the Revised Version, which is a somewhat more faithful rendering of the Word of God than is the Authorised Version, even as the latter transcended its predecessors in this respect. As regards the New Testament, King James' translators had an inferior Greek text before them, as compared with that possessed by modern scholars. "Their revision was founded on MSS. of late date, few in number, and used with little critical skill. Nearly all the more ancient of the documentary authorities have become known only within the last two centuries." Many people are prejudiced against the Revised Version because they miss in it many of those phrases which are endeared to them by the associations of childhood and by their own private meditations, and hallowed by the services of the House of Prayer. Admitting that the Authorised Version represents better English than the Revised, that the mingled majesty, tenderness, and simplicity of the language of the former is a little marred in the latter, yet this is not the chief question. If the earlier rendering is more tasteful, the later one is more truthful.

It will be found therefore a profitable thing to compare carefully the Authorised with the Revised Version, noting all the more important variations; although no great truth deducible from the former will be altered by the modern version, some old truths, such as the personality of the devil, will be seen to stand out in yet clearer light. And the very comparison between the two will open up interesting trains of thought, and will tend to impress Bible truth generally on the mind of the reader.

JAPANESE WOMEN.

One of the most interesting visitors from afar that have come to this country of late is Madame Tel Sono, of Tokio, Japan. She is endeavouring to interest British Christians, as she has succeeded in interesting American Christians, in a projected training school in Japan for the educating and uplifting of her countrywomen. As Madame Tel Sono herself stated in these columns last week, her stay amongst us will be brief; she purposes returning to her native land in May. If, as a people, we are effectively to help this Eastern sister in the work to which she has set her heart and hand in the name of God, we must set about it pretty speedily. Christians who realise the deep import of the Divine utterance that "all souls are mine" (Ezek. xviii. 4), and who would enter into the fellowship that pertains to their high calling, are counselled to secure an early visit to their localities from this Japanese lady, in order that she may tell them her touching, simple, and effective story.

That story was told in brief last Thursday to a little company of friends gathered at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W. Madame Tel Sono has not yet acquired a perfect command of the English tongue, and her expression of it is what we call "broken," but that seems to add to the piquancy of the narrative, and she has no difficulty in making herself understood. In the most simple and natural way she described last week her early experiences of divine things. At the age of thirteen she was taught by her father to worship the one living and true God. The account she gives of her prayer to God for her father's recovery from sickness is pathetic and moving in the extreme; though she did not then know God as He is revealed in Christ. When twenty-six years old she began business as a lady lawyer in Tokio. In this capacity she gained much insight into the condition of her countrywomen. To acquire greater knowledge and therefore greater power in helping her Japanese sisters, she went to America, where she has resided for some years, and where she had some very strange, not to say amazing, experiences. There, however, she came to know and trust Christ as her Saviour.

Her plan now is to return to her native shores, have a Christian training and school for women erected at Tokio, and devote the rest of her life to the developing and working of this institution. Her hope is in that way to raise the mental and spiritual status of Japanese women of the higher social ranks, who, in turn, will be the saviours, humanly speaking, of those in the humbler walks.

With the artlessness and candour of a true and sincere soul, inspired by a great purpose, she appeals to her audience for the "Jesus money" that will be required for setting her cherished project on foot. A little book containing her autobiography has been published at 2s. 6d., and the sale of these books defrays her necessary personal expenses. All the sums given for the training school are held intact, and are strictly regarded as "Jesus money." Miss McLean, Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, London, S.W., acts as recording secretary, and will receive applications for a visit from Madame Tel Sono, as well as forward copies of the book.

At the close of our sister's address on Thursday, Lord Radstock made some very weighty remarks as to the way in which these ancient nations are groping earnestly, if dimly, after God, and as to the deep responsibility that rests on those who walk in the full light of Christian knowledge and experience, to carry that knowledge as quickly as possible to the peoples that still sit in the darkness of superstition and false belief. Rev. Charles Fox, who was one of the interested listeners, in prayer besought the God of all flesh to prosper and crown with success the work of our Japanese friend.

The Book of the Kingdom.—5.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

"THE SHOUT OF A KING IS AMONG THEM."

CHAPTER I.—The ring of royalty resounds through this glorious book from first to last. Jesus the King gave commandments unto the Apostles, the ambassadors, whom He had chosen. During the forty days between his resurrection and ascension, He instructed them concerning the Kingdom of God, because only as scribes instructed unto the Kingdom of Heaven could they bring forth out of their treasure things new and old.

They understand their connection with the Kingdom, but still (like Nathanael) they regard it as limited to Israel. He shows them greater things—that it is as wide as the world, and that the Holy Ghost shall be given to empower them to be his witnesses.

II. The unclean spirit, as a strong man armed, had kept his palace, but the Stronger than he had come upon him, and through death brought to nought him who had the power of death, and God had made that same Jesus whom they had crucified both Lord and Christ.

III. Having healed the lame man by the beautiful gate of the Temple, Peter tells the people that they had denied the Holy One and the Just, and killed the Prince of Life, whom God had raised up; and He who had had authority on earth to forgive sins—a royal prerogative—now from his ascended glory sent to bless them in turning everyone from his iniquities—a still higher exercise of royal power.

IV. His apostolic ambassadors are filled with exultation and enthusiasm as the heralds of the King. Their levers are already beneath the kingdoms of this world: "Whether it be right in the sight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." Threatened but unpunished, they return to their own company, and cry to God who made heaven and earth and sea, and all that in them is, because the kings of the earth stood up and their rulers were gathered together against the Lord and against his Anointed King.

V. The penalties of the Kingdom are exercised on those who, born of the flesh, but not born again, intrude into the Kingdom of God, and practise the deeds of the liar from the beginning in the presence of God's Spirit.

VII. The sting of Stephen's impeachment is that as their fathers had through envy sold Joseph, who in God's providence became governor of Egypt; and as they refused Moses, saying, "Who made thee a ruler and a judge?" but whom God made a ruler and a deliverer; so now, stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, they had become the betrayers and murderers of the Just One.

VIII. The persecuted and scattered Church went everywhere preaching the Word (of the Kingdom, Matt. xiii. 19). Philip at Samaria preached Christ, the Anointed King. Men and women, believing Philip as he preached the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, were baptized into his name. The terms, "the Word of God," "the Word of the Lord," "the Gospel" (14, 25), are impregnated with the idea of the Kingdom. Philip, implicitly obeying the Royal mandate, leaves Samaria, where he is gathering much fruit, and takes the lonely and desert road to Gaza; he preaches to the eunuch Jesus the Saviour and the King, baptizes him into the Name, and thus an ambassador of the King, a successor of the Apostles, is commissioned to Ethiopia, who is stretching out her hands to God

IX. Saul, smitten to the earth by the glory of the risen Nazarene, immediately acknowledges His royal right to absolute obedience—"Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"—and he proved in the synagogues that Christ is the Son of God, and that this Jesus is very Christ.

X. In the house of the Gentile Cornelius, representative of the fourth great monarchy, Peter testifies that he is commanded to preach that Jesus, crucified by men and raised up by God, is He who is ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. And as the Roman centurion at the cross said, "Certainly this was a righteous man; truly this was the Son of God!" so this other Roman centurion received the Holy Ghost, and he and his company spake with tongues and magnified God.

XI. Barnabas sees at Antioch the grace of God. Our coinage testifies that kings rule on earth only by the grace of the Great King. Grace is a royal prerogative. See XX.

XII. Herod the King vexes the Church, kills James, and imprisons Peter; but the angel of the Lord mocks his authority in the name of "another King, one Jesus," by whose power chains fall off, and iron gates swing open of their own accord. But Herod cannot learn; and upon a set day, deliberately appointed, arrayed in royal apparel, he sat upon his throne and made an oration. And when the parasitic people shouted, "The voice of a god and not of a man!" the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory; and he was eaten of worms and died. One Herod and his men of war had set Him at nought and mocked Him as the Lowest of men; now another Herod of the same spirit finds that He that sitteth in the heavens can make worms to be his men of war, to set at nought the kings of earth.

XIII. In the synagogue at Antioch in Pisidia, Paul tells them how Jerusalem and its rulers, who knew not Jesus nor the voice of the prophets, fulfilled them in condemning Him: but God raised Him from the dead; and the Apostle declares good tidings—the sure mercies of David—that through Him is preached forgiveness of sins, and that by Him they that believe are justified from all things.

XIV. At Iconium this indefatigable ambassador of Jesus preached the same good tidings, and returning confirmed the souls of the disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith, because we must, through much tribulation, enter into the Kingdom of God.

XV. Like a king's counsellors, receiving their directions from the Holy Ghost, the Apostles in conference decide difficult questions, and like wise rulers ordained of God they are considerate of habits rooted in the past while they legislate for the present and the future.

XVI. As a servant of the King of heaven, Paul commands the evil spirit in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of the python-possessed girl at Philippi. The magistrates beat and imprison him and his companion, but the God of all the earth shakes the foundations of the prison, looses all the prisoners, causes a heart-quake in the jailer, and turns his night of weeping into a morning of joy. The magistrates when they hear that they are Romans send to let God's ambassadors depart in peace, but they refuse to be cast out secretly, and the authorities of the fourth kingdom upon earth, dreadful, terrible, and strong exceedingly, came and besought them, and brought them out and desired them to depart out of the city. The powers that be are ordained of God, and God's ambassadors, on the King's business, claim the fulfilment of the laws which those powers have made.

XVII. Paul reminds the Athenians that we all are God's offspring, made of one blood, to dwell on all the face of the earth. He commandeth all men to repent, because He hath appointed a day in which to judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom He hath ordained, whereof He hath given assurance unto all, in that He raised Him from the dead.

Paul at Corinth, pressed in spirit, testified to the Jews that Jesus is the Christ. Opposed and blasphemed against, he turned to the Gentiles, and, encouraged by a vision from the Lord, he abode there eighteen months, teaching the Word of God—the doctrine of the Kingdom of God.

Apollos comes to Ephesus, and, instructed by Aquila and Priscilla, mightily confuted the Jews, showing publicly, in the very words of Paul, that "Jesus is the Christ."

XIX. Paul, returning to Ephesus, reasoned and persuaded in the synagogue, and in the School of Tyrannus, as to the things concerning the Kingdom of God; repeating the signs of the twelve and the seventy, healing diseases, and casting out evil spirits.

XX. After a long journey, he sent from Miletus for the elders of the Church at Ephesus, and reminded them how, night and day, with tears, he had testified the Gospel of the Grace of God—preaching the Kingdom of God. Not two gospels—for grace belongs to the kingdom. Only the sovereign can show grace to rebels. Only from the Throne of Grace can grace proceed.

Paul was pure from the blood of all, for he had not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God, the mercy and the judgment, the goodness and the severity, during those two years in which he there reasoned and persuaded the things concerning the Kingdom of God.

XXI.—XXVI. Urged by his brethren not to go to Jerusalem, Paul was ready to be bound or to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus. And when bound there he testified his loyalty to his King since the day of his conversion. In the temptation of Jesus, there was no consideration of Himself, but only of obedience to God; and in this Paul followed Christ.

The chief captain, and Felix, and Festus, and Agrippa, are all made to feel that Paul holds higher office than they; that he is an official of a higher Kingdom than that which they serve; that he is the confidential friend of the King of kings. Felix trembled; Festus, frightened at the contrast which his own life presented to that of Christ's faithful witness, shouted, "Paul, thou art beside thyself, much learning hath made thee mad," knowing all the while that the madness was his own. Agrippa cries, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." The prisoner is a king in chains, the ruler is a slave in purple.

XXVII. On board the storm-smitten ship the kingly man is Paul, because he is true to God, "whose I am and whom I serve." He takes command, and all he says comes to pass, for he is the mouthpiece of the King.

XXVIII. Arrived at Rome, he "dwelt for two whole years in his own hired house, preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence, no man forbidding him." Thus in the metropolis of the fourth kingdom upon earth, God, by his servant, establishes the Imperium in imperio, the Kingdom which shall never be destroyed. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."

More space has been devoted to this royal record because, while the Gospels treat of what Jesus began to do and teach, the Book of Acts recites the full-orbed Gospel of Jesus and the Resurrection, preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

The Christianity without Christ, the Humanitarianism without God, the New Humanity made out of the old material, the shallow conception of sin against God, the want of power to produce conviction of sin, and therefore the slightly felt need of a Saviour, so rife in the present day, emphasise the necessity of sowing the genuine seed, "the word of the Kingdom." The Lord's Return.*

BY PRINCIPAL RAINY, D.D.

Probably there is no feature in which the average Christianity of to-day varies more from that of the early Christians, than in the faint impressions, and the faint influence, experienced by most modern Christians in connection with the expectation of the Lord's return.

As far as individual life goes, the position of men in both periods is much the same; it is so, in spite of all the changes that have taken place. Then, as now, the mirage of life tempted men to dream of felicities here, which hindered them from lifting up their heads to a prospect of redemption. But now, as then, counter influences work; the short and precarious term of human life, its disappointments, its cares and sorrows, its conflicts and falls, conspire to teach even the most reluctant Christian that the final and satisfying rest is not to be found here. So that the difference seems to arise mainly from a secret failure of faith on this point, due to the impression made by long ages in which Christ has not come. "Where is the promise of his coming? All things continue as they were."

This may suggest, however, that influences are recognisable, tending to form, in modern Christians, a habit of thought and feeling less favourable to vivid expectation of Christ's coming. It does not arise so much in connection with individual experience, but is rather an impression drawn from history and from the common life of men. In the days of Paul, general history was simply discouraging to spiritual minds. It led men to think of all creation groaning together. Civilisation certainly had made advances; civil government had conferred some of its benefits on men; and, lately, the strong hand of Rome, however heavily it might press, had averted or abridged some of the evils that afflicted nations.

Still, on the whole, darkness, corruption, and social wrong continued to mark the scene, and there was little to suggest that prolonged effort might gradually work improvement. Rather it seemed that a rapid dispensation of grace, winning its way by supernatural energy, might well lead on to the winding up of the whole scene, sweeping all away before the advent of new heavens and a new earth. But, for us, nineteen hundred years have well-nigh passed. The Christian Church has been confronted all that time with her great task; and, however imperfect her light and her methods have often been, she has set processes agoing, and pressed on in lines of action, in which she has not been without her reward. Also the public action of at least the European races, stimulated and guided by Christianity, has been inspired by faith in progress and in a reign of justice, and has applied itself to improve the conditions of men.

How much of sin and pain still afflict the world is too sadly evident. But the memory of the successive lives of saints, thinkers, men of public spirit and devoted public action, is strong in Christian minds to-day—it is a long, animating history. And never more than at the present time did the world press itself on the Christian mind as the sphere for effort, for helpful and hopeful achievement. All this tends to fix the eye on what may happen before Christ comes; for one asks room and time to fight the battle out, to see the long co-operant processes converge upon their goal. The conflict is thought of as one to be bequeathed, like freedom's battle, from sire to son, through indefinite periods beyond which men do not very often look. And, indeed, the amelioration of the world and remedy of its ills by works of faith and love is Christ-like work. The world cannot want it; the fruit of it will not be withheld; and the hopeful ardour with which it is pursued is Christ's gift to his people. For Christ Himself healed and fed the multitudes. Yet all this shall not replace the coming of Christ, and the redemption that draws nigh with Him. The longing eyes that gaze into the prospects of public-spirited beneficence and Christian philanthropy, do well; but they must also look higher up and further on.

One thing must be said. It is vain for us to suppose we can adjust beforehand, to our own satisfaction, the elements which enter into the future, so as to make a well-fitted scheme of it. That was not designed. And in this case two ways of looking at the future are apt to strive together. The man who is occupied with processes that, as he conceives, might eventuate in a reign of goodness reached by gradual amelioration, by successive victories of the better cause, may look askance on the promise of Christ's coming, because he dislikes catastrophe and cataclysm. First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear, is his motto. And the man who is full of the thought of the Lord's return, and deeply persuaded that nothing less will eradicate the world's disease, may look with impatience on measures that seem to aim at slow and far results. But neither the one mode of view nor the other is to be sacrificed. Work is to be done in the world on the lines that promise best to bless the world. Yet also this faith must never be let down—The Lord is coming; the Lord shall come.

* Extracted from The Epistle to the Philippians, by Robert Rainy, D.D., Principal of New College, Edinburgh (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), a valuable addition to the "Expositor's Bible" series. The treatment is spiritual and practical, based on ample learning and yet easy of comprehension. The passage which we give is from the chapter expounding the verse, "For our citizenship is in heaven; from whence also we wait for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, etc." (Phil. iii. 20, 21, R.V.).

MISSION WORK IN SOUTH LONDON.—The Mission Band associated with Clifton-street, Wandsworth-road, and Studley-road, Stockwell, Wesleyan Chapels, held its annual meeting at the latter place of worship on Wednesday evening, Feb. 22. An encouraging report was read by the organising secretary (Mr. G. Heath). Services for children and adults indoors, house to house and public-house visitation, personal invitations to street passengers, open-air and lodging house services (winter and summer), are among the various agencies employed successfully during the past year.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS TEMPTATION.

The narrative is found in Matt. iv. 1—11, and is repeated with some slight variation in Luke iv. 1—13. Mark in two brief verses (12, 13) refers to the event, and adds one or two important particulars. Before reading this paper read carefully these Scriptures.

Why should this story concern you? It is the testing time of Him on whom your salvation entirely depends. Can He endure the test? The most important issues depend upon the answer. Here is a wide river over which a skilful engineer has just constructed a bridge. The opening day has dawned. Before it is ready for the use of the public it is to be tested. An engine and carriages, exceeding in weight anything the bridge will have to bear, are run on to it, and are allowed to remain there until its strength and solidity are beyond question. Is not the testing an important matter? Who would trust it if it showed some signs of weakness on the testing day? The temptation of Jesus is his testing. The eternal life of all his people is involved. You would not cross a little wooden plank over a narrow stream unless you were sure it would hold. If Jesus were not thoroughly tested, or if He proved in any particular unable to bear the test, how could you trust Him?

1. Was He thoroughly tested?—It must not be supposed that He was never tempted except during his forty days in the wilderness. The devil left Him only "for a season" (Luke iv, 13). In many different forms he renewed the attacks upon Him throughout his after life, sometimes using even an apostle to tempt Him (Matt. xvi. 22, 23). But this wilderness temptation seemed to comprehend every form of assault. Have you noticed the three things that are said to be in the world? They are "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" (1 Jno. ii. 16). In the temptation by which our first parents fell these three all appear. Read carefully Gen. iii. 6. Is it any wonder that after Satan had succeeded in the garden he should repeat the same three forms of temptation with our Lord? In the order as given by Luke, the first is an appeal to the lust of the flesh; the second is an appeal to the lust of the eyes; and the third is an appeal to the pride of life. So that "all that is in the world" was brought to bear upon Him. We may be sure that the testing was thorough. No form of attack was left untried. "He was tempted in all points like as we are" (Heb. iv. 15). Every shaft in the enemy's hand was hurled at Him. He assaulted the body in the first temptation; the soul in the second; and the spirit in the third. Satan was not wanting in malice towards Him, and used all his strength and all his subtility against Him. Painful though the experience was to Him, we may be thankful He was so completely tested from all sides.

2. Did He sustain the trial?—The question is deeply important. How hopeless, how lost would be our condition if there were any doubt about the answer! He felt the struggle. At the close of it angels came and ministered to Him. It was no sham temptation. The fact that He was the Son of God did not make it less real or less severe to Him. "He suffered, being tempted" (Heb. ii. 18). He was not deceived by the subtilty of the tempter. He saw the sin lurking behind the apparently friendly suggestion to satisfy his hunger by the exercise of his miraculous power. He was wise to know what the enemy really meant, and strong to resist his evil purpose. And his victory is the more valuable because He obtained it as a man. The weapon with which He met the enemy was the same Word of God which is our weapon too. He knew temptation, but He never knew sin. There was no inward response to the outward suggestion of the evil one.

How does this fact help you? Not simply by assuring you that the Saviour was manifestly sinless, and therefore fitted to be your sin-offering. Other results follow. You are in the same world that assaulted Him; and you are powerless to overcome. Must you, then, be vanquished? Not so; for He is the overcomer. And where is He? Not in heaven alone, but in you (2 Cor. xiii. 5). Trust Him to overcome in you; and let his temptation guide you. He did not go into it without being "led of the Spirit." Let the same Spirit lead you. He did not parley with the tempter, but met him at once with the Word of God. Let the same Word dwell in you richly; otherwise with what can the assaults of the enemy be repelled? And count upon his very real sympathy with you even when you fail. Your exalted High Priest is merciful and faithful, and able to succour them that are tempted (Heb. ii. 17, 18).

Is not Christ becoming more wonderful to you? What unsearchable riches are in Him!

RECEIVING AND REIGNING.—Rom. v. 17.

The allotment of Canaan, which was inaugurated beneath the direction of Joshua and Eleazar in Gilgal, and had been temporarily arrested by the claim of Caleb, now proceeded. And, in the first instance, the three great tribes of Judah, Ephraim, and Manasseh received their inheritance. Half the tribe of Manasseh had already received its lot, given by Moses, on the further side of the Jordan. And therefore the descendants of Joseph, in the first instance, received but one lot, and cities were separated for the children of Ephraim in the midst of the inheritance of the children of Manasseh (xvi. 9; xv. 14).

The limits of these great tribes are carefully mentioned. That of Judah in the fifteenth chapter, even to its uttermost cities. That of the children of Joseph in the sixteenth and seventeenth. From this we may infer that there is a specific share in the gifts of the Ascended Saviour for each of us, just as there is a specific work to be done by each in the building of the church, and the ingathering of men. Unto each one of us was the grace given according to the measure of the gift of Christ. (Eph. iv. 7) And again, to each one is given the manifestation of the Spirit to profit withal. That there should be diversities of gifts, and workings, and ministrations is not to be wondered at. This is in harmony with the constitution of the human mind, which in no two persons is alike. But though the talents assigned to each vary in the same way that natural ability does; yet no one of the King's servants is left without some precious deposit. All have not five talents, but each has one. For each there is a piece of wall-building, a corner in the vineyard, a place in the ranks of temple-service, and for each there is a store of special grace and gift, won by the risen Lord, and awaiting bestowment from his hands.

Concerning each of these tribes, there is made the same melancholy confession which is heard repeatedly in this and the following book, like the monotonous note of a storm-bell rung by the wild waves on a dangerous coast. "They could not drive them out."

"As for the Jebusites, the children of Judah could not drive them out." (Joshua xv. 63) "And they drave not out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer, but the Canaanites dwelt in the midst of Ephraim unto this day" (chap. xvi. 10).

"The children of Manasseh could not drive out the inhabitants of those cities, but the Canaanites would dwell in that land" (chap. xvii. 12).

Mark the strength of that word would. It was no word for those Canaanites to use. They were a dispossessed race; they had neither part nor lot in Canaan, and Israel made a profound mistake in allowing them to remain in the face of God's great word, "I will drive them out from before the children of Israel," and yet let us not condemn them lest we condemn ourselves. There is not the least reason why besetting sin or fleshly lusts should hold their own or find any foothold in the region of the saved nature. Never allow them to say they must or they will. Granted that they would be able to keep us at bay, they have no weight in the presence of that Omnipotence which vanquished them on the cross, and is pledged to destroy them utterly.

The presence of the Canaanites led to an altercation between the children of Joseph and Joshua.

"Why hast thou given me but one lot and one part for an inheritance seeing I am a great people." Like so many more they were content to live on the strength of past tradition, upon their numbers and prestige, and to base upon these considerations, claims which they were too indolent to make good by deeds.

"If you are a great people," Joshua replied, "there is plenty of unoccupied territory within the limits of your inheritance. Forest land perhaps! There fell trees, extract the stumps, and grow crops upon the rich and verdant soil fertilised by the leaves of many autumns." How often we ask God for wider spheres of usefulness whilst we fail to utilize those which lie within our reach. "Cut down wood," is an injunction which might very fairly apply to us all. Do not sigh for missionary employment till you have covered the whole acreage within your reach, in the home circle, or amongst the younger children of some poor neighbourhood. The wood may be thick but the axe of persevering faith will make a clearing there.

"The hill country," persisted they, "is not sufficient, and the valley is filled by Canaanites with their iron chariots; give us more."

"No," said Joshua, "you have power enough to cut down the wood and to drive out the Canaanites, use it." For all the territory which we have to win for God we have sufficient power if we would but use it; there is no work so hard, no temptation so mighty, no post so difficult, but there is also sufficient grace contained within the one great gift of the Holy Spirit to meet our every requirement. Perhaps the best path to the speedy acquisition of spiritual power for the majority of those who shall read these lines would be to claim and use the abundance of grace which is within their reach awaiting them in the living Saviour.

This brings us out upon the text that stands at the head of this chapter, which lies in one of the most rocky and precipitous portions of the Epistle to the Romans, like a tiny lakelet on the bosom of gaunt and rugged cliffs.

In those words three things are patent:—

I.—THE DIFFERENCES WHICH OBTAIN BETWEEN CHRISTIANS.

Some exist, others live, others again reign in life. Some have life, others have it more abundantly. With some the spark of eternal life burns dimly, shrouded by dense wreaths of smoke; with others (would that it might be with thee and me, reader) the light burns and shines clear, fervent, brilliant.

To reign in life is to realise the conception of being kings and priests unto God, a royal generation, a chosen people. The conception includes nobility of demeanour, such as becomes the scion of a line of kings; munificence, as when a prince scatters his largess among the crowd; and victory, as becomes the monarch who has trod his enemies beneath his feet, climbing to his throne.

What do you know of these? Would you dare assert that there is aught in your days to make men think that you reign in life? Do the keys hang at your girdle? Do unholy desires bite the dust in your presence? Is there nobility in your mien? Is there a consciousness amongst others that your religion is not only barely sufficient for your own needs, but that the grace of God has so abounded towards you that you in turn can abound to every good work? If not, you have yet to learn what it is to reign in life.

II.—THE CAUSE OF THIS DIFFERENCE.

It does not arise, thank God, from any arbitary allotment on his part of more or less grace. "There are diversities of gifts," but his grace is like the wild flowers on the common, or the beauty that lies as a bloom upon nature, or the water which he brews amongst the hills, all of which are free in their unrestrained abundance to every child of the family of man. Not only so, but to each one of us there is an abundance of grace within our reach. God is very frugal; there is no waste in creation. What seems superfluous in one direction is eagerly wrought up into fresh and necessary fabrics by armies of mysterious and insignificant workers. It seems as if He is always saying, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." But just because of this He is able to give abundantly beyond all we ask or think without stint, so that all are fed and baskets are filled to the very utmost of their content.

In grace as in nature there is a divine prodigality beside a divine frugality. God makes all grace abound towards us. His love passes knowledge, his joy is unspeakable, his peace outstrips our understanding, his thoughts we cannot attain unto.

The real reason then that so many fail to reign in life is to be sought, not in some arbitrary enactment on the part of God, but in the different power of receptiveness which obtains amongst his children. Some fail to receive either because they have not learnt the art, or because they have not reached that position in Christian experience in which they can avail themselves of it. See where the Apostle lays the emphasis, it is they that receive, the abundance of grace who reign. The difference, therefore, is not to be found on the Divine side but on the human; not in the flow of the river, but in the jerk of the connecting tube; not in the reservoir where the gas is stored, but in the pipe where water stops the free flow to the jet.

Great saints are simply great receivers. They may be deficient in culture, education, and a thousand things which belong to others, but they have learnt the happy art, denoted by that word receive, which is found in every part of the New Testament, and especially in connection with the Holy Spirit, "which they which believe on Christ were to receive." We can never forget that He Himself constantly connected that word with the Holy Spirit, as when He breathed on his disciples on the evening of Easter Day, and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost."

Do you want that royalty of mien? Receive it. Do you want that munificence? You have only to receive it. Do you want that victory? There is no other course than to receive it. In a word, do you want to reign in life? Then you must receive the abundance of grace, and the more you receive of it the more royal will life become. What though the hill country be filled with wood, and the lowlands invested by Canaanites, if you will receive and use the power within your reach, "no weapon that is formed against you shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise against you in judgment you shall condemn."

III.—HOW TO ACQUIRE THIS SACRED ART.

It is distinct from praying. Not, indeed, that prayer does not enter into it, but that it is only the foundation from which the soul arises into the secret of receiving. None can claim but those who pray; but many pray who do not go further to receive. "Ask and receive," said our Lord, else your joy will not be full. The lack of joy in Christian hearts may often be traced to a failure to discern the difference between the prayer which is only supplication, and that which takes its guerdon from the outstretched hand of Jesus. Too often our prayers seem like lost vessels, when, in point of fact, they have come to the quays richly freighted, but we have not been there to claim our own. It is as if we always occupied the telegraph office, flashing message upon message for goods we need, but never visited the platform to see if they had come to hand. Perhaps these rules may assist you to acquire this blessed art:—

(a) Be sure that what you ask is according to the mind of God, offered in some promise or precept of Holy Scripture.

(b) Ask for it simply and reverently. Use the name of Jesus; that is, stand in Him, and plead for his glory.

(c) Dare to believe that God does hear and answer your prayer altogether apart from the flow of emotion or the rapture of conscious possession.

(d) Go your way and reckon that God is faithful. Count on Him as bound to keep his troth.

(e) Act as you would if you had all the consciousness and enjoyment possible.

Thus you will find inevitably that the mountain shall become a plain, the woods shall fade into pasture lands, the Canaanites shall be driven before you as the chaff of the threshing floor before the autumn wind, and nothing shall be impossible.

PUBLIC HALL, WEST NORWOOD.—Mr. George Hucklesby writes:—There is a blessed work of grace going on in this hall under the ministry of Pastor Fuller Gooch. It was my privilege last Sunday night to take the gospel service there in the absence of Mr. Gooch, and the large building was quite full. Several professed anxiety about their souls, and desired to be prayed for; this is a constant thing.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—Archdeacon Sinclair pleaded earnestly for the work of the Ragged School Union at a large gathering of friends invited to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George Newnes at Putney on Saturday last. Lady Jenne also contributed her share to the advocacy, speaking from her personal experience of help rendered in clothing, the country holiday work, and other departments of effort.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

VII.

THE SCENERY OF THE BOOK.

If, in order to a right understanding of the Apocalypse, as of any other work, it is necessary to be acquainted with the language in which it is written (in this case symbolic language) and to have a clear idea of its structure, or plan of its composition, it is perhaps of equal importance to form an adequate conception of the appearance of the visions contained therein as they were presented to the eye of the seer. In other words, the scenery of the great drama must be realised.

The visions consist of a series of pictures, dissolving views, or tableaux vivants. The method of their arrangement, the kind of imagery employed, the foreground and background of each of these pictures, and the general effect must be attentively examined if the reader is to obtain any intelligent view of the marvellous scenes which passed before the apostle's gaze.

For the Apocalypse is a dramatic representation; and, as in dramas of human composition, the scenery plays a most instructive part, preparing the spectator, and bringing his mind into harmony with that which he is to hear, so in this most marvellous of all dramas, the author of which is the Lord Himself, a clear apprehension of the inanimate accessories of that which is acted out in vision is indispensable.

For how majestic as well as mysterious is that drama. Think of the dramatis personæ. Who are they? The cherubim, angels in myriads, the great archangel, the crowned and white-robed elders, the angel of the bottomless pit, the sun-clothed and star-crowned woman, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, arrayed in purple and scarlet, monarchs and merchants, soldiers and sailors, masters and slaves, the martyrs of Jesus, and the spirits of demons. Besides these, the Apostle himself is made one of the actors, and above all the Spirit of God and the Lamb—Prophet, Priest, and King—in august majesty, take part in the events of surpassing interest which are unfolded.

And there are others who contribute their share to the completeness of the representation. Symbolic horses of various colours, with their mysterious riders, denoting victory, civil war, famine and pestilence, locusts like scorpions under Satanic rule, thousands and thousands of fire-vomiting horses, weird and awful heraldic shapes, leopard-like, bear-like, and lion-like, seven-headed and ten-horned, or having the characteristics of both dragon and lamb, eagles and all fowls that fly in the midst of heaven—such are the forms of animal life that come upon the stage.

Such actors, heavenly and infernal, angelic and human, bird, beast, and even reptile, constitute a dramatis personæ that requires a scenery of corresponding magnitude and colour. And it is not lacking.

First and foremost—far above all—is the Throne Chamber of the Most High God. Around it flash the lightnings, on all sides reverberate the thunders of the Eternal; clouds and darkness are the habitation of his throne. But there, too, encircling that throne of infinite majesty and holiness is the token of covenant mercy, "a rainbow in sight like unto an emerald."

Stretching out from his footstool is the sea of glass like unto crystal—so calm, so clear—"as the paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness." The seven lamps of fire, symbolic of the Spirit of God in all his plenitude of power, burn before the throne; around are the enthroned elders, and the four mysterious living ones, six-winged, and full of eyes. On that throne is seated One of whose glorious majesty and brightness the seer can only say, "He that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone." But there also, "In the midst of the throne and of the four living ones, and in the midst of the elders," is seen "standing a Lamb, as it had been slain," the all-worthy object of celestial adoration and praise, the incarnate manifestation of Deity, the Opener of the book, the Redeemer of the world. Such is the reassuring, if at the same time awe-inspiring, scene which first attracts the prophet's attention.

In the next place he beholds, from time to time, something like the Jewish temple. It is called the "temple of God" (ch. xii. 19), "the temple of heaven" (ch. xvi. 17), "the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven" (ch. xv. 5). It has its brazen altar of sacrifice, its outer court, its inner precincts with the golden altar before the throne, the ark of the covenant, and the lamps of gold, amidst whose lights walks the Great High Priest. This, since it exhibited the place of worship, represented the ecclesiastical aspect of the attitude and condition of the professing people of God, either dealt with by Christ Himself in secret, as in the case of the seven Churches, or publicly observable, as in the case of the outer court.

Besides this, a view is occasionally presented of the Mount Zion and "the Holy City"; and then, stretched out beneath, is seen a miniature landscape of the Roman Empire and its great city, while above is what Elliott calls "the firmamental heaven"—that is, the sky with sun and moon and stars, denoting the ruling secular powers of the world, the powers "ordained of God."

Finally, after the disappearance of much of the scenery thus exhibited, arises the "great white throne." The lurid light from the lake of fire gleams in the background: the "new heaven, the new earth," are revealed. Then that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending "out of heaven from God, having the glory of God," bursts upon the sight, and the soul-entrancing view of the jasper walls, the golden streets, the river of water of life, the tree of life, with the throne of God and of the Lamb, closes the marvellous display of the "things which must shortly be done."

Such, in a few words, is the general scenery of the great drama, in which it plays almost as great a part, in the way of the instruction it conveys, as the action or utterances of the living personages.

It is well to try and stand in spirit with the beloved apostle, and to imagine, as far as possible, the changes in that scenery, the leading features of which he was permitted to behold. For it is only thus that we can form any adequate conception of the impression which the successive scenes, as they appeared or disappeared, would make upon the prophet's soul, only thus that we can ourselves derive the instruction which the pictorial representation was doubtless intended to afford.

Fortified by the sight of the throne, for ever settled in heaven, inwardly strengthened by the tender yet mighty right hand of the crucified and risen Saviour so gently laid upon him, and with the echoes of the grand orchestral anthem of the redeemed, the angelic hosts, and the whole creation ringing in his enchanted ear, the seer turns his gaze earthward to view the changing delineations of the stupendous events about to happen as they passed athwart the range of his astonished vision.

At the successive command of one of the four living ones, four horses with their riders cross what we may perhaps call the stage, milk-white, blood-red, black and then livid, the last without a human hand to guide, and ridden by the gaunt figures of Death and Hades. Then the scene shifts to the temple courts, and from the altar, the place where lives are laid down, the plaintive cries of martyred saints rise to the throne, and are answered by the assurance of Divine favour and the promise of justice, though for a while delayed.

Then, suddenly, across the earthly landscape comes a marvellous and appalling change. A world-wide catastrophe takes place. The sky is covered with blackness, the sun ceases to shine, the moon's silvery light becomes crimson as blood. "The powers of heaven are shaken," and the very stars fall. A terrible earthquake overthrows the existing order of things; the mountains melt, and the islands are engulfed. "The foundations of the earth are out of course." Monarchs, with their vanquished armies, flee across the scene. The end of all things is expected. The Lamb is the Victor. Next on the pictorial canvas appears from the brilliant East a glorious angel, sealing God's elect; and then, once more, the throne is seen on high, surrounded by the innumerable company of the redeemed—the Church, once "militant here on earth," now triumphant with their palms of victory. The all-prevailing value of the atoning blood that brought them thither is set forth, and their eternal bliss described in words of exquisite beauty that, like the sound of plashing waters in a day of scorching heat, have refreshed for centuries the hearts of weary pilgrims to the better land.

Now the golden altar is seen, the Great Mediator perfuming with "much incense" the prayers of saints, thus made acceptable on high. But, ere long, whirlwinds of terrific force disturb the stillness; lightnings flash and thunders roll. Fire falls from the inverted censer, and, as successive trumpet blasts peal on the ear, across earth's fairest regions sweep desolating scourges. One-third of that portion of the world which is the subject of prophecy is overwhelmed with deluges of hail, fire, and blood, leaving behind them arid plains where had been smiling crops of grain. Now the blue waters of the Mediterranean are lashed to fury as a great volcano falls into her bosom: her depths are turned to blood, whole navies dashed upon the rocks, and corpses by thousands strew the shores. Anon there falls a great star from the sky streaming with flame, and all the rivers are embittered; and as the fourth trumpet's blast is heard, darkness overspreads a large portion of the landscape, the light of sun, moon, and stars being diminished by a third. An angel flying through the air heralds in loud tones further and greater calamities.

Soon, as another star falls, from the depths of an unfathomable abyss roll forth dense clouds, the atmosphere is again darkened, and out of the smoky canopy emerge mysterious swarms of locusts. Their forms are a compound of the likeness of men and women and horses, the whirr of their wings is as the clash of battle, and death on all sides follows their fearful scorpion sting. Another angelic trumpet sounds, and from the banks of a great river, flowing on the very confines of the scene, rush forth myriads of armed horsemen. Their horses are like lions, and from their mouths belch forth fire, smoke, and sulphur, destroying the third part of men.

And now upon the material darkness of the earthly landscape, and upon the deeper spiritual darkness of idolatries and murders and sorceries and fornications and thefts that pollute mankind—"the dark ages," indeed—there arises a brighter day. A cloud-clothed, rainbow-crowned angel descends from the highest heaven with countenance flashing as the sun and feet of flame. Claiming land and sea as his own, his voice, like a lion's roar, shakes the earth. To it seven mimic thunders roll their reply. But they are only "stage effects"; they are not to be written. Then "the little book open" is delivered to the Seer, who is here himself an actor, and the commission to preach the word is pressed into him, so that it beomes part of his very being.

Now the temple courts are revealed again, and a re-formation of their precincts is effected; the sackcloth-vested, fire-breathing, cloud-staying witnesses appear—called candlesticks (or churches, ch. i. 20). But their testimony is at length silenced, and their lifeless forms, prostrate in the street of the great city, are the occasion of world-wide rejoicing. The joy is, however short; a mighty revival from the Lord and Giver of Life raises the dead, who are rapt on high in a cloud of glory. A fearful earthquake follows, in which walls and palaces crumble to dust, and, amid the terror which falls on the inhabitants, the awful peal of "The Last Trump" heralds the completion of the mystery of God.

Lifting up his eyes, the prophet again beholds the worshippers around the throne; he hears the anthems which celebrate the final establishment of the kingdom of "our Lord and his Christ," and, amid the closing convulsions of the "things that are shaken," the temple of God in heaven is opened, and the blood-sprinkled ark of the covenant—symbol of redeeming grace—is revealed.

Such is the scenery of the first series of visions, that of the seals and trumpets. And the second is like unto it. Space forbids its exposition here.

WAKEFIELD.—A supper was given the other evening to between fifty and sixty cabmen. After supper Mr. Alfred Haley occupied the chair, and said that his chief desire in having that annual gathering was to get them together once a year. Cabmen had a very difficult position and many temptations. There were many who professed to be Christians who did not live up to it. He earnestly asked those present not only to be Christians, but also to live the life of a Christian. Rev. J. E. Pater and Mr. Brogden delivered earnest Gospel and temperance addresses.

THE ESCAPED NUN.—Miss Golding, the rescued nun, is actively engaged in all parts of the country in relating her experience of life in a convent during the period of her incarceration therein, showing the bewitchments by which she was drawn to take the fatal step, giving a most heartmoving and interesting account of her doings and sufferings whilst therein, and relating the way and manner in which she was rescued by her solicitor in Aug., 1891. Miss Golding can enter into engagements for dates open through the medium of Mr. G. J. Waters, Horne, Horley, Surrey.

Escaped from Siberia.

By CHAS. COOK.

Having recently attended the anniversary of "The Friends of Russian Freedom," I there met a number of exiles and refugees whose only crime seems that they have loved their country "not wisely but too well." Some of them had left the land of their birth reluctantly, yet knowing that they would have been arrested without reason, and imprisoned without trial, as by the "administrative process" in operation in Russia a man may be imprisoned without trial for years in a fortress and then deported to Siberia without a hearing. Others had escaped after imprisonment; and one specially from Siberia, from whose lips I heard the story I now relate. A gentle, quiet man, of noble birth and cultured mind, one could but sympathise with him, and pray for thousands of his countrymen who are to-day suffering under the iron heel of the oppressors.

At the age of twenty, while living in Moscow, he was arrested and put in one of the large prisons in that city. Later on he was taken to St. Petersburg, and incarcerated in the dreaded Fortress of St. Peter and Paul, on the Neva. At the expiration of eight months, as nothing could be discovered to incriminate him, he was discharged "under police surveillance to his mother's care." Returning to Moscow, he thought that his troubles had ceased, but he was surprised to find himself eight months later again arrested, taken to the fortress, where for two years he languished in anxiety of mind and weakness of body. At the end of that time he was tried for some supposed infraction of the law, but instantly acquitted. How inhuman and unjust are the laws of a country which could allow an innocent man to be awaiting trial for two years!

He now moved to Odessa, but was only permitted to enjoy the sweets of liberty for two years, when for the third time he was thrown into captivity. There are few Englishmen who could thus suffer without feeling an intense hatred to any authorities who could serve them so cruelly. This was in 1874, and he was kept in prison till late in 1877—over three years—when he was charged with "being a member of a society formed with the intention of overthrowing at some future time the present state of authority." He was deprived of all civil rights, sentenced to Siberia for life, deprived of the rights of husband and father, reckoned as judicially dead, and though a noble by birth degraded almost to a level with the ordinary criminal.

His journey began by his being sent to Nijni-Novgorod by rail, then by convict barges down the Volga to Perm-Perm, to Tieumén, and thence by troitka to Tukalinsk. Here he remained for five years, earning a bare subsistence as best he could. An exile who is sentenced to Siberia for life may legally move about all Siberia; but the authorities invariably—as in our friend's case—send special directions with those who conduct the prisoner "that he is not to be allowed to leave the particular town." This may be situated in the Arctic regions, where the frost is often forty below zero, or it may be on the Mongolian frontier, where the heat is at times a hundred in the shade: this will convey some idea of the extent of Siberia. However, after continual requests to be allowed to do what he legally had a right to, he was permitted to remove "with a special permit" to Tomsk.

Another five years of weary exile passed away, with no comfort, and little society congenial to his refined mind. Then a merchant at Irkutsk offered him employment if he could get permission to come. After much patience had been exercised, he at last received a permit from the Minister of Internal Affairs, allowing him permission to leave Tomsk, and some time after arrived at Irkutsk. Here something like comfort was in store and hope began to dawn upon him; but hardly had he had time to get settled in his new home, when he was told by the authorities he must leave. He was discharged, without home or destination. The police said, "You had better go away." He accordingly moved to another place farther east. Here, also, he was informed, he "must go away." He replied, "That is what they said at Irkutsk; very well, I will go away altogether." A deep resolution was made by him, and which he was determined to carry out. The police, thinking he meant to return westward to Tieumén, wired there that they might expect to see him later on; but he had determined to go east.

Vladivostock is 2,500 miles from Irkutsk, and across the eastern side of Siberia to that port he had determined, if possible, to make his way. How he eventually did so would fill a volume; suffice it to say, after months of travelling and waiting he managed to arrive at this long-looked-for place. He knew English ships were constantly sailing from Vladivostock, and almost the first man he spoke to was a captain of an English steamer, who could only half understand his broken English, and who bade him "come to-morrow."

Entering a chemist's shop, he was recognised by a man who knew him, and he expected hourly once again to be arrested. The morrow, however, dawned; the good captain divined which way "the wind was blowing," and took him on board. He sailed away in a few hours for Nagasaki; then on to Yokohama, and thence to Nova Scotia, and eventually to London, where he is now living, and rejoices to think he is in a land of liberty.

Aunt M'ria.

Aunt M'ria, grim, reticent, unyielding, kept the one important store of Gayfields. It was post and stamp office; and grocery, drapery, and stationery depôt in one. Ten years ago Maria Brown had been appointed to the office, and none knew from whence she came. "Maria Brown" was the name over the door, but whether its owner was entitled to the appellative "Miss" or "Mrs." none could discover. Out of regard to her office the elders of the community called her "Miss Brown"; out of the infinite daring of their hearts, the children called her "Aunt M'ria." Gradually this came to be her usual designation, and she neither resented nor accepted it—she was silently indifferent.

One thing alone served to lift or lower her, as the case might be, out of the reach of her neighbours' sympathies and affections—Aunt M'ria was never known to "attend the sanctuary," week-night or Sabbath. She was once approached on the subject, but only once.

"Powerful good sarmint last Sabbath, wa'n't it, Miss Brown?" suggested Sally Edgill, the village mouthpiece, watching M'ria.

"Wa'n't there, so couldn't say. Threepence change."

The cash-drawer and M'ria's mouth both shut with a snap, at once. But M'ria presently had to face the question: the new minister of Hollamby dismounted at her door, and, stooping under that portal, entered.

"Good day, Mrs. Brown," said he, seating himself at the counter, and drawing off his riding gloves. He was fresh and strong, and Aunt M'ria started when he spoke. She answered, but without her usual asperity:

"It's been a good day, but I call it evenin' now."

The new minister smiled, then he said, straight out: "I am the new minister at Hollamby. You are not one of Mr. Barker's congregation—will you be one of mine?"

"No," she replied, yet looking at him weakly. "I won't, I'm not made that way, same as most folks. I can't sing neither, and wouldn't if I could. I hate rantin', singin', and that!"

"So do I," said the young minister. "I agree with you there is nothing more offensive than ranting. But you would not rant; as you say, you are not 'made that way.'"

"How d'you know I wouldn't rant?" she asked.

"Because your heart wants something better," was the confident reply.

The woman was trembling, but she would not yield without a struggle.

"Then it will never get it," she replied. "I've no faith in anythin' I can't manage myself. You talk of Providence——"

"No, I do not," said the minister. "It is too vague. The sorrow and the sin in my life demand definiteness. You and I need Christ!"

"You look too young, an' I was goin' to say, too good, to know sorrow," said M'ria. "I dunno why I'm tellin' ye, but I've known sorrow, too. Minister, I wonder what your sorrow was like?"

"When I most needed her, I lost my mother"—the minister was pulling on his gloves as he said it—"and the sorrow in your heart has drawn this sorrow out of mine. I have told none what I have now told you."

"Minister!" cried the deeply-agitated M'ria, "your sorrow is safe with me, for oh, I must tell you—when he was four years old I lost my only child, stolen from me by his father! You say my heart wants somethin' better'n rant—tell me, can I ever hope for any comfort, for anythin' but sorrow and death, now? Oh, minister, my Archie!"

"Poor mother!"—M'ria started at the word "mother"—"you can, but you must ask for it. Have you ever asked for God's comforting grace?"

"I tell you," she cried, "there'd be no comfort 'ithout Archie, and He couldn't give him back, else why'd He take him?"

"I don't think He took him; but I think He could give him back. I've often asked Him to let me meet my mother. Will you think of this when you ask Him to receive you and to comfort you?"

There were tears in the young minister's eyes, and he held out his hand. The woman clasped it fervently as she said:—

"You've give me a longin' to be comforted, a longin' to be forgiven; but oh, I know I durs'nt ask more'n that!'

"Ask that, and God bless you!" The minister was gone.

The Saturday-night prayer-meeting at Hollamby church was closing—it had been unusually long, for it was nearly ten o'clock—when Aunt M'ria timidly opened the creaking side-door and crept in. Someone was finishing a prayer, but M'ria did not notice that. She sat rocking her body, her head in her hands, till the closing hymn began:

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear!
It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds—"

At these words M'ria fixed her eyes upon a scroll behind the minister, bearing Christ's promise (Matt. xi. 28). The singing went on till they came to the words, "And to the weary rest," when M'ria broke down. Stretching out her hands to the young minister, she cried:—

"Oh, minister, I've got the forgiveness, but I ain't got the comfort nor the rest yet. I've come here for it, and I can't go 'way 'ithout it, nuther. I want the comforting grace of God."

Nobody was scandalised by this interruption. They were used to broken hearts and God's healing love at Hollamby, and fell on their knees at a wave of the minister's hand. He knelt by Aunt M'ria, and at his own "Amen," put his arms about her, gently lifting her, and facing his people. With her head bowed upon his shoulder, he gave out the Doxology, and to the mothers of the congregation, who came up in tears, he said:

"I have found my mother, but she has fainted. Let me carry her home."

"Archie, my son, to think as I've got the forgiveness and the comfort, too! Your words, 'You and I need Christ!' fastened themselves on me, but I wouldn't give in, as I called it, so long 's God kept you from me. Archie, I thought you wuz dead, and I was kind o' punishin' God by keepin' away from Him all the time!"

It was Aunt M'ria speaking, but you would not know her—the disciple and the mother had obliterated the postmistress, Aunt M'ria.

"Yes, mother," said the minister, "and, looking back, I see that the nearer I got to God, the nearer He was drawing me to you."

"To think as you knew me all the time, Archie! Maybe, if I'd 'a given in sooner, the Lord 'ud 'a sent you along quicker. But He couldn't give me the blessin' till I were ready for it. Eh, dear, what miles o' good we lose through keepin' away fro God!"

The copses were in a haze of white, for it was May, and they who loved her were carrying the minister's mother to the little God's acre she had helped to make beautiful. Ten happy years, in which she had shown the power of "a life turned inside out for God," as she would say, she had dwelt among them, and they loved her.

The children loved her, their Aunt M'ria, because she loved them.

The churches loved her because her humble, loving words and ways brought heaven nearer to all. Her son loved her and cherished her because of her crown of beautiful motherliness.

And the simple headstone tells its own quiet story:—

"Maria Brown, the Minister's Mother, 'Was lost and is found.' 'I will abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness.'"

BAPTIST MINISTERS AND TEMPERANCE.—The Baptist Total Abstinence Association, in its eighteenth annual report, states that 1410 ministers of the Baptist denomination are now on the total-abstinence list, while out of 224 students in colleges, 216 are abstainers.

For the Young.

DON'T WAIT FOR THE MAN IN FRONT!

I was coming out of the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., in London, one day, and wished to catch a train at Fenchurch-street for Barking. I turned to a friend at the door and said, "I'm not going to 'cab it'; do you think I'll do better by 'bus or on foot?" "Mr. Trot's ponies for me," was the reply. "Try your own pegs down Gresham-street, but don't wait for the man in front!"

I took this practical advice, and every time another stood before me, though going the same way as I was, that parting counsel came to my mind, "Don't wait for the man in front!" I took care not to do so, caught my train, and thoroughly enjoyed the hearty little prayer-meeting. But I had had no time to spare, and had I waited for one man in front, or even trusted to the crawling 'bus, so given to waiting for others, I should never have succeeded.

How often trains are missed by waiting for the man in front! How often we leave undone that which we ought to do, because we wait for someone else to set us the example! How often we could testify for Christ amid his enemies, if only someone else would speak first! Would that sort of thing do at cricket or football? Would that sort of thing do in school? Why, then, do we think it may do in serving Christ?

Out here in Barbary, where all our travelling has to be done on the backs of animals, it is a great thing to secure a beast which will go ahead. Nine-tenths of the mounts obtainable are miserable followers of fashion. They will travel well enough in Indian file, but they won't face a ditch, or even a bridge, alone. They are just like so many of us. When we hear the unkind word; when we hear the mocking of fools at sin; when the conversation turns in a godless channel, how easy to join in the titter or laugh, how easy to float with the stream. Perhaps there is some older one in the company whose position or age gives him some rank among Christians, surely his is the duty to stem the tide. How shall we, with all our conscious weakness and sinfulness, step ahead of him? But we must: it is our duty; we must never wait for the man in front.

Our life is a race set before us. Not the race of our school fields, where each does his best to be first, and where only one can win. In life's race, in Christ's race, there are prizes for all, and all we have to do is to push straight forward, our eyes fixed on the goal of joy, the service of God. Could an athlete think of pausing for the man in front? Not for one moment, but turning aside he passes him, with care that there may be no fouling, that no one shall suffer that he may win.

Whatever great things, whatever good things, have been accomplished in this world's history, are due to men and women who have not waited for others, who have seen a path before them and have followed it, who did not wait for the man in front. We want to be both great and good; not great in the empty honours of earth, or good in the eyes of men, but to have that greatness of soul and that goodness of heart which come by reflection from Christ. It may be we have not yet taken the first step towards it, we see so many in front, and we would like to see how they fare.

How many have waited and put off doing some little thing for Jesus till the chance was past? How many of us are even now waiting for the man in front to take the first step in the Christian life, or some subsequent one of duty? Does it not seem very foolish when we come to think of it? Shall we not mend from to-day?

There is One who is ever waiting for us with open arms to receive us whenever we come. There is One who is ever waiting to bless us, whenever we step out from the crowd for Him. There is One who has trodden the whole road before us, from boyhood to man's estate, to death. We can ever follow in his footsteps. He is always at the journey's end, and yet beside us. Let us put our trusting hands in his, and wait for no one; He will lead us on.

THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

Old Testament.

In Genesis God the Creator we know,
And read of the Fall, and the Flood, and the Bow;
Of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, all good,
And Joseph, who high in King Pharaoh's Court stood.

Then Exodus tells how the Israelite band
Were rescued from Egypt by God's mighty hand;
How they crossed the Red Sea and journeyed still nigher
To Canaan, conducted by Pillar of Fire.

Leviticus gives us the laws, not a few,
Of the old dispensation, all types of the new:
In the lamb sacrificial by faith we may see
The Lamb of God offered for you and for me.

In Numbers the host, half a million and more,
The tribes in their order, are numbered for war;
Here also we read how the wandering men
For their sins were sent back to the desert again.

Deuteronomy tells us what Moses did say
To the people before he was taken away:
He exhorted and blessed them, then went up the road
To the mount where he died and was buried by God.

From Joshua we learn how the Israelite band,
After forty years' wandering, reach the good land;
Then, led by brave Joshua, they enter and take Possession by conquest, but God they forsake.

In Judges a very sad story we read—
God's people to worship false gods are agreed:
Oppressed by their foes, they cried to the Lord
Who sent them deliverers, true to his word.

In Ruth the short beautiful story is told
Of the maiden who joined the Lord's people of old:
We think, while we read of her gleaning the corn,
Of Christ, her descendant, in Bethlehem born.

The First Book of Samuel brings to our sight
The child who was called by the Lord in the night;
And David, the boy who with stone and a sling
Slew the giant, and later was Israel's king.

In Samuel the Second all people may read
The conquests of David, and many a brave deed;
His sin and his punishment, sorrow and prayer,
And how God forgave him, these pages declare.

The First Book of Kings tells of Solomon's fame,
And the Temple he built to Jehovah's great name:
Of the kingdom divided, and kings good and bad,
Of Elijah, the prophet, who raised the dead lad.

In Kings Second Book we read many sad things,—
God's people are ruled by idolatrous kings;
They sin against God, and then, sad, sad to say,
God's people are carried as captives away.

The Two Books of Chronicles tell us again
Of the kings that in Israel and Judah did reign;
Of the wars and invasions by Syrian foe,
And how they as captives to Babylon go.

In Ezra we see them returning once more
After many years spent in captivity sore;
Nehemiah then tells about building the wall
Of Jerusalem, dear to the Jewish race all.

In Esther the young Jewish queen we behold,
Who pleads for her people with love true and bold:
Good Job was the man who, when terribly tried,
Most patient and faithful to God did abide.

The Psalms are the prayers and the anthems of praise
Which David and others to God's name did raise:
The Proverbs of Solomon, wisest of kings,
Come next, and they teach us a great many things.

Then Ecclesiastes, by Solomon too,
And Solomon's Song, though so old ever new;
Then Isaiah, the prophet, who watches afar,
And sees through long ages bright Bethlehem's Star.

Jeremiah comes after, who weeps and laments,
Foretelling so many disastrous events:
His sad Lamentations are next to be read,
When Judah is into captivity led.

Ezekiel's visions we then shall be told,
And how the Lord promised His Spirit of old:
Then Daniel, who would not his own God desert,
Was cast to the lions and suffered no hurt.

Then Hosea, Joel, and Amos sublime,
Who prophesied all near about the same time:
Obadiah with only one chapter we see,
And Jonah who from the Lord's presence did flee.

Then Micah, and Nahum, and Habakkuk read,
Who spoke of the judgments the Lord had decreed;
Zephaniah, and then, when we've Haggai passed,
We read Zechariah, and Malachi last.

New Testament.

St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. Luke, and St. John,
All tell us of Jesus, God's best-beloved Son.
How often we've read the sweet story of old,
Which they in these wonderful pages unfold!

The Acts tell of Peter; of Paul, once a foe;
And other apostles who journeying go:
The marvellous acts that they did in Christ's name,
And how the Lord blessed them these pages proclaim.

Then comes an Epistle to Romans by Paul,
And two by the same to Corinthians all:
Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians view,
Colossians, and then Thessalonians two.

Then two more Epistles to Timothy speak,
And next one to Titus, by nation a Greek.
Then one to Philemon about a poor slave,
And Hebrews, the last by St. Paul that we have.

The next one is James, the Lord's brother we know;
Then two by St. Peter Christ's coming foreshow:
Then three by St. John, the beloved of the Lord,
Who preaches of love both in deed and in word.

Then Jude, James's brother, a short letter writes,
And then Revelation our attention invites,
Which into the future allows us to look:
And this is the end of God's beautiful Book.

"THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD"

A little girl of four years brought to her mother the Sunday at Home with the frontispiece open—"The Light of the World" (December, 1892). Her concern and her distress, and the remarks made by the child, so struck her mother, that she sat down and wrote the following lines:—

She brought us a picture in childish glee,
Our dear little four-year-old maid;
Her voice was happy—yet reverently—
"That's the dear Lord!" she said.

Her tone was so gentle and full of love,
That we looked in wonder to see
What holy sight could have power to move
A child to such ecstasy.

'Twas a glorious vision that Figure grand,
In his seamless robe of pure white!
With wond'ring eyes she stood and scanned
The jewels, crown, and light.

"I don't like the crown, for the wicked men
Put that on the dear Lord's head."
We showed her the royal diadem,
Her grief then quickly fled.

"Oh, mother! read me the words down there;"
I read how He waiting stands—
"The Light of the world! so calm and fair,
He knocks—with his bleeding hands."

"Oh! the dear good Lord!" she murmured again!
And my heart prayed soft and low—
"Such childlike love be it ours to gain,
For the Christ who loves us so!"

DEACONESSES AND THE CHOLERA.—A communication from Kaiserswerth, referring to the work of the deaconesses at Hamburg during the cholera epidemic, says: "On receipt of the first application for assistance, we gathered that it was a sacred duty to do our utmost for the city which had given the spiritual mother of our deaconesses—Amélie de Sieveking. Besides a sister who went to take care of her own brother, fourteen Kaiserswerth deaconesses went, first eight, then six, for this scene of misery and terror. A doctor to whom I communicated the news said: 'The fourteen will not all see Kaiserswerth again.' I replied: 'God is stronger than all our fears.' And, in fact, the sisters have all returned, having been marvellously protected by power from on high, and sustained by our prayers, in spite of labours which, during long weeks, consumed their energies by day and night."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 5.—2 KINGS VII.

It was the extreme of misery that made these lepers count as a matter of indifference what became of them; but how soon their misery was exchanged for great joy. Such are the experiences of human lives: one day in despair, the next satisfied with all that heart could wish. And most truly is this so with those who turn to Christ. The leper is cleansed, the hungry fed, and the impoverished soul enriched. God opens windows in heaven to supply our need. Look up beyond the mountains for his help. Nothing is impossible to Him. He turneth the shadow of death into the morning.

Indeed, it is not well in a day of good tidings to hold our peace. If we do, punishment will surely overtake us. We do not become poorer when we give, and we have no right to keep to ourselves the Bread of Life, for lack of which men perish. The example of these poor men may well stimulate us, when we have discovered the unsearchable riches of Christ, to tell others the story.

Unbelief will shut us out of the enjoyment of the blessings of the Gospel. They may be all around us, so that we can see them with our eyes, and yet not eat thereof. In the day when through the opened Heaven God rained down the abundance of everything, he alone failed to partake who was blinded by unbelief. Beware, oh! Christian soul, lest thou miss aught in the day of the Lord's deliverances.

MONDAY, MARCH 6.—2 KINGS VIII.

There are symptoms and warnings of coming danger to which holy souls are sensitive, and we are wise to regard them as did the Shunamite, whose son Elisha had restored to life. Enter into thy chambers, until the storm be overpast. Lives which are thus ordered by the will of God are blessed, not only spiritually, but temporally. They are guided in their going out and coming in, as this woman was, who reached the presence of the king at a moment which was specially auspicious. An hour earlier or later would have missed the mark. Her return was precisely ordered to take place at the moment when Gehazi was telling her story to the king. Commit thy ways unto the Lord, and thy works shall be established. Let God choose for thee, and life will be full of coincidences in which thou wilt see his handiwork.

We none of us know the evil of our hearts. In our calmer moments we would count it impossible to do crimes which in the heat of passion we will commit on the morrow. O my soul, walk closely with God. He only can keep thee in that hour when thou wilt be rudely disabused of the notions of thy own goodness.

Elisha's tears resemble those of Christ. In this, as in so many other respects, he anticipated the life of our Redeemer. The unconcerned stare of men of the world; the agony of human suffering caused by sin; the declension of God's own people beneath the vitiating influence of idolatry, these are themes to make our eyes fountains of tears. Oh for fellowship with the sufferings of Christ!

TUESDAY, MARCH 7.—2 KINGS IX.

Is it peace? A question which we instinctively ask as we open the telegram, or the letter in the strange handwriting. And they ask it with greatest alarm who know that their life is not rightly ordered. The man who is wrong with his fellows is always expecting wrong from them. "What peace so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many?" Instead of sending messenger after messenger to scout the country, it would be better far to adjust the wrongs at home, then God becomes a sure rock of defence, and the soul ceases to be afraid of evil tidings because it trusts in Him. No weapon that is formed against the sincere child of God can prosper. He wears an armour underneath his clothes that renders him impervious to arrow and spear.

The words of Elijah had left an ineffaceable impression upon the heart of the rough soldier who witnessed the interview between him and Ahab. Let us take care how we speak in the presence of servants and children. Yielding clay soon stiffens and retains for ever the dint. Long after Ahab had passed away the curse of his life blighted other lives. We cast shadows which reach beyond the natural term of our lives. We sow seeds, the harvest of which is reaped by our posterity. There is not one whose life is not a savour of life unto life, or of death unto death. Lamb of God, grant us thy peace, the peace of forgiveness and of a holy life, so that there may be an afterglow to our sunset, lingering with blessing.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8.—2 KINGS X.

The work of extermination by Jehu was very thorough, "He smote all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel," great men, familiar friends, and priests, until none remained. And in this he set an example for us to ponder and imitate. There must be no compromise with evil in our hearts or lives. We must not spare one known wrong which rears itself against the obedience of Christ. It may seem important; it may robe itself in the garb of religion, but it must die. Oh for that ruthless sword! that relentless vengeance!

But in Jehu's case, zeal against idolatry was not accompanied by personal holiness. He took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord with all his heart. When the succession to the throne had been secured by the promise of God to his fourth generation, he rapidly deteriorated, permitting the sins of Jeroboam. It is comparatively easy to denounce the sins of others, to be orthodox in our creed, and strong in our denunciation of those who are treacherous to Evangelical truth, and yet we may be permitting in our heart grievous wrongs on account of which God will have to cut us short. Judge yourselves, that ye be not judged. Take the beam out of your own eye, that you may see clearly to take it out of another's. Be careful that your own heart-life is free from the sins you are so quick to discern. Remember that conscience often drives us to find relief by venting on others the remonstrances which it fulminates against the sins of the heart.

THURSDAY, MARCH 9.—2 KINGS XI.

There are suggestions in this chapter which may apply to our inner life as believers. There is a strong, wicked Athaliah principle in most of us, which strongly opposes all that is of God. It usurps his place, and murders his seed. And the holy but lowly Josiah germ of the regenerate life is too often secreted in some remote attic of the nature for long years. Thank God it cannot be discovered or destroyed. It is hidden with Christ in God. But it is exposed to great opposition, and the conflict in the outward life is in the highest degree painful. Then there comes a moment when suddenly it breaks from its hiding place, and, in some moment of revival or consecration, assumes its rightful position on the throne. What predominates in you, flesh or spirit, self or Christ, Athaliah or Josiah?

And is not this also a type of coming events? Surely ere long the Lord Jesus, who is now hidden, will be manifested, and those that have hated Him will be ashamed. Then shall come salvation and the Kingdom of God, from which all Baal worship and every evil thing which exalteth itself against God shall be utterly abolished. The people shall rejoice, and the world shall be at peace.

FRIDAY, MARCH 10.—2 KINGS XII.

We owe more than we know to the influence of godly men like Jehoiada, and it should be our constant prayer that God would raise up such men in these last days. Nay, let us seek to be such ourselves, acting as an antiseptic against pollution, and salt against corruption. Our speech, our behaviour, our daily life, should be so healthful and wholesome as to check the growth of evil.

But we should not be content with this. There is so much positive good that needs doing. The house of God is always needing repair. Such are the breaches caused by false friends or open foes in the moral and religious life of the people that there is ample scope for the most strenuous effort.

It was not very businesslike, perhaps, to have no reckoning with the men who did the work in the temple building. But the fact of it not being needed is a beautiful tribute to their faithfulness. We need more men of this stamp. They often set off in dark relief the characters of those who, like these priests, might have been expected to be the foremost in such holy work. God's noblest servants do not so often come from the classes specially trained, as from those of whom nothing was expected.

SATURDAY, MARCH 11.—2 KINGS XIII.

In their distress men cry unto the Lord, and He saves them out of the stormy sea, but how often they forget Him, and repay his kindness by idolatry and neglect. "The Lord gave Israel a saviour, nevertheless they departed not from the sins of Jeroboam." Oh that the love of God, so undeserved and yet so free, might lead us to repentance!

In strong contrast to the sins around him, Elisha stood as a witness for God, and much holy light shines around his closing record. The King of Israel seems to have expected to see chariots of horsemen, as in the translation of Elijah. Did Elisha expect it? This was not to his end. But the path of his soul from his dying bed was swift and sure. It does not matter how or where we die, in any case Jesus waits to receive us to Himself.

What a model of prevailing faith and prayer is here. We do not consume our foes, because we strike only thrice and cease. We should put no limit on God by our restrained prayer and meagre faith. Let us go with Him as far as we may, and only stay when He says, Ask Me no more.

Mark the posthumous influence of a good man! His example, his words, his books, are full of holy power; and many a dead soul touching his remains lives. Oh that we may live through death, and being dead, may our memory and influence still speak, and energise, and work for God.

Esther before the King. Esther iv. 10—17; v. 1—3.

Golden Text. Prov. xxxi. 9.

The first return from captivity led by Zerubbabel took place under Cyrus, King of Persia, B.C. 536. The temple built by Zerubbabel was completed under Darius Hystaspes, B.C. 515 (Ezra vi). Xerxes, the son of Darius, is identical with the Ahasuerus of this book, and reigned from B.C. 485 to 465. The dates for the prominent events of the book may therefore be fixed with some measure of accuracy (see i. 3; ii. 16; iii. 7). The place of Esther in Bible history would be between the sixth and seventh chapters of Ezra. In Ezra and Nehemiah we have an account of those Jews who returned to their own land. In Esther we learn something of those who remained in Persia.

The scene of this story is Shushan, or Susa (i. 2), the winter capital of the Persian kings. The remains of a great palace have been discovered on the site of the ancient Susa. This is the city, and this the palace, in which Nehemiah served as cupbearer to the son of Xerxes.

Esther (meaning a star) was the Persian name of a Jewish orphan girl, of the tribe of Benjamin. Her cousin, Mordecai, who held an office in the household of the king, had adopted her as his child (ii. 5-7). She was evidently very attractive (ii. 15), and after her exaltation to the position of queen had very great influence with the king. Her character, notwithstanding her difficult position, was very beautiful. She continued obedient to Mordecai, and was conspicuous for her piety, courage, and prudence. The name of God is never mentioned in this book, but the hand of God appears in every chapter. It is manifest that Esther was raised up by God for the deliverance of his people (iv. 14), and that all events were being wisely controlled for this object.

This lesson must not be confined to the verses read, but must take in the whole story of the danger and the deliverance of the Jews.

The Jews condemned to death.—Tell the story of Haman's exaltation, and of Mordecai's refusal to pay him homage (iii. 1-4). Why did he refuse? "The Persians, not only from motives of piety, but from prudence also, worship their kings as gods." Prostration before Haman would therefore have been disobedience to God. Haman sought to be avenged, not upon Mordecai alone, but upon the whole of his people (iii. 6-15). Ten thousand talents (9) was a great price to pay for the privilege of destroying the Jews; but he expected to receive much more than this from the spoil which the king allowed him to take (iii. 13). The decree was signed and sealed, and was published throughout all the king's dominions. Adar, when the slaughter was to take place, corresponds to our February and March.

Esther's bold appeal.—Tell how Mordecai showed his grief at the king's decree (iv. 1, 2); and, in reply to Esther, gave her charge to make supplication to the king (6—9). The danger of this plan (10, 11). The king was capricious and cruel. One story may prove his character. He had been hospitably entertained by Pythias when on his way to Greece. After contributing largely to the expenses of the war, Pythias begged that the eldest of his five sons might be left with him for the comfort of his old age. The cruel monarch caused the son to be slain in the presence of his father, and the body divided into two parts, and his whole army marched between these two parts, placed one on either side of the road. To make a special request of such a king might prove disastrous. The motives that prompted her were these: Her own danger (13). The decree would not spare her, though her nationality had not been revealed to the king (ii. 10, 20). Next, the certainty of deliverance from some other source if she failed (14). Mordecai concluded this from the promises of the Word of God. And, lastly, the position in which the providence of God had placed her (14). Had He no purpose in bringing about her exaltation to the position of queen and favourite of Ahasuerus? Preparations for her appeal indicate her piety (16).

Esther's success (v. 1-3).—The king and the suppliant met. What an anxious moment for Esther. The fate of many will be determined by the manner in which he receives her. The sign of favour is given, and Esther touched the top of the sceptre in token of her grateful acceptance of his favour (2). Nothing is more remarkable than the manner in which the providence of God overruled matters at this point. Esther's danger is like that of the guilty sinner; her appeal to the king, not according to law, is like the sinner's appeal to the God of grace; and her success that which every sinner will certainly meet.

"I can but perish if I go;
I am resolved to try;
For if I stay away I know
I must for ever die."

From a Worker's Note Book.

IV.—THE DISCIPLINE OF JOY.

"There is e'en a happiness that makes the heart grow sad." Whatever this may be, and the sentiment has a touch of heathenism about it, such a joy ought to find no place in the life of the Christian worker. To him there are possible times of unutterable happiness, not to accept which as some of the "perfect gifts," or to take with a certain fearful trembling that there must be a counterbalancing sorrow on the morrow, argues a very poor sort of Christianity. Some very earnest persons insist on taking their joys sadly, and will give them but scant space in their religious work, as if they thought the great Father grudgingly doled out a few grains of happiness to them and bid them not rejoice overmuch. I submit that though the greatest lessons for our work may perhaps be learnt from failures, there is yet most practical and definite teaching available from the joys and successes that come to all now and again.

As I glance through the note-book before me I am confirmed in this belief. Let me make one or two random extracts. "Z." met me to-day (a keen, shrewd observer of "religious folk"), and wanted to know why the convention people, who were travelling in the same carriage, were so wretched and woe-begone, and looked so sad? "It doesn't look as if they enjoyed their religion much," said "Z.," cuttingly.

Who can deny that, to some degree, a charge like this is often true? Why do not workers more constantly show to the world the beauty and joy of the religion which has brought such happiness to them—show this joy by manners and words and by outward dress? They forget the enormous power and influence of a joyousness which cannot be hid, but shows itself in every flash of the eye and movement of the body. Here was "Z." prejudiced, and naturally so, against religion by the gloominess and forbiddingness of its professors. If they had only allowed the brightness and life of Christian hope and joy to exercise their irresistible fascination, "Z." might have argued that there must be something worth having in the secret of which these Christians claimed to have possession.

On the other hand, thank God, many of us have realised the charm and influence of outward brightness; we have found that "this world is all too sad for tears," and that it is a lie to believe, as some do, that black is the colour of heaven, and that the more they can make their faces look like midnight the more evidence they have of grace.

Here is another record belonging to those joys of work which are at once of the deepest and most sacred kind—I mean the joys of success. It is difficult to speak of these freely, because, in many cases, they have enshrined themselves in our memories till they are almost a part of our very being. To have succeeded once after a hundred failures, to have helped to raise a soul from the deeps of degradation to a life of purity, to have brought back to a face on which every hope has faded into a dull weariness, new life and energy, these are joys that are the sublimest part of a worker's training.

Ask you what training, what discipline, lies in them, and I answer that by them, and by them alone, does the worker learn a quiescence and an absolute calmness as regards future or present worries, and this of itself has an enormous influence on his work and on those around. Such success will in no wise cause boastfulness or a sense of personal skill, nay, on the contrary, it produces an utter personal helplessness and a reliance for the utterance or the deed of the moment on the Master, whose disciple the worker is. Such success makes no refusal of all fair human praise, but with glad acceptance offers it with a "non nobis" as a thanksgiving to Him from whom it came.

With regard to the particular entry before me, I find a case where neither success nor its lesson were learned at the time, but once mastered they would never be forgotten, and as some may be helped thereby I will give the note as it reads in the diary. "S. said,' You taught me everything that evening (some months back) in that last sentence of yours. I can never thank you enough.'" That last sentence. What did the man mean? Suddenly the whole scene flashed before my memory, and I remembered S. with all his sceptical doubts, and how I had vainly argued and argued with him till at last, baffled and wearied, I had told him that if he were to prove to me the reasonableness of his theories, and to pile up every argument under the sun, he would yet be utterly powerless to take from me what was the greatest reality of my life, and the only thing that made life worth living.

Since then I have come to agree with "S.," as regards the value of those words I spoke as a last resource; they were an argument which will succeed I believe when all else fails. A great writer among us must surely hold the same idea, for he says: "The masterpiece of argument is what Jesus Christ has done for us; the greatest power we have to help others is in telling them what Jesus Christ has done for us."

Shall I add, in the words of the old Quaker, may we, who have learnt any truths from this ancient notebook, "lay these things to heart"?

Isabel M. M. Kenward.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.

Many readers of The Christian have been our helpers by their prayers and practical support, and to these we would express our hearty thanks. We rejoice to be able to testify again of the faithfulness of our God and Father, and to record his help in connection with the work of the Gospel here. We praise Him for manifest blessing in souls won for Christ, a remarkable feature being the number of aged persons led to the Saviour after years of soul blindness, and in some cases even of resistance of the truth.

It has also been our joy to see seeds spring up in the early morning of youth, and praise God for large numbers of children's conversions during our many years' mission work on these hills. Many of these are now in their turn diligently sowing the seed of the kingdom in various parts of the world.

A short time ago I was asked to visit an aged person who had come from a great distance to stay awhile with some relatives, and who, a few days after coming, was taken very dangerously ill. I at once went and found the object of my visit, who looked older by far than she proved to be. After a little preliminary conversation, I said, "You are suffering much?" "Yes," she said, "very much, at times more than I can tell."

"It may be," I added, "you will not be here long; have you any fear in the prospect of entering eternity?" "No," she replied, "I feel quite happy and comfortable in my mind, and trust I shall go to heaven."

'Will you tell me what makes you feel 'happy and comfortable'?" I asked. "Oh, because I have lived a good life, and have never done any injury to any, but have tried to do all the good I could to everyone."

"Do you not know that God is a holy being, and heaven a pure and holy place, where no sin can enter, and for which you need to be made fit, as nothing that is sinful can enter there, and you are a sinner?" "Oh, sir, I'm not a sinner; indeed, I am not!" she said with emphasis.

"Do you really believe what you say?" I solemnly asked. "Yes; I have never committed any sins; I have lived a good life, as all my friends would tell you."

"I think I know what you mean," I replied. "You mean to say your outward life has been thoroughly moral and upright, and you have not been guilty of any gross acts of evil; but while that is, I have no doubt, quite true as far as it goes, and in the eyes of man you may be blameless, 'God seeth not as man seeth. Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart.' Let me read to you what God says of you and of me, and of all." I opened my Bible and read Rom. iii. 23, Ps. xiv. 3, Jer. xvii. 9, Prov. xxiv. 9, Rom. iii. 19, Ezek. xviii. 4, Rom. vi. 23. "Thus you see," I added, "what God's Word says. Let me ask if you ever had a wrong thought?" "Yes, I have no doubt I have," she replied.

"On an average one a day, should you think?" "Perhaps so."

"And one wrong word also?" "Very likely."

"Probably, too, one wrong act on an average daily?" With a tremor in her voice she said, "I am afraid I have."

"Then you are prepared to admit that, on an average, you have committed three sins a day in God's sight." How old may you be?" "Seventy-three," she said.

"So that three sins a day for seventy years amount to more than 70,000 to be accounted for in God's sight." "Oh," she said, with a sob and a burst of tears, "I have never thought of it in that way before, never! never! It must be worse than that."

While her tears fell thick and fast, I waited for her to break the silence. "What must I do?" she at length said.

"I will tell you what Jesus has done," I replied, "and leave you to tell me what you will do." I then spoke of the work of Christ, as much as I could condense into the little time left, as I had to ride four or five miles further to a Gospel service. How eagerly every word was received, her eyes fairly beaming with intensity and filling afresh with tears.

"What will you do after all this?" I asked. "I will submit to it," she fervently replied. "I must; it is God's Word.'

"Will you tell Him so?" I asked, "because it is written, with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." "Indeed, I will," she said. I thereupon knelt down, and she told the Lord she would receive his message and thank Him for it. My heart was glad at this remarkable evidence of the power of God in the old-fashioned Gospel. On my leaving, she said, "Oh, sir, thank you a thousand times for the words you have spoken and the trouble you have taken. No one ever has spoken to me as you have done, or made it so plain to me. Now I can die really happy, because Christ has died for sinners, and so for me." This was my first and last visit to her, for in a few days she died, restful and happy, her last word audible being "Jesus!"

In another parish an aged man of ninety-three, who has not long been able to rejoice in the "liberty wherewith Christ has made us free," said to me on his dying bed a few days ago, as he grasped my hand in both of his, the tears of delight running down his furrowed cheeks: "Oh, 'tis good to see you. I be glad, sure, you've come. I b'ant a bit afraid. I be trusting to Jesus. He have died for me. I'll soon be up there"—pointing with his hand—"and I'll look out for you. I shall sure to see you there. Oh, I be happy, I be happy, I be happy!"

Another—a younger person—said, "I was never so happy in all my life as I have been since I gave myself to Jesus. For a long time I was so miserable that I was afraid to go to sleep, lest I should not wake; but I gave myself up to Jesus in the cowstall when I was milking."

Our day schools, that for over twenty years have been entirely supported by our brethren in Christ—Messrs. Müller and Wright, of Bristol—have been since November 1 cast entirely on the funds of the mission—a great additional burden; but up to the present time help has been sent by various friends for their support, though much more is needed to carry them on even to the end of July, the time of the annual Government inspection. We should be truly grieved to close them for lack of funds. May we earnestly seek the help of friends that these needful schools, which God has so richly blessed and is blessing—the only schools in the parish—may be continued.

Yours, very faithfully in the Lord,
W. H. A. Brealey.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE.

The twenty-second anniversary of Mrs. Hilton's Crèche, Orphanage, and other branches was celebrated on the premises, Stepney Causeway, Ratcliff, on the 22nd ult. There was a large attendance of children, who received their usual presents of toys, many of which had been contributed by the proprietor of Truth.

These institutions are as much needed and as keenly appreciated in the district as ever, but owing to various causes there has been of late a sad falling off in subscriptions. Mrs. Hilton has been obliged to make an earnest appeal for funds to meet a considerable debit balance. In response to this appeal many supporters have supplemented their subscriptions by special donations; and the following contributions recently received from the city companies are gratefully acknowledged:—Goldsmiths' Company, £20; Mercers' Company, £21; Gunmakers' Company, £5 5s.; Dyers' Company, £2 2s.

A GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT has been inaugurated in the State of Connecticut by Mr. T. E. Murphy, son of Mr. Francis Murphy. Great interest has been aroused. Thousands of hard drinkers are being rescued, and many of them have been converted.

MR. J. G. WOOLLEY,

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE.

THE friend whose portrait appears to-day is one of the foremost living workers in the cause of Gospel Temperance in America. Born near Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1850, he had the influence of a Christian home. His father, Mr. Edwin C. Woolley, removed, on account of failing health, to Illinois, when the son was ten years old. It was there, on the edge of the vast prairies, that his young life was spent, and the aspirations for great things took possession of him.

At the age of seventeen he held the position of head-master in the Public Schools of his home. At nineteen he entered the Ohio Wesleyan University, where he graduated in 1871 with the highest honours, and declined the chair of Belles Lettres offered him by this University. After a European tour, he began the study of the Law, and was called to the Bar of the Supreme Court of Illinois in 1874, when the Chief Justice pronounced the examination of young Woolley the most brilliant of all he had known. After practising four years in Illinois he removed to Minneapolis, where he became States' Attorney and the leading barrister in criminal cases. He was called to the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1880.

His fall from a fine estate through the influence of strong drink, and his subsequent conversion, are known from one end to the other of the United States. Three thousand people, in Tremont Temple, Boston, wept when he told the wonderful story. A member of the best society, a lawyer of distinguished attainments, a man of culture and tremendous energy and capacity, he has thrown his own whole life into the work of saving men from the cause of his own downfall.

Bitter experience has taught him to place a correct estimate upon the curse of the drink habit, and a brave fight against it has shown him the faults and weak points of the usual methods of reform.

The crying need for some haven of rest where he could send men who earnestly desire to leave off their bad habits and lead a clean life, early presented itself to Mr. Woolley in his Christian work. His Rest Island Mission is the result of this need, as presented to him, and as shown him, after earnest prayer. The work at Rest Island is unique; the central idea is that there is no safety to anyone who has formed drinking habits, except in the love and grace of Jesus Christ. The men live clean, restful lives, and receive daily instruction in the Word of Life. Rest Island is not a "resort," nor an "institution," but a sanctuary. There are no lots for sale; nor any private ends to gain; nor any interests to promote, save only His, who offers rest to every weary, heavy-laden man, with faith enough to come apart with Him awhile.

This island is in the Mississippi River, sixty miles below Minneapolis. It has 160 acres of beautiful woods, just as the Indians left it; in addition, 200 acres have been secured on the mainland for farm and meadow. On this tract he has founded a national mission, where any drinking man who wants to go in for a clean life may come and be at home, until strong enough to make an honourable way in the world. There is no excitement, no games of chance, no tobacco; the great feature is Bible study. The morning opens with prayer and song and Scripture study. The day is spent by the men in some useful employment. Each has his duties to perform about the farm, and the evening is spent in reading and singing and Bible study. Mr. Woolley's fine library and the John B. Gough temperance library, left to Mr. Woolley by Mrs. Gough, afford an ample supply of good reading.

Every summer an unsectarian Christian convention is held for eight days. Last year a great blessing, as of Pentecost, came on all, and many were saved. This year the third convention will be held July 16—23, and eminent men and women from all parts of the world are expected to be there.

In the department of platform work Mr. Woolley stands unrivalled. At the great meetings of the Society of Christian Endeavour he is a favourite speaker, and he is a familiar figure at Mr. Moody's Northfield conferences. As a speaker, he has brought the direct, persuasive, legal method into his new field. In his presentation of his theme there is an utter absence of the declamatory and funny element, but plenty of point and delicate humour, with enormous force and logic. He speaks every time as if he expected to win the whole case that time, and when he has finished there is nothing to say in addition. Every address is, as he says, anchored to some passage of Scripture, and, whether presenting the question in its political or personal aspect, he simply preaches Jesus Christ.

Mr. Woolley has conducted a considerable number of missions in this country. He has been as far north as Aberdeen, and Edinburgh, and Glasgow to Swansea, Cardiff, and Brecon, in South Wales; to Kendal and elsewhere in the Lake district; to Luton, Bromley, Forest Gate, and the north of London; to Manchester and numerous other places for single or consecutive meetings. Everywhere he has made marked and lasting impressions, and in nearly every case has been importuned to pay a return visit.

Describing the mission at Luton, The Alliance News said: — "Seven meetings were held in the Plait Hall, the largest building in the town, and averaged fully 1500 people at each. Of Mr. Woolley, the great audiences could not hear enough, and on more than one occasion great numbers crowded to the place of meeting, but failed to gain admission. Mr. Woolley's special mission is to awaken the Christian conscience, and to this task he addressed himself in every speech. At nearly all the meetings a resolution was adopted urging upon the Government and upon the local member of Parliament the necessity of early legislation, enacting the direct veto power, entire Sunday closing, closing of public-houses on election days, prohibiting the sale of drink to children, and no compensation."

It is a source of regret to many that Mr. Woolley is so soon leaving this country for his own. He sails on March 4, and will address his final meeting at Birkenhead, on Friday, March 3. Should he return for another campaign next winter, as is possible, he is fully assured of the warmest possible welcome.

SAILORS' APPRENTICES.

Dear Sir,—Some of your readers may not know, as I did not until I came in contact with them, that when a boy chooses a seafaring life, and has to prepare for Board of Trade examinations, he is apprenticed for four or five years on a merchant vessel. The ships coming to this port carry from two to eight apprentices; they are housed separate from the crew, but otherwise they fare the same. It is hard fare at the best, and it is little wonder that as soon as the lads come ashore after the long four months' voyage anything in the way of good living and sociability has attractions for them.

They receive from half a dollar to one dollar a week for pocket-money. Of course this is generally supplemented by a cheque from home, varying according to the circumstances of the sender; but, as very few of the ships furnish butter to the apprentices while in port, they have to buy this, and often their bread too, out of this money. Of course, these lads have temptations to meet with in every port, like others; but there is one reason why San Francisco is a more dangerous place than many other ports, and that is the antipathy which exists among respectable people towards sailors. It is very rarely that a well-behaved American boy goes to sea; they have no apprentices, and as a ship is looked upon as a safe house of correction for young incorrigibles whom their lawful guardians cannot control, the lads are classed with the usual rough squad to be found in an American forecastle. I do not think there is a respectable house in this city where they would be welcomed. Of course, some come with introductions, and they will find a friendly door open to them; but the majority of lads can only find a welcome in the saloon, the theatre, or the "dive."

Their time is their own after six p.m., and after being four months shut up within the narrow limits of a ship every boy wants to come ashore as soon as he is free to do so. As they go along the street, in the most respectable thoroughfares, the first attraction is the dive. Every sailor loves music, and the sounds of singing and instrumental music, with the tempting announcement "free to all," lure many a lad to step inside these "dens of iniquity." The dives are allowed to be kept open all night; a sort of variety performance is kept up, while half-dressed girls serve drink to customers, and they are paid according to the time they can keep a man amused. One poor girl told me, "We are charged to use every art to keep men in the place, inviting them to drink with us all the time, and we receive thirty-five cents (beyond our pay) for every bottle of wine we can coax them to consume." The Book of Proverbs describes the dive plan so accurately in the seventh chapter that what I have said will at once suggest the concluding words of that chapter, "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death"; or at any rate, any lad who visits a dive has taken a long step in the direction of that house. Occasionally the dive proprietors send their emissaries, under pretence of selling small wares, on the ships, to invite the lads to their musical performances.

For the last two years we have been making a very humble effort to help these lads, but our means are very limited, and all we can do is to open our house once a week to any who care to come and spend a social evening. We have had a good number sometimes, but the most we could accommodate does not embrace half the number on the ships, besides it is only one night a week. What we need is a place in which the lads can spend their evenings pleasantly and rationally.

We are striving to get an apprentices' institute, with a good reading-room, recreation and refreshment rooms, etc. We have been told by the captains that they would be very glad of a place where they can write their letters and meet each other, so we might utilise the rooms during the day as a "Captains' Club," and from 6 p.m. till 10.30 it will be for the mates and apprentices. On Sunday the rooms must be open all day; a Bible-class for apprentices and an evening praise service would probably be started at once.

I ought to mention that there is a Bethel here, with all sorts of missionary efforts carried on by two devoted servants of God, but the small reading-room is not enough for their own requirements.

The British Consul in this city is interested, and our friend, Miss Agnes Dobie, Leven Lea, Selkirk, N.B., has offered her help in this matter.

Yours faithfully, Ida Pond.

OUR SOLDIERS IN INDIA.

BY MAJOR SETON CHURCHILL.

For those in England who take an interest in the welfare of our soldiers in India, it is most encouraging to hear how much is being done by Mr. W. B. Harington, who has most justly earned for himself the distinguished title of the "Soldiers' Friend." This public servant of the Indian Government was the means, in the time of the late Lord Lawrence, of getting a Soldiers' Prayer-room sanctioned for every cantonment in India. As a civil engineer engaged in the Department of Public Works, he planned out every detail as to size, shape, and fittings of these prayer-rooms. In an enormous number of stations these institutions were erected before the death of Lord Lawrence, but as Mr. Harington's public duties were then very heavy, he was not able to devote much time to this special work, although it may be said with truth that some men would be proud of doing in their day's work what Mr. Harington used to accomplish in his leisure moments, when he was supposed to be taking recreation.

Lately, however, he has retired on his pension from the Indian Government and given up his professional duties, so as to be able the better to devote himself to evangelistic work among soldiers. With this object in view, he has settled down in India, and the whole of his life is devoted to the spread of the Gospel among the red and blue jackets. The work of establishing prayer-rooms in every cantonment, in which he was engaged as a young man under Lord Lawrence, has been revived, and now such an institution exists in almost every station throughout India. He has formed, also, a branch of the Christian Soldiers' Association in every regiment of infantry and cavalry, and in nearly all the batteries of artillery. As he has been working amongst soldiers for nearly one-third of a century, it goes without saying that he knows the weakness of so many of our men with regard to drink, and he heartily co-operates with the Soldiers' Temperance Association, originated by Mr. Gelson Gregson.

All this work by Mr. W. B. Harington has for upwards of thirty-two years been a work and labour of love, and he has supplied the sinews of war out of his own pocket. But now that he has devoted himself to it more entirely, the work has begun to assume enormous dimensions, and no one individual, however generous, can continue the financial strain. It is only fair, therefore, that those who, like myself, have spent so many years in that country, and know so well the temptations of British soldiers, and the difficulties of carrying on Christian work among them, should come forward and appeal to the public on behalf of this earnest, devoted worker. Letters addressed to Mr. W. B. Harington, Murree, North India, will reach him. The public may be quite sure that their money will be well spent, and not wasted on ecclesiastical buildings or ornaments, for the Soldiers' Friend of India is one who like the apostle of old is "determined to know nothing else but Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

I ought to add that parents and others in this country who have a son, or one in whom they are interested, stationed in India, should at once put themselves into communication with Mr. Harington, who may be able to get into touch with him, as he has a perfect network of machinery distributed throughout the country. Even if he cannot see the young fellow personally, he will probably be able to get a friend to speak to him, and perhaps to influence him for good.

"HELL'S KITCHEN," NEW YORK.

BY A VISITOR.

It was my good fortune to spend an hour lately in Berachah Mission, where one may get well fed and have a good taste left in his mouth. The mission was opened for outcasts by Brother Naylor and wife several years ago. The husband has died, but the wife continues at her post.

I found the mission, as directed, at 471, West Thirty-second-street, in that part of New York which was described to me as "Hell's Kitchen." The meeting was conducted by Sister Naylor and her staff, who are just now assisted by Henry J. Pierson and wife, known somewhat widely and very favourably as pioneers of Gospel wagon work in this country.

The services began with singing, brief and earnest prayers followed, then testimonies from redeemed souls were called for. One would seldom hear surpassed the living earnestness of the heartfelt utterances of a score of men, who successively praised God for converting them at Berachah Mission, and delivering them from the tyranny of drink, tobacco, and gambling habits. Some of these converts have stood firm, as they have told us, for more than a year. The majority, however, were more recently converted, one only two days before.

The work of transplanting these redeemed men into Christian Mission colonies, where, under wise and firm guidance, they can have good opportunity to show their faith by their works, offers admirable occasion for the sympathy and co-operation of many Christians.

Leaving the mission early, I espied a gang of young hoodlums, a little before me on the right, mounted on a huge pile of dirty snow, busily making up snowballs. As the sad thought arose, these may be orphans, or the sons of drunkards or of drunkard-makers, boys, at any rate, who have never known the saving restraints of a Christian home, I could not refrain from saluting the young roughs, as I passed them, with a kindly "Good evening, boys." Of course, I fully anticipated that their answering salute would be a shower of muddy snowballs. But only one was tossed harmlessly in front of me. Half a dozen youngsters promptly echoed "Good evening!" and a whole chorus rebuked whoever tossed the solitary snowball, with a "Don't! don't fire at him!" Evidently conscience is still alive even in "Hell's Kitchen" hoodlums.

So, too, I found it last Lord's Day in 102nd-street People's Tabernacle, located near the centre of what Bro. H. M. Tyndall calls "Darkest New York," a section which, he tells us, contains sixty thousand people within one square mile, and for the evangelisation of which he asserts that only three church organisations of every description are at work. At the session of Brother Tyndall's Sabbath school in the afternoon, the boys, ranging from nine to twenty years of age or upwards, were intolerably ill-behaved. Their disorderliness would be sufficient to drive any person of weak faith from the field, and even to lead one of the utmost patience seriously to question whether no school would not be very much better than such a school.

Nevertheless, when, after the school was closed, I charged these young ruffians with their ingratitude, meanness, and cowardice in thus turning into mockery all their friends' efforts to do them good, they admitted the truth of the accusation, professed to be sorry for their unconscionable pranks, and when exhorted to prove their sincerity promptly complied. Half-a-dozen went to their homes and came back with brooms, and swept up the papers, cigar and cigarette stubs, banana-peels, and other filth with which they had littered the room, and in half-an-hour our broom brigade had put the room in order for the evening meeting, which was serious, decorous, and impressive.

ROMISH SUPERSTITION.—Catholic fetishism, always inventive, pretends to have discovered at ancient Ephesus the house where "the most holy Virgin" lived for many years with the Apostle John. The site has been bought by the Congregation of Lazarists, and an official pilgrimage has been fixed for the month of May.—L'Eglise Libre.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—Last Thursday evening a tea was given to nearly three hundred sailors. The gathering was of quite an international character. A splendid meeting followed. A detachment of the Stratford Mizpah Band gave substantial help by their testimony, and excellently rendered song. The addresses of other friends present were marked by direct and forcible appeals to decision.

TO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOURERS.

Nearly a million Christian Endeavourers in the English-speaking countries have signed a solemn pledge commencing with these words:—

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would have me do."

Note the verb—strive—the same as is used to translate Luke xiii. 24, literally—labour fervently. So we Endeavourers are earnestly to set ourselves to:—

(a) Find out Christ's will—John v. 39, "Search the Scriptures."

(b) Do Christ's will—John ii. 5, "Whatsoever He sayeth unto you, do it." What is his will?

Nearly a thousand millions of our brothers and sisters have never even heard that Jesus died for them. Yet "God willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather that all should turn unto Him and live." "How shall they hear without a preacher?" (Rom. x. 14). "Ye shall be witnesses" (Acts xviii.). "Go ye therefore and teach all nations" (Matt. xxviii. 19.) Now, are we doing God's will?

Suppose you go out to the heathen, will anyone now within the reach of your influence be left without a chance of hearing the Gospel? Yet if you do not go, a whole generation, in some distant land, may pass into eternity without the Gospel, because you are not there to tell it.

God says "Go," and "go" does not mean "stop at home." His call has come to all, and is it not far more honouring to Him to rise up and obey, leaving with Him the responsibility of preventing us, if He specially wants us here?

So many say they have no special call to go, whereas one should have a special call to stay at home, for the general call is to go.

Is it the love of Christ which constrains you to stay at home? or is it love of friends, and home, and Christian society, and working where you get large and sympathetic audiences?

"He that loveth father and mother more than Me is not worthy of Me" (Matt. x. 37). "If any man come unto Me and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple."

There are plenty of people to do the business of the world: plenty of lawyers, doctors, soldiers—yes, and plenty of ministers, for hardly a church is vacant for which there are not several applicants. The one calling not overcrowded is the missionary's.

In England there is one communicant to every five of the population, so that when you have evangelised (not converted, but preached the Gospel) to four persons you have, as it were, done your share, and are free to go to the regions beyond.

Do you not think that if 100,000 of our most earnest Christian workers left this country before next Christmas to at once occupy the unevangelised lands, untold blessing would come upon the Church at home? Their example would be more telling than ten years of their preaching; lukewarm Christians would be roused to fill their places, and the unconverted would be saved. In less than ten years the Gospel would have reached the wide world over, and Christ's last command be obeyed.

Now, what has all this to do with Christian Endeavourers? Much every way.

If each society would begin to pray that one of its members should volunteer to go as a missionary this year, and set to work to collect the needed fund before Christmas, one-fourth of the 100,000 would probably be in the field, and the interest aroused might lead to the remaining three-fourths going before the end of 1894.

To prove that this is no wild scheme or day dream, but quite within the scope of reasonable expectation, may I cite the case of our own society? Started about two years ago, it now numbers fifty-two active and thirty-two associate members. One has already gone as a missionary to India.

A second is on the eve of starting for Africa as a self-supporting missionary.

A third goes to China in the autumn as the representative of, and supported almost entirely by, the society; and, to judge from appearances, at least ten more will go forth within the next five years.

From a neighbouring society two have already gone to train for foreign mission work.

Fellow Endeavourer, what is your society doing? Are you going to have your representative in some distant land before next Christmas? Will you bring the matter up at your very next meeting, and commence to pray about it and get each member to pledge himself to give or collect so much per month?

I close with the closing words of Dr. Pierson's wonderful book, "The Divine Enterprise of Missions," which all Endeavourers should read:—

"God is moving on.
His march is swift and our time is short.
No such age has ever before shone on this planet.
No such doors ever before opened to his Church.
Who will fall into line with God,
Join in His majestic march,
And in the sure advance of his plan
Reach the golden fruition of the ages?"

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A branch of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour at Henley-on-Thames has now forty-five members.

The Christian Endeavour Society at South London Tabernacle, Peckham-road, invite the Christian Endeavourers of London to united meetings on Thursday, 16th inst., at 4 and 7 p.m., for conference and consecration.

Christian Endeavour Societies in Presbyterian churches of the United States, from May 1 to November 30 of last year, gave to the Board of Foreign Missions of that church 1659.22dols. more than during the same period the year before.

One hundred and seventy Christian Endeavour Societies were enrolled during the week ending February 2, distributed geographically as follows:—England, thirty-four; Queensland, sixteen; Japan, nine; Turkey, one; the balance from the United States and Canada.

The Y.P.S.C.E. has proved wonderfully helpful at Shanklin. The roll of the Society numbers over seventy. They hold a service on every Sunday evening, and a meeting for consecration monthly. Many persons, old and young, have been converted, and nearly the whole of the first three classes in the Sunday-school profess to have given themselves to Christ.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

We have received from Dr. Chambers his seventeenth report of the work among the sick and suffering poor of Lisson Grove and Marylebone. "The year," it is stated, "has been one of steady progress in many directions. The attendances at the various meetings have been larger than ever before, and this increase has been most marked at the Sunday and Wednesday evening services. On Lord's Day evenings the hall has been crowded. One very encouraging feature of these gatherings is the large proportion of men who attend, and the great majority of these were never in the habit of attending any such place before they were brought under the influence of the Medical Mission."

Amongst the outcasts themselves good work has also been done. Details are given of the dispensary services and the visiting of the sick in their own homes. Various telling incidents are mentioned of spiritual result.

As to the Relief Fund it is stated: "Apart from the directly medical work, we are compelled to face in some way the misery and wretchedness with which we are daily brought in contact. It is no uncommon thing for the Medical Missionary to find a sick patient—suffering perhaps from bronchitis—lying in a fireless room, and with nothing but an old coat or skirt to cover him or her. No fire, no blankets, no food. While we, in sickness, naturally seek warmth, comfort, and nourishment, the poor have, full often, none of these. The little earnings have ceased; savings there are none, and illness speedily brings the wolf of famine to the door. Whence it follows that our Relief Fund is imperative." Several incidents are given to illustrate this sad state of things and the efforts made by the Mission to render relief in such cases. The perusal of this admirable report of a good work cannot but commend it to many. Copies may be had of Dr. Robert Chambers, Marylebone Medical Mission, 12, Bell-street, Lisson Grove, N.W.

BRIGHTON BIBLE WOMEN.—There is danger of losing the services of one of the Bible women in Brighton, whose salary was paid entirely by the late Miss E. J. Whately. The funds, unless reinforced, will not allow of retaining her in the mission, though for the last seventeen years she has been one of the most valued missionaries. Some of the old subscribers have agreed to double their yearly contributions. Miss Hornbuckle, 3, Alexandra Villas, is hon. sec. and treasurer.

POST OFFICE EMPLOYÉS.

The Postal and Telegraph Christian Association, started in 1887, continues to extend and prosper "not only in numbers but better still in spiritual power."

During the past week a two days of special meetings were held at the City Temple in connection with the anniversary of the P.T.C.A. Most of these meetings were led either by Rev. G. C. Grubb or some one of his mission party, and had as their aim the conversion of sinners and the consecration of believers. They were, in short, a series of meetings for the deepening of spiritual life. Little therefore was said as to the work of the Association, but the splendid way Post-office officials, men and boys, turned out and the hearty and responsive manner in which they listened spoke highly for the work going on.

The Association in its home operations has a senior and a junior branch, both of which are developing well. The city centre is at 11, Little Britain, where a reading room and rest room, and various class rooms, are open all day long for Post-office employés. The report mentions the social hour, from 5 to 6 o'clock on Monday evening, when postmen off duty drop in for a cup of tea and friendly talk, and when the great object of the association, though not obtruded, is never lost sight of. The most gratifying feature of the work is the evidence of the power which God's Word is exercising on the lives of the members, as seen in the unity and cheerfulness which prevail among themselves, and in the increased effort to win their comrades and others outside the office.

From testimonies borne at the meetings last week it appeared that this P.O. work is spreading in the provinces, and that various fresh branches are being formed. Abroad and in the colonies similar work is going on, as in Canada, Cape Colony, and the United States, while in France, Belgium, and Switzerland something is also being done.

The Missionary Branch Report states that:—"We have been encouraged by the number of fresh openings in India during the past year. P.T.C.A. work on a larger or smaller scale is now being carried on in eleven cities or towns of that empire. Both in Calcutta and Madras we have a native catechist giving his whole time. In Lucknow, Burdwan, and Agra we have a catechist giving part time. In Seoni, Schore, Sohagpur, Amritsar, and Karachi, the resident missionaries have kindly undertaken a little distribution of Gospels and tracts at our expense, while from Bombay, as a centre, packets of the same have been sent to 600 post-offices in the Presidency. We should like to go forward and embrace the opportunity offered by the vast postal system of India for spreading the knowledge of Christ in that land, and we should like to extend the same work to Ceylon. The coolies in Madagascar, who run with the letters from the coast to the capital, have also been laid upon our hearts. But we cannot go forward without a decided increase of funds. We have not as yet been able to arrange for work among the postmen of China, partly owing to the want of organisation in their postal system. P.T.C.A. work in Japan is at present at a standstill. It is a land of earthquakes—both physical and social—and openings which gave a fair promise a year ago have closed up again."

Information as to the P.T.C.A. and its work may be had from the secretaries, 11, Little Britain, London, E.C.

SOUL-WINNING.

For many years I have found Bible-classes afford great encouragement in work for our Saviour, all lessons being made a means of leading up to Him. In one class of five, four of the number in a few months became anxious on account of their souls, and have since been active workers, one especially, who soon felt the need of entire consecration. In a letter she addressed to me some years after she said, "You first taught me to love God." In other small Bible-classes either the whole or part have decided for Christ, and in many cases those who were most averse to hearing of Him at first have become and continued the most earnest Christians.

Another help is by a little private, judicious conversation occasionally. This work, however, must be carried on in entire dependence on the help and guidance of the Holy Spirit.—Yours faithfully,

P. H.

In Memoriam.

REV. JOHN BENNETT, D.D.

Many will hear with sorrow of the sudden death of this devout and faithful minister of Christ, and that just as he was leaving Worthing for an important charge in Kensington, to which he had been looking forward for some time.

Dr. Bennett first came into notice by reason of his useful and fruitful work in St. Jude's, Glasgow. When in 1878 Rev. J. G. Gregory left Park Chapel, Chelsea, for Brighton, the trustees of this West-end citadel of Evangelical activity and influence were led to ask Dr. Bennett to come south. Accepting the invitation, he entered on the work at Park Chapel with vigour and energy. His own health was somewhat delicate, but apart from this his success was remarkable; his mark being made both as an expounder of the Word and as an able evangelist. Although a Churchman by conviction, he delighted in informal mission services, believing rightly that thus were the poor and uninstructed to be reached. By means of these special services, at which the Gospel was preached with great plainness, simplicity, and tenderness, many were won to the Saviour.

While, however, this was an important phase of his work, Dr. Bennett was yet more widely known and highly valued as a deeply-taught expositor and teacher. His favourite symbol was that of a householder bringing forth out of his treasures things new and old; and it was very characteristic of his whole teaching that he was seldom far away from Substitution, the atoning work of Christ, his death, resurrection, and coming again. On themes such as these he ever seemed most happy in fluency of speech, readiness of reference, freshness of thought, and aptness of illustration.

After ten years at Park Chapel Dr. Bennett went to St. George's, Worthing, it being generally understood that ere long he hoped to return to St. Luke's, Redcliffe-square. His stay at Worthing, it was trusted, would prove beneficial to his health. Since 1888 he has done good service in this seaside parish, his weekly Bible readings attracting Christians of many denominations, and being much valued by reason of their perspicuity, fervour, and fulness. Meanwhile he was speaking here and there throughout the land. The last time we heard him in public was at the Dundee Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, when he gave a masterly exposition of the orthodox doctrine of Substitution. When in the north in the autumn, staying some time at Rossie Priory, he gave each morning in the library Bible readings on prophetic subjects, which were greatly enjoyed.

Since then he has laboured quietly at Worthing, and on January 22 delivered his farewell address, the text being, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." Ere, however, entering fully on his new responsibilities, he has been called home, to the sorrow and loss of all who knew his worth as a teacher in the deep things of God.

MR. C. INGLIS AT KING'S CROSS.

One of the most encouraging missions ever held in connection with the Baptist Church at Vernon-square, King's Cross-road, has come to a close.

The hearts of God's people are overflowing with gratitude for all they have been permitted to see of his power to save the lost. The addresses that have been given by Mr. Inglis have been of the most solemn and moving character. Many of the incidents related by him were those that came under his own observation, and thrilled his hearers. The address on "The Closed Door," delivered the last Sunday night of the mission, was very powerful. The Spirit of God has been breathing upon the slain the valley of Ezekiel, and numbers have arisen to newness of life. Every evening the inquiry-room has been in use, and as many of the inquirers were known to me I have every confidence of the abiding nature of the work. The work has not been confined to one class, but the Spirit of God has been reaching all—scholars from the Sunday-school, constant hearers of the Word, rough men of the world, backsliders, and strangers to the means of grace. The spiritual life also of God's people has been aided by the meetings. The Bible readings each afternoon grew in interest and in numbers, and many a worker received fresh stimulus and suggestion in regard to the Master's service and kingdom.

Mr. Inglis has left us for Swansea, followed by the prayers of all God's people here. May all his future missions be alike owned of God.

Jno. T. Mateer, Pastor.

A TEMPERANCE PARLIAMENT.

This term has been applied to the important three days' conference of delegates from all manner of temperance organisations in all parts of the kingdom, held last week in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. The general idea was that of friendly and confidential consultation between coworkers as to methods and measures; hence earnest conversation over practical matters took the place of stirring speeches. The press was not invited, but from an official summary supplied we gather the most salient features of the proceedings. Mr. Leonard Courtney, M.P., presided throughout.

The first day (Tuesday week) was devoted to the consideration of eight practical resolutions bearing on vital points in legislation, demanded and submitted as a basis of discussion. These were:—(1) A measure for suspending the power to grant further new licences; (2) a discretionary power to refuse any licences or renewal of licences: (3) the refusal of licences by local bench should be made final; (4) powers to be given as to the reduction of the hours of drink sale; (5) Sunday closing of public-houses to be made general; (6) public-houses to be closed on election days; (7) the bill prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to children under sixteen to be supported; (8) direct local veto over the issue of licences.

The second day was devoted to the full discussion of the best form of local option, and the constitution of the licensing authority.

On the closing day a very important discussion arose on legislation as to drink-selling clubs—a great and growing evil. There was a general agreement on the part of the speakers as to the enormous evils resulting from the formation and continuance of social and other clubs mainly for drinking purposes, or where drinking largely prevails; and the main question debated was whether or not the resolution to be passed should deal with the dispensing of intoxicating drinks in clubs generally or only with those constituted to evade the licensing laws. Several speakers urged the necessity of taking the first-named course, and the opinion was also expressed that the existing law, if properly enforced, was sufficient to deal with the second-named class; and also that nothing ought to be done as affecting one class that did not apply all round. It was, however, contended that there was a large question outside that of "legitimate" clubs, and further that between the two specific kinds enormous evil arose from small local, political, and other clubs, not formed for the purpose of drinking, which yet become centres of drinking, and often do more harm than an equal number of public-houses. The difficulty of drawing the line was admitted, while the distinction was held to be quite apparent. Different proposed plans of dealing with clubs, by registration or otherwise, were mentioned, while a clearly defined process was insisted on as an essential corollary of the direct veto: and the finding of the Royal Commission on the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act was read to the effect that all clubs where intoxicating liquors are sold or supplied to members should be registered with the local authority, the register and club rules being open for the inspection of the police, and, further, that the Commission was very strongly of opinion "that associations existing only for the purpose of supplying intoxicating drink to the members, or only colourably for some other purpose, should be declared absolutely illegal."

Various other pressing points were considered, and it was generally felt, in closing, that this friendly conference between workers, labouring widely apart one from the other, must largely aid in lending unanimity of tone to the temperance cause.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special blessing on a mission to be held in Hengler's Circus, Hull, commencing on March 19.—For great blessing on Richard Weaver's closing meetings at Belgrave Chapel.—For evangelistic services at Basingstoke, to be conducted by Mr. J. J. Scroggie, commencing on March 5.—For a special mission at the Gospel Hall, Wendover, by Mr. W. Monro Collings, commencing March 10.—On behalf of a mission to be held in the Soldiers' Home, Freshwater, Isle of Wight.—For a special mission at Duke-street Hall (Gray's Yard, W.), from March 5 to 19, by Mr. W. P. Crombie.—For a special mission in Grandpont Church, Oxford, March 19 to 27.—For a Gospel Temperance mission being conducted by Mr. Matthew Burnett in Peterchurch, Hereford. PRAISE.—For great blessing on an eight weeks' mission in the North of Ireland, conducted by Mr. Burnett.

Intemperance is rated as one of the chief predisposing causes of yellow fever.

At the present time out of 2747 Congregational ministers in England and Wales, 2034 are known to be abstainers.

Mr. Richard Coad, having concluded a temperance mission in Burslem, is now at the Temperance Hall, Pendlebury, Manchester.

According to the last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, there are 215,434 retail liquor dealers in the United States.

Indians in the town of Deer River, in Minnesota, maddened by excessive indulgence in alcohol, have just sacked the place and killed several persons.

Every minister of the Evangelical Union of Scotland of the present day is a total abstainer, and every church uses non-intoxicating wine at the Lord's Table.

The Alford Band of Hope Union has had a visit from Mr. Sidney Wade, who spoke at Swaby, Brinkhill-Aby, Sutton-on-Sea, and also at a meeting in Alford.

Sunday, June 11th, has been set apart as Temperance Sunday in Chicago. This follows the week of World's Temperance Congresses, at which some of the ablest temperance speakers in the world will be present.

Of 285 students in Congregational Colleges in England, 261 are abstainers; in Wales, eighty-six out of ninety-two are abstainers; and in Scotland all are abstainers; of 386 students in Great Britain, 356 are abstainers.

The representatives of Great Britain, Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, and Denmark, have signed the Protocol dealing with the execution of the Convention of 1887, for checking the sale of spirituous liquors to North Sea fishermen.

Mr. John G. Woolley has concluded a remarkable series of Gospel temperance meetings in Luton. Seven meetings were held in the Plait Hall—the largest building in the town—with an average attenance at each of 1500 people. Lady Henry Somerset and Miss F. Willard took part in two of the meetings.

The reputation for longevity which the Prohibition State of Maine, U.S.A., already possesses, is illustrated anew by the fact that the deaths in the State during the year 1892 included those of eleven men and women over 100 years of age, and that there are twenty-one centenarians still living. Prohibition promotes longevity.

"From my own knowledge," says a writer on tropical diseases, "as well as from the observation of others, I aver that those who drink nothing but water, or make it their principal drink, are but little affected by the climate, can undergo the greatest fatigue without inconvenience, and are less subject to the contagion of troublesome or dangerous diseases."

Preparations are being made for a County Temperance Congress for Kent, to bring together temperance workers and sympathisers from all parts of the county. The county town is to be the scene of the gathering, and on April 17, 18, and 19 next, Maidstone will be all alive with temperance folk, who will meet to consider how "The Cause" may be strengthened and pushed forward.

"I have made one thousand dollars in the last three months," said a prosperous liquor-seller to a group of men standing near his saloon. "You have made more than that," quietly remarked a listener. "What is that?" was the quick response. "You have made my two sons drunkards. You have made their mother a broken-hearted woman. Oh, you have made much more than I can reckon, but you'll get the full account some day!"

The "Happy Evenings for the People," inaugurated by Mr. Merton Smith during his visit to Dublin in October last with Mr. Moody, are kept up with unabated zeal by the friends of temperance in Dublin. Captain Fielding, an active Christian officer in the Dublin Garrison, has done much to make the movement a success. It is expected that General Lord Wolseley will take the chair at the next "Military Night." About 800 have signed the pledge since the meetings commenced to be held.

In Hand and Heart for this month there is a paper in which, replying to the question, "How do you encourage temperance and total abstinence?" Archdeacon Sinclair says:—"The best way of encouraging a temperance society is the plan adopted in a large parish in Cambridge. The society is divided, on the Methodist principle, into a number of classes. Each class has a name or title, a banner, a leader, and a strong esprit de corps. This, I think, is the only plan that I know of that keeps recent total abstainers to their pledges, other of course than Divine grace; it is a great moral support to the converts. They are constantly visited by their class leader and the comrades of the class, and thus a strong public opinion is brought to bear upon them and encourage them."

AMERICAN EVANGELISTS.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey are now closing the third week of their work at Wilmington, Del. From the first the great rink was filled, the fame of these brethren having gone before them. This city was not previously visited by them, hence the spirit of curiosity was great. But in a few days this was eliminated. Seriousness, quietness, and power characterised the assemblies. Mr. Moody arrived weary, but he soon freshened, increasing in vigour to the end. Ministers and people were moved by his weighty appeals. The Gospel, as it leaped from his lips, entered many a heart, for the Spirit wrought effectually.

Mr. Sankey had all the old-time ring of song. With pathos and with power he sang to crowds, who were swayed by the spell of a consecrated voice. Tenderly did he utter words of melting sweetness for broken hearts, and rousing were his bugle notes of warning and entreaty.

Men's meetings are multiplied as the end of their mission draws nigh. Overflow meetings and meetings for women are going on. Wilmington is a stagnant old city of 2500 inhabitants, conservative. But now the stagnant waters are stirred. The Lord has blessed his servants to the conversion of a multitude and the needed quickening of the churches. If the pastors will now throw off the strait-jacket and follow up this grand work, streams of life may still be set in motion.

The evangelists moved next to Baltimore, where they received warm welcome.

Since Dr. Chapman left the pastorate he has had large doors open to him in the evangelistic field. Recently Reading, Pa., had a visit from him, which resulted in a widespread movement. Mr. Mills is moving eastward from the Pacific coast. All the cities welcome him, and thousands flock to hear him. Dr. Munhall continues sowing the seed with liberal hand. His union meetings have been largely effective for good, while his preaching is loyal and intensely aggressive. Other evangelists are pursuing their calling amid many discouragements. Mr. Leonard Weaver is in New York City, having many tokens of blessing. When Americans know him he will be better appreciated.

The Methodists have employed Rev. C. H. Yatman for theatre services and related work in New York. They are making great efforts to reach the lapsed masses. The Salvation Army, under Ballington and Mrs. Booth, is receiving recognition. There are few opposers now. They deserve great credit for continuance in well-doing amid evil report and good report. Their philanthropy has touched a popular chord.

Rev. Wm. E. Needham accepted the pastorate of a Baptist Church in Camden, N.J., recently. Within two months the building proved too small. His official board immediately secured a new opera house, in which Pastor Needham preaches on Sunday evenings. The great auditorium is constantly packed with eager listeners. More unsaved people attend this service than can be found in twenty ordinary churches. Surely it is wise to fish where fish congregate.

Rev. B. C. Needham is pastor at Coatesville, Pa. He expects Mr. Leonard Weaver to aid him in seeking to reach the non-churchgoers. Rev. Thomas Needham confines his evangelism to needy fields in Pennsylvania, building up the weaker churches and reaching outlying districts.

Rev. Geo. C. Needham has recently been several times prostrated through heart weakness. His physician gives him encouragement that after a period of quiet and freedom from his exacting labours he will regain his former health. He will confine his labours to teaching and preaching in Philadelphia, with restricted work not far from his home. Great audiences crowded to hear him in the Camden Opera House for three Sundays, but these services overtaxed him.

Rev. D. M. Stearns is doing a peculiarly grand work. He is a reformed episcopal pastor at Germantown, using his parish as a centre for his field, which is the world. Mr. Stearns is establishing classes for Bible study in various cities and towns, attending to twelve each week. He teaches the S.S. lesson, and gives expositions on prophetic subjects. His teaching has revived the hope of our Lord's coming in many hearts. He also enlightens his classes on missionary movements until they began to maintain workers abroad by voluntary donations. Over sixty missionaries are thus taken care of. In a short time nearly fifteen thousand dollars have been dispersed through several missionary boards and agencies.

MISSION IN BIRMINGHAM.

A most encouraging mission to men was held last week by Mr. W. R. Lane and Lord Bennet in connection with the Birmingham Y.M.C.A. The work was commenced on Saturday evening, the 18th ult., by a meeting with the workers for prayer and conference, and on Sunday Mr. Lane addressed with great power the large P.S.A. of a thousand men, and conducted the evangelistic service at the Y.M.C.A. in the evening. The many prayers which had preceded the mission were signally answered on this day, when the first drops of the shower of blessing began to fall. Monday evening was devoted to a social meeting of members and associates, while the three following evenings saw the hall filled with men, most of whom were under thirty. From beginning to end all listened with deep attention to the earnest and brotherly appeals of Mr. Lane; and Lord Bennet's sacred solos, rendered by one whose heart as well as voice seemed equally trained for this service, awakened many feelings which had been long crushed down by sin and sorrow.

The scene on the last evening will never be forgotten. Five hundred men were packed into the hall to hear Mr. Lane and Lord Bennet's thrilling personal experiences, and when at the close of a most solemn meeting Mr. Lane invited all who wished to decide for Christ to stand, nearly the whole audience rose as with one consent, and though the hour was late, nearly half remained to hear Mr. Lane's closing exhortation. He dwelt with special emphasis on the great importance of prayer and daily reading of the Scriptures, and recommended the inquirers to join the Bible and Prayer Union which has just been started in connection with the association.

Addresses too were given each afternoon by Mr. Lane on "Christian Life and Service," these Bible readings being open to all and much appreciated by those who attended them.

The hearts of the workers have been filled with gratitude to God for the blessings He has vouchsafed, and for the many answers to their prayers. Time alone will show how great was the blessing received; but it is remarkable that in such a short series of meetings, held in a hall only seating 400, over 120 men should have given in their names as being desirous of accepting Christ as their Saviour.

H. W.

MR. G. CLARKE AT BRISTOL.

Dear Sir,—May I invite your readers to join us in praise to God for the great and real revival which has taken place here at St. Luke's? Certainly there has not the like been seen here before, and once again has God shown us that He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. Blessing we felt sure would come, but none of us, I think, expected to see such constant crowds of earnest seekers after truth, or so many openly professing conversion. I should like to bring to the notice of your readers one or two peculiarities of this mission.

First, the services were conducted by a layman of the Church of England, Mr. George Clarke inside the church. Accordingly I had to read the evening service each night before the address could be delivered. This, we feared, might have been a hindrance, but it was not so at all. Again we hardly expected that Nonconformist brethren would come to a mission so conducted, in this respect also we were very agreeably surprised, and there is not a chapel in the district without its representatives among the new converts. One other peculiarity of this mission is the fact that from the second day we had almost incessant rain, so much so that I should think few missions have been held in such depressing weather, and yet with such glorious results. Mr. Clarke probably never spoke with greater power, and the presence of the Holy Spirit was plainly manifested.

Many cases dealt with were truly remarkable—one, a man stopped on the verge of suicide; others, habitual drunkards; others, again, sailors and travellers passing the night in Bristol who stepped into the church to while away the time. So we might multiply them. The Sunday evening services with overflowing crowds, the deep hush, the felt presence of God, the fervent prayers for mercy, none that were present can forget. But the blessing seemed to culminate when at the thanksgiving service concluding the mission nearly 400 Churchmen and Nonconformists knelt together at the Lord's table.

Praise God with us, fellow-labourers, and beseech Him to give us grace to carry on the work so gloriously begun.

Your fellow-labourer in the Gospel,

W. F. Jepson.

REVIVAL AT LEICESTER.

The mission which has closed at Leicester is one which will be remembered in this town with devout thankfulness for many years to come. During the last week of these services our Wesleyan friends were also busily occupied with an extensive mission of their own in other parts of Leicester, conducted by Revs. Thos. Waugh, Thos. Cook, W. Davidson, and others. And in all these various centres of Christian activity the presence and power of God was marvellously displayed. Hundreds of persons, young and old, have come forward to learn of the way of life as the result of this widespread effort; whilst in all the churches taking part in the missions there has been a most blessed awakening among believers. One hears on every hand the opinion expressed that it is a long time since the town of Leicester experienced such a manifest revival as the one which is now, to the glory of God, being chronicled.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith entered upon the last stages of their mission on Saturday, February 11, at Melbourne Hall (Pastor C. B. Sawday's), when Mr. Smith related his life's story to an immense audience. On the following day many who came to the services found it impossible to get into the hall, and in the evening a large overflow meeting was held in the schoolroom. All through the week our honoured brethren continued their labours, preaching the Gospel "in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance," with the glorious result that each evening found us rejoicing in the salvation of precious souls. Twice during the week afternoon meetings for Christians were held at Victoria-road Church, at which Mr. Fullerton gave most helpful and inspiring Bible readings.

Melbourne Hall was again crowded on the Saturday evening for another of the popular song services, and on the last day of the mission, viz., Sunday, February 19, most memorable gatherings took place, God, in a most special manner, bearing his servants witness both with signs and wonders.

According to an urgent request made by the committee, Messrs. Fullerton and Smith remained in Leicester for two extra days, on the former of which they conducted a service of peculiar interest in the Temperance Hall, at which 800 or 900 women belonging to the various "mothers' meetings" of the town were present. On the following day a great farewell meeting took place at Melbourne Hall. So eager were the people to attend this meeting that long before the hour for commencing the service had arrived the place was densely packed, and the Memorial Hall adjoining had to be thrown open for a second meeting. The intense feeling of gratitude to God for the blessings enjoyed in connection with the mission as manifested by the huge assembly, the presence of so many ministers on the platform and their touching testimonies (notably that of Rev. J. G. Greenhough, who has taken such a deep interest and active part in the mission), and the earnest and tender parting words of the evangelists will never be forgotten by those who were privileged to be present on this remarkable occasion.

Thus closed a memorable chapter in the history of the religious life of Leicester. That the influence of this blessed experience will be felt and the fruits of the mission be seen for many years to come is beyond all question. To the Triune God be all the praise and honour and glory! Amen.

Frederick J. Feltham.

THE ANNUAL CRIMINAL RETURNS OF GLASGOW, presented by the Chief Constable for the year 1892, have been issued. The section which more directly relates to indulgence in intoxicating liquors reports a decrease of 1531 in the number of persons apprehended on charges of disorderly conduct, simple assault, and being drunk and disorderly.

THE NOON PRAYER MEETING.

ALDERSGATE-STREET.

These daily meetings, which are held from twelve to one o'clock, prove oftentimes to be seasons of great interest. On a recent occasion there were amongst the personal testimonies which characterise these gatherings, many instances of gracious answers to prayer. One of these related to a large family circle, numbering about one hundred members, concerning whom several of the Christian members in their midst had made constant intercession. As the result, in the case of each one of those who have already passed into eternity—a large proportion—there was good hope for everyone.

Another friend related how recently, when preaching the Gospel in a mining district, he had made an appointment to go down a mine at a certain hour. Arriving, by mistake, half-an-hour too soon, he found that this was providential, for in that house there was lying a young woman on the point of death. She said, in reply to inquiries, that it was all dark concerning the future. After prayer he repeated a few texts from the Word of God, bearing on the facts of sin, atonement, pardon, and life, in the midst of which the dying girl said: "Oh! I see it; He died for me," and a few hours afterwards she passed away in joyful hope.

Another friend related that, during a recent summer, he was staying at one of the large hotels at Braemar, at the time of "the gathering." There were two bishops, many clergymen, and other distinguished guests present. Sunday evening had been spent in the drawing-room in singing sacred songs; the guests were getting their candles and were retiring for the night when he felt constrained, with great reluctance and much nervous suffering, to suggest that ere they parted for the night, never to meet again until the great day, they should acknowledge God in a few words of prayer. All the guests kneeled, while he was enabled to lead them in a few earnest words. At the close many of them lingered behind for conversation, several heartily thanked him for the suggestion. Through subsequent correspondence he learned that as the result of yielding to the mighty constraint he had felt, several of them present had been led definitely to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour.

A sailor present, who had just returned from a voyage to the Antipodes, said that when they sailed from London there were two Christian men on board, the captain and the carpenter. By the consistent lives and the testimony of these two men the little band was increased to twelve before the ship reached home. At the ports of call, instead of folks from the shore coming on board to evangelise the sailors, they landed and gladly bore testimony to the Saviour to those ashore.

THE GLORY OF GOD.

"We give thanks to Thee for Thy great glory, O Lord God, heavenly King."
"The glory which Thou gavest me I have given them."
—John xvii. 22.

We thank Thee, Lord, for all thy wondrous Power,
Revealed each night upon the starry sky;
And every day, where insect, bud, or flower
Receives the notice of an opened eye.

We thank Thee that thy Wisdom is so vast,
So far exceeding all our finite thought;
Embracing all the ages that are past,
And reaching to creations yet unwrought.

We thank Thee, Father, most of all, that we May show what ne'er was read on skies above;
A glory never flashed o'er land and sea—
The wondrous glory of Thy matchless love.

That here Thy children, e'en the weakest one,
Set free from self, may be a mirror true;
And show thy glory, as the mighty sun
Is held within a tiny drop of dew.

A. M. Charlesworth.

THE WEEKLY WEST-END MEETINGS for the deepening of the spiritual life, which were formerly held in Portman Rooms, will be resumed on Friday, March 3, at 3.30 p.m., and continued each Friday in March and April (Good Friday excepted) in the Mission Hall, 21, Bell-street, Edgware-road. The speakers will be:—March 3, Rev. E. H. Hopkins; March 10, Rev. J. B. Figgis; March 17, Rev. J. Sharpe; March 24, Rev. F. B. Meyer. Requests for prayer should be sent to Miss Gordon, 19, Seymour-street, Portman-square.

ROUND THE NEW HEBRIDES.

We have just returned from a trip round the New Hebrides, and have visited almost all the mission stations in the group, as well as a number of traders' stations.

The larger islands, as one may see by looking at a map, are in the northern part of the group. There the population is more dense, and heathenism is stronger. As yet comparatively few of the natives there have been reached by the missionary, but in some places the natives are apparently ready to receive the Gospel.

To the N.E. of Ma'ekula (or Mallicollo, as in most maps) there are several small islands, each about a mile in diameter, with large populations. Uripio is the station of a missionary, with a population of about 300. Walla, a little to the north, with no one save a French priest to teach them, has a population of about 1200; and Vau, a little further north, has a population of about 1500. It will probably be some time before a missionary can reach these; and it must be chiefly by means of native teachers.

Santo, with a population of about 15,000, has two missionaries, and there are very few teachers to assist them in extending the work. Dr. Lamb, a medical missionary, has been settled in Ambrim this year, and the people are evidently in a prepared state to receive the Gospel. The fertile and populous island of Oba, and the islands of Pentecost and Maiwo, are under the Melanesian Mission, with a missionary resident during part of the year, while teachers trained on Norfolk Island are at work there throughout the year. All the other islands are under the Presbyterians.

The great want of the New Hebrides is teachers. A good many have gone out from Eromanga, Fate, Emae, Aneityum, and one or two other islands to the northern part of the group. A number of the more advanced islands have in addition supplied their own islands with teachers, as Aneityum, Aniwa, Eromanga, Fate, Nguna, Tongoa; and now Futuna in the south, and Epi in the north, are training teachers to instruct their own population. It is proposed to start a training institution for teachers, but owing to the resumption of the labour traffic it will be very difficult to get young men to attend such an institution. Our numbers are weakened this year by the enforced return of two members of the mission owing to the ill-health of their wives.

Now that there is a monthly mail to the New Hebrides, papers from Great Britain can reach us in about six weeks after publication; and it would be a kindness if friends who supply missionaries with religious and other literature would send the latest.

Writing from Geog Tapa, Oroomiah, Persia, on Jan. 21, Deacon Abraham says:—

"Praise the Lord, that we have been delivered from the plague of cholera, and preserved in the midst of the many trials that oppress and destroy our country. Christians are greatly harassed here. We are weary of pleading our cause to the English Government. We appeal to the Lord, who saves wonderfully; but we are weak and often forget our refuge and salvation.

"Our poor fellow-Christians under Turkish rule, in the mountains of Kurdistan, are also oppressed. For some years past their land has brought forth little produce—corn, &c.—and there is scarcity. More than in any previous year we have sheltered the poor and needy. Sometimes our stables and mangers are full of them, so that our hungry cattle have to give place to the wretched creatures, hungry and almost naked.

"As my door is open to them, they come to our morning prayer meetings. Then I generally give them each a loaf of bread and a handful of raisins; but this we are not able to do always. Our circle of orphans, workers, &c., is more than sixty in all. We ourselves are often in need, but the Lord has been very gracious to us, and we believe He will continue to be so. My good wife is in England on behalf of our work. I ask Christians to remember her, and to help her with drawing-room meetings, or in other ways."

Communications may be addressed to Mr. Henry Tasker, Brookside, Andover, Hants.

DAMASCUS MEDICAL MISSION.

As a sphere of medical mission operations the ancient city of Damascus commends itself to serious consideration. With its teeming population of nearly 200,000 inhabitants, the great majority of whom are fanatically opposed to Christianity, it is without hospitals, dispensaries, poor-houses, asylums, or the other expressions of Christian brotherhood. The claims of the work which Dr. Mackinnon has conducted with so much success have been set forth in a special appeal, entitled, "Damascus," illustrated with photographs. It advocates the extension of the mission operations and the erection of a hospital.

The need of a medical missionary colleague has, it is stated, long been felt. The first missionaries of the Cross were sent out "two and two," and the wisdom of this Divine arrangement is obvious in efficiently carrying on medical missionary operations. In consultations; in operations; in carrying on the ordinary work of the dispensary or hospital, and, at the same time, outside visitation; in itinerary work; in time of sickness or furlough—the presence of a brother medical missionary must prove an incalculable blessing.

With the establishment of an hospital the aid of a fully-qualified nurse also becomes indispensable. To carry out the scheme—the purchase of land and the erection of a hospital, with accommodation for some sixty patients, dwelling-house, dispensary, &c.—about £5000 will be required. Substantial promises have been received, but continued interest is bespoken.

The work is carried on under the auspices of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society, and communications may be addressed to Dr. E. Sargood Fry, 56, George-square, Edinburgh.

IKWEZI LAMACI, NATAL.

Those who have been kindly interested in the above mission, carried on by Rev. Samuel and Mrs. Aitchison, will be sorry to learn that there has been famine all round them for some months back (and that it still continues), partly owing to the failure of last year's crops.

Their troubles are also aggravated by the loss of many oxen (including six of Mr. Aitchison's) from the exceptionally severe winter. This means very great inconvenience in the cultivating of land, as well as in other ways. Mr. Aitchison's riding pony has also died.

Donations for this work will be gladly received and forwarded by Agnes A. Bryson.

THE BIBLE IN INDIA.

One of the six auxiliaries of the Bible Society in India is that centred in Bangalore. The report for last year shows, among other noteworthy facts, that the circulation of Scriptures in the Bangalore district—the centre of the Kanarese-speaking population—has within the last six years almost doubled. In 1886 it was slightly over 10,000 copies; the return for 1892 is 19,261, and this in spite of a decrease, owing to various causes, of the number of colporteurs employed.

A revision of the Kanarese Bible is going steadily forward, and good progress has been made during the past year. One object kept steadily in view is to produce a version which shall be essentially popular—as easily intelligible as possible to the common people—that is, not only to the Brahman and the scholar, but equally to the children in schools and congregations, and to the illiterate women, ryots and low castes, who hear it at churches and public meetings. In attaining this difficult but important end, the revisers aim at an idiomatic translation—true to Kanarese ways of thought as well as to the original Hebrew and Greek—and speaking to the native mind with the accent and reality of their own familiar tongue. It is hoped that good progress will be made with the more important books of the New Testament in 1893.

THE LORD'S DAY IN FRANCE.—The Sunday Rest League is making progress, chiefly among Catholics; Protestants, who set it going, feeling a difficulty in meeting Romanists on this common ground. One of the largest concerns in Paris, "Le Louvre," sent 10,000 circulars to as many lady customers, asking if they would consent to not receiving goods on Sundays. The answer "yes," was, so to speak, unanimous. Other houses of business are following this example.—Evangelical Christendom.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

MISSES SMITH AND BAX.

A remarkable mission has been brought to a close at Donegal after three weeks' labours by Miss Smith and Miss Bax. The services were held in the Methodist Church, and from the first night of the mission these devoted ladies had the joy of leading sinners to Jesus. When the last evangelistic service was held it was found that over 160 names were taken as having professed to yield themselves to Christ Jesus as their Saviour. At the praise meeting which was held near the close of the mission, 107 men, women, and children, in one hour, praised God for blessings received during the mission.

Immediately at the close of the praise meeting a Gospel temperance meeting was commenced, at the close of which 120 signed the total abstinence pledge, and more than 100 others who had signed the pledge previous to this mission came forward to have the blue ribbon pinned on. The last night of the mission was devoted to organising a branch of the Christian Endeavour Society, at which eighty-seven names were taken, which is only a foretaste of what will follow.

During the mission, Miss Edith Richardson and Miss S. Fennell, both of Bessbrook, gave very valuable help in all the meetings, and their addresses were greatly prized by old and young who heard them. E. Corneille.

MISSION IN COUNTY DOWN.

The special meetings conducted in Bangor, co. Down, by Messrs. Smith and Bell have been continued since they left for Monaghan. The meetings have been growing in interest, attendance, and power, and it is evident a wave of blessing is passing over this place. The Lord's people have been stimulated to further zeal in Christian work, and have been led to persevering prayer and effort on behalf of the unsaved, and as a result many have been led to decision for Christ. The work will be continued for another week in Trinity Presbyterian Church. Ministers of various denominations are assisting to make the united mission a success. Messrs. Smith and Bell return for the final week at the close of their mission in Monaghan. The following ministers have taken part in the work: Revs. Jno. Waddell, Dr. Williamson, W. Hookens, W. J. Jackson, and Dr. Rogers. F. H.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—Will you spare me a brief space in your valued paper to call upon all Christians who "know that they have passed from death unto life, because they love the brethren," and upon all who desire that "the Word of God may have free course and be glorified," to plead, both in public and in private, with the faith that takes no refusal, for their Protestant brethren in Ireland, that their lives, their liberties, and the result of their industries should not be permitted to be endangered?

Let them plead no less that the one hope of peace for distracted Ireland, the free course of God's own message of "Peace on earth and goodwill towards men," be not quenched for ever by the tyranny of a priesthood which, wherever it obtains power, closes and banishes the Bible.

Yours faithfully,

The Author of "The Memorials of Captain Hedley Vicars."

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN WINCHESTER.

The second week of this lady's mission at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, has given great encouragement, in spite of specially unfavourable weather. The spacious hall has been filled to overflowing, the numbers unable to gain admission night after night being very considerable.

In public meeting and in inquiry room alike there has been a deep sense of solemnity, accompanied by manifestations of Divine power. Many unable to obtain admission to the chief meeting—some having walked many miles to be present—thronged into the after-meeting, where Mrs. Baeyertz gave a second address.

The mission closed last Thursday evening with a solemn meeting of prayer and consecration, at which nearly 400 Christians were present.

EAST END DISTRESS.

Life in the far East End is very sad just now. Work is very slack at all the works, and employment is not to be had, though the men tramp from before six o'clock in the morning until what ought to be dinner time seeking it, till their boots are worn off their feet, and they grow gaunt and aged-looking. The women—who would be bread-winners if they could—sit at home and starve, because, as a result of so many of the working classes being massed together, there is no washing or charing to be had. The children come in hungry from school, and there is nothing but bread to give them, perhaps not even that.

Many have pawned all they have to pawn, and often the furniture has nearly all disappeared. Some have no bedding left, but lie down in their clothes on a few rags, with not even a blanket to cover them. Some mothers with young babies get thoroughly exhausted and become very ill. The parish doctor comes and orders nourishment, but unless the parish give it there is none for them. Many of the children die young, those who can walk are often weakly and rickety. These are the children of the genuine unemployed—who would rather starve than beg, and who have been brought to these straits by being out of employ for months. Several families are suffering from scarlet fever; those who are recovering need nourishment sorely.

It is for such as these that Rev. S. Smyth, St. Mark's, Victoria Docks, E., pleads for help to enable him to give blankets, coal, meal, and grocery to the sick, the aged widows, and the many suffering poor.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

Mr. E. H. Kerwin, writing from the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, sends particulars of some cases of distress recently found in connection with the visitation work of the mission:—

A woman who has seen better days; her father died, and left her property, but it has all gone by bits, and now she writes: "As a last resource, I appeal to you before I end my life, which I am sure I must do, as I cannot bear my existence much longer." The visitor reports: "Found this young woman, about thirty, in a most deplorable condition; lives in a 'box' room about 3 × 8. Her bed a piece of wood on four legs, an old feather bed; a frame of a box to sit on; no other furniture in the room; nothing on the walls; no clothes, except an old dress in rags and an old coat; no undergarments whatever; no bed-clothes, and starving; she lived on Sunday on a date and a piece of bread."

Mr. and Mrs. I——, Mile-end, six children, ages ranging from fifteen years to infant in arms. One child with a diseased hip, one with inflammation of the lungs. Scarcely any covering on the bed when visited. Husband has been out of work for two or three months; casual work. No food in the house. A dock labourer and a teetotaller.

H——, Mile-end, docker, with five children, who have scarcely any clothing to go out in. Thoroughly destitute. He often walks miles if he sees a chance of getting a day's work. Had it not been for the help afforded them by the poor relatives, the children must have perished from want of food. Mrs. H—— had nothing but rags to go out in. All earthly possessions gone to raise money for food. There was not a blanket on the bed until the visitor took them some.

I could quote you any number of such cases, adds Mr. Kerwin, and it is for these we want funds to help. They will not, as a rule, make their wants known until it is too late.

RICHARD WEAVER IN LONDON.

God has answered prayer, and given us the best wine last. Night by night last week Malden Hall was packed to its utmost capacity, and the closest attention was shown whilst the evangelist simply and powerfully proclaimed the Gospel message. Numbers remained behind to the after meetings, and a great many men and women were dealt with personally by workers.

At the closing service on Friday many came forward for prayer and personal conversation. On Sunday last, Mr. Clem. Boardman, of Stratford, was greatly helped in following up the work of reaping the fruit which had been sown by Mr. Weaver, who is busy this week at Belgrave Presbyterian Church, Halkin-street, West.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.

The friends of this mission have been given occasion for rejoicing of late in the blessing that has been recorded in the conversion of several match factory girls at the Bow Common Institute. When the terrible persecution is remembered which follows upon the confession of Christ by this class of girls, it is surely a cause for thanksgiving that they have so far stood their ground. More than usually full classes have been kept this winter, while the "gutter lads" at Kingsland have come in larger numbers than could be accommodated, and spiritual efforts have not been without hopeful signs amongst them.

The congregations of bonâ fide poor working people are maintained both at Kingsland, Bow, and Poplar in large and increasing numbers, while, better still, the Gospel message proves to be the power of God unto salvation from week to week.

Turning to the temporal relief afforded, the workers are finding, with many others in East London, the most heart-rending destitution; and beside affording what relief they can in coals, groceries, blankets, and clothing, they are making and giving out 800 quarts of soup weekly, and supplying 500 dinners to unemployed dock labourers and others and their children.

Mr. Chorley has lately added a free medical relief agency at Bow, where the visitors of the mission make a discriminate use of free medical orders to the very poor in supplement to the hospital letters, the supply of which is inadequate, and which the prevailing increase of sickness so intensifies. Communications should be made to Mr. W. Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, Canonbury, N.

LIFE AND THE PHYSICAL FORCES.

An important meeting of the Victoria Institute took place on Monday last week, at which Mr. J. W. Slater, F.C.S., F.E.S., traced the difference between life and the physical forces, and reviewed all those experiments and arguments by which some have sought to prove that a key to the origin of life has been obtained. Contributions to the discussion of the question were made by Sir George Stokes, Bart., V.P.R.S., who stated that Lord Kelvin's recently-alluded to suggestion, that the germs of life on this earth might have come from the bursting of a remote star, was only intended by him to refer to the possible transmission from one part of the universe to another of life germs, but that the first origin of life itself we must all refer to God.

Professor Lionel Beale, F.R.S., in supporting Mr. Slater's views, said that an absolute line must be drawn between the living and the non-living. Living matter is distinguished from all other matter by a property, power, or agency, by which its elements are arranged, directed, and prepared to combine according to a pre-arranged plan and for a definite purpose. There has been no gradual transition from the non-living to the living. Life is a special position independent of and not in any way related to the physical forces; it has nothing in common with any material forces, powers, or properties.

The Zulu Christian Choir.

This band of Christian singers from South Africa have recently been exercising their special gift in different parts of the country. They paid a visit to North Wales, and their songs met with much acceptance with that musical people. They have lately sung at Richmond, among the audience being the Duke of Teck and Princess May. Among other places where they have performed have been St. Paul's Chapter House and Dr. Clifford's Church at Westbourne Park. Their répertoire embraces selections from the Jubilee songs, Mr. Sankey's latest collection, besides well-known sacred solos of a high class.

The choir are open to receive engagements for the months of March and April, after which they hope to return to their native land. The leader is Mr. Saul Msane, who may be addressed, Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

CRIMPS AND SEAMEN.—Upwards of 7,000 seamen have signed petitions at twenty-seven seaports, under the agency of the Missions to Seamen, to the President of the Board of Trade relative to the monthly payment to crews absent on long voyages of half wages either to themselves, to savings banks, or to their relatives, as contemplated by the Merchant Seamen's Wages Act, 1880. The merchant seamen also petitioned for the extension of the plan now in operation in the home ports of transmitting sailors and their wages to their homes on paying off to ports of discharge abroad. This latter method of starving the crimps is under the consideration of an inter-departmental committee.

Letters to the Editor.

THE LORD'S SUPPER AND SACRAMENTALISM.

Dear Sir,—Perhaps you can find room for a few words on one side of the sacramental subject which is worth notice. This is the part belonging to Baptism and the Communion as witnesses.

The former is the witness of reception into the visible Church, and the latter the witness of continuing connection with it. It seems obvious that the officers of a Christian congregation are the right persons to admit by baptism those who seek it. And the seekers, moreover, by seeking it, testify that they believe in Jesus. Again, they who thus testify their faith in the Saviour, and receive baptism on the strength of this testimony, have the opportunity and duty of testifying from time to time that they continue in this faith at the Lord's table. They "show the Lord's death" by partaking of the bread and wine according to his dying command.

Now when an assembled church keeps this spiritual feast, the proper president would naturally be the president of that church, the leader of that flock. He is not only the minister of the Word, but the minister of the two ordinances which his Master instituted.

The enormous exaggeration of the office of the minister in connection with each of these ordinances, as though his agency gave them their virtue and value, has tempted some to go to the other extreme.

But they have a place in Scripture, and how a church can conduct its course without them it is very hard to see.

Possibly these suggestions from one who neither supposes that baptism changes a person's nature nor that bread and wine become flesh and blood in the Eucharist, may remove the objections which some entertain to these standing ordinances of Christianity.

Believe me, yours truly,

W. Sandford.

Edlaston Rectory, Ashbourn, Derbyshire.

Dear Sir,—The word "communion" in 1 Cor. x. 16, is one of those by which the Greek word koinonia is translated in the New Testament, and a comparison and study of the passages in which this word is found is indispensable to our right understanding of its meaning, and of the teaching which it is intended we should learn from it. Let us very briefly examine some of these, for which purpose no great scholarship is required.

It is found, for the first time, I believe, in Acts ii. 42, where we are told of those who had "gladly received the word," and, thereupon, had been baptised ("about three thousand souls") that they "continued steadfastly in the Apostles' teaching and in (R.V.) fellowship (koinonia), and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." We read further in verse 44, that all that believed were together and had all things common (koina), and sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men as every man had need."

We read in Rom. xv. 26 that "it pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution (koinonia) for the poor saints" at Jerusalem. And we have this direction in Heb. xiii. 6, "But to do good and to communicate (koinonia) forget not."

In 1 Cor. x. 16 Paul reveals to believers, as one of their privileges and spiritual fellowship with Christ, of which their fellowship in worldly possessions was a true though a feeble type. He writes: "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion (koinonia) of the blood of Christ? the bread which we break, is it not the communion (koinonia) of the body of Christ?"

What can this mean but that, at the Lord's table, Christ makes his broken body and shed blood common to the believer with Himself?

With perfect truth, therefore, could Paul write, as to himself, in Gal. ii. 20 (R.V.), "I have been crucified with Christ"; but the believer has the risen life of Christ also in common with him, for Paul adds, "Nevertheless I live, yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God who loved me, and gave Himself for me." And thus he could write also in Rom. vi. 11, "Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

In this koinonia between Christ and the believer, "if any man is in Christ he is a new creature," since "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law having become a curse for us" (Gal. iii. 13, R. V.), and Christ "was made unto us wisdom, from God, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption" (1 Cor. i. 30, R.V.). Again, we read in 2 Cor., v. 21, R.V., "Him who knew no sin God hath made to be sin on our behalf that we might become the righteousness of God in him."

This koinonia with Christ provides, further, for the believer "the communion (koinonia) of the Holy Ghost" (2 Cor. xiii. 10). "The fellowship (koinonia) of the Spirit" (Philip. ii. 1); nay, more, that of God the Father likewise, as we are taught in 1 John i. 3, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship (koinonia) with us, and truly our fellowship (koinonia) is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

What a flood of heavenly light does the sun of righteousness thus pour on these wonderful words of our Lord, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me, through their word; that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us" (John xvii. 20, 21).

I do not find in the New Testament a single passage in support of the doctrine that unless the bread and the wine, at the Lord's table, are consecrated and administered by a priest, there can be no koinonia between the believer partaking of these and Christ, or that the partaking of these by the believer is absolutely necessary for the continuance of that koinonia. Could any words of instruction be more simple and explicit than those in which our Lord Himself instituted this feast, when He said "This do in remembrance of me, for as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come" (1 Cor. xi. 25)?

The bread and the wine, of which Jesus partook in common with his disciples and at the same table, were but symbols of the death which He was about to suffer, and make common to them with Himself, as everlasting life was already common to them, as believers, with Himself. Had He not said, "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life" (John vi. 47)?

We have a very solemn warning as to that which is an absolute condition of fellowship with the Father in 1 John i. 6, 7: "If we say that we have fellowship (koinonia) with him and walk in darkness, we lie, and we do not the truth; but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship (koinonia) one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

I cannot but express my surprise and grief that the terms "the Lord's Table," "the Lord's Supper," the only terms used by Paul to designate that holy feast for believers, are so systematically discarded by a very large number of the followers of Christ, who seem to know it by no other name than the "Eucharist." When it is considered not only that there is no authority in the Scriptures for such a use of the word, but that, where it is used, this is invariably to express a giving of thanks, it will be seen that, when applied to the Lord's Supper, it conveys but a very limited idea of the privilege intended for the believer in that holy ordinance, and one greatly derogatory to that privilege.

I do not ask to what extent the meaning of the Greek word "Eucharist" has been enlarged by the churches, no matter how ancient; the question for me is, What is the meaning of the word as used in the Holy Scriptures? I readily admit that we find it in the passages in which we read that our Lord "took the cup," and "took bread," and "gave thanks" (eucharistesas), but I do not find that the word is used in any other sense in connection with the Lord's supper; and when read in Acts xxiv. 3, that the heathen orator Tertullus used it in addressing a heathen governor, as for whose providence, he says, "we accept it always and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness" (eucharistia), we may well repudiate the use of a word having such a limited meaning to designate the communion of the body and of the blood of Christ.

I remain, &c.,

R. Scott Moncrieff.

Mardale-crescent, Edinburgh.

Dear Sir,—While I have been a constant reader more or less of your paper for twenty-five years, I do not know that I have ever contributed to your columns. Still your publication is among the few that I can take up with satisfaction and find you "earnestly contending for the faith which was once for all delivered to the saints."

Your remarks upon the "sacraments" raise increasingly solemn questions, questions which those who observe the growing inroads of ritualism, rationalism, and spiritualism into our professing Churches can only watch with the gravest apprehension. The time may not have arrived in the judgment of some when Christians shall be justified in refusing to partake of the "sacraments" because of their surroundings, yet the fact remains that these "sacraments" are, in both English and Scottish Churches, being put in the place of Christ and faith in his atoning work.

The testimony of Mr. J. E. Mathieson I would heartily endorse, but writing from Scotland to-day I would say that all our Presbyterian bodies are honeycombed with "Moderatism." With an intimate knowledge of Edinburgh churches and ministers, I cannot count more than a dozen places where Christ and his Gospel are fearlessly preached without the "leaven" of "modern thought." Strange it may be, there is not one left since the death of Dr. Horatius Bonar who proclaims the truth of the Lord's second coming as the hope of the Church and the saint.

Mr. Penstone's statement is so far good, but it tends to recall the doings of "brethren," and the ecclesiastical system which the followers of Mr. Darby reared upon the observance of the Supper. I know I express the feelings of thousands of Christians when I say that what we want is some vantage ground apart from the corruptions of the teachings around us and in our midst.—Yours faithfully,

Edinburgh. C. S. R.

PAPAL PAGANISM.

Dear Sir,—In connection with your remarks on this subject (February 23), in which you say "Papal Paganism is coming in upon us like a plague, and the children of Evangelical men are swelling the numbers in the Ritualistic half-way house to Rome," will you permit me to draw attention to the worse than idle custom (now so prevalent in every family) of associating Christmas in children's minds with an imaginary "saint," or even with "Father Christmas," both of which ideal persons are pagan and papal?

Surely we had better recognise our Lord Himself, as our forefathers did, on the day that bears His name, instead of allowing our children's minds to be filled with the idea that "Santa Claus" gives them everything (who is he or she?). And perhaps "Father Christmas" is even worse, as on a village church window that I have seen, he is represented as an old man (and I shudder to say it), as God the Father.

I have long wondered that no one has yet spoken against the idolatries which have, I am sure, terribly demoralised our children's minds, and fostered infidelity and superstition.—Yours faithfully,

E. F. M.

THE AFRICO-MALAGASY SLAVE TRAFFIC

Sir,—May I, as a Madagascar missionary, call the attention of your readers to the following letter of "A British Resident" in this country, referring to the certain revival of the slave trade from Africa into this island, if the extraordinary instructions of Lord Rosebery on this subject are allowed to go unchallenged by Parliament and the country?

Is it really the fact that a British Government is going, not only to give up all British interests in this island to the tender mercies of a French Protectorate, but also to abandon the long-continued honour England has had of protecting the slave?

Yours faithfully,

James Sibree, Missionary of the L.M.S.

L.M.S. College, Antananarivo, Madagascar.

Sir,—Permit one through the medium of your influential paper to call attention to the recent abandonment of England's right of search of dhows suspected of being in the slave trade in Malagasy waters.

Lord Rosebery, at the request of the French Government, has issued instructions to the officers of the British Navy and the British Consular Agents in this country to in no way concern themselves with exercising a police control over the dhows of the various nationalities in the waters of Madagascar; in fact, notwithstanding the right of search and seizure of all vessels suspected of slaving in the waters of this country being specifically stipulated for by the Articles 16 and 17 of the Anglo-Malagasy Treaty of 1865, his Lordship, according to telegram to hand here, "has directed English ships and the Consuls not to search vessels of any flag in Madagascar waters.

This, in many ways—political as well as philanthropic—is a very grievous abandonment of those rights and privileges the British Government were at pains, in the Anglo-French Convention of 1890 regarding Zanzibar and Madagascar, to reserve to England in their entirety, and to avert the censure which, I have reason to know, is in certain quarters contemplated being publicly pronounced at no distant date on England's abandonment of her interest in the suppression of the Africo-Malagasy slave traffic, the attention of the Government should be called to the spirit in which the Zanzibar-Madagascar Convention was concluded.

When placing the Anglo-French Convention before the House of Lords, Lord Salisbury stated:—"We have taken the opportunity on both sides, not only to reserve all rights and privileges which all subjects of either country (England and France) might have in either Island (Zanzibar and Madagascar), but also to give the most explicit guarantee to missionaries and missions, and of freedom of religious practice and religious teaching." And, Sir J. Fergusson, then Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said, during the discussion Mr. S. Smith raised on the Convention in the House of Commons, he thought that all might rejoice with them in what he considered to be the greatest step taken in the last half-century towards the extinction of that accursed traffic (the slave traffic). Following up the Act of Brussels a blow had been struck at the slave trade in its developments and in its sources.

The statement of Lord Salisbury makes clear that it was not his Lordship's intention to abandon any British right or privilege. And the utterance of Sir J. Fergusson makes evident that the facility which Anglo-French co-operation would give for the extinction of the slave traffic was one of the main reasons Lord Salisbury had in signing the Convention regarding Zanzibar and Madagascar. Indeed, so strongly did the Anti-Slavery reasons influence the House of Commons that, amongst other speakers expressing similar approval, Mr. S. Buxton said in the course of the same discussion:—"It was satisfactory to find that careful supervision was going to be undertaken with regard to flying flags of different nations, and no vessel would be allowed to fly the flag of any of the Great Powers without registration and a proper licence. They might thank the Government of France for having conceded what, for some time, appeared to a certain extent against their will—the right of search to all other nations."

This being the spirit in which England and France came to an agreement upon Zanzibar and Madagascar, and this being the spirit in which both Houses of the British Parliament regarded that agreement, Lord Rosebery should reconsider his instructions for H.B.M. representatives not to take part in the reduction of the slave traffic in Madagascar waters. Under the lax surveillance of France the slave trade will assuredly increase with great rapidity, and then attention will be influentially drawn to the matter, and when it is generally known that the increase is due to England having, for no purpose, abandoned her treaty rights, Lord Rosebery will be censured for not pursuing that "continuity of Great Britain's moral policy" which he has recently laid such emphasis upon.—I am, yours, &c.,

A British Resident.

INDIA AND OPIUM.

Dear Sir,—I read with thankfulness the page in last week's Christian on the Anti-Opium Convention. You could not there insert the speeches at length. May I remind your readers that if the whole loss to the Indian revenue has to be made good by the Imperial Treasury—which is most unlikely—even then it could be met by each income-taxpayer having to give up a 120th part of his present income.

Certainly no Christian man will say, "I believe our opium policy to be a huge and hideous crime, but its discontinuance might take away from me a 120th part of my present income, and therefore I oppose the discontinuance." Faithfully yours,

C.M.S., Salisbury-square, E.C. C. C. Fenn.

Sir,—With reference to your notice of the crowded meeting in Exeter Hall to advocate the claims of the heathen in your issue of February 16, allow me to draw very special attention to the reiterated question in Mr. James Monro's address, not alluded to in your report—viz., "What message shall I take to the people of Bengal?" This undoubtedly was with reference to the proportion ready to go to the mission field from the Church in this country.

But I do wish Mr. Monro could see his way to assist in taking back the best message which could be sent to the heathen in the East, during the century now nearly closed—viz., the joyful news that Christian Britain had decided to sever all connection with the Anglo-Asiatic opium trade, and to limit her cultivation of the poppy in India to the legitimate use of the drug—viz., medicinal, and its sale only as a poisonous medicine.

The two greatest obstacles to the spread of the Gospel in India, and particularly in Bengal, as I know after thirty years' service in that Presidency, are the unchristian lives of many professing Christians, and the unchristian acts of a professing Christian Government. There is not a native in Bengal but knows the sole object in specially preparing the product of the poppy at Patna and Gazeepoor for export to China; while the extent of this opium trade in the East, and the liquor traffic in India, with the licensing of vice, on the lines of the worship of (according to Sir William Hunter) "the gentle and merciful god" Juggernauth, as I have seen it for some years at Juggernauth, constitute a trinity of evils, utterly obliterating in the eyes of all thinking natives our claim to be styled a Christian nation.

Indeed, were it not for the consecrated lives and work in the mission hospitals and schools in India, unconnected with the Government of the country, and the godly lives of, thank God, not a few official and unofficial residents in India, the claim of Christianity in India to be described as the witness of Him who "went about doing good" would be at a very low ebb. The best message Mr. Monro could take back to India would be to say that Britain was going to "cease to do evil" in the export of opium; and the next that she was going to "bring forth fruits worthy of repentance" by, if need be, meeting the loss of the few millions of the opium revenue by pecuniary help from the country that for a century has realised tens of millions sterling by a trade declared by a vote of the House of Commons, in April, 1891, to be "morally indefensible." Yours faithfully,

Robert Pringle, M.D., Brigade Surgeon.

STEEL.

Sir,—I am sorry to observe a scientific error in your last issue, page 8. Steel is not pure iron. The latter would be extremely soft and pliable. Steel is iron with which is associated a proportion of carbon, and, within limits, the more of this impurity the harder is the steel. Scientifically, your parallel might have made the carbon to represent infusion of the Word of God, as wanted in the Evangelical Church; only, using that comparison, the carbon should have been described not as impurity but as diamond, which is carbon in its purest form.

Yours faithfully,

J. Jameson.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The annual meeting of the Winnipeg Association showed very great advance in many directions.

Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D., will deliver the opening address at the forthcoming New York State Convention.

A remarkable revival has been going on in Central College, Fayette, Mo. All the unconverted students, except two, profess to have been converted.

The members of the Y.M.C.A., Northampton, held their meeting last Sunday afternoon in Prince's-street Chapel, where an address was given by Rev. J. C. Roberts, D.D.

A valuable paper, entitled "The Y.M.C.A. as a Missionary Agency," was presented by Mr. David McConaughy at the Decennial Missionary Conference recently held at Bombay.

Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness is conducting the series of Sunday afternoon services in the Mount Pleasant Rooms, Liverpool. His first address, to men only, proved exceedingly searching.

At East Liverpool, Ohio, Rev. F. E. Smiley, assisted by the pastors of the churches and members of Y.M.C.A., is holding meetings with good results. From 1,500 to 2,000 people attend each evening.

The Wakefield Association, at its last social meeting, marked its sense of the devotion with which Mr. Alfred Haley has for so many years laboured for the young men and young women of the town.

The annual meeting of the Camden Town Association on Thursday last was an inspiriting occasion. Mr. J. D. Allcroft presided, and addresses were given by Archdeacon Sinclair and Rev. James Paterson, B.D.

The Hull Y.M.C.A. (in connection with the Young People's Institute), which now numbers 230 members, are making preparations for an eight days' mission which will be conducted by Mr. E. J. Kennedy. They have engaged the Hengler's Circus, which seats 3,500 persons, and much blessing is expected.

A considerable gathering was attracted to St. Peter's-upon-Cornhill, on Friday, by the announcement that Archdeacon Sinclair would preach the annual sermon to young men in connection with the Cornhill Y.M.C.A. To the disappointment of all, however, the Archdeacon was unable to be present, and in his place his brother (Rev. R. Sinclair) preached on public schools and Y.M.C.A. work among commercial young men.

Newton Abbott annual meeting has just been held. The membership has increased in the year from 41 to 109. The meeting of the Torquay Association was a success in every way, several well-known gentlemen and ministers contributing capital addresses. The work of the Association is prospering and the future is full of hope, the number of members on the books being 230.

At New Castle, Penn., Dr. L. W. Munhall has held a two weeks' series of meetings. Nearly seven hundred professed conversion. At a confidential talk to young men over one thousand were present, ninety-nine of whom professed conversion. The average attendance at men's meetings for the past three months has been one hundred and twenty-two, with twelve conversions. The membership has been increased by one hundred and thirty-six since September.

The Chicago Association shows a membership of 3508. As to the spiritual work, it is reported that 70,144 was the total attendance at the religious meetings, as compared with 64,417 in 1891. The total average attendance weekly at the Bible classes has been 146. As a result of the work along this line, 840 men have requested prayer, 410 have professed conversion, 684 have been personally dealt with in religious conversation, and 138 are known to have been led into church membership.

There was a large gathering at the rooms of the City Y.M.C.A., Cornhill, on Tuesday week, to hear Mr. F. S. Arnot give an account of his mission work in Central Africa. In simple language, with no rhetorical display, but in words which chained the attention of every one present, Mr. Arnot told of his wonderful preservation in the midst of these heathens, and how that with the Bible only in hand, but aided by the Spirit of God, his enemies were all overcome and the evil designs and workings of Satan had brought praise to God.

Y.W.C.A. NOTES.

An Association with fifty members has been established at Horley, and suitable premises have been secured. There is a junior branch for girls under the age of fifteen.

A new branch recently started at 25, Anerley-road, Upper Norwood, has proved very successful. Miss E. Elkington is hon. secretary. Already there is a large membership.

The Melbourne Association reports steady progress and much spiritual reviving. A picnic held on Monday, Jan. 2, was turned into a real time of blessing by the power and presence of the Holy Spirit.

A special mission is being held this week at the Central Institute, following a week of prayer, conducted by Miss Parker, of Wimbledon. Rev. W. H. Stone, of St. James's, Hatcham, gives the closing address to-morrow, March 3.

With a view to a vigorous forward movement in connection with the London Y.W.C.A., a special prayer meeting has been called together at the London office, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W., this (Thursday) morning from 11 to 1 o'clock.

The annual meetings of the Y.W.C.A at Bombay showed considerable progress. A fresh feature was the presence of the newly-established Marathi branch, which has reached the number of eighty members. They were welcomed into the ranks of the Y.W.C.A. The English members now number 314.

Miss Hay Chapman has been appointed hon. superintendent of the Y.W.C.A. Park Mission. Two workers are regularly engaged in visiting the parks. Many poor and friendless girls have been helped to situations or passed on to rescue homes. Much spiritual blessing has rested upon the mission. The Bible classes and prayer meetings are well attended, and numerous cases of conversion have occurred.

The World's Fair and the Sabbath.

Rev. Joseph Cook's first Boston Monday lecture, and the eighteenth series, was delivered on February 6th. The lecture had special reference to the proposal to open the World's Fair on the Sabbath. The positions assumed were:—The fourth commandment, found among a rude people, possesses elements indispensable to the best type of social and political life. It came down like a ray of Divine light upon the chosen people, in which the seven most important colours are blended. These were: (1) the law of labour; (2) the law of rest; (3) the law of equality by the exclusion of caste; (4) it was commemorative; (5) secured Divine companionship; (6) worship: and (7) periodicity. These are things an elevated people must regard, and are nowhere more needed than in America.

Congress made a liberal appropriation to the Columbian Exposition on condition that the gates be closed on Sunday. The lobby from Chicago are pleading for a repeal of the law of closing. Their arguments are that the closing will prove a financial damage. The opening, it was replied, will prove a still greater loss, as better people will remain away, as they did at New Orleans with the Sunday desecration. The interests of working people were pleaded, but to this it was replied that days in the week would be allowed for attendance.

The parties in favour of closing are very strong and influential; those from Chicago in favour of opening make an unfavourable impression. The lecturer felt quite sure the gates would not be opened.

The Book World.

Sowing and Reading, by Captain Dawson, is a helpful manual for students of the historical books of the Old Testament. Lessons from the lives of the kings of Israel and Judah are indicated with admirable clearness and succinctness. (Shaw & Co. Paper, 6d.; cloth, 1s.)

The Book and the People. By Rev. A. Bernstein, B.D. (2s. Nisbet.) Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, in a brief preface, commends this useful little work to the Christian public. The pages throw much light on many passages of Scripture; and we gladly second the well-deserved commendation.

Perfect through Suffering; or, Consolations in the Furnace. By Rev. J. Hiles Hitchens, D.D. We welcome a second edition, enlarged, of this precious little volume. The consolations are genuinely spiritual, and admirably illustrated from Christian experience. (Glasgow: David Bryce & Son.)

Rescuers and Rescued; Experiences among our City Poor. By Rev. James Wells, M.A., Glasgow. We are glad to see a new edition of this volume of sketches of men, women, and children met with in home mission work. The pages are as stimulating as the incidents themselves are thrilling and pathetic. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Simon Peter: His Life and Letters. By W. T. P. Wolston, M.D. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) In twenty-seven chapters the author outlines the story of the Apostle and the special character of his two Epistles. There is, in these very readable pages, direct spiritual appeal as well as much expository matter. The book will doubtless prove of real service to many.

Books for the Young.—Two useful little works are: Bible Narratives in Verse, and Gospel Narratives in Verse, both by Mrs. Marshman. The measure and rhyme are by no means perfect, and the various pieces are not of equal merit. But, nevertheless, Bible stories are presented in an attractive style, capable of being learned with ease by the young. (1s. 6d. each. Shaw & Co.)

Catechism of the Prayer Book. By the late Canon Blakeney, D.D. The Protestant Reformation Society, 20, Berners-street, W., has done well to republish (price 3d.) this admirable exposition of the history and interpretation of the Prayer Book. Amongst those who use the Book of Common Prayer we could well wish this catechism widely circulated, as to many it might prove wonderfully helpful.

Pleasant Fruits is the title of a series of meditations on the Christian life, by E. M. Dewhurst, a lady who has for some time been known as the author of helpful books on Bible teaching. The title is taken from Canticles iv. 16, and the chapters emphasise Christian duties and graces. They are styled "Thoughts after Confirmation," and will be most highly appreciated by evangelical members of the Church of England. (Skeffington.)

The People's Bible. Vols. XVIII., XIX. Matthew. By Joseph Parker. (Hodder & Stoughton.) In the great and wide sea of human life and thought there are things innumerable, both small and great. That the same mind snaps off pistol shots in the Echo, describes the actor and defends the theatre in the Idler, and draws wise lessons from the parables of the Kingdom of Heaven, is strange, yet true. Dr. Parker excels in deducing from heavenly things lessons for life on earth, rather than in helping us to perceive in earthly things shadows of heavenly realities. We are not much helped to understand the significance of the baptism, temptation, and transfiguration of Jesus; but the obvious outward features of these events are applied with skill and force to daily circumstance. Those who read the first Gospel chiefly with reference to the Jews and to the dispensations, will here find fresh and practical themes for meditation.

Heart Purity and Spiritual Fulness are instructive Bible readings, by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, M.A. (1d. Marshall Brothers.)

Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay Park, N., publishes in a sixpenny packet a number of poems by the late Mrs. Pennefather, called collectively Songs of Service.

There is much valuable teaching in the booklet, Glories of Christ, Illustrated by the Tabernacle of the Wilderness, by H. Forbes Witherby. (3d. Holness.)

The Blossom series of twelve booklets, by Mrs. M. A. Wykes, is issued by Penman & Co., 33, Furnival-street, E.C., in fourpenny packets. The booklets are sound and forcible.

No Doubts, by John Fort, is a booklet which Christian workers will find very serviceable. It has been written to dispel doubts with which many believers are distressed. (Partridge, 1d. each, 5s. per 100 for distribution.)

A new edition, completing the twentieth thousand, has been issued of the "In Memoriam" booklet, Evelyn, Marchioness of Ailsa, by the author of "Memorials of Captain Hedley Vicars." (3d. Edinburgh: Andrew Stevenson.)

A useful addition to Marby's excellent series of Scripture manuals is The Epistle to the Galatians, intended for the use of students preparing for examinations. It is edited by "A Practical Teacher." (Marby, 3, Ludgate-circus Buildings, E.C.)

Mr. W. P. Gordon has issued "Seven Rules for Christians," printed on a neat card, with Scripture references. The rules and brief exhortations are thoroughly practical. The cards are published by D. Wyllie and Son, Aberdeen, N.B. 1s. per dozen, and 6s. 6d. per 100.

What is a Convention? by Francis Paynter, M.A., rector of Stoke-next-Guildford, and chairman of the Guildford Convention, is a thoughtful booklet, specially written for distribution before or during a Christian convention, for the deepening of the spiritual life. (6s. per hundred. Marshall Brothers.)

The lectures on "Bunyan's Characters" by Dr. Whyte, which have drawn such large audiences to Free St. George's, Edinburgh, on the Sabbath evenings of the last two years, are to be revised by the author, and published by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier. The first series will be ready in the spring, and will be issued as a half-crown volume.

Chepstow Chips; or, O'er True Tales. In sixpenny packets (1 and 2), containing twenty-five booklets, assorted. Drummond's Depôt, Stirling. These narratives are tersely told, each having a very definite object, and in close connection with the title. The writer adds to a soldier's experience a long connection with the London City Mission, and a deep knowledge of the Gospel of grace.

Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier have published two excellent booklets:—Outline of Practical Christianity (3d.), a text book for those preparing for the Lord's Supper; and Early Days of the Mission to the Jews at Pesth (1d.), by Rev. Robert Smith, D.D., giving by the way the deeply interesting story of the conversion of the family of which the late Dr. Saphir was a distinguished representative. Both are issued for the Publication Committee of the Free Church of Scotland.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—Dr. Parker's People's Bible. Vol. xix. Price 8s.

From Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling.—Bible Readings on the Gospel of John. By Henry Thorne. (2s. and 2s. 6d.).

From T. & T. Clark.—The Biblical Doctrine of Sin. By J. S. Candlish, D.D. "Bible-class Handbook" series. 1s. 6d.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

A public conference in connection with the Friends' Temperance Mission was held last week.

Canon Knox-Little is preaching every Wednesday evening in Lent at St. Barnabas' Church, according to his usual custom, and is, of course, attracting large congregations.

Rev. T. Walker, C.M.S. missionary in Tinnevelly, S. India, gave an earnest address on mission work at the Y.M.C.A. a few days ago, and bore warm testimony to the value of educational work in the foreign field.

The list of speakers at the weekly meetings of the University Church Missionary Association during this term is an exceptionally good one, and the meetings are being well attended—a fact which is most encouraging for the furtherance of missionary interest in Oxford.

The very sudden death of Rev. J. Branwhite French, Congregational minister at Summertown, came as a sad shock and surprise to those who knew him. He seems to have been well on the previous evening, but apparently passed painlessly away during the night. He had only been in Oxford a few months, and was exerting himself on behalf of the new church at Summertown, and hoped very shortly to have had the foundation-stone laid. He took an active interest in Mr. Moody's recent mission in Oxford as a member of the committee, and one of the sketches of that mission in The Christian came from his pen.

CAMBRIDGE.

A meeting of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union was held in the Hy. Martyn Hall on Wednesday evening, February 22nd, to consider the "Evangelisation of the World in the Present Century." Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby addressed the meeting. After urging his hearers to set aside objections and excuses, and to listen solely to God's voice, he drew attention to the diversity of means employed by God in the mission field, and laid marked stress upon the indispensableness of men who rely wholly on the Divine Spirit, and whose only ambition is to do God's will.

On Tuesday week a meeting in connection with the local branch of the Church of England Young Men's Society was held in the society's rooms. The occasion of the meeting was a lecture on "A comparison and examination of the Lord's Supper and the Passover," delivered by Rev. A. A. Isaacs, of St. Augustine, Bath.

The Bishop of Peterborough, Dr. Mandell Creighton, was on Saturday appointed Hulsean lecturer for 1893-94.

On Wednesday, under the presidency of Dr. Peile, Vice-chancellor of the University, a public meeting was held at the Lodge of Trinity College, for the purpose of taking steps to perpetuate in the University, the memory of the late Dr. Hort. A memorial fund is to be started, from which grants may be made for the promotion of Biblical and patriotic research.

During the past week a series of conferences and meetings has been held in the Guildhall and elsewhere, under the auspices of the National Temperance League.

On Monday evening, at the weekly meeting of the Cambridge Church Missionary Society, in the Hy. Martyn Hall, the Rev. T. Walker gave a description, in a very earnest and striking manner, of missionary work in Tinnevelly, India. Particular attention was drawn to the work of educating missionaries at the mission schools in South India and to the marvellously fruitful results attending this work.

On Sunday, February 26, an address was given to the Cambridge Inter-Collegiate Christian Union by E. H. Kennedy, Esq., his subject being that of "Decision." After bringing forward examples of Biblical decision, the speaker urged the infinitely great importance of deciding now in eternal concerns. A marked impression was made upon an attentive and large audience.

IRISH NOTES.

The Cork Methodists have resolved to take a new departure, and establish a new congregation in the city.

Major Whittle commenced a Gospel mission in Belfast last Sunday, which promises to prove a great blessing.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has conducted Gospel temperance missions at Moira, Maralin, Ligoneil, and Donacloney, at each of which a large number of persons signed the pledge.

Evangelistic services have been held at Springfield by Rev. J. Wright; at Swanlinbar by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist Conference evangelist; and at Antrim by Mr. Jno. Brandon.

The Irish Baptist Mission has held its seventy-ninth annual meeting at Dublin. The past year was the most successful in the history of the mission. The membership increased in that period 60 per cent.

Mr. Wm. McQuiston, of Belfast, who died last week, was a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church. He left the residue of his property towards the cost of the erection of a new Presbyterian church.

A large meeting of the Evangelical Alliance was held in the Molesworth Hall, Dublin, a few evenings ago, to express sympathy with the Stundists in Russia and with other persons suffering from persecution in Turkey and other countries. The Archbishop of Dublin presided, and gave a long address, and a number of ministers of the various bodies were present. Mr. A. J. Arnold, the secretary of the Alliance, also addressed the meeting at considerable length. Resolutions in favour of an appeal being made for monetary help for the Stundists were passed.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

It is proposed to found a Home for Inebriates in Dundee.

The West Coast Mission has thirty agents at different points engaged in Gospel work among the people.

The National Bible Society of Scotland had a free income last year of over £18,000, besides some £13,000 from the sale of Scriptures.

Rev. Hugh Black, of the Sherwood Free Church, Paisley, has been obliged to visit North Africa, in consequence of a throat affection.

Rev. A. Halliday Douglas, the able young F.C. pastor in Huntly, has accepted the call to Cambridge, much to the regret of his present congregation.

The "Amateur Vagrant" continues his good work of clothing and relieving the destitute in Glasgow. His appeals in the Daily Mail are very touching and telling.

Dr. Pierson's second missionary lecture of the Duff series was "The Apostles of the new Era"; short biographies were given of some of the best-known workers of modern times in foreign fields.

Encouraging news has been received from Rev. John Smith, of Broughton Place United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, who is still travelling in Egypt. So beneficial has the change been that he writes hopefully of resuming his ministerial work in April.

At the annual meeting of the Aberdeen Evangelical Association there was a conference on the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Movement. Mr. John Leith read a paper descriptive of the work, and it was stated that the movement had been successful in Aberdeen.

A voluminous correspondence has been sustained lately in the columns of the Weekly Scotsman on "Why people don't go to Church." All sorts of reasons are given, but probably the writer who says that "spiritual indifference is at the bottom of the whole matter," is as near the truth as any.

The death is announced of Rev. William Milroy, F.C. minister at Scarbridge, Dumfriesshire. Mr. Milroy had been in delicate health for several months. He was an able preacher, the author of a volume entitled, "A Scottish Communion Season," and he took a lively interest in political and social questions.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has been re-visiting Holmfirth, where he has found many tokens of abiding fruit from a mission he held sixteen months ago.

Mr. Herbert R. Hurditch has conducted a fourteen days' mission at Laurel Vale, Tandragee. Many professed conversion, while backsliders were restored and Christians helped.

Dowlais.—A special mission, conducted by Mr. J. Friend, has been attended with gratifying results. Christians have been roused, and many unconverted have been brought out of darkness into light.

Bootle.—A really stirring series of meetings have been held in the large Mission Hall in Rosalind-street. The people have crowded in; much interest and a deep spirit of conviction has been manifested.

Willesden Hall.—A worker writes that the new hall at Willesden is going on very happily. A goodly number of Christians have rallied round, and several souls have professed conversion. The whole work is a source of great joy to us.

Aberdare.—Mr. R. Preston has been greatly blessed in a ten days' mission held here, large numbers professing to have found the Saviour. Some amongst these had gone far astray, having become known as sinful characters.

Wales.—Special evangelistic services held in various parts of Wales are meeting with a remarkable measure of success. The hill districts in particular present most encouraging proofs of the blessed results of systematic Gospel work, accompanied by earnest prayer.

Mr. Newton Jones has conducted a mission at the Baptist Chapel, High-street, Boston, Feb. 19 to 24. From the beginning God's blessing rested in a very marked manner upon the meetings. Many souls were brought to the Lord, both among the young of the Sunday-schools and those of older years.

Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society, has closed a three weeks' mission at St. Stephen's, Grampound, Cornwall, which has proved a most profitable time to all. Saints rejoiced in the preaching of the good old Gospel, while a goodly number of sinners have confessed Christ as their Saviour.

Little Heath, Potter's Bar.—A fourteen days' successful mission has just been held at Mr. Gurney Sheppard's Mission Hall. Many backsliders have been restored. Much of the success was evidently due to the way in which all denominations threw themselves into the work. The meetings were continued last week at the adjoining village, Potter's Bar.

Mr. Henry Varley's mission at Poona appears to have been much blessed. A delightful work, for example, was witnessed in one school for Eurasian girls, fourteen of these confessing faith in Christ on one morning alone. The meetings at the Y.M.C.A. were crowded to the doors. "It is delightful," says a correspondent, "to hear on every hand the testimony of great blessing received."

The Zulu Christian Choir have been taking part in a week's evangelistic services at Park Hall, Barking, and have charmed everyone with their singing. The preachers were Mr. Edward H. Glenny, Mr. Wm. T. Float, and Pastor D. H. Moore. The building, which holds about 600, was packed night after night, large numbers having to be sent away. The Word preached has been with power, and many souls have had cause to rejoice.

Worcester.—Mrs. Markham is conducting mission services at the Worcester Adult School. Many are nightly brought to the Lord. It is earnestly hoped that this is the commencement of a Pentecostal wave that shall go through the city, for there is much need of it. The Ritualists are making frantic efforts to win the working classes by means of imposing processions on the Sundays and nigger entertainments on the week days. Will the sincere lovers of the Lord Jesus pray for us?—J. H.

Grimsby.—A united mission has just closed in this town. Specially-appointed preachers held services in thirteen chapels. The mission commenced with a united meeting in the Hainton-street Chapel, and during the week Bible-readings were conducted in the Baptist Tabernacle. The mission closed with a united meeting in George-street Chapel, which was crowded long before the time of service, and an overflow meeting held in the lecture hall. Services were held in each chapel every evening, and meetings for men and women on Sundays. All the services were most successful, much good has been accomplished, and the various churches brought into closer relationship.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has held a stirring mission at Albany, N.Y. As to the closing meeting Rev. E. D. Vance writes:—"My pencil can but tamely tell the story of that Sabbath afternoon in Calvary Church. Mr. Hammond preached at night to a full house, and after sermon conducted an inquiry meeting, which did not close until nearly eleven o'clock. Two mothers, one after the other, said, between the tears of joy, 'My daughter came to Christ this afternoon, and my son has come to Christ to-night.' A father said: 'Why should I not rejoice? My son has just said he accepts Christ.' Many others, parents, superintendents, and teachers added like testimony, and it came with the emphasis of joyful exclamation, impossible to describe. Dr. Elder said the simple fact that so many had waited to be spoken with, and were still remaining at this late hour, half-past ten, for conversation, was an indication of the presence of the Holy Spirit."

Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver have, since leaving Glasgow, conducted a six days' mission in Carlisle. Although held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel this has been no mere denominational effort, for Christians of various names have heartily and lovingly united in making the meetings known, in bringing in the unsaved, and especially in the enquiry-room pointing the anxious to the Lamb of God. The interest has been great, and the spirit of conviction very deep. From the first meeting, when a young man cried out for mercy, until the final meeting, when two souls sought salvation, the Lord was revealing his power to save. Over forty young men of the Sunday-school decided for Christ. Two young men decided, for whose conversion their father has pleaded for many years. Three Roman Catholics were led to see and accept Christ as their only mediator. Prayer is asked for the mission this week at Newcastle-on-Tyne that God will give many souls, and also for Mrs. Surtees, who goes to continue the work at Mealsgate, Cumberland.

Personalia.

Archdeacon Blakeney has been ordered abroad for a time.

Dr. James Spurgeon has, we are glad to hear, so far recovered as to leave for Devonshire in order to recruit.

Canon Taylor Smith, of West Africa, is now better, and able to work again as missioner. He is at present in Lagos.

Rev. A. G. Bridge, of South Norwood, is suffering from severe illness at Bournemouth, arising from or aggravated by an attack of influenza.

Dean Vaughan is slowly regaining strength, after a somewhat serious illness, involving congestion of the lungs. He is still closely confined to the house.

Rev. E. N. Coulthard, metropolitan secretary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, has accepted the vicarage of St. James's, Bermondsey, in succession to Dr. Allan.

The Baroness von Langenau, who has so long and faithfully stood by the Wesleyans in Vienna, has made a transfer of valuable property to the Wesleyan Missionary Society.

Rev. Arthur D. Cousins, of Cheshunt College, has been accepted by the London Missionary Society for work in China, and Rev. Pryce Jones, of Hackney College, for work in Madagascar.

Dr. W. J. Adams, formerly Rector of All Saints', Dorchester, which he resigned in consequence of the Lincoln judgment, has accepted the call to the Loughborough Park Congregational Church.

Madame Antoinette Sterling sang on Saturday last at the annual festival of the London Sunday-school Choir at the Royal Albert Hall. This choir has been usefully employed for over twenty years organising festivals at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere.

Archdeacon Wolfe's wife, who has been three years ill, has left China for California, and will come to England for her health. A son accompanies her, the condition of the mission in China requiring the Archdeacon's presence, so that he does not feel he can leave just now

Rev. J. L. Phillips, M.D., D.D., Secretary of the Decennial Missionary Conference just held in Bombay, and Secretary of the Indian Sunday-school Union, is expected to speak at the annual gatherings of the Sunday-school Union in May, and intends spending several months in the United Kingdom.

Rev. A. J. Harrison, B.D., author of "Problems of Christianity and Scepticism" and Evidential Lecturer of the Church Parochial Mission Society, is giving a course of evidential lectures at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, on the Fridays in Lent, at 11 a.m. These lectures are open to the public without ticket or order.

Mr. J. Townsend Trench, J.P., occupied the pulpit of Omagh Methodist Church on Sunday week, and on the following evening delivered a lecture in the same place. He spoke on subjects which are not prominent in modern Methodist teaching, his sermons being on the Judgment of Reward (1 Cor. iii., 2 Cor. v.), and the Judgment of Condemnation (Rev. xx.). The lecture dealt with the Second Coming of Christ and the Signs of the Times.

Obituary.

MR. HENRY HIBBERT.

Yet another sore loss has fallen on the Church at the Metropolitan Tabernacle as well as the College in the unexpected death of Mr. Hibbert, for many years secretary to the Tabernacle as also to the Pastor's College. He died at Guernsey on 17th ult., and was buried there on Tuesday in last week. He had gone there to recruit his health, and was staying with Pastor Baily, in whose house he died. Mr. Hibbert, who was fifty-three years of age, arrived in the island on the 24th January, having gone there in the hope that a little rest and change would brace him up for further service in connection with his official duties in London. He took part in the local Spurgeon memorial service, held the first week in February, and for some days seemed to be improving in health. A sudden unfavourable change, however, intervened. A fortnight ago he took to his bed, and his condition gradually grew worse until the time of his death. He had held the post of secretary for fifteen years, and though of quiet unobtrusive habits, was ever ready to assist and counsel, so doing it that much of his service was never seen by, or known to, the general public.

REV. DR. PEDDIE, EDINBURGH.

Last week Rev. Dr. William Peddie, the "father" of the United Presbyterian Synod, died at his residence in Edinburgh. He was ordained as assistant and successor to his father in Bristo-street Church of that city on October 7, 1828. Dr. Peddie bore an honoured name. His father, who was a man of very superior talents, exercised great influence in the United Secession Church. When his son was settled as his colleague there were fears that its numbers and activity might not be maintained, as he was not in gifts the equal of his father. But these fears proved groundless. Though not conspicuous for originality or eloquence, he was able and cultured; by the fidelity with which he wrought, he kept up his congregation in numbers and liberality. He was not known in Edinburgh as an outstanding preacher. He was more instructive than rousing; the intellectual was higher in him than the emotional. Exposition was his forte rather than preaching. He received the degree of D.D. in 1843 from Jefferson College, Pennsylvania. He was elected moderator of the U.P. Synod in 1858. For some years he edited The United Presbyterian Magazine. He last appearance at Synod was in May, 1891.

REV. JOHN MASSON, DUNDEE.

In the death of Rev. John Masson, formerly pastor of Russell Congregational Church, Hawkhill, which took place at his residence, Perth-road, last week, Dundee has lost one of its most respected and venerable citizens. After a long and useful life, extending over eighty-seven years—thirty-nine of which had been spent in the city—Mr. Masson has been called to his rest. Fifteen years ago he resigned the pastorate of Russell Chapel, but since that time he has not ceased to take an interest in the church and the religious welfare of the people. He was a regular attender on the ministrations of the pastors who have followed him, and so recently as Sabbath, Feb. 5, he was present at the forenoon service. On his way home he caught a chill, which led to serious illness, and terminated in his death.

Mr. Masson was an ardent advocate of the temperance cause, but he never offended his audience by rash and uncalled-for criticisms of men who did not join the ranks. He was a noble example of a believer in the cause of total abstinence, for, till a very short time ago, his mental faculties were clear, and to see him on the street one would almost have been correct in saying that his natural strength had not abated. The deceased gentleman, who was one of the oldest Congregational ministers in Scotland, is survived by a widow, a son, and three daughters, one of whom is married to Rev. John Anderson, pastor of the Congregational Church, Lerwick.

POOR JEWS IN PALESTINE.—Miss Walker-Arnott, who has lived at Jaffa for thirty years, in a recent letter describes a method which she has adopted of relieving the poor. A sum of £2 was entrusted to her for the relief of distress, and, instead of dispersing it in small sums, she lent it for a month to a poor widow, who bought wheat with it, and by the resale earned a good living for herself and daughter and grandchildren. The money was duly refunded, and has, indeed, gone forth for a third time. Another widow has been assisted in a similar manner. Mr. Walker-Arnott adds:—"I believe in helping the poor to earn their bread. Money laid out in starting some industry would be a lasting benefit. The people are clever in making matches and brooms, beating up cotton, making mattresses, and preparing flour and semolina. What we have tried to do on a small scale might be attempted on a much larger one, and prove a great boon to many."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A new mission and reading-room has been opened at Newport, Brough.

Rev. Leonard C. Wood, of Great Singleton, commemorates this year his jubilee as vicar.

Another colportage mission van is about to be dispatched through the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Rev. S. A. Alexander has entered on his new duties at the Temple. His first sermon on "The Pattern in the Mount" greatly impressed his hearers.

The gross income of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts for 1892 was £127,148, an increase upon the previous year of £10,628.

Students from Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, are delivering Gospel addresses on Friday evenings during Lent in the Icomb Rural Institute, Stow-on-the-Wold.

The clergy of Blackburn have decided to have offertories in their churches on Sunday, March 5, in aid of the distress fund now being raised in the town.

Many will learn with regret that, according to The Manchester Guardian, Rev. William Black, one of the Cowley Fathers, will conduct the three hours' devotions at Manchester Cathedral on Good Friday.

Since Rev. H. Foster Pegg, M.A., was appointed vicar of St. Matthew's, Silverhill, St Leonard's, the prosperity of the church and parish, worked on thoroughly Evangelical lines, has increased in a marked degree.

It is proposed to place a stained-glass window in St. Paul's Church, Prince's Park, Liverpool, as a memorial of the late Canon E. H. M'Neile, who succeeded his father (Dean Hugh M'Neile) as incumbent of the church in 1867.

One of the London correspondents of The Yorkshire Post learns that the new body which is to come into existence by the amalgamation of the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance and the Clerical and Lay Union will be started by May.

Prebendary Reynolds has resumed his Wednesday afternoon addresses (1.15 to 1.45 o'clock) at the Church of St. Anne and Agnes with St John Zachary, Gresham-street, near General Post Office. He is dealing with various aspects of faith and science.

The Bishop of Lichfield has now two classes of evangelists working in his diocese, viz. (1) "district evangelists," who assist in mission work under the direction of the clergy while continuing to follow their daily calling; and (2) those who devote their lives to mission work, and conduct services in mission and school rooms.

Rev. E. A. Stuart has conducted a special mission in Norwich Cathedral. Never, we are told, in the history of the cathedral, was there such a scene as that witnessed at the first meeting on Sunday week. Every inch between the ante-choir and the west door was occupied, while the aisles were packed. The whole of the vast nave was one mass of eager, interested souls.

Preaching at St. Augustine's, Highbury New Park, on "Evening Communion," Prebendary Gordon Calthrop said: "We Evangelical clergymen, as a body, are supposed to dread the idea of disestablishment, but if the gangrene of sacerdotalism be not exorcised from the Church (though I think she has the vitality to throw out the poison from her system), I for one should say, in the name of God, let disestablishment come."

Rev. J. Thornberry has thrown out a challenge to the English Church Union, by offering a reward of £300 to any member of that Union who can prove to him, on New Testament authority: "1. That our Lord ordained an order of sacrificing priests; 2. That the title hiereus is ever applied by the Apostles to a Christian minister, or that our Lord empowered his Apostles to change the substance of bread into his flesh and bones; 3. Or any command of Christ to offer the bread and wine to God as a propitiatory sacrifice, or that the life of a victim is taken in the Lord's Supper." This challenge is the outcome of a statement made at a recent meeting in Brighton of the E.C.U. by Rev. R. W. Enraght, that without the "altar, priest, and sacrifice' there could be no true worship of God.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Lewes Tabernacle reports 234 members.

A special mission is being held in Glastonbury.

The manual of Union Church, Brighton, shows 119 on the church roll.

A mission has been started at Heaton Norris by workers from Heaton.

Rev. J. Bagley has held a good mission in connection with Hoddesdon Church.

Rev. Albert Lee, of Gomersal, Leeds, has been recognised as pastor at Windsor.

Heaton Church reports 120 members, thirty having been added during the year.

Providence Chapel, Middleton, near Manchester, reports 254 members after a careful revision.

Buxton Church reports good progress made during the seven years' pastorate of Rev. R. Rew.

Rev. W. Garrett Horder, of Wood Green, has accepted the pastorate of College Chapel, Bradford.

A mission-room has been opened near Keymer Junction Brick Works, Burgess Hall, for the brickmakers.

Toller Chapel, Kettering, reports twenty-six admissions to the church, during the past year, making 373 during the present pastorate.

Highbury-quadrant Church has received eighty new members into fellowship during the four months' pastorate of Rev. W. J. Dawson.

Rev. Bevill Allen, of York-road has accepted a call to the pastorate of the historical "Defoe" Church at Tooting, which was founded in 1688.

The religious and social work which Bishop Brookes had been doing among Harvard students is now undertaken temporarily, says The New York Tribune, by Dr. Washington Gladden.

Rev. H. Moore, of Bristol, has conducted a week's special evangelistic services at the Congregational Church, Chard, Somerset. It will long be remembered as a season of wonderful power and blessing.

At the forty-seventh annual gathering of old scholars and teachers at Craven Chapel, Rev. James Le Pla referred to the encouraging progress the church and schools had made since he entered upon the pastorate.

One hundred and sixty-nine London churches responded to the request of the London Union for the observance of Sunday last as a day for united prayer for London; at eighty-three of these collections were taken for the Church Aid Society.

The first number of The London Congregationalist, the new organ of the London Congregational Union, states that the Union has made itself responsible at the present time for £3500 in building grants, and has three new building schemes under consideration.

Rev. Andrew Mearns states that he is more than satisfied with the experiment made on Sunday week, when many churches set apart the day for special services and contributions on behalf of work in London. Most cheering results have already followed, and these may have beneficial influences of a far-reaching nature.

At a special meeting of the governors of the Yorkshire United Independent College, Bradford, held on Tuesday, the question of the amalgamation of the college with the Lancashire Independent College, Whalley Range, Manchester, was considered. After a prolonged discussion it was decided not to amalgamate with the Lancashire College, but to proceed at once to the appointment of a principal for the United College as successor to the late Dr. Falding.

BAPTIST.

Redditch Church reports 168 members.

Appledore Church reports £142 raised for the enlargement of the Sunday-school.

Rev. Thomas Nicholson, of Above Bar Church, Southampton, has been called to Clapton Park Church.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, who has done good work at Norwich, has been invited to Hagley-road, Birmingham.

Messrs. Fullerton and Smith are to conduct an eight days' mission in Bloomsbury Chapel, from Saturday (4th) to Sunday, March 12.

Rev. E. G. Gange, who enters his new pastorate on Sunday, begins under the shadow of bereavement, through the death of his son-in-law.

Rev. Frederick C. Hughes (late of Blisworth, North Hants) has accepted the position of pastor of the Borough-road Chapel, Southwark, in succession to the late Rev. G. W. McCree.

Shepherd's Bush Tabernacle was opened on Thursday week. Services have been held here for some time by Rev. G. W. Pope, and now a good congregation has been gathered, while good work is going on.

The Irish Baptist Home Missions reports that the new membership of the mission churches has advanced 12 per cent., notwithstanding the continual drain by emigration; 181 have professed the Lord Jesus Christ in baptism. There are at present three new chapels in course of erection.

Mr. James B. Colgate, New Jersey, is one of the liberal American Baptist millionaires. Just after giving £2000 to the Missionary Centennial Fund, he remarked: "The mass of people should not be shut out from giving. The elevated roads of New York receive £5,000,000 a year, and it all comes from five cent rides."

The fifth anniversary of the Northcote-road Baptist Church was held on Sunday and Tuesday week. The church secretary gave an encouraging report of revival in all branches of the work. 102 members had been added since the new pastor's advent, seven months since; the present membership being 319.

The University of Chicago seems in a fair way to get £100,000 to complete the work necessary on the grounds, and for other general purposes. Mr. Martin Ryerson, who had already given £40,000 towards the endowment and building fund, gives the first £20,000 of the £100,000 now needed, on condition that the balance is raised by May 1.

The Judson Memorial Baptist Church in New York, which has been raised chiefly by dollar contributions, includes an apartment house, day nursery and kindergarten, dressmaking establishment, gymnasium, club-rooms, industrial school for girls, and vestries for the usual church agencies. The inside walls are all marble. All seats are free and unassigned.

On Monday the annual thankoffering day was kept as usual at the East London Tabernacle; Pastor Archibald G. Brown was in the vestry from 7 a.m. till 7.30 p.m. to receive offerings from any who have reason to thank God the place was ever built. During the day eleven hundred persons came into the vestry and contributed £452. Large prayer meetings were held at intervals.

The tenth anniversary of the ministry of Rev. T. J. Longhurst at Cambray Chapel, Cheltenham, was celebrated last week. The secretary stated that the membership of the church had nearly doubled. The ministry commenced with a membership of 209, and of the 408 additions 262 were by baptism. Losses by removal, etc., were heavy, leaving a good membership of 406. The reports were all of a favourable nature. Amongst the branches of work represented were a flourishing literary society of about 100 members, a growing Sunday-school, and men and women's Bible classes, village work, Band of Hope, ladies' working society, and Christian Endeavour Society.

METHODIST.

Richmond College will celebrate its jubilee in September.

Mr. R. Harvey has conducted a month's successful mission at Taunton.

Dr. Rigg has been holding a stirring series of meetings in Truro and Penzance.

Revs. P. Thompson and W. D. Walters have held some capital meetings in Long Eaton.

Dr. Moulton has conducted a convention for increasing Christian life and service at Lowestoft.

Special services in Norfolk-street, Sheffield, have resulted in considerable accessions to the Church.

Special services at Weston-super-Mare, conducted by Rev. J. Foulger, have resulted in many professed conversions.

A mission has been started by Rev. John Pollitt at Woodhouse, Manchester. At present a large cottage serves for the meetings.

At a series of special services on behalf of Home Missions at Thetford, Rev. J. P. Watts (vicar of St. Peter's) gave an address.

The Liverpool Mission Lads' Home has added the next house, and the cost (£1000) has been defrayed. By a timely gift the debt on another branch of the mission has been extinguished.

Private letters from East Africa report that Revs. T. H. Carthew and G. W. Wilson are in excellent health. Mr. Wilson is at Iomore, and will remain there until the new chapel premises are completed.

At last week's monthly meeting of London ministers special attention was given to circuit work in the great city. Dr. Jenkins gave an address on the preaching which would secure the greatest spiritual results.

There is every probability of The Joyful News Mission commencing a "Women's Mission," and taking a house for that purpose, where young ladies giving themselves to mission work can reside. Miss Mary Champness will be in charge of this branch.

The Primitive Methodist students at their College in Manchester held their second great missionary meeting on Thursday evening, Feb. 23, in the Central Hall, Oldham-street. The congregation was good, and the meeting throughout was characterised by "Methodist fire."

The burning down of the New Brunswick Chapel, Victoria-road, Horwich (Methodist Free Church), involves serious loss to a poor congregation. The building was insured, but harmonium, Bibles, books will have to be replaced. The pastor is Rev. J. Lineham, Melbourne Grove, Horwich.

Priory-street Bible-class, York, has 805 members, an increase of fifty-two on the year. Of this number 512 are total abstainers, 317 members are attached to religious bodies in the town, and 242 are members of the Wesleyan Church. A labour department has been formed, and a social scheme successfully inaugurated during the year.

A movement is being initiated, say the London correspondent of The Manchester Guardian, in connection with the Methodist Free Churches for a vigorous extension scheme of doctrinal and denominational education by means of lectures and classes. There are special and efficient missioners in connection with that body who carry on most successfully evangelistic work. What is suggested is the appointment of specialists, who will deal with matters doctrinal and historical much on the principle of the Oxford University scheme.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. Cullen, of Leslie, has accepted a call to Darlington.

Rev. A. N. Mackray's church at Croydon reports an income of £1034.

Fisher-street, Carlisle, reports 462 names on the roll, and good work going on.

Rev. W. W. Boyle has been ordained to the pastorate at St. John's, South Shields.

Rev. H. A. Ross, of Newcastle, has held a special mission at York, accompanied by much interest.

Tottenham congregation (Rev. D. Fotheringham) reports a membership of 191, and an income of £725.

Dr. MacEwan, helped by Revs. A. N. Mackray and James Paterson, has had a encouraging mission at Trinity Church.

Rev. Douglas McLellan, of Workington, has decided to accept the call from Everton Valley Church, Liverpool.

A new church has been formed in a populous district of Cardiff called Sportlands. It is an offshoot of the Welsh Church at Pembroke-terrace.

At the annual meeting of the Stratford congregation encouraging reports were presented. Sixty new members had been enrolled, bringing the total up to 437.

At the annual meeting of Leytonstone Church, gratifying reports were presented, showing genuine progress. In March the foundation stone of a new church is to be laid.

Trinity Calvinistic Church, Swansea, has invited Rev. Griffith Ellis, M.A., now minister at Bootle, Liverpool, to take the pastorate vacant through the death of Rev. D. Saunders, D.D.

The Sabbath afternoon class in connection with the Smethwick Presbyterian Church reports that 444 adults are enrolled as members, and that the weekly attendances now fill the church to its utmost capacity. The class has a staff of about twenty-five visitors. From those who regularly attend the meetings testimonies are constantly heard as to the spiritual good received. A number during the course of the year publicly professed faith in Christ by joining the membership of the church. The minister—Rev. David Buchanan—leads this movement; and adhering in this effort strictly to "evangelistic lines," the hitherto unreached are being drawn together by short, bright, and helpful services every Sabbath afternoon.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

A two-days' conference on Work in the West has been held this week in Bristol.

Nearly 300 have professed conversion during the past year at the Lighthouse in Spitafields.

The Dutch wing of the Army has now ten shelters, with a capacity for accommodating 1250 persons.

Mrs. Booth-Tucker was last week somewhat seriously ill. She has now been confined to the house for several weeks.

The General's meetings in the South Coast towns—Brighton, Worthing, Dover, Ramsgate, and the Isle of Wight—have been marked by much enthusiasm.

In addition to the Continental Congress in Copenhagen, which is fixed for April 12 to 17, General Booth will conduct a similar congress in Switzerland in connection with the Ascension Day demonstrations, at which all the leading officers from France, Holland, Switzerland, Belgium, and Italy are to be present. He also purposes passing on from Switzerland to Germany and Norway for central councils during the latter part of May and the first two weeks in June.

The Chicago Tribune gives an interview with two slum lasses who have both left comfortable homes, and now live in the back rooms of a tumble-down grocery store in one of the worst slum districts, the servants of all who are in abject poverty. In cases of sickness they scour the floor and wash the children with their own hands, and sit up all night with the sick. Into the saloons and disreputable houses they go singing and praying. They have made themselves beloved by all in their neighbourhood, and have been called "God's women." They claim only two conversions, but they say that people who once were atheists will come when they are in trouble and ask the sisters to pray for them.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Atherton, Lancashire, on 18th ult., Mr. James Stansfield, aged seventy-eight, a servant of Christ for fifty years in connection with the Baptist congregation at Dan Lane.—At Belfast, on 18th ult., Rev. James Donald, one of the oldest ministers in the Methodist Church in Ireland, a diligent pastor and useful evangelist.—At Wells, Shepton Mallet, Mr. John Edwards, a valuable and honoured worker and class-leader.—At Southport, aged seventy-four, Mr. Thomas Porter, who some five or six years ago endowed the Crossley Orphanage of Halifax with a gift of £50,000, and was a liberal supporter of other denominational institutions.—At Halifax, aged fifty-two, Mr. John Leach, J.P., after a lingering illness, an active worker at Park Church.—In Sheffield, aged fifty-nine, Mr. E. W. Oakes, an earnest supporter of Christian work.—At Beccles, Mr. J. Smithers, an active helper of the Lord's work.—At South Walsham, Mr. B. Bird, a useful preacher of the Gospel.—At Ramsgate, Mrs. Howling, aged forty-nine, widow of the late Isaac Howling, beloved of many.—At Spurstowe-road, Hackney, on 19th ult., Mr. E. Newell, aged seventy-five, for more than forty years a worker in Lower Clapton.—At Richmond-road, Dalston, on 18th ult., Mrs. James Miall, a devoted and faithful follower of Jesus.—At Welton, on 20th ult., Canon Paget, aged eighty-one, who laboured in the parish forty-eight years.—At the Vicarage, Bromley, on 18th ult., Rev. G. A. M. How, aged fifty-two.—The death is also announced, at the age of eighty-two, at Rochester, of Prebendary Dalton, of St. Paul's Cathedral.—At Londonderry, Rev. F. B. Moore, pastor of First Dungannon Presbyterian Church.—At Dublin, Rev. Wm. Fearon, an earnest Presbyterian minister.—At Sandymount Mr. Theodore Cronhelm, a devoted Methodist local preacher, aged seventy-three years.—At Ballycarry, Mr. Jno. McKee, an earnest Christian.—Rebecca, wife of Chas. J. Brooks, evangelist, aged sixty-four, after a long and painful illness of nine years.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mr. Benjamin Clarke, of the Sunday School Union.

The alarming subsidence of land at Sandgate on Saturday and Sabbath last has created much havoc and loss in this pretty little Kentish watering-place. If the calamity be the result of the recent heavy rains no human foresight could have prevented it, and the sufferers deserve the practical sympathy of the public. We are very glad to learn that no damage has accrued to the splendid new "Beach Rocks" Convalescent Home of the London Samaritan Society.

Those of our readers who send copies of The Christian to workers in distant lands are reminded of the great importance of prompt weekly despatch. A missionary labouring in the South Seas recently wrote to us:—

Missionaries are glad to get religious periodicals and other literature, but it is a great mistake to suppose (as some do) that anything will do for them. We who are in the front of the battle are much more stimulated by learning what is actually going on in other parts of the line than by reading of what occurred years ago.

The hint will, we are sure, not be lost upon such as desire to sympathise with isolated workers, and aim, by encouraging them, to have a small share in their conflict and ministry in the cause of Christ. We do not think a few shillings could be better spent in the interests of Missions than by subscribing for a copy of The Christian, to be sent direct from the postal department on the day of publication to a foreign missionary station.

A protracted discussion in the London School Board on the question of religious education has raised a new aspect of morals; for one of the members has moved that the children shall be taught that it is wrong to be rich or to wish to be rich, to try and serve God and mammon, to do to others as we would not like others to do to us, to indulge in selfishness. These points all bear on the present social discontent, and are symptomatic of the trend of thought and feeling We are witnessing applications of the word of eternal truth such as never dawned on the minds of our fathers, and they need not make us afraid. In the dependence of men on the Word of God for guidance in practical matters may be found the true antidote to a speculative treatment of the Word which else might paralyse faith.

A recent article in The Daily Chronicle contains some very unpleasant, if not alarming, revelations in regard to the condition of a number of the London bakehouses. The existence of such a painful condition of things serves to show how little we know of the surroundings amid which so many of those who minister to our comfort are compelled to spend most of their life. The description of one West End bakery is simply revolting, and the state of many others calls for legal interference; but what shall we say in regard to the fact that in such filthy and unhealthy places as those described, men and boys are frequently required to work from sixteen to seventeen hours at a stretch? No wonder that the majority of bakers die before their fortieth year.

The friends of temperance who have been wondering when the next temperance revival would take place may now have some confident hope that it is not far off. The Liquor Traffic Veto Bill has called the attention of the nation to the question, and opened a discussion which will go forward for years and with ever-increasing intensity. The proposed measure, which has received the general and cordial support of temperance advocates, has been met with threats of uncompromising hostility by the dealers in drink—a good sign that it is on right lines. That it is capable of improvement is readily admitted by its friends, but whether they will get their wishes by having Sunday Closing treated as an Imperial measure applied to the whole of England seems very doubtful. The separation of grocers' licences from the general trade might prove an advantage. We believe the country at large would vote for general Sunday Closing and for the abolition of grocers' licences.

Although the Bill is not a licensing Bill, the subject of licensing has already been brought forward in the House of Lords by the Bishop of Chester. We doubt if the country is prepared to municipalise a trade which blights whomsoever and whatsoever touches it. Those, then, who object to State Socialism had better not begin by transferring the worst trade of all to the control of citizens, or they will soon find the clamour wax loud for good trades also to be taken out of the hands of capitalists, and how could they object? The difficulty of keeping great departments free from corruption is so great that we may well halt before we take a step towards managing the corruptest of all trades. Besides which, this Parliament has a commission to curtail and to suppress the drink traffic, if it has any commission at all.

The Congregationalists have had a two days' important conference on the subject of making a national effort for overtaking the spiritual needs of our great towns. From an external point of view much that was said was weighty enough; from an inner point of view it was wide of the mark. These continual complaints of inadequacy will not be silenced by the building of any number of places of worship. It is "power from on high" that is needed. Let this be given, and then there will be money enough, men enough, and buildings enough. It is a curious fact that, whereas not a word is said in the New Testament about buildings and organisations, much, if not most, of our care today is for the material things.

While this effort to do something material (with which, however, the whole of the Conference did not sympathise) is being urged upon the churches, it is an open secret that the greatest hardships are endured by many of the ministers. Might it not be well, therefore, to try and see whether fresh prosperity would not be granted to the churches if more care were bestowed on the men whom God has sent to preach His Gospel to them? It cannot tend to that happy and loving relation which ought to exist between a pastor and his congregation for members of his church who are able to maintain him free from care to live without any thought as to whether he can "provide things honest in the sight of all men." This hard treatment of ministers (called "sweating" in worldly affairs) is too prevalent in more denominations than one, and cannot but tend to distraction of mind and discouragement of heart. Loving and sustaining them might be a shorter way to a revival of pure religion than spending money on buildings.

It is pleasing to direct attention to the charming story of revival work fifty years ago, which Rev. Dr. Robert Smith has outlined in a booklet entitled, "Early Days of the Mission to the Jews at Pesth." (1d. Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier.) Dr. Smith was one of the party of missionaries who started the Scottish mission to Jews in Hungary. The late Dr. Saphir was among the earliest converts, several of whom afterwards proclaimed the Gospel among their own people. Dr. Smith's little memoir recalls the joyous time, and as it is written with intimate knowledge it will have special attractions for those who remember the facts as they were first reported to the praying supporters of the enterprise with which the names of "Rabbi" Duncan and Rev. Wm. Wingate were so honourably associated. There is much spiritual profit in the thoughtful perusal of these pages.

Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., has, in compliance with representations made to him by opponents of the opium traffic, withdrawn his notice of motion for a Royal Commission to inquire into the whole question of the opium trade, and has substituted notice of a motion that the sale of opium in India and the Crown colonies ought to be restricted in accordance with the principles recognised in the legislation of the United Kingdom. For this motion he has obtained the third place on the Orders of the House of Commons for to-morrow, Friday. It is extremely desirable that all friends should at once write or telegraph to their representatives in Parliament, asking them to be present and to support Sir Mark Stewart's motion.

The February issue of The Harvest Field, an excellent serial from the Methodist Episcopal Publishing House, Madras, gives a very useful summary of the proceedings at the Decennial Conference held at Bombay two months ago. In the course of some introductory remarks, the Editor deplores some injudicious speeches that were delivered. He says: "Much tact and wisdom and grace will be needed to secure the hearty and healthy co-operation of European, American, and Indian. Anything that tends to separate race from race must be regarded as a calamity to the country, and a hindrance to the growth and development of the Christian Church."

These are timely words of sober truth. It is not only in India, however, that race-separating and Gospel-obstructing actions may be perpetrated; as most of the missionaries know to their sorrow, Governmental measures, for the continuance of which Great Britain is responsible, degrade and oppress multitudes of the natives, and are a serious "hindrance to the growth of the Church." What part hath Christ with the opium traffic, the sale of intoxicating drinks, or the State regulation of vice? The sad fact that, in deference to the wishes of some sticklers for "procedure," the missionaries did not, with spirit and determination, denounce these flagrant and soul-destroying evils, has created an unfavourable impression which, we fear, will not soon be obliterated.

On some matters it would doubtless be impossible to get anything like a unanimous expression of opinion from such an assemblage as the Bombay Conference. The informal vote that was taken in regard to the evils specified was, however, all but unanimous; and doubtless if the resolution had been abstract in character, the vote would have been quite unanimous. Hence, we think, there is a danger of the action of the missionaries as a body being uncharitably misconstrued. Without a knowledge of all the facts, we do well to be calm and suspend our judgments. Certain it is that misunderstanding among Christians, no less than separation of races—both of which the great enemy of souls will diligently promote—may prove a veritable "calamity to the country," and retard for a whole generation that victory of righteousness for which many, both in India and at home, have so long been praying and working.

The wrangle which so sadly marred the Conference was a humiliating exhibition on both sides, and the recrimination by brethren of one another is calculated to neutralise our testimony against the sale of the deadly opium and the perpetuation of the infamous C.D. Acts. The testimony of Spirit-baptised, Spirit-filled, Spirit-anointed witnesses of Christ would be like fire among rotten wood; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strongholds.

MR. W. R. LANE will sail with the deputation from the Keswick Convention for the United States and Canada on April 5, and will hold evangelistic meetings subsequently to those of the Convention for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life in the towns which they visit.

MR. C. INGLIS has conducted, in connection with the Swansea Y.M.C.A., a series of Gospel meetings for young men, giving also several Bible readings. Both the addresses and Bible readings were very helpful and instructive; but, more than this, several young men decided to commence the Christian life, while the faith of others was strengthened and quickened.

THE LINCOLN JUDGMENT.—A declaration has been signed by fifty clergymen holding responsible positions in different parts of the country, with reference to the judgment in the Bishop of Lincoln's case. While bowing to the decision of the Supreme Court, the signatories express the belief that the legalised toleration of a diversity of ritual in the administration of the Holy Communion will prove a serious evil, and they fear that there is no finality in the decision. They entertain grave fears as to the effect of the recent decision on many earnest and hitherto loyal members of the Church; but "affectionately urge any persons who are tempted to waver in their allegiance to stand by the Church of England in loyalty, faith, and courage, to put forth renewed and self-denying efforts, and to make her true principles known and felt."

Position and Character.

A PLEA FOR CONSISTENCY.

By Rev. THOMAS KENT.

Many years ago, in the city of York, in connection with an annual gathering of ministers, there were several early morning services. On one of these occasions it fell to the lot of a young and very zealous minister to conduct the service. He took for his text these words from Solomon's Song i. 6:—"They made me keeper of the vineyards; but mine own vineyard have I not kept." In the course of his sermon he lifted up both hands, and exclaimed with considerable emphasis, "Lord have mercy on this pulpit; and on all who, from time to time, may occupy it!"

There were in the congregation many of his ministerial brethren; and he took the opportunity of giving them a word in season about personal and family religion, which he thought was in danger of being minified by their official position as ministers of the Gospel.

And there can be no doubt that he was right: the danger not only then existed, but it remains to this day, and has more or less influence in every section of the Christian Church. Every minister, and Christian worker of every kind, is in danger of neglecting personal piety, and of being satisfied with just so much attention to it as may be considered essential to his office and position. But if conscience is allowed to maintain its authority in the all-important question of self-government, there is no doubt that it often stirs up the minds and hearts of God's servants, by reminding them of the words of the Master: 'These things ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." Whatever may be the supposed claims of any office that we may sustain in the church of our choice, we are not at liberty to ignore the prior claims either of our hearts or homes. Timothy was told by Paul that "by taking heed unto himself and the doctrine, and by continuing in them, he should save both himself and them that heard him" (1 Tim. iv. 16). He was also reminded that a bishop must be "one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; for," says he, "if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?" (1 Tim. iii. 4, 5).

In the same epistle he also urges upon the families of ministers the duty of "showing piety at home, for," says he, "that is good and acceptable before God" (1 Tim. v. 4). On the same principle, it cannot be good that a minister should have one standard of morality for the pulpit, and another, and a much lower one, for his home and the social life of his family. That voice must necessarily give an uncertain sound which in the pulpit says, "Be not conformed to this world," and in the home either sanctions a revised but not improved edition, or abdicates all authority on the subject, allowing everyone to do what is right in their own eyes. A teacher of this kind reminds one of poor old Eli, who had the training of Samuel, but who had no authority over his own sons, and whose grey hairs were brought down to the grave with sorrow.

No; men of God, so called, must be examples to the believers, as well as to the world, in "whatsoever things are true, and honest, and just, and pure, and lovely, and of good report." The principal question of every minister of the Gospel is not, How can I be most popular by ignoring the old landmarks of Gospel morality? but, How can I so hold the balances of the sanctuary, that all may see, if they choose, what is the will of God concerning them, and what is the way in which they should walk? "Thou that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself?"

The times in which we live call for a high standard of domestic and social life, for there are many, it is to be feared, connected with all our churches, of whom it may be said, "Ye shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against men, for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." It matters little by what name we call ourselves, unless from behind the name we are able to say, "Brethren, be ye followers together of me, even as I am of Christ"; for in so doing "ye shall be followers of what is good," and "followers of God as dear children." It is not only when we gather together in his name that "one is our Master, even Christ"; but He is the same, as regards his claims, wherever we are; the same in our homes; the same in our pleasures, the same in health and sickness and death. And whatsoever badge we may assume, or by whatsoever peculiarities we may be distinguished, Christ ought to be magnified by a uniform and blameless walk, and by a practical love, which many waters cannot quench, and which is stronger than death.

Methinks I hear a voice from the Great Head of the Church, speaking to the whole Christian world of the present day, and saying

"Ye different sects, who all declare,
'Lo Christ is here!' or 'Christ is there!'
Your different proofs divinely give,
And show me where the Christians live."

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

GREAT MEETING AT CAMBRIDGE.

A high pitch of enthusiasm was manifested at the Guildhall, Cambridge, on Monday evening last, when Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances Willard addressed a large meeting of temperance advocates and friends. All available space for standing and sitting was occupied, and although the townsfolk considerably predominated in numbers, still the University was well represented.

One could not help contrasting this gathering with one held for a similar object some ten or eleven years ago, when the speakers—all persons of eminence—were hardly accorded a hearing.

Lady Henry spoke for half an hour, and Miss Willard for nearly an hour, and the only feelings expressed by the audience were those of heartiest approval. Addressing themselves chiefly to a discussion of the Bill now before Parliament, they urged its necessity as well as its expediency on religious, moral, and social grounds. Both ladies had been present in the House when the measure was introduced, and listened "from behind the bars of that cage to which women are admitted" (as Lady Henry feelingly expressed it) to the pros and cons put forth in argument. It was essentially a "People's Bill," to give the people the power to protect themselves against the traffic that was ruining their homes. The voice of woman must be heard in its support, since it is woman that has seen her home made desolate, and her little ones barefoot; and woman possesses the divine instinct to protect her home. Public-houses are not found adjoining the houses of the rich; but they stand at every corner near the dwellings of the poor, to do their deadly work among those who, as yet, have not the power to protect themselves. This was, Miss Willard declared, "Everybody's War." The strong point of the trade was the vested interest; this must be assailed, so that it may prove its weakest point as well.

The speakers were supported by the Hon. and Rev. A. T. Lyttelton, Master of Selwyn, Rev. Dr. Moulton, Rev. T. G. Tarn, and other gentlemen of influence, who urged that the reforms aimed at should be freed from the grasp of mere party politics, and made matters of national importance.

On behalf of the Cambridgeshire Good Templars, illuminated addresses of welcome were presented amid great enthusiasm. This visit has welded together the various temperance organisations of Cambridge.

The Book of the Kingdom.—6.

THE EPISTLES.

Though not the earliest in date, the Epistle to the Romans fitly precedes the rest, on account of its comprehensiveness, and because it anticipates the strangely-ordered visit to Rome, which was recorded in the previous book, thus linking the Acts to the Epistles.

This letter to the Romans is from first to last a treatise concerning the righteous government of God. It expounds the Gospel of God, the Creator-King, to his rebellious creatures. Jesus Christ, of the seed of David according to the flesh, but declared the Son of God in power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead, demands, through his ambassadors, the obedience of faith among all nations for his Name.

The Fall and its consequences; the distinction between Gentile and Jew, yet their common ruin; God's redemption and its method; justification and righteousness; the condemning power of the Law and the quickening power of the indwelling Spirit; Jew and Gentile as to their present and future, as well as in relation to their past; commands and counsels concerning our outer and inner life, because the Kingdom has its seat within (for "the Kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost," xiv. 17)—these are the absorbing topics of the Epistle.

The closing doxology gives praise to the everlasting God, whose Gospel has been made known to all nations for the obedience of faith.

It is not only that a strain relating to the reign of God runs through the Epistle; but that this is the background of the picture, the very basis of the structure.

To the Corinthians Paul declares that the Kingdom of God is not in word but in power, and that the unrighteous shall not inherit it. The Gospel which he had preached was not only (as generally stated) that the Christ died for our sins, and was buried, and rose again, according to the Scriptures, but also that He must reign till He hath put all enemies under his feet; that when He shall have put down all rule and all authority and power, he will deliver up the Kingdom to God, even the Father; and that when all things shall have been subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all. This is the great and glorious consummation, the reversal, and infinitely more than the reversal, of all that occurred in connection with the Fall. Nothing could be more magnificent. The dark background is the temptation, the fall, and the consequent loss of the Kingdom, by the first man in Paradise; the scene in the foreground is the defeat of the tempter and usurper, by the Second Man, the Lord from heaven, in the wilderness and on the cross, in his resurrection and in his reign, until He lays down the recovered Kingdom (which flesh and blood cannot inherit) with accumulated glory at the feet of God.

In Galatians the whole argument relates to the Kingdom of God, which they who walk in the Spirit shall, and they who do the works of the flesh shall not, inherit (v. 21).

In Ephesians the same Apostle declares that we not only inherit the Kingdom, but have obtained an inheritance in the King Himself. And as, in Corinthians, Christ lays all at the feet of God, so here God gathers together in one all things, in heaven and on earth, in Christ. There He put all under Jesus' feet; here, having put all under his feet. He gave Him to be Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. The majestic sweep of Paul's opened secret is co-extensive with the mystery of the Kingdom of God.

Let Philippians be read with Gen. iii. as its background, and let the "Yea, hath God said?" of the arch-liar be contrasted with the obedience unto death of Christ Jesus, and the consequent bowing of every knee, in the name of Jesus, to the glory of God the Father. Then consider that his redeemed are citizens of heaven, from whence we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change the body of our humiliation that it may be fashioned like unto the body of his glory, according to the working whereby He is able to subdue all things unto Himself.

Here, as everywhere else, the true point of view is lost, unless we remember that to this, as to every other book of the Bible, the master key-word is the Kingdom of God.

So in Colossians, the Apostle gives thanks to the Father, who hath made us meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, and hath delivered us out of the power of darkness (which fell as a pall upon the souls of Adam and Eve in Paradise), and hath translated us into the Kingdom of the Son of his love, who, having spoiled principalities and powers, made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in Himself. Oh the depth of the riches of the wisdom and knowledge, the meekness and the majesty, of God, the Monarch of the universe! Yet, in writing from his prison-house at Rome, the Apostle can only enumerate three as his fellow-workers unto the Kingdom of God who had been a comfort to him.

To the Thessalonians the Apostle preached the Gospel of God, "who called you to his own Kingdom and glory." He glories in their patience and faith under manifold and severe persecutions, which is a manifest token of God's righteous judgment on the persecutors, but to the end that the persecuted ones may be counted worthy of the Kingdom of God for which they suffer. Then they are forewarned of the Lawless One, whose coming is according to the working of Satan, and who shall be destroyed by the breath of the Lord Jesus, and brought to nought by the brightness of his coming: all in fulfilment of the denunciation upon Satan after the Fall.

Writing to his son Timothy, the Apostle ascribes unto the King eternal, incorruptible, invisible, the only God, honour and glory for ever and ever; and charges him in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and of Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed the good confession, to keep the commandment without spot and without reproach until the appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ, which in his own time He shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, dwelling in light unapproachable, to whom be honour and power eternal. Could language more emphatically affirm the overthrow of the usurper and the establishment of the Reign of God?

Therefore let Timothy, his beloved child, not be ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of Paul his prisoner, but suffer hardship with the Gospel, according to the power of God, who saved us according to his own purpose and grace, given in Christ Jesus before eternal times, but now manifested by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who abolished death (brought in by the tempter and usurper), and brought life and incorruption to light through the Gospel—the good tidings of the Kingdom of God. Therefore he charges him in the sight of God and of Christ Jesus, who shall judge the dead at his appearing and his Kingdom, to preach the Word [of the Kingdom Matt. xiii. 19], and do the work of an evangelist; for the Apostle is already being offered, and the time of his departure is come. He has fought the good fight, finished the course, kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for him the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give to him and to all who love his appearing. Contrast this with Adam hiding among the trees of the garden from the God of all grace.

The Hebrews are reminded that God hath spoken in his Son, whom He hath appointed Heir of all things, by whom also He made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when He had by Himself purged our sins sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. He is worshipped by the angels, and his throne is for ever and ever, because the sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of his kingdom. On account of the suffering of death He has been crowned with glory and honour, because by the grace of God He tasted death for every one. He is King of Righteousness, and consequently King of Peace. Wherefore, we receiving a kingdom that cannot be moved, let us hold fast grace that we may worship God acceptably with reverence and godly fear, for our God is a consuming fire. These Hebrews, as partakers of God's promise to make their nation a kingdom of priests (Exod. xix. 6; Isa. lx., lxi.), would appreciate more than we this kingly-priestly message.

James asks his beloved brethren, "Did not God choose them that are poor in the world to be rich in faith and heirs of the Kingdom which He promised to them that love Him?" The royal law, mercy and judgment, denunciation against fraud and oppression, justification and condemnation, and other forensic terms, demonstrate this epistle to be a Governmental document entirely in keeping with the Book of the Kingdom of which it forms a part.

Peter tells us that Jesus Christ is gone into Heaven, angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto Him. Here we read of the spirits in prison; of Him that is ready to judge the living and the dead; of the eye-witnesses of the Saviour's Majesty, when they saw, in microcosmic vision, the Kingdom of God come with power, in the Holy Mount, and of an entrance to be abundantly ministered to those who give all diligence to ascend by the seven steps of grace, into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

John tells us that the Son of God was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil, and that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. Thus he touches the central questions of human history, overcomes the power of darkness, and establishes the Kingdom of God.

Though the Kingdom is not expressly mentioned in the few Epistles we have not named, the undertone of governmental authority, and counsel, and direction, will be found no less in 2 Corinthians, Titus, and Philemon than in all the other books. We cannot better close these observations on the Epistles than in the doxology of Jude. "Now, unto Him that is able to guard you from stumbling, and to set you before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only God our Saviour, through Jesus Christ our Lord, be glory, majesty, dominion, and power, before all time and now, and unto all the ages. Amen."

Joshua and the Land of Promise.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

THE CONCLUSION OF THE TASK.—Joshua xviii.

The two great tribes were thus at last settled—Judah, as Dean Stanley suggests, like a lion to guard the south and couch in the fastness of Zion; whilst Ephraim, like the more peaceful but not less powerful bullock, was to rove the rich vales of central Palestine, and defend the frontier of the north. And Joshua was able to turn his attention to the several items which claim a passing notice.

I. JOSHUA ERECTED THE TABERNACLE IN SHILOH.

During the march through the wilderness, when the camp was pitched, the Tabernacle occupied the centre; around it were grouped the tents of the priests and Levites, whilst the tribes occupied specified places, three to each quarter of the compass. An attentive comparison of those positions with the territories allocated to them in the Land of Promise will reveal a striking similarity. It was as though the encampment were, in its main features, repeated in their final settlement in the land. And to complete the parallel, the Tabernacle was now removed from Gilgal and pitched in Shiloh, which lay as nearly as possible at the heart of Canaan.

No striking landmarks distinguish this ancient site. And, unlike most of the holy places of the world, it is said to be almost entirely featureless. Imagine a somewhat wide plain, surrounded by low hills, with a rocky platform towards its northern end. This was the chosen site of the Tabernacle, after its long wanderings, erected probably on that slight plateau. A few broken ruins still standing may represent to-day the position of those outer walls over which the travel-worn drapery of the outer covering was spread. And so was fulfilled the command of the great Lawgiver: "It shall come to pass that the place which the Lord your God shall choose to cause his name to dwell there, thither shall ye bring all that I command you."

Here, then, in the centre of the land, embosomed in the keeping of the strongest tribes, on the east side of the highway that led from Bethel to Shechem, was the chosen spot where the Tabernacle of God was among men, and He dwelt with them. Oh that they had acted as his people! then would He have wiped away every tear from their eyes, and they would have overcome and have inherited all things.

The sacred name, Shiloh, which means Peace or Rest, was also given by the dying patriarch to the Messiah. Jesus is the centre of his people. Around Him they gather. "In the midst" in his death, of the twos and threes gathering in his church and of the Holy City. Not his professing church, not a synod or a convocation, not a creed or a ritual, but the Rest-giver Himself is the centre around whom the people gather. He is both head and heart which make the body one.

Life in the "heavenlies" must have its centre in the risen Saviour, and just in proportion as we focus in Him shall we find ourselves brought into loving fellowship with all who love Him. The Altar of Ed, which was afterwards reared to attest and cement the unity of Israel, was a poor device, which had not been needed if the people had observed the practice of thrice a year gathering at God's centre, Shiloh.

II.—JOSHUA REBUKED THE INERTNESS OF THE PEOPLE.

And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, "How long are ye slack to go in to possess the land which the Lord, the God of your fathers hath given you?" (xviii. 3). Then the twenty-one commissioners arose to walk through the land, surveying it. They embodied the results in a book, in which the land was described by cities in seven portions. This they brought to Joshua. It may be that the account of what they had seen was the means under God of arousing the people from the apathy into which they had sunk.

In our own time the Spirit of God has been sending out many commissioners to pass through and describe the good land into which the heavenly Joshua would fain lead his people. A good many books have resulted from their investigations, which have mightily stirred the hearts of God's people, so that in great numbers they have gone up to possess. And we would fain hope that even these words may incite Christian hearts that they may be no longer slack to go in to possess the land which the God of our fathers hath given us in Jesus.

There is the portion of Benjamin, the beloved of the Lord, to dwell in safety by Him, covered all the day long, and borne between his shoulders—the place where Eastern mothers cradle their babes, giving them warmth and easy carriage. There is the portion of Zebulun, to whose shores the illimitable ocean washes the treasures of the deep; in whose heart Gennesaret lies, with its fragrant memories of God manifest in the flesh, a portion of which the apostle wrote when he said that he longed to know the four dimensions of the love of God in Jesus Christ. There is the portion of Issachar which derived treasures from the sands, emblems of the pearls and crystals of spiritual character. There is the portion of Asher, the oil of whose wine-presses bespeaks the unction of the Holy Ghost, the strength of whose shoes betokens that invincible might which treads down serpent and scorpion. There is the portion of Naphtali, satisfied with favour, and full of the blessing of the Lord, owning rich forests, the circle of Galilee, and the garden of Palestine. Each of these is significant of spiritual endowment, which we ought to arise to possess.

Too long have we been slack to go in to possess that fulness of the Holy Spirit which might be in us as a living spring, making us perfectly satisfied, as a fountain in the courtyard of a beleaguered castle enables the garrison to defy the siege. There is a knowledge of Jesus, a participation in his victory, a realisation of blessedness which are as much beyond the ordinary experience of Christians as Canaan was better than the wilderness. But of all this we, alas! know so little.

The causes of this inertness are many. We shrink from spiritual attainment, because it entails self-denial, the sacrifice of darling but questionable things, together with the ascent of heights where the air is rare and the muscles strained and the head swims. Our love of ease, our attachment to the world, our dread of being singular, our consciousness that we should have to forego much that we cherish, if we essayed to hold fellowship with the Holy God—all these things act on us as the birdlime which holds back the fluttering tenants of the air from their native element.

But how much we miss! The nomad life, with its frail tents, could not afford these seven tribes of Israel so much lasting enjoyment as their own freehold in Canaan. What were the pasture lands of the desert as compared to the oliveyards and vineyards of Esdraelon or Galilee? But the comparison is utterly inadequate to portray the loss to which we subject ourselves in refusing to appropriate and enjoy the blessedness which is laid up for us in Jesus. The yielded life; the members presented to Christ for his use, and held at his disposal; the cleansed heart; the victory over sin; the singleness of purpose; the unbroken fellowship; the Pentecostal Fulness! Let us come to our Joshua at Shiloh, and ask Him to lead us into each of these.

III.—JOSHUA RECEIVED HIS OWN INHERITANCE.

"The children of Israel gave him the city that he asked, even Timnath-serah, in the hill country of Ephraim" (xix. 50). In the following book it is spoken of as Timnath-heres (Judges ii. 9). It was "the portion of the sun."

The old veteran had deserved well of his people, and must have been glad to retire to his estate, on which the remaining twenty years of his life were spent. He did not, however, altogether retire from public affairs. And the greatness of his influence may be inferred by considering the evils that overwhelmed Israel when he was taken, as the sea rushes in when the sea-wall is down. His very presence among the people was a restraint. As for him and his house, he served the Lord, and maintained the sacred rites which Moses had enjoined, so that his example shone like a beacon light and kept the darkness at bay. What a significant testimony to his consistency and stedfastness is furnished by the record. "The people served the Lord all the days of Joshua." He was like the central pillar which supports the entire weight of the roof of some chapter-house, with its Gothic roof, and its exquisite foliage of carved stone.

There is fascination in the name of his inheritance. The portion of the sun! Did it lie specially open towards the sun, catching the first glimpse of sunrise, and holding the last fading gleam of sunset? Perhaps so. But there seems a special beauty in the name when we associate it with his previous career of unswerving fidelity to the will of God. Like Caleb, he had wholly followed the Lord. And as the course of the one ended in Fellowship, the course of the other ended in that dwelling in the Light which is the highest bliss within man's reach.

Be wholly given to God, then you too shall live in the light, as He is in the Light. The warmth of his love shall fill your emotions with its glow, and teach you the art of love: the light of his truth shall banish obscurity and ignorance from your mind, and endow it with direct and certain knowledge; the actinic ray of his presence shall inspire you with strength, vigour, elasticity, immortal youth. Where sunshine is, there is life, health, gladness, vigorous strength. What could be better for us all than to live henceforth in the Portion of the Sun? "Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel. . . . Thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth. . . . Cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved."

IV.—JOSHUA ALSO MADE PROVISION FOR THE MANSLAYER.

Six cities were apportioned, three on each side of the Jordan, central to the adjacent districts, and easily accessible. Thither the manslayer who had killed any person unwittingly and unawares, might flee from the pursuit of the next of kin. The roads were kept in good repair; clearly-written directions at the cross-ways indicated the route; and according to Jewish tradition, runners, learned in the law, were stationed at various stages to direct and help the fugitive.

Once within the city walls, all breathless with his flight, the manslayer waited at the entering of the gate of the city, till he had stated his case to the elders, who had the right of admitting him provisionally into the city. "They shall gather him into the city unto them, and give him a place, that he may dwell among them." On the appearance of the avenger of blood, the cause seems to have been finally adjudicated, and if it were clearly shown before the assembled people that there was no animosity in the blow which caused death, the manslayer was permitted to remain there, until the death of the high priest then in office.

It is interesting to note this provision, made in the Land of Promise, for the passing over of sins which were not sins of presumption. For the latter no provision was made. But, for wrongs which did not emanate from a fixed or rooted malice, there was, as in the case of sacrifices for sins of ignorance under the Levitical code, this merciful provision. Take heart, O Christian soul, thou hast done many evil things, in thy ignorance or thoughtlessness, for which thou art justly guilty, and which might well exclude thee from the Land of Promise; yet, there is forgiveness for thee; only get thee to the City of Refuge, which is also the city of the priests, and hide thee there; thou wilt not only be safe, but mayest enjoy thine inheritance beside, for the High Priest has died, and in his death has put away thy sin for ever; there is therefore now no condemnation for thee, because thou art in Him.

The Jews specially have acted the part of the manslayer. They killed the Prince of Life, but they did it in ignorance (Acts iii. 17, 18). Therefore they have lost their heritage, but they exist still as prisoners of hope, finding refuge among the cities of the priests, until such time as the Lord Jesus shall wrap up the present age as a worn-out vesture, and shall inaugurate that new and glorious reign when He shall take to himself the kingdom; then Israel shall return, each to his own house, and unto the city from whence he fled.

V.—JOSHUA APPORTIONED CITIES FOR THE LEVITES.

There was an ancient curse hanging over the lots of Simeon and Levi. Brethren by birth, they had been joint perpetrators in a dark crime, which had made Jacob, their father, to stink among the inhabitants of the land, among the Canaanites and Perizzites. The dying patriarch could not forget that deed of treacherous cruelty, and as it rose before his filming sight he said:—

> "Weapons of violence are their swords,
> Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce;
> And their wrath, for it was cruel;
> I will divide them in Jacob,
> And scatter them in Israel."

But this curse was not fulfilled in each case in the same way. With Simeon, it ran its course. Settled

t the south of Canaan, between Judah and hilistia, this tribe became more and more nomadic, id finally faded out of corporate existence. In the ase of Levi, it was transformed into blessing. The ehaviour of this tribe was very remarkable. At inai, when Moses called on all who were loyal to ehovah to gather in the gate of the camp, the evites, to a man, answered his appeal. Phinehas, so, who took such decisive action in the matter of aalpeor, was a Levite, perhaps even a typical one. Thereupon Jehovah entered into a covenant with em of life and peace, took them as a substitute for e first-born sons of Israel, and pledged Himself to their inheritance. "And the Lord spake unto aron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, either shalt thou have any part among them; I n thy part and thine inheritance among the ildren of Israel" (Num. xviii., 26; Josh. xiii. 33). At the Divine command forty-eight cities were ven to the Levites, with 1000 cubits of pasture nd, measured outwards from the city walls. There ey dwelt when not required for temple service, or hen they were incapacitated by age from attend- g on their sacred office.

As Jacob predicted, they were scattered, but the fect was most salutary. They permeated the hole land with the hallowing influence of Shiloh. nagine the effect on the little city of Judah, here Zacharias and Elizabeth dwelt, when they turned to their house on the fulfilment of his inistry! What a halo of sacred interest must ave gathered round the man whose lot it was to ter into the temple of God and burn incense at e solemn hour of prayer. Then multiply this a ousandfold, and consider what a wide and whole- me effect must have been produced throughout e land, especially when Levi fulfilled the lofty ssibilities of its high calling. Moreover, the aching of the law was a special prerogative of the evites, who appear to have travelled through their portioned districts. They taught Jacob his judg- ents and Israel his law, as well as put incense and hole burnt offering on the altar. They caused the ople to discern between the unclean and the ean, and in a controversy stood to judge. They ted as the messengers of the Lord of Hosts Deut. xxxiii. 10; Ezek. xliv. 23; Matt. ii. 7).

So the work was finished. "The Lord gave unto rael all the land which He sware unto their thers; and they possessed it, and dwelt therein. nd the Lord gave them rest round about... ere failed not aught of any good thing which e Lord had spoken unto the house of Israel; all me to pass" (xxi. 43-45). And this is true still. ur Father has blessed us with all spiritual bless- gs in Christ. He has withheld no good thing. Jesus all fulness dwells; all that is needed for e and godliness. We are complete in Him. If ere is failure, it is ours, not his. If the book of dges succeeds to that of Joshua, it is because od's heirs yield to unbelief and sin.

In the eternity, which is at hand, as we stand gether and review our life course, with its battles d marches and experience, its losses and gains, heights of privilege and depths of failure, we all without doubt take up and repeat the glad con- ssion of these noble words, and confess that no od thing failed us of aught that the Lord had oken, but that all came to pass.

DOVER SOLDIERS' HOME.

Many readers may be unacquainted with the very al work which for the past thirteen years has been rried on, under the superintendence of Miss right, in this little Home for our soldiers. God s honoured the faith of his servants, and has undantly blessed the work. Many soldiers at me and abroad can testify to blessing received. he end and aim of every effort is the conversion of uls. Bible readings are held almost daily, and on nday evenings there is a Gospel meeting.

In addition to the work amongst the soldiers ere is a good work going on amongst the women off the strength," who assemble weekly for a others' meeting taken by Miss Wright, who also sits them in their homes. During the past year e attendance at the mothers' meeting has greatly creased, being larger than at any other time since e Home was started, and many have spoken thank- lly of the benefit they have received.

Help is needed. Any friends visiting Dover who uld like to see the Home would be welcomed by iss Wright at 118, Snargate-street.

Y.M.C.A. EXTENSION.—1.

The sending out of missionary secretaries by the English National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s to inaugurate and help forward work for young men in the different British possessions and in foreign countries, indicates a forward movement in Christian work of very great importance.

Two years since, Mr. W. Hind Smith, in the course of a tour round the world, visited the workers in Palestine, India, Australia, and many other countries, for the purpose of stimulating fresh endeavour. On his return he brought tidings to the home workers of the many openings, and the urgent need he found existing in almost every place visited for aggressive Christian effort on behalf of young men, conducted on lines similar to those followed in the home Association.

Earnest appeals for help in the form of workers of experience and ability to pioneer the work, and for financial aid, have reached the Council since then from India, Ceylon, the Cape, Australia, New Zealand, and other parts of the Empire, as well as from France, Egypt, Palestine, etc. Missionaries and civil servants who have returned home on furlough, as well as leading representatives of colonial associations who have visited England, have again and again pressed home the claims and necessities of the work in the countries whence they came, and have spoken regarding the opportunities for effort amongst young men, of the fields "white already to harvest."

In response to these reiterated applications for help, and in obedience to what appeared to be a Divine leading, two workers were sent out by the Council in October last, viz., Mr. Robert McCann, of Belfast, to help forward the work for young men in India; and Mr. George Holmes, of Norwich, to pioneer the work in Egypt and Palestine.

The very encouraging results which have already accrued from the labours of these workers, of which reports are to hand from different sources, are such as should awaken both sympathy and deep thankfulness. Mr. McCann's field of labour is the more distant and in many respects the more difficult; and some time must necessarily elapse before it will be possible to speak definitely of the progress he is making—though the tidings received show that he has been actively at work since landing in India, and has received a very warm welcome by Christian workers in different places visited throughout the Bombay Presidency.

GIBRALTAR AND MALTA.

The details received at the National Office (Exeter Hall) concerning Mr. Holmes's work afford special cause for thanksgiving. He commenced his labours at Gibraltar, where, on landing, he was warmly welcomed by the many friends to whom he had become previously known whilst engaged for some years as superintendent of the Gibraltar Soldiers' Institute. The fact that he had come as the representative of English Y.M.C.A.'s to initiate work for young men soon became well known, and secured for him a cordial reception by the Governor and other officials. His stay could only be of a fortnight's duration; but he was enabled during this brief period to form a Soldiers' Y.M.C.A. auxiliary at the institutes at each end of the Rock, and a civilian auxiliary for the outlying district at Algeciras. He attended and took part in many meetings; and as the outcome of his visit he writes: "I am impressed very much that South Spain is ready for the Gospel. The Papacy is losing its hold upon the people." The work of the three branches formed here, being in the hands of numbers of earnest young men, promises exceedingly well, and is likely to develop strength and permanence. The need of tracts and general Gospel literature at the institutes is keenly felt.

The second place visited by Mr. Holmes en route for his chief field of work was the island of Malta, where he stayed only a few days. These were sufficient, however, for him to come into immediate contact with late members of the Glasgow, Bath, Newcastle, Plymouth, Norwich, Hastings, and London Associations, and to co-operate with this nucleus of young men in the formation of two small associations, one at San Lorenzo, and the other at Floriana. He was much pained at the priest-ridden character of Malta as a British possession, but was the more gratified in experiencing this state of things to have been the means of inaugurating two additional agencies actively to combat the evil influencies at work in the island.

The five associations thus established stand greatly in need of help from workers and sympathisers at home, to whom, perhaps, it should be pointed out that English as well as foreign young men are likely to be largely benefited by this movement.

The cosmopolitanism and value of Y.M.C.A. work are strongly exemplified in the number of association members found by Mr. Holmes at Malta, as well as in the fact that upon the steamship by which he left the island he joined Mr. Stanley Smith and a party of Y.M.C.A. men bound for China.

We hope in a subsequent paper to refer to Mr. Holmes's labours at Port Said, Cairo, and Alexandria, where his efforts have been greatly blessed.

SALVATION ARMY IN FRANCE.

Sir,—I have just returned to Paris after a tour extending over six months, during which I travelled through both French and German Switzerland, and right round France, holding meetings and having the opportunity of seeing personally all the officers scattered throughout our 119 stations. It was very encouraging, truly inspiring, to see almost in every place densely-crowded audiences listening to the Gospel of salvation, and that not merely in the form of teaching, but also in the form of testimony from those whom God has raised up throughout those stations as living witnesses to his power.

How many cases of salvation I have met with or heard of whose simplest details make the heart of any lover of Christ throb with joy and thanksgiving! Allow me to tell your readers a few. Catherine Booth-Clibborn.

I.—THE TWO CROWNS;

Or, an Athlete's Triumphant Death.

During my recent visit to the Doubs, I visited the town of Audincourt. On entering the officer's little lodgings, my eye fell on a cabinet photograph of a young man with a magnificent physique. He was in full gymnastic dress, showing to advantage his finely-proportioned limbs, of which he seemed so proud. The picture seemed so out of keeping with the officer's quarters, that I exclaimed, "Why, Captain, who can this be?"

"Oh, Maréchale, you do not know the story. I will tell you. He," pointing to the picture, "was known to be the finest young man in this country. He gained prize after prize, and was at the head of the gymnastic association to which he belonged. He was also a splendid bicycle-racer. His sister, you know, is an officer in the Army, and sometimes he would look in at the meetings, but always said he would think of his soul later on, and so sought after was he by his comrades, and so full of himself, that it was difficult to say anything to him.

"One day he had returned from a racecourse in Switzerland, and brought with him his fourteenth crown. Coming along the road with his comrades, he alighted for a moment in front of our hall, and I heard him say to those assembled around him, that he would not sell that crown for a thousand francs. I ran out through the crowd, and said, 'When will you stop in your wild races for an earthly crown, and seek the incorruptible crown?'

"'Not now—later, later,' was the reply. The same day he was mounting his bicycle, as he had done hundreds of times before, when his foot slipped; a tramcar, coming along rapidly behind, ran over his two legs, mutilating them terribly just below the knees. His anguish was fearful to behold, and the poor body was carried home to his parents, who became frantic with grief. The doctor proposed at once amputation, but the poor young man would not consent to losing both legs so quickly, and the doctor hesitated, and sent for another clever surgeon from a town near; but when the second consultation took place it was too late, gangrene had already set in. He asked for the Captain to come at once, and she talked and prayed with him. He cried to God with tears and sobs for pardon, and he said, 'Now, Captain, if God will heal me I'll serve Him without legs, for that does not matter.' So joyful was he when he received the assurance of peace made with God that the room was filled with his songs of triumph.

"The Captain was with him to the last, and told me his death was most beautiful and triumphant. At the funeral all his comrades of the gymnastic school followed to do him honour. Ensign Chuard (a devoted officer, formerly a Roman Catholic) spoke for upwards of an hour to about 2000 people. Tears flowed on all sides, and at the close of the day seven souls had sought and found peace with God through Jesus Christ."

Apocalyptic Scenes.

VIII.

THE REVEALER OF THE MYSTERIES.

Before the Revelation, the Revealer. The reception of divine communications must be preceded by the vision of Him that makes them. How unspeakably important is this principle. Even Balaam could not announce the destinies of Israel and of the nations without first knowing "the knowledge of the Most High," and seeing "the vision of the Almighty." It was not in his case a saving knowledge, for he did not die "the death of the righteous," yet

True prophetic light
Flashed o'er him, high and bright,
Flashed once, and died away, and left his darkened thought.

But to prophets in whom the Spirit of God dwelt, a far clearer manifestation of the glory of the Lord was vouchsafed, and was indeed indispensable to fit them for the revelations they were to receive, and for the work that devolved upon them.

Was Isaiah to denounce the awful national sins of Judah and Jerusalem, their godlessness and apostasy, and then to proclaim the advent of the Sinbearer and the Saviour? Then, first of all, he must see the Lord upon the throne of his glory, he must hear the seraphic proclamation of his infinite holiness, learn his own overwhelming sinfulness, and experience the blessedness of the removal of his guilt through the atonement upon the altar. Jeremiah's ordination as "prophet unto the nations," his appointment to a work which made his life to be one of constant and excruciating trial, could only be by personal contact with the Ordainer. "The Lord put forth his hand and touched my mouth." The wonderful revelations to Daniel, the "man greatly beloved," must be accompanied by such a "great vision," that his own strength and comeliness were utterly brought to nought, and supernatural strength imparted. Thus only could he receive and apprehend "that which is noted in the Scripture of truth." To Ezekiel, ere he could behold the appalling depths of the chambers of imagery, and learn the fearful judgments that were to fall on Israel and on the surrounding nations, must first be shown, not only the whirlwind, the cloud, and the fire, but the transcendent brightness of the glory of the Lord, as embodied in "the MAN above upon the throne," whose likeness was "as the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain." Then, falling on his face, he could hear the "voice of one that spake."

And so with the beloved disciple. Terrible things were to pass before his wondering gaze. The heights of glory and the depths of hell, the tottering and fall of the fourth world empire—the rise of the great apostasy—the agelong conflict between the old serpent and the Church of God—the sufferings and sorrows of the saints—the overthrow of Babylon the Great—the glory of the New Jerusalem—the course and completion of the mystery of God—all this was to be revealed to him, and then transcribed by him on the "deathless page" of prophecy. How could he bear it? Nature's strength could never stand the strain. Ere he could behold scenes of such awful import, he must be brought to an end of himself, be filled with the Spirit, and come into closest possible contact with his beloved Lord, the Revealer of the deep things of God.

And so, as he turns to see whence comes that voice, clear as clarion note, yet loud as cataract or ocean's roll, he beholds the dazzling form of the One who claimed, as "the First and the Last," to precede and succeed all time, and to vest in Himself, as the Alpha and the Omega, universal fulness. The sight strikes him to the ground. "When I saw Him I fell at his feet as dead." Well as he had known that face, often as he had lain upon that bosom, constant as had been the communion in spirit with his Saviour during the sixty years or more that had passed since a cloud had received Him out of his sight, the transcendent majesty and holiness of the "Son of Man," as He now appears to him, overwhelm him and crush him to the earth. Like Moses of old, he was "afraid to look upon God."

But, lying with his face in the dust, the right hand of Omnipotence tenderly touches him, and the well-known tones of the voice that, in days of yore, had said to sorrowing disciples, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid," fall on his ear, first, with the sweet familiar words "Fear not," and then, with invigorating power, follows the "I AM," already deep embedded by the Evangelist in his inspired record of his Saviour's earthly days—

"I am the First and the Last."

"I am He that liveth and was dead."

"I am alive for evermore, amen, and have the keys of Hades and of death."

Then, like the man greatly beloved of another dispensation, he could say, "When he had thus spoken unto me, I was strengthened—let my Lord speak, for Thou hast strengthened me." Then was he prepared to behold, to hear, and to write "this great vision."

How then to one "in the Spirit," who in deep self-abasement is enabled to behold the glory of the risen Saviour, does the Son of Man appear? I say "does," for it is above all things important to remember that it was not only that John might be prepared to receive divine communications that this vision was vouchsafed, but that it is "written for our learning," that we might in our turn apprehend the presence of our Lord, or discern how He still walks among the churches, commanding, rebuking, comforting, warning, trimming the lamps that they may give light in the world, or presaging their withdrawal from this or that locality.

Let us observe with reverence and adoration some of the prominent features of his appearance, as described by the Apocalyptic seer.

1. The splendour of his glory.—The sun that shineth in his strength, the piercing flame of fire, the white heat of the burning furnace, are the symbols used to represent the dazzling lustre of Him who is "the brightness of the Father's glory." To Ezekiel the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord was as the fire and as the bow, and there was "brightness round about." To Daniel "his face was as the appearance of lightning." To disciples on Tabor his raiment shone with glistening whiteness. To Saul the light from heaven was "above the brightness of the sun at midday." He is "Light, and in Him is no darkness at all." He is the Light of the world, "and the Light was the life of men."

2. The perfection of his holiness.—"His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow." On his forehead Aaron bore the golden plate, "Holiness to Jehovah," but though it typified the moral perfection of the great High Priest, it was external to the human wearer. Here it is intrinsic, the outcome of his nature who is "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." He is "Jesus Christ, the Righteous." It is the "Ancient of days"—the One who was before all the times of human chronology, who thus appeared to Daniel (ch. vii.), and who now, in the ineffable purity of his holiness, draws near to his beloved servant.

3. The high priestly character and position.—The garment down to the foot, the golden girdle, betokened his office as the minister of the sanctuary, who once in condescending love girded Himself with the towel to wash his disciples' feet, and here appears "girded with strength" to save to the uttermost by his everliving intercession all that come unto God by Him. He who is "in the midst of the throne" (ch. v. 6) is also "in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks," to feed and trim the lamps (Ex. xxx. 8; Num. viii. 2). This is his gracious work, and He still says, not only concerning the Jerusalem which is yet in bondage, but concerning every member of that Jerusalem which is above: "I will not rest till the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth." How tender, how constant is his care that each lamp should burn with steady lustre, that each individual believer as well as the collective Church should reflect his glory.

4. The omnipotence of his grasp.—"He had in his right hand seven stars." And He will never let them go. The candlestick may indeed be removed from this or that place. This or that church may have its light extinguished, its witness silenced, but no individual child of God can be ever plucked out of his hand. Christ's sheep "shall never perish." And it seems as if He would teach that they whom "the Holy Ghost hath made overseers to feed the Church of God" are very precious to Him as the Great Head of the Church, and that occupying, as they do, positions of special responsibility and prominence, they may rest in the blessed fact that they are in his holy keeping. He still saith concerning them that serve Him, "I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

5. The power of his word.—"Out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword." The word of God is "quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunde of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, an is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of th heart." "And out of his mouth goeth a shar sword that with it He should smite the nations." Oh! the keenness of that sword! No armour o proof has ever been fashioned which it canno cleave. No device of earth or hell has ever turne its edge. Well may the soldier of Christ say, "Ther is no sword like that; give it me." And it is en trusted to them to wield and use. "A two-edge sword is in their hand, this honour have all hi saints." Well may Satan hate it, and the enemie of Christ fear it. It is "the Sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God."

6. The irresistibility of his judgments.—"His feet were like unto fine brass as if they burned in furnace." "Like in colour to polished brass." Yes those feet, pierced for sinners, nailed in their helples weakness to the cross, are now almighty to tread dow everything that opposeth his sway. He will "trea the winepress alone." All things shall be unde his feet, for "He MUST reign." Iniquity shal be for ever crushed. "He shall break in pieces th oppressor." It is good to be under his feet now that He may "subdue all things unto Himself." Since, "if He cause grief, yet will He have com passion according to the multitude of his mercies, fo He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the childre of men, to crush under his feet all the prisoners o the earth." And he can even "make the place o (his) feet glorious."

7. The omniscience of his glance.—"His eye were as a flame of fire." As nothing can escape the devouring fire, so are "all things naked an opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have t do." Most blessed and comforting truth! To th ungodly a terrifying fact indeed, from the recollec tion of which he would fain escape, but to the sou that trusts in the grace of God his Saviour, th sweetest cordial. "Thou God seest me" is hi rejoicing utterance. "Thou art acquainted with al my ways," "Thou understandest my thought afa off." Past, present, future, the recesses of m heart that I can never fathom, the deep mysterie of earthly history, motives and counsels, all ar known to Him!

"Thou knowest our bitterness—our joys are thine;
No stranger thou to all our wanderings wild;
Nor could we bear to think how every line
Of us, thy darkened likeness and defiled,
Stands in full sunshine of Thy piercing eye,
But that thou call'st us brethren; sweet repose
Is in that word! The Lord who dwells on high
Knows all, yet loves us better than He knows."

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN INDIA.

Mr. Varley began meetings at Kolhapur for th educated natives on January 31. He held tw meetings daily in the American Mission Church i the Bazaar, both being well attended. The interes steadily increased, especially among the students this was shown in their questions, after-discussions private visits, and public expressions of thanks. T use the expression of one of the inquirers, "M Varley has revolutionised the ideas of many of th natives with regard to Christianity." Many ac knowledge that they have held prejudiced views, an that new and very interesting light has been throw on various vital points, especially with regard to th atonement and the Christ-life of faith. Many hav become strongly convinced of the truth as it is i Jesus, and some, we hope, have experienced the re generating power of God's Spirit.

The educated natives have been moved to a faire attitude towards Christianity; the native Christian have become more intelligent in their faith; an the missionaries greatly refreshed and encouraged especially by the morning prayer-meetings, in con nection with Mr. Varley's visit to Kolhapur. H will carry with him our kindest regards and sincer prayers for God's blessing on his work in Madra and elsewhere.—Bombay Guardian.

The Kind Commandment.

"Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile."—St. Mark vi. 31.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE HARVEST OF A QUIET EYE," "GLEANINGS AFTER HARVEST," ETC.

It was after their first short missionary journey, and at the time of the arrival of the tidings of the beheading of St. John Baptist, that the Apostles, returning to the Lord at Capernaum, "told Him all things, both what they had done and what they had taught." It was at this time that our Lord—Who never spared Himself when overwrought—in tender consideration for his disciples, bade them come apart, into the retreat of a desert (and therefore quiet) place, and rest awhile. Thus they would "avoid the many comers and goers which a time so close to the Passover would be sure to set in motion," and would seek needful rest and privacy in the solitudes of the further side of the Lake. The thoughtfulness of our Lord and Master, whilst on earth, for his disciples' needs, both spiritual and bodily, is here shown. He who, at the Creation, knew the need, and provided for it, of rest for man, gives us this proof that his mind is not changed, nor his care less, and that man's requirement of rest after labour is acknowledged and considered by his Maker.

"Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile." What tender regard, when the spirit is willing, for the weakness of the flesh! Do not the words recall a provision, as old as the Creation, for man's need? No diligent student of the *whole Scriptures of God can fail, surely, to note the importance therein attached to the provision of a day of rest, for body, soul, and spirit, of man. Not the rest of inaction, far less of pleasure-seeking, but the rest of communion of the soul with God, while the body is recruited by cessation from toil.

And yet those who would guard from desecration the Sabbath of rest for man are often represented as the enemies of the sons of toil, and as opposed to man's true welfare. How strange the delusion! Is not the Creator the best judge of the needs of the creature? And, in this work-a-day world, in which the curse of toil rests, because of his disobedience, upon fallen man, is not that the kindest of commandments, the command to come apart, at intervals, and rest, amid the coming and going of this leisureless life of ours? To come apart, and rest. Rest weary body and weary brain; weary soul and weary spirit. To re-create the tired and blunted faculties. To turn awhile from the toil and moil, the heat and effort, of our week-day work, and to refresh the over-wrought spirit in the cool atmosphere of heaven. To retire "far from the madding crowd," of anxieties, cares, worries, strain and strife and effort; to come away from it all for a day; and, leaving the press of business which gives leisure hardly so much as to eat, to "Come apart into a desert place, and rest awhile." Is it a harsh, a tyrannical injunction, or is it not, rather, a kind command, given not by the foe, but by the Friend of man? "Not leisure so much as to eat," to attend to the needs of the lower part; what leisure, then, for an heir of immortality to minister to that higher part which is akin to the Divine? Leave, then, the crowding requirements, the imperious calls; let them in vain seek thee for this one peaceful day; seek a solitary and, as it were, desert place, where the soul can be alone with God; come apart into it, and rest awhile! Yes, it is a kind command; and the Sabbath was lovingly made, by his merciful Creator for man. But the perversity of a fallen nature, depraved in its appetite, causes him, too often, to choose evil for good, and bitter for sweet. Do we not perceive how, when the pleasurable employment of tending the Garden of Eden was changed, through man's sin, into the toil of labour, the Sabbath, given to man in his unfallen state, was still accorded to his need? His need, so much greater, surely, since the Fall. And yet how often do masters take away from their servants this Day of Rest, or a portion thereof? Whereas our bountiful Creator left to sinful man the boon of the Sabbath Day.

The Sabbath was made for man. Not for the Jew only, nor "for an age," but for man—so long as man, with his life of toil and his need of rest, is found upon the earth—and "for all time."

"The Word was with God," we are told, and "all things were made by Him." And we read in Genesis that in Paradise, long before even Abraham was born, not to speak of Moses, or any Israelite, that the Creator of the world "blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it He had rested from all his work which God created and made." How unreasonable, then, to speak of the Day of Rest as a Jewish institution. A Day of Rest, the first day of man's first week, a prelude to the happy labour of unfallen man, was ordained for unfallen man, in Paradise. And he who as Creator appointed the Sabbath, as Redeemer confirmed the gift to man. He shook off the bondage which man had attached to God's law, which law, as God gave it, is man's true freedom. But He endorsed his first gift, given at the Creation, to his creature, when He declared that "the Sabbath was made for man"—himself made it at the Creation. He must, therefore, have known his intention in its appointment. "Come ye," He said to man in Paradise even, "come ye, and rest awhile." Ah! if then and there, for man under the blessing, for man whose happy occupation had in it nothing toilsome, rest was good, was needful, how much more now! How much more for man under the curse, for man whose sentence was to labour thenceforth toilsomely, to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow! Rest! If needful for the never-weary, how far more necessary for the weary and heavy-laden children of Adam! Rest! If needful for man in Paradise, how indispensable, surely, for man exiled "in the bleak world beyond"! Strange that any should teach that the Friend of man took away, at the Redemption of man, the gift He gave at his Creation; that He who invites, "Come unto Me, ye that labour and are heavy-laden, and I will refresh you; I will give you rest," yet took from man that primitive Day of Rest and refreshment in the Lord! Strange to wrest the argument of his Apostle, that all the seven days should be regarded unto the Lord, into the injunction that all seven should be—those for business, and this for pleasure—wholly devoted to the world!

It is true that "the Great Atonement offered by the Son of God for the sins of the world brought to a close the Jewish Dispensation."* But not, therefore, and with this, the ordinance made for man, at man's Creation. "The first Sabbath sanctified at the beginning of the world again becomes the Sabbath, the Sabbath of redeemed man, the first day of the week, the same as that of unfallen man."

A Sabbath which comes as a rent of blue in the cloudy and dark days of the stormy week; a rest day that is but a type, here and now, of the Sabbath-keeping that remaineth, over and above type and figure, that remaineth, when these tastes of rest are over—remaineth, for the people of God.

The Fourth Commandment of the Jewish Law was, then, the First Commandment given by the Creator to the creature. Like all the Commandments, it was given for man, for his true, and highest, and eternal good. It is the Kind Commandment.

"Is it likely God, with angels singing round Him," should really require, for Himself, our "little human praise"? Yet He deigns to permit it, to require it, and without it "Creation's chorus stops."

And this law was afterwards, when probably in the Egyptian bondage it had fallen into desuetude, written on the tables of stone by the finger of God, among the eternal requirements of the God of religion and morality, and included in the laws of the first Table, relating to the requirements of the Godhead from man. Indeed, in the teaching of God's herald's, from Moses to Ezekiel, we find "that the Sabbath was specially appointed by God Himself as a sign between Him and his people." If, then, we desire to be recognised, by friend and foe, as the people of God, let us hold fast by this sign.

Even the mere outward observance of the Sabbath does stamp, if I may say so, the people of this island as, at least in profession, the people of God. Mark the loud hum of London hushed on this one day. See the closed shops, the places of mere worldly amusement inviting not, on this day, which is the Rest Day also for the tired caterers for the amusement of the people. See, wherever the flag of Britain flies, Sunday reverently kept on board the ship, which has been made spick and span for this day. Note in the country the clang of the anvil silent, all things in a sweet unconscious consciousness of rest.

> "We see, among the moonbeams bright,
> The little sparkling flood,
> The millwheel rests, a quiet thing,
> Of black and mossy wood.
> We see the fields lie in the sun,
> We hear the plover crying,
> The plough and harrow, both upturned,
> Are in the furrows lying."

Yes, for one who has a Sabbath-heart there is an outward influence, a subtle magnetism, in the very atmosphere of the Day of Rest.

> "The steer and the steed in their pastures,
> Lie down with a look of peace,
> As if they knew 'twas commanded
> That this day their labour should cease.
> The lark's vesper song is more thrilling,
> As he mounts to bid Heaven good night;
> The brook sings a quieter tune,
> The sun sets in lovelier light.
> The grass, the green leaves, and the flowers,
> Are tinged with more exquisite hues;
> More odorous incense from out them
> Steams up with the evening dews."

In truth, the mere outward observance of the "Kind Commandment" seems to throw a spell of God over the land.

The sweet church bells that, early in the morning, begin to peal, seem, whatever the evil, open or hidden, rife among us, yet to claim the land for God. "Come ye," they seem to say, "Come ye, oh over-wrought people of Britain: Come ye into sweet solitude with your God—and rest awhile!"

Indeed, as with all the commands of God, if we disobey this Commandment, we do it at the cost of punishing ourselves. For, as we are made, and as we are placed, to come apart and rest awhile, amid the hurly-burly of life's toil and travail, is needful for our highest welfare, both of body and soul, during our life of labour here below.

Moses, the servant of God, taught the Children of Israel that God's Commandments were for their good, always. Does anyone imagine, really, that God was weary and needed rest, after the work of Creation? "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?" (Is xl. 28). Is it not evident, upon the least thought about the matter, that the Sabbath was made for man? And yet men persist in contending that the Fourth Commandment belongs "only to the Jews";* the fact being that it is the one Commandment that is especially signalised as belonging to the whole human race, and was given by the Creator about twenty-five centuries before the Jewish nation existed. Again, it is the only Commandment to which the word "Remember" is prefixed, by which word God has specially drawn attention to the pre-existence of this Divine Command, as well as to the duty of properly remembering its due observance.

The addition of man's restrictions to the prohibitions of his Maker turned the "Kind Commandment" into a hard Commandment, and its easy yoke into one that galled the shoulder. It was against this human tyranny that our Lord's protest was made. The Sabbath was made for man; to give him the highest freedom, and to meet the need of his being; man was not made for the Sabbath; was not created for the purpose of keeping a day. It came to enfranchise, not to enslave.

Under the Jewish Law—which was a system of temporal rewards and punishments, disobedience being treason to the King, in the Theocracy—we see severe penalties annexed to the breach of the Fourth Commandment. The first public execution recorded was for Sabbath-breaking, and this under the direct authority of Jehovah Himself. He was the King of the Israelitish nation, and such punishment of the breach of this Commandment did, no doubt, find place only in this dispensation. Still, it is remarkable that the penalty of breach of the Fourth Commandment should be the same with that of the Sixth. (Gen. ix. 6.) The requirement of its observance was hereby shown in his eyes to be no light thing. And we may gather that the Day of Homage to the King of Kings can be by no means slighted, without disrespect to his Majesty. If an earthly monarch held a reception, and those summoned to attend ignored the summons, would not the ignoring it be regarded as a tacit insult to the king? And there is an aspect in which the day is to be looked at as being God's Day, his requirements as Creator being, however, identical with the true interests of his creature. The Sabbath command was written not only in the Book of the Law of God. It is written also in the book of man's nature, with which that law is in complete accord.

(To be concluded.)

* "General outlines of the Scriptures are known, but much, very much, of God's teaching therein is unknown and neglected." Ignorance of the whole Scriptures is the explanation of the looseness of many professed Christians with regard to observance of the Sabbath Day.

For the Young.

JESSIE AND JESUS.

BY WILLIAM LUFF.

It was a cold, bleak, wintry outlook. Snow had been falling during Sunday night, and Monday morning saw the London streets in white apparel. A ragged-school teacher was passing along Bow-street, a leading thoroughfare out of the Strand, when she saw, shivering on the kerbstone, a nine-year-old scholar of the previous night.

Poor little mite! Her nose was blue with frost, while her toes were peeping up from holes in her old shoes, as if to sympathise with their more elevated brother.

"Why, Jessie, you half-starved looking little morsel, what are you doing out here in the snow?"

"I's waiting, teacher."

"Yes, I see you are; but what are you waiting for?"

"The black van, teacher," replied Jessie, with a troubled look.

What black van did she mean? The police-court was in Bow-street, the old court before it was removed to the new premises opposite, and to this place of trial prisoners were brought in the Queen's omnibus, free of charge. It was this police-van for which the shivering child was waiting.

"But who do you expect, Jessie?" inquired the friend sadly.

The child hung her head, as if ashamed, and then whispered—

"It's mother, teacher."

"Oh, my darling, I am so sorry! What makes you say so?"

"Last night, teacher, you know how you told us about that man who didn't die, and have to be put in a black box. You said he went to heaven in a chariot of fire, like the Lord Mayor's carriage, only better; and I was so full, I ran home to tell mother all about it. I rushed upstairs (we live atop of the house) and was going head first into the room; but the door was locked. I knocked, and then I kicked; but no one answered. Then I knew mother had gone out to get drink. So I crouched down in the corner and waited. The clocks struck eleven, then twelve, and mother didn't come, then I knew she'd got locked up."

"And what did you do in your trouble?"

"I just told Jesus all about it."

"But what have you had for breakfast?"

"Ain't had no proper breakfast, teacher."

"Well, what have you had?"

"Soon as it was light, I came out and went round Covent Garden Market and picked up some orange peel and I ate that."

Who would not abhor the cursed drink that causes children to thus sleep coverless on the stairs and go supperless and breakfastless!

"I must get you some breakfast," said the lady, and entered a ham and beef shop at the corner, where she bought a pork pie, and then next door a loaf.

"Can you say 'Thank you' to Jesus for this?" she said, as the girl opened eyes, hands, and mouth.

"Yes, teacher, and thank you, too."

"It's a comin', teacher," she suddenly exclaimed; and sure enough the van appeared. Jessie pushed through the little crowd, and when she saw her mother she sprang forward.

"Here I am, mother!" But the police pushed her on one side and hurried the prisoner in.

Four years after, that teacher went to see Jessie in the infirmary, aged thirteen. Neglect and want had done their work.

"Your Jessie is dying, ma'am," said the nurse, as she entered.

"Hush! don't say it so loud; she will hear."

"All right, teacher," said Jessie, "I don't mind." How beautiful!

"Come and sit down, teacher," she continued, and then told about the woman in the next bed.

"She do swear so."

"And what do you do for her, Jessie?"

"Why, I try to tell her about Jesus, teacher. Dear teacher, I don't fret 'cos I'm here. I'm going home to heaven soon, for all my sins are washed away in the blood of Jesus. You won't leave me?"

Then she dozed for a time. Presently she said—

"Tell Polly Bruce my favourite text for a keep-sake, 'There—remaineth—therefore—a—rest—to—the people—of—God.'"

Again she dozed. She had no further property to dispose of. Suddenly she exclaimed—

"It's a comin', teacher!" Bow-street and the police-court rose before the teacher's eye, but it was no black van that she saw; rather it was the chariot of light. Sweetly she explained—

"Jesus is a sendin' for his little Jessie. Here I am, Jesus!" and she reached up her thin hand.

Would she speak again? Teacher kissed her. The lips gave their last utterances on earth—

"Jesus wore a crown of thorns—and I—a crown of glory."

Nurse came and lit the gas, and they had to say of her who told Jesus, thanked Jesus, and worked for Jesus, that she went to Jesus.

"ONE OF THEM."

Willie had a poor mother, so poor that she was obliged to place him in a charitable home for fatherless children, but in spite of her great poverty, Willie's mother was a loyal follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. The parting between mother and child was mixed with joy and sorrow—joy that he would now be warmly clothed and well fed; and sorrow that he would be exposed to temptations that hitherto he had been shielded from. But Willie had, to his mother's intense comfort, one mighty safeguard; he was "one of them." He had not been in his new home many hours, before a group of boys gathered round him, asking his name, where he came from, etc., all of which questions he answered truthfully. It was not long ere they told him, with sneering looks, that there were a few religious boys in the home. There was loud laughter amongst the group, as Willie answered, "I am one of them."

A few years passed away and Willie had risen to a high position in the home, and in the esteem both of masters and boys. There was no doubt about his being "one of them." He had passed through fiery furnaces of temptation, but One was always with him, enabling him to withstand the darts of the wicked one. Ere he left the home one specially fierce temptation assailed him. He had a very sweet voice, and had been sent with others on a month's tour in the north to take part in entertainments given for the purpose of raising funds for the support of the home. With me, he was the guest for a week of a wealthy gentleman, who took a great fancy to him and offered to adopt him as his own son. There was a handsome pony in the stable, and a beautiful boat on the river for his use; his life was apparently to be one long, glad summer day without a cloud to darken it. The boy was delighted with his prospects, till the gentleman said, "There is one other matter, Willie, I must speak to you of. I shall allow you to have one interview with your mother; that interview must be final. After it you must not write to her, speak of her, or see her again."

I do not think I shall ever forget the scene in that magnificent drawing-room. For a few moments there was the most painful silence on all sides. Willie seemed suddenly to grow inches taller, as he said, with a voice well nigh choking with emotion, "Do you think, sir, God would ever smile on a boy who disowned his mother only because she is poor? No, sir, I know you want to be kind to me, but I cannot accept your offer. When I leave the home I want to stand by my weak mother's side and help her all I can." Willie is doing that to-day, and God is blessing him abundantly.

MISSION AT LEWISHAM.

Mr. Hutchinson's Mission in Canonbury Hall, Lewisham, has been a time of refreshing and blessing to young and old. The young people gathered in goodly numbers night by night. Mr. Hutchinson's bright singing and winning presentation of the Gospel held them spellbound, and deep impressions were made on many hearts. The Scripture Union branch here has received a marked impetus, and the Bible has become dearer to many. The adult meetings have been times of blessing, and friends came from the neighbourhood around once again to see his face and hear his voice. One who found the Lord twenty years before in a meeting conducted by him came to tell the glad news, having never seen the missioner's face since that never-to-be-forgotten evening.

CHEER FOR CHILDREN.

Again the Home of Industry has had a visit of a week of evening services conducted by Mr. Lewes Sayer. He was warmly received by all the teachers, and also by the dear children, many of whom, we believe, accepted Jesus as their Saviour. Rough boys were brought not only to know that the Saviour forgives sin, but is their helper in little things. One eight-year-old said, "Teacher, I have such hard sums to do at school, but I asked Jesus to help me with them, and He did, and they all come right." Rude girls with loud voices, whose hearts the Lord has touched, are now in the young converts' class, looking sweet and gentle. Anxious teachers are praising "the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." Mr. Sayer has been a most helpful link between his audiences of children whose richer parents can afford toys. These boxes, laden with love-offerings of all kinds of things, have been greatly valued by our 800 little ones, and many a box of puzzles and maps and blocks are treasures now to our little emigrants in the adopted home in the backwoods of Canada.

Ragged School Union.

As a practical expression of gratitude to God for mercies received, a lady in Beckenham sent a gift of money to the office of the Ragged School Union, with a request that 400 poor children and 200 mothers should have a comfortable meal. The children were feasted in batches of 100 in four different centres. The mothers were gathered in the Railway Arch, which has long been the home of the Bermondsey Ragged School.

The Clothworkers' Company has again sent a contribution of £50 to the funds of the Ragged School Union.

Mr. J. E. K. Studd presided on Monday last over the annual meeting of mission efforts undertaken in Notting Hill and St. Giles by members of the Polytechnic, Regent-street. Mr. W. J. W. Roome was able to give a good account of the varied agencies at work for the children and elder lads, and Mr. John Kirk described some lantern pictures of London and its street children.

LIFE UNTO GOD.

To whom may I more fitly live than to Him except for whose death I should have no life? But I serve Him in perfect freedom, since love gives liberty. Serve you, also, in that love which casteth out fear, which feels no stress of labour, is conscious of no merit, and asks for no reward, and which is more constraining than any other impulse.—Bernard of Clairvaux.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 12.—2 KINGS XIV.

There were good traits in Amaziah's character, amongst which was his humanity to the children of his father's murderers, and his willingness (as recorded in 2 Chron. xxv.) to forego the assistance of the army of Israel, when met by the remonstrances of the man of God. He obtained a great victory over Edom, because he dared to trust God, but he fell a victim to the idols of Edom. He brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and bowed himself down before them." Then it seemed as if God's Spirit left him, and gave him up to his own devices. He gave himself up to arrogance and vain glory; challenged the king of Israel to combat; and exposed himself and his people to disastrous defeat. To what lengths of folly and sin may we not go when once we get away from God!

Turning from Judah to Israel, there was a gleam of prosperity in the reign of that valiant soldier, Jeroboam II. But the sin of the people was too deep-seated to warrant that full deliverance which God was prepared to have given them. There was some lessening of the bitter bondage, as though to show what God would have done, but not more, since they would not repent. He is long-suffering indeed, not willing that any should perish. And yet our sins seem often to compel Him to proceed to extremities, that by fire He may deliver us from all evil.

Uzziah's reign was very splendid; fifty-two years of almost unbroken prosperity; the story of it is told in 2 Chron. xxvi. The inspired historian here only emphasises that the glory of his days went down in darkness. We learn from the other record, that at the close of his reign, being deprived of the invalnable direction of Zechariah, he sought to combine in himself the offices of priest and king, a prerogative which could only be realised in Christ (Zech. vi. 13), and that for this he was branded with the awful curse of leprosy, which compelled his absence from the temple till the day of his death.

Disintegration and slavery always follow in the wake of idolatry and disobedience. So it befell in Israel. Rent with revolution, destitute of strong wise men fit to hold the helm, unable to withstand the successive invasions of Assyria, it was indeed in a pitiable plight, and presented a strong contrast to the condition of Judah, then under the wise and evangelical direction of Hezekiah and Isaiah. Israel made alliance with Syria, but the confederacy was broken in pieces, and Assyria triumphed, whilst the virgin daughter of Jerusalem laughed Sennacherib's forces to scorn, and Isaiah, calmly trustful, beheld visions of Christ (Isa. vi., vii., viii.).

We are only safe and happy so long as we do what is right in the sight of God. Rightness is blessedness. If only we will dare to take God's faith, we shall have God's companionship not only as light, but as salvation. To do the will of God is the only clue to abiding for ever.

TUESDAY, MARCH 14.—2 KINGS XVI.

Bitter indeed was the return made to the great vinedresser for all the care He had expended on the vine that He had planted in the very fruitful hill. Verily it brought forth wild grapes. All the abominations of Canaan were practised by the people whom God had taken to Himself as his peculiar possession. Such a descent from the song of redemption at the Red Sea would have appeared impossible. But it came nevertheless. God foresaw it all, yet He did not relinquish his purpose. It is a great comfort to know that our God can never be surprised at any evil thing He sees in us. He loved us, notwithstanding his clear prevision of all we would cost Him. And though such love must chastise, yet it will never leave us until it has brought us back to itself.

How great was the blunder and crime of calling in the help of the King of Assyria to break up the confederacy of Syria and Israel! It was in the teeth of Isaiah's most eager protestations, and it was the first step towards the invasion of the land be that very nation, whose help was like the broken staff, which pierces the hand of him who leans on it.

Delivered from his foes, Ahaz began to copy their idolatrous practices and to imitate the workmanship of their altars. Apparently he did not reason that the repetition of their sins would reduce him and his country to their fate. Beware how you substitute the human for the Divine pattern.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15.—2 KINGS XVII.

This chapter reads like a page from the records of the great white throne. God humbles Himself to explain the reasons for his treatment of his people. He shows that it was not without cause that He dealt with them as He did. The story of Israel's sins, in spite of his earnest entreaties, the melancholy record of God-rejection and neck-hardening, of divination and enchantment, of faithlessness and disobedience, is set down without omission and extenuation; and side by side is the golden tissue of goodness and mercy. It is a strange contrast. And yet if the true story of our inner experience could be written, how much there would be in common between it and this. Let us ponder those deep expressions, "they followed vanity, and became vain"; "they sold themselves to do evil"; "Jeroboam drove Israel from following the Lord."

When Israel was taken from the land it was peopled by mongrel races. Every nation served its own gods, and at the same time gave some kind of allegiance to Jehovah as the tutelary deity of the land with whom it was necessary to be on good terms. It is a strange story, and yet there are many amongst us who, whilst really following the idols of their own evil hearts, give a nominal reverence to the name of God, partly because they think it politic, and partly because they wish to maintain a fair appearance among their fellows.

THURSDAY, MARCH 16.—2 KINGS XVIII.

There was to be some hard fighting in Hezekiah's reign, for existence and liberty. The foes of God and his people would come about them as an angry sea encircling a sand bank. The skies were dark with the gathering storm when Hezekiah ascended the throne, which his father had blackened with his crimes. But he made the best preparation possible for meeting all these contingencies by putting away the evils which had alienated the Divine protection. There is no such way of meeting temptation and danger as by putting the heart right with God. Cleave to Him, depart not from following Him, keep his commandments, so shall the Lord be with you, and whithersoever you go forth, He will prosper you.

It was a great mistake to bribe Sennacherib, and, like so many of our expedients, it did not avail. It was a lamentable pity that Hezekiah did not from the first throw himself on the protecting care of God.

The Jews met the taunts of Rab-shakeh in silence. It was wise policy. It is infinitely better to hand over our cause to God, who will avenge our cause and see that right is done, than to defend ourselves by argument and force. The only exception is when a simple explanation may relieve the cause we love from any evil imputation. Rab-shakeh could not understand the attitude of king and people. Men of the world cannot read our secrets. God's hidden ones are as great a mystery as Christ was, but one day they will be manifested with Him.

FRIDAY, MARCH 17.—2 KINGS XIX.

The lesson of this chapter needs but few words. There is no such resort for the troubled soul as God Himself. In the first instance, when Hezekiah heard the blasphemous words so proudly spoken before the walls of Jerusalem, he went up into the house of the Lord, and entreated Isaiah to join him in supplication.

And, in the second instance, when the messengers of Rab-shakeh brought his insolent message, Hezekiah spread the letter out before the Lord, and prayed before Him. There is great beauty and earnestness in that prayer. Supplications for help blend with holy argument and reasonings, and allusions to the effect of the issue on the Divine glory.

In each case God sent an answer of peace through Isaiah. The second of them is a magnificent ode, full of heroic and ecstatic faith, and breathing the spirit of undaunted and unwavering trust. That was probably the sabbatic year, for the produce was promised to be sufficient for two years, but in any case the sabbatic calm had entered the prophet's soul. They that believe enter into rest. And as in the centre of the candle flame there is a vacuum of perfect safety, so amid alarm we may find in Christ's care a resting-place so happy and secure that we too may relieve ourselves of our burdens and sing triumphal odes on the very eve of the battle.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18.—2 KINGS XX.

One trouble often follows on another. With Hezekiah the invasion of Assyria was followed, probably in the same year, by sickness, which threatened to be mortal, and would have been so but for the Divine interposition. Who does not know what it is to turn the face to the wall in unutterable anguish? We must get where God alone can read us. But God hears our prayer and sees our tears; and in answer to his command the shadow of our life goes back on the sundial. With all our care we cannot add one cubit to our life, but God can. He assigns the number of years we have to live, and knows exactly when their number will be up. Oh to spend each hour as being his gift as much as the fifteen years of Hezekiah's life were. God does not always prolong life in answer to prayer, and we should always leave such matters submissively with Him, because He may see reasons why it would be far better for us to be removed at one from this world of temptation and sorrow. If Hezekiah had been taken away by early death he would never have incurred the terrible words of 16th verse. Let us watch against the sin of ostentation. At the best we are only caretakers and stewards. We have nothing that we have not received. But if we forget this, and yield to pride and vainglory, we are liable to forfeit all.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MARCH 19.

TIMELY ADMONITIONS.

A Temperance Lesson. Prov. xxiii. 15—23.

Golden Text. Eph. v. 18.

The Golden Text puts the exhilaration resulting from wine side by side with that resulting from being filled with the Spirit. There is some comparison between the two. In both, men are taken out of themselves, are made indifferent to the opinions of men, and are able to accomplish what otherwise they would not dare to attempt. This may explain the remark in Acts. ii. 13.

But the contrast is more striking than the comparison. The one is degrading, as this lesson shows; the other is ennobling. Avoid the one; seek the other. Fleshly indulgence, even when it does not run to excess, often proves an enemy to the fulness of the Spirit. Enforce not only the warnings of the wise man, but also the injunction of the apostle.

15, 16. Nothing is more natural than for parents to be concerned for their children; and nothing is more unnatural than for children to reject their parents' counsel. The conversion of children is the greatest joy a father can know (3 Jno. 4). Reins (16) or kidneys, "as being among the most inward parts, are looked on as the seat of the deepest and strongest emotions." No language can be too strong to express this joy. Grief over a wayward son is equally great. True conversion is "heart wisdom" (15). There is nothing in which the judgment of God differs more widely from the judgment of men than this. The wisdom of the world is foolishness to God; and a wise man in God's esteem is called a fool by the world. The very first lesson in wisdom is "the fear of the Lord" (i. 7). The fruit of the "lips" (16) is according to the condition of the heart. Hence our words condemn us or justify us (Matt. xii. 34—37).

17, 18. A wise heart will not be an envious heart. Yet the apparent ease and happiness and prosperity of the wicked have often perplexed the people of God. Does it not seem sometimes as though God were more favourable to them than to his own children? Against this envy are set three things; Live in the continual fear of the Lord. Not the fear that hath torment, but the fear of reverence, of trust, of obedience. Next remember the end. If "all's well that ends well," how terribly ill must it be with the wicked (Psalms lxxiii. 17). If he had possessed all of this world that his heart could wish, how poor would he be at last. It is well to look at every pleasure, every sinful indulgence in the light of the end. And lastly, let hope be bright. The expectation of the godly shall be more than realised. The highest ideal falls short of the reality (Psalms xxxi. 19).

19. All three instructions here are important. The heart will not lead into the right way, and avoid the evil, unless it is guided there. And this cannot be unless it is made wise. Naturally it tends in the opposite direction (xxii. 15). And the way to be wise of heart is to hear. Eargate is one of the most important entrances to the town of man's soul. We need to be warned as to what, and as to how we hear (Mark iv. 24 with Luke viii. 18).

20, 21. Two evils are specified—drunkenness and gluttony; and the consequences of both described. How much suffering men inflict upon themselves and others for the sake of a foolish and degrading indulgence! Note the warning. Not, "Don't do these things"; but "Avoid even the company of those who do." A man is not only known, but is made by the company he keeps. Unconsciously he adopts the habits of his companions. The remedy prescribed for these evils in verses 29-32 is even more strict. No total abstinence pledge could go farther than the wise man's counsel. For the young man this is the safest course. It is easier not to form an evil habit than, having formed it, to avoid going to excess.

23. The truth is put in contrast with the deceitfulness of sin, against which the young man has been warned. "The truth is in Jesus" (Eph. iv. 21; Jno. xiv. 6), not only the truth as to ourselves and God, but truth in contrast with all that deceives and deludes and destroys. We buy this on what terms? (See Isa. lv. 1.) Yet it is not possessed by the indifferent, the careless, the sin-loving. Sell it not, as Demas did (2 Tim. iv. 10); as Judas did (Matt. xxvi. 14, 15; xxvii. 3—5). No man ever made a worse bargain. The silver he coveted only increased his torment, the Saviour he sold was his supremest need.

So God not only warns against that which is evil and hurtful, but He invites to that which it is to our highest interest to receive. In place of the indulgence which the world offers, he presents that which truly satisfies and delights (Isa. lv. 1—3). Shall we waste our life in pursuing the empty bubbles of sinful pleasure, or in seeking the truth, and living it in the power of the Spirit?

Amongst Wild Karens.

The work of the American missionaries among the Brecs or Red Karens, a wild tribe in Burma, is largely carried on through means of native teachers from amongst the Christian Karens, superintended and directed by the missionaries. We have from Dr. T. Johnson, Toungoo, Burma, an account of a conference held by these Karen teachers and preachers from which we extract the following:—One young native teacher having spoken on expectancy in prayer, another added, "What our brother has said is true, we are often surprised at receiving the answer to prayer. Once a swarm of caterpillars appeared about our village and threatened destruction to all our crops. I called my people together, and we prayed that God would deliver us from that scourge. That very night they all disappeared, and my people marvelled greatly. It is also true that we must often wait to see prayers answered. I long hoped some of my scholars would be preachers, but not one chose to work for God. At last I called my people together, and proposed that we should meet once a week to pray for our own village youth, that they might choose to be teachers, and also that we should pray for the heathen. Now we see the answer; some of our children have gone forth from Pelakee."

Other brethren spoke of the frontier work among the Padoung Karens and in the northernmost Brec villages. It is very hard to stay in those places; the privations are great, and some men leave and return to their own pleasanter villages. One said that the people told him, "If you leave us we shall blame all the teachers, and shall not receive another teacher." He replied that he had no intention of leaving them, and he begged the young men to come to those wild regions; but, he added, "be sure you come to stay."

We then heard a thrilling report from two young men who went from Pelakee (as the result of the special prayer mentioned above) to labour in very wild Brec villages far east.

Last year, it appeared, in consequence of the release of two captive children, fifteen Brec villages expressed a willingness to receive teachers. In March Ple Maw and three other Pelakee boys volunteered to go to those villages. When they arrived and found them fighting, the three were too frightened to stay, and as Ple Maw did not think it prudent to stay alone, he was forced to return with them. On reaching home he said to a young man, "If I could find a man brave enough to go with me I would go back." The young fellow answered, "I'll go with you." "Will you stay?" "Yes, I'll stay." So the two went out alone. They settled in two villages near to each other. Neither of them can be more than twenty years old, and their education is very meagre; their appearance too, in our eyes is uncouth; but it is very evident that the Spirit of God is upon them, and they are His chosen vessels of honour. M'g Toe Baw had been but a short time in his village, when they said to him with whom we have been in perpetual feud. They hold now as captive a child of ours, eight years old. If we have a Christian teacher we must not fight any more, we must be at peace; but we want you to go and get that child for us, for her mother cries very bitterly." The young teacher thought, "How can I, alone and without authority, get that child?" Then he remembered that he was there doing the Lord's work, and He was his strength and authority, and would help him. So he told them he would go. They called the whole village to a council, but none dared to go. At last one very old man said, "I've no relative living; there is no one to mourn for me; it is no matter if I am killed. I will show you the way."

"THERE IS A HEATHEN VILLAGE BEYOND

M'g Toe Baw described what followed:—

So we started out alone. There was hardly a decent path between the villages. The old man followed me far behind, barely keeping me in sight, and calling to me if I left the right path. As soon as I reached the village he turned his back and fled for dear life. I entered the village, where not even a native teacher had ever been, and whose language I could speak but little. At once they surrounded me, asking "Who are you? Where are you from? What do you want of us?" I told them I was a teacher in such a village, and had come for the child they had stolen. "No, no, no, I could not have the child." I sat down on the ground in front of the chief's house, and talked to them a long time. They asked what a teacher was, and who God was, and I told them of salvation. Once they closed in around me with their spears and daks, and I thought my time had come to die; but I began talking to them again about the child, and they stopped to listen. At last they said I might have the child for three guns. I said, "No, I cannot give you anything." "But," they said,

"THESE TWO VILLAGES HAVE ALWAYS HAD A FEUD.

If we let you take this child, they will come and steal one of ours. It has always been so." "No, they will not," I replied, "they have received a Christian teacher, and they want peace." They again begged for a ransom. I said "No, it was wrong to steal the child, it is right to give it back. You must do the right." Feeling in my pockets I found a small piece of white paper, and I said "I will give you this piece of paper." They took it and said I could have the child; but if they gave me the child I must promise to get them a Christian teacher too, for they wanted to live in peace and learn about God. I promised them a teacher. They wanted him at once. I said, "I cannot get one at once, but I will send one as soon as I can."

When I left for the child, the people gave me three ears of corn to eat by the way. It was soon gone, and I was very hungry. So, after awhile, the chief took me up into his house and gave me something to eat, and then drove me down on the ground again, because he was afraid of me. It was now night. In the morning they let me depart with the child, who was so glad that she cried all the way home. When we returned to the village, there was great rejoicing.

"Now," M'g Toe Baw said, "what young man will go to that wild village?" He also appealed to the teachers and all present not to let those Brec villages slip out of our hands. Besides, he knew there were many villages beyond that would receive teachers. The harvest was ripe, and we must gather them in now. It moved all hearts to have that brave young man plead thus for those wild people.

LEPERS IN JAPAN.

The committee of the Mission to Lepers has had an application from two ladies of the Church Missionary Society, at Kumamoto, I. of Kiushiu, Japan, asking them to aid in establishing a hospital there for the lepers. One of these ladies writes:—

"It is computed that there are over 200,000 known cases of leprosy in Japan. Among respectable people it is regarded as such a disgrace that persons affected are at once shut up in a little room, which they never leave until death. Leprosy is more prevalent in this prefecture than in any other in Japan, but the principal garrison doctor here (who has offered his services gratuitously as a consulting physician, if we can establish an hospital or aid of any kind) says that from sixty to seventy per cent. could be relieved if they had good medical advice at first.

"About two and a-half miles from this city is a Buddhist temple, to which lepers from all parts of the country come when they have spent their all, and there they drag out their miserable lives, existing on promiscuous charity of the most meagre kind, having no shelter at night, scarcely any food by day, and no warmth. This island of Kiushiu is semi-tropical, but the winters are severe. The sufferings of these people must be intense.

"Very little pity is bestowed upon them because the Japanese say the lepers cannot be human beings—that no human creature could have such a mysterious and incurable disease. The name for them is 'Hinin,' which means 'outside of humanity.' Our idea is, if possible, to build an hospital by special subscription. It would take several hundred pounds to build and start, special ground having to be found, etc. The few Japanese who know of our desire are full of approbation. One of our Christians said to me, 'It will do more for Christianity in Japan than anything that has been done. My people can argue as cleverly as your people about religion, but they know nothing of such love as this.'"

The secretary of the Mission to Lepers, is Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh.

A TWO-DAYS' MISSION in connection with the Wycombe and District Temperance League was brought to a close on Friday week.

GRIEF ON THE CONGO.

The Congo-Balolo Mission is passing through a baptism of fire, and I write to ask your readers to plead with God that the remnant spared may not have passed through the fire in vain. Every mail lately has brought to anxious hearts at home "heavy tidings," and the bereaved ones sorely need our sympathy and supplications.

A few weeks ago we heard that Mr. Scarnell had reached the homeland. He was only permitted to see the harvest-field, and then leave it for others to reap. A fortnight ago we learned with something like dismay that another had fallen a victim to the fatal fever—Mrs. Todd—who, after two days' suffering, entered into rest. And now I have received the following letter from Mr. Haupt, who was a member of the church at Parson's Hill, Woolwich:—"My dear Pastor Wilson,—God has laid his hand heavy upon me; pray for me. My darling wife has left me. The Lord called her to Himself last Sunday evening, December 4, at 5 o'clock. After so lovingly and devotedly nursing me through my hæmaturic fever, she was laid up with fever herself on Saturday morning; she got well again on Sunday morning, and then the fever returned, and at 5 o'clock the poor throbbing heart stood still.

"I hardly know what I am doing. The light and joy of my life are gone out. I am a lone, broken-hearted man. The Lord has pounded me in the mortar of suffering, and when there was no strength left He laid his hand upon the best, and took my all from me. Now I submit. Crushed and down, I am able to say, 'Thy will be done.' I cannot write more this time; my heart is too sore. The grave close by is too fresh."

Afterwards Mr. Haupt was able to add: "He has girded me with strength, and the Lord has lighted my lamp in my darkness."

In a subsequent letter he writes: "An inland Balolo tribe attacked us on the morning of the 16th, and took or destroyed everything they could lay hands on. I received a spear wound in my right arm; otherwise no bodily harm, thank God." He concludes with an earnest request for prayer that the result of all these trials may be glory to his name, and the advancement of his Kingdom.

Mrs. Haupt was a daughter of Dr. Hadden, well known for his Christian work in Dublin. A brave heroic lady, she went out with cheerfulness—I might also say with light-heartedness—so fully had she counted the cost, and weighed it against "the sufferings of Christ" and the needs of Africa. Her letters home are among the most beautiful I have ever seen. Every difficulty was met with courage and fortitude, and every sacrifice made with glad and loving cheerfulness. We cannot help mourning the loss, and some may even feel inclined to say "Why this waste?" But she did not think it waste, and we are sure her Master did not. Is He not saying to us to-day, "She hath wrought a good work on me"? She gave all. What are we giving?

Yours sincerely,

Woolwich. J. Wilson.

MISSION AT HUNTINGDON.

A six days' mission has been held in the Corn Exchange, Huntingdon, by Mr. W. R. Lane, assisted by Lord Bennet, who has consecrated his voice to singing the Gospel in God's service. There have been marked signs of blessing. The number of those interested increased each day, representing all classes, until at the last meeting it was found impossible to seat the people.

The Word preached and sung has reached many hearts; men were found (well known for their careless lives) in deep earnest about their souls' salvation, while many, both men and women, confessed the power of Christ to save. As an evidence of the reality of the impressions produced it was noticeable that by far the larger number remained to the after-meeting on the closing nights, while the afternoon meetings were well filled with those thoroughly interested and desirous to know the way of God more perfectly. STIRLING TRACTS.—We have from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, a few of their latest issues, also The Increase, a year's record of facts and results in this important tract enterprise. The report is not only well calculated to awaken sympathy, but also contains much encouragement for tract distributors. The Late MRS. OSCAR MICHELSEN,

OF TONGOA, NEW HEBRIDES.

THE work of Christian women in heathen lands cannot be over-estimated. Even among tribes sunk in the deepest barbarism, feminine pity and gentleness have wrought marvels. This week we give the portrait of a lady who exercised a great influence for good in the Shepherd Group of the New Hebrides Islands.

The lamented wife of Rev. Oscar Michelsen was the youngest daughter of the late Mr. John Langmuir, of Dunedin, a gardener and florist, who left Paisley in Scotland and settled in the Antipodes over fifty years ago. She was brought up in the fear of God, and soon after her father had been called to his rest, in 1877, she was the light and sweetness of the lonely widow's home, her brothers and sisters, five in number, having all gone forth to fight the battle of life on their own account.

Some years before this she became known to Mr. Michelsen, who was then engaged at the depôt of the New Zealand Bible, Tract, and Book Society at Dunedin. Her charms much impressed the young man whose joys and sorrows she was afterwards to share in work for Christ on a cannibal island. After two years' work in the Group, Mr. Michelsen returned to New Zealand in 1880, in search of a brief rest from his toils, and also looking out for a wife! His mind was directed to the devout young woman whom he had known as the companion of a pious father, and whom he now found to be the stay and comfort of her aged mother.

Not without considerable hesitation did she accept his proposal. She knew of the degradation of the natives—that they were savages of a terrible type—but of this she said nothing. She recognised the privilege of working for God under circumstances of difficulty and discouragement. On being liberated, for the sake of Christ, from home ties, and on overcoming, through assurance of the sufficiency of the grace of God, the feeling of personal unfitness, she threw in her lot with the missionary, and accompanied him to his sphere of work on the beautiful little Island of Tongoa.

Mr. Michelsen's work on the island had made good progress; but yet there were tremendous moral forces opposing themselves to the Gospel. One of the chiefs had "taken the book," that is to say, placed himself under religious instruction; a true Christian man, he has since been a valued helper of the work. Another chief had threatened the missionary's life, and was still regarding with sullen hatred the religion which declared the righteous judgment of God upon all the native abominations and atrocities. The arrival of the lady was the opening of a new era in the work. Not that all difficulties and trials were obviated thereby; but the object-lesson of a Christian home became influential of much good, the natives being powerfully impressed with the loveliness of mutual regard and unselfish devotion to duty.

Mrs. Michelsen was received with unbounded delight by the women of Tongoa, whom she at once addressed herself to elevate in social habits and instruct in Gospel truth. She taught them reading and sewing, thus doing much to clothe as well as educate them. She had not been long on the island, however, when a hostile tribe plotted to kill her husband and burn down the mission station, hoping by those measures effectually to stamp out Christianity. This wicked device was brought to nought; but in order that the progress of the Gospel might not be hindered, it became necessary to change the mission centre. Under circumstances of peculiar anxiety the brave lady accompanied her husband in flight across the island, a distance of six miles, to Selembanga, the village of Manambalea, the Christian chief already referred to; and not until the weary march was over did they know that a murderous band had waylaid them in the bush, but for some unexplained reason had not carried out their evil purpose!

That was only one of many conspiracies against the mission party, not one of which eventuated in serious mischief, although all of them undoubtedly fell out for the furtherance of the Gospel. After three years' labour, mainly on the east side of the island Mr. Michelsen determined to resume work on the west side. What followed is thus described in the recently-issued story* of the mission:—

> The chief of Panita, Maritariliu, whose attitude to the mission was formerly quite friendly, was now an opponent of the work. He had never been in real sympathy with Christianity, but had expected his village to grow in influence through the residence of the missionary. When the mission station was changed to Selembanga, he was disappointed. Hence his present opposition. At this juncture, however, a kind Providence sent him to Queensland in a trading vessel, on board which he engaged as boatman. Thus the only difficulty in the way of resumed work at Panita was removed.
> This change of locale took place with the warm approval of Manambalea. That unselfish Christian chief assembled his men to transport the necessary mission furniture, and even went with the missionary to reside at Panita until the work was re-established in the west. The resumed operations were attended with signally abundant blessing. Abandoning their heathen customs, the people readily placed themselves under Christian instruction, and a work of grace was evident in the hearts of many. Everything was inspiring gratitude and hope, when a sudden change came over the scene. Maritariliu returned; and, to his great disappointment, found the people rallying to the missionary, and that his was the only heathen family in the village!
> This was too much for him; so without delay he sought to pick a quarrel with the missionary, and harass the people back into heathenism. His wives, whom he had strictly forbidden to have anything to do with Christianity, had been unfaithful to him during his absence; and as he could say nothing else against the "New Doctrine," he scolded the missionary for not having kept his wives from improper behaviour. Of course, the charge lay at the door of the heathenism to which the chief had bound them.
> All day long the chief raved and shouted; and one Sunday morning he sought Mr. Michelsen at a very early hour at the mission station. He reiterated the blame which he had already expressed. It was evidently his purpose to shoot the missionary. He retired to a suitable distance, and raised his gun to fire, when Mrs. Michelsen, who had heard all he said, appeared. This broke the evil spell; and the man, ashamed, lowered his weapon, and went down into the village.

As Mrs. Michelsen used to say, when she apprehended mischief from the action of the hostile chief, she "thought it was time" to show herself. Whenever her husband's movements involved risk or danger, she did her utmost to accompany him, whether by sea or on land. In every sense she was a true helpmeet for the missionary. At length three little ones added to the life and joy of the mission-family; and in 1891 the worn-out workers left the island for a season of rest and change. After visiting friends in Norway, they came to London, and on December 30, 1892, after giving birth to a son, Mrs. Michelsen was called to her rest, an attack of fever being the cause of death. She hoped to return to the islands to continue her work, but the all-wise God ruled otherwise.

The cost of the passage home was defrayed by the sale of arrowroot (value £100) which the grateful islanders made and gave for the special purpose. Mr. Michelsen hopes to be enabled to return to Tongoa to resume the work which God has so signally blessed in his hands. There is no heathenism now on the island—the people have been won from cannibalism to Christ; but much remains to be done by way of instructing them in Christian doctrine and practice. The language has been reduced to writing, and Mr. Michelsen trusts he will be enabled to take back with him a small printing press, in order that much-needed tracts and books may be produced without unnecessary delay. He also needs a small boat in which to make his frequent journeys from one island to another.

He is now in Scotland for a few weeks, open to address meetings, and describe, with a lime-light lantern, the work of God in the islands. Letters for him may be addressed to our care.

BIBLE WORK IN BERHAMPORE.

Some of the readers of The Christian are already interested in the work at Berhampore. Some of these friends may care to hear about another branch of our work, that of the Bible women. Four are working with us at the present time, going two and two into the lanes of Berhampore and into the villages quite near. There they are joyfully received, and many women listen regularly to the Gospel message, looking upon the teachers as their friends, and pouring out to them their troubles.

We are longing to reach the villages further off, where we have been from time to time, and where the people have listened eagerly, but up to the present time anything like regular visits have been impossible. Many of these villages lie within a radius of eight or nine miles, where the people rarely, if ever, hear the Gospel message, and from an occasional visit we return with very mixed feelings—full of joy because so many have listened so willingly, and full of sorrow too that we could not regularly go and teach them.

From one village some little time ago they sent asking one of the ladies to come and visit a woman who was ill. She went, but with such difficulty, on account of the state of the roads, that she could not promise them frequent visits. But on the next visit to her patient she found the very worst piece of road had been repaired, and, on remarking it to them, they said, "Oh, yes, we did it, because we thought you then might come more often."

The people are ready to listen to the Gospel message, if only it is taken to them. For the successful carrying on of this work we need a conveyance drawn by bullocks; then at all seasons of the year we could travel along the roads. Such a conveyance would cost £5 or £6, including the purchase of bullocks, and about £7 a year would, I believe, meet all expenses connected with it, such as the wages of a driver and the food of the animals. The support of a Bible woman costs about £8 a year.

THEATRICAL EMPLOYEES.—On Thursday afternoon last, in the schoolroom of Bloomsbury Chapel, there was a gathering of theatrical employees, invited by Mr. W. Forbes. After a substantial tea, cheerful hymns and solos were sung. Mr. Forbes gave a very practical and interesting address. Funds are needed to carry on the work.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

BALTIMORE, Md., U.S.A.

Fourteen years ago, in the winter of 1878 and 1879, Mr. Moody laboured for seven months in Baltimore with wonderful success. During that time many were converted, some of them to-day are pastors of churches or missionaries, and preach the same Gospel that Mr. Moody does; while large numbers are leading consistent Christian lives—living epistles, in fact, to the power of salvation through the blood of Jesus. It was a wonderful winter to our city, and one never to be forgotten. I think it safe to say that every Evangelical Church in Baltimore was revived more or less, besides numbers being added to them.

What a wonderful worker Mr. Moody is! At one time during that winter when he was holding services five times a day, at twelve, three, seven, eight, and nine o'clock, all in different edifices and localities, I remarked to him that I was afraid he would break down. His answer was characteristic of him and very direct. "If I get eight hours' sleep and three good meals a day, I have no fear." I think seven months is a longer time than Mr. Moody has ever spent in any other city as an evangelist. His son, Paul, was born in Baltimore that winter.

Now, after fourteen years, he is again with us, and also his fellow labourer, Mr. Sankey, who was not with him on the former occasion. They received a royal reception at the railroad station; a large number of Christian workers and about 300 members of the Society of Christian Endeavour met them with songs and glad welcome. They were invited to a public reception in the evening, but declined the honour.

The largest building in the city had been secured and fitted up for their use. It is a large circular iron building, and lighted from the roof. Seats for over 3000 were provided, but at every meeting held so far (except one when we had a severe snowstorm) hundreds are turned away for want of room. Two meetings are held daily (except Saturday) at 3.30 and 8 p.m.

All can notice that Mr. Moody has lost none of the vigour and sound common sense with which he is so particularly gifted. In hundreds of our churches, prayer has gone up to the throne of grace for a blessing upon the work of the evangelists.

There is a simple directness about Mr. Moody that goes right to the point and makes every sentence take effect. On the third evening at the beginning of his discourse he said: "I want to know to whom I am to talk to-night, so every one present who belongs to the church please rise." About one in fifty persons kept their seats. "I thought so," said Mr. Moody, "I thought you were all church people, and so the people I am most anxious to reach are not here—I mean the non-church and working people. The latter are not the kind to go one hour ahead of time to a revival meeting as you do, and when they do get here they find you occupying all the chairs. Now I will tell you what I am going to do next week—I am going to have meetings for women in the afternoon, and for men in the evening. I want those men who employ girls and women in their factories to allow them to come to one of these meetings and not deduct anything from their wages for the time lost. The same word to the lady of the house: let her take turns with the servant girl and stay at home one afternoon, and give the girl a chance to come. I think that is Christian advice, and I hope you will act upon it."

At the Sunday afternoon meeting for women only, 2000 could not gain admittance, and an open-air meeting was held, besides a crowded meeting of both sexes in a theatre near by at same time. Rev. H. M. Wharton had charge, and Mr. Sankey sang some of the good old hymns so popular fourteen years ago. It was the same at night (for men only), thousands turned away, and the theatres too small to hold the overflow. There is great interest at all the meetings. The only regret is that the evangelists can stay only two weeks in Baltimore.

Mr. Sankey has lost none of his power and pathos in singing the Gospel.

SLAVERY IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

Dear Sir,—It cannot be, but ought to be, generally known that slavery of an awful character exists unattacked in a region under the direct protection of Great Britain. The country alluded to is situated to the west and north-west of the River Shiré, and is under the administration of H.M. consul and administrator. The "Angoni" are the dominant tribe, and possess from one hundred thousand to one hundred and fifty thousand slaves. The sole possession of these poor creatures is a strip of goat or cat-skin round the loins, frequently only a little bark like cocoanut fibre. Yet these are a surprisingly intelligent and well-featured people, quite European in contour, the skin only different.

These are kept in subjection by their black owners by two species of terrorism. The first is the spear; for an attempt to escape means a probable spearing to death. An escape effected means the applying of the second terror to the relatives, friends, and companions of the escaped slave, viz., the poison ordeal, which is often administered to fifty persons at one time. "Mwabvi" is the name of this poison; it is made from the bark of a tree. Those compelled to drink the poison either vomit or die; if the former, they are judged innocent; if the latter, they are judged to be guilty, and the body is mutilated and cast away. In one village, within a few days of the Shiré river, the other day eleven persons lay dead from this cause. The penalty being so great, the attempts to escape are rare.

What relation have the Christians of Great Britain to these things? Are not these people, owners and slaves, "our neighbours," who are stripped and bleeding and dying? Is not the Lord's command that we love them as ourselves? They have never been told God's will, so they are left to the devices of their own hearts. God's word is definite, and unmistakable as to every Christian's duty. If these cruel wrongs are allowed to remain, the guilt is placed at our door.

In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ the writer asks of those who love their Saviour that they will solemnly resolve by prayer and self-denial and effort that these slaves shall be set free, and that the Gospel of Jesus shall have free course among them.

The writer is deeply convinced that a full and free preaching of the Gospel throughout the Angoni country would result in the voluntary release of these slaves. They are a most industrious people and apt to learn. White men are perfectly safe among them. The effect of Gospel preaching upon these sad and weary slaves is gladdening in the extreme. First, a hopeless stare, then wonder, then bright earnest attention melting into joy and beaming pleasure, proving the Saviour's words to be indeed a great light to them that sit in darkness in a way seldom seen in over-preached Christendom.

Earnestly yours, Joseph Booth.

A VALEDICTORY SERVICE of an interesting character was held the other evening in Wesley Chapel, City-road, when farewell was said to six ladies about to embark on foreign service, four of whom were returning to work, and two going for the first time. The "veterans" were Miss Wood, of Canton, China; Miss Male, of Colombo; Miss Parsons, of Tumkur; and Miss Palmer, of Madras. The "novices," Miss Clift, going with Miss Wood to China, and Miss Freeman, daughter of Rev. Alfred Freeman, who is appointed to Madras. All these spoke in the course of the meeting, and addresses were also given by Revs. Marshall Hartley, William T. A. Barber, M.A., and William Goudie.

REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

MISSION IN DUBLIN.

Rev. George C. Grubb has concluded a ten-days' mission at the Mission Church, Townsend-street, Dublin. The meetings were chiefly composed of believers, and all the addresses were directed to the object of stirring up their hearts to increased love and earnestness. The subjects on four nights of the week were the precious things mentioned by St. Peter, precious blood, precious faith, the trial of faith, and precious promises.

Nothing could exceed the intense fervour of the speaker, and every address was sparkling with good things, which seemed to be delivered in the power and energy of the Holy Ghost. The church was crammed nightly. In connection with the present excited state of the Protestants in Dublin, Mr. Grubb remarked one night, "If the Christians in Dublin were what they ought to be, they would not be affected whether there was Home Rule or no Home Rule."

On the last day of the mission a conference for the deepening of spiritual life was held, and the three meetings which took place were addressed, in addition to Mr. Grubb, by Rev. Charles Inwood, Rev. Henry Fishe, Rev. Thos. Heckett, Professor Mackintosh, etc.

THE MISSION IN ARKLOW.

The mission in Arklow recently conducted by Major Whittle, Miss Whittle, and Mr. Stebbins, was, in the estimation of the evangelists, one of the best and most encouraging they have held. They found the field prepared by the local ministers of the Gospel, and together all rejoiced over many who undoubtedly received great blessing. As you have already stated, "from the outset the greatest unity prevailed among the different Christian denominations, and such a spirit cannot be manifested without the special seal of God's approval being set to the work undertaken by his servants. For several weeks united meetings for prayer had been held, and the Christian spirit displayed by all who took part was an earnest of the great blessings in store, and certainly those expectations were not disappointed."

The meetings commenced on the evening of the Lord's Day, after all the churches were closed, and two services were held each day on the five following days, all the afternoon gatherings being "Children's" services, at which almost as many grown-up people as children were glad to be present. At the evening meetings the large hall was filled on each occasion, and as a result there can be no doubt many souls are now rejoicing in the love of Christ which passeth knowledge. At the last meeting on Friday night, when Major Whittle invited all who had during the mission stood up, either to confess their faith in Christ crucified or to express their desire to be prayed for, to go into the adjoining school-house, in a few minutes every seat in the room was occupied. It was a sight to move Christian hearts to see all present, from the aged down to the very young, rise to their feet as a token of having received the Lord Jesus by faith. Some of the workers were engaged for a considerable time collecting the large number of names which had been written out by the inquirers themselves, and were handed in at the closing meeting, the object being to send to each Mr. Moody's book on the "Way to God."

Miss Whittle during the week held several largely-attended meetings for young women and girls, which were greatly blessed.

The singing of Mr. Stebbins and Miss Whittle at all the services was fully appreciated, and no doubt their ministry of song carried home the words of the beautiful hymns to the hearts of many, preparing them for Mr. Whittle's plain and faithful preaching of the Gospel.

A prayer-meeting was held every morning, addressed by Rev. Mr. Carson, Methodist minister, Rev. Mr. Hoffe, rector of Kilbride, and Rev. Thomas Mills, rector of St. Jude's, Kilmainham. On Saturday a considerable number of the people assembled at the railway station at four o'clock to say good-bye to the evangelists, whose visit had brought them glad tidings of great joy. Mr. Stebbins and Miss Whittle having said a few parting words, as the train started the congregation, led by Rev. Mr. Hallowes, sang "God be with you till we meet again." Major Whittle, who had left for Dublin by the morning train, on his return journey to Enniscorthy by the last train on Saturday night, was agreeably surprised when he reached Arklow to find a number of young men and others waiting to greet him. He gave them some parting words of counsel; then Mr. Hallowes and those present sang a verse of the same appropriate hymn.

One of the many good results of this mission was that at the Lord's Supper after evening service in Arklow parish church, the attendance was largely increased, a body of young men coming together to the Lord's Table. Every one of the local ministers of the Gospel stood shoulder to shoulder with Major Whittle, and considered it a privilege to take part in the work with this honoured servant of Christ. Some of the young men have since publicly taken their stand on the Lord's side, and have shown their desire to win others to the Saviour.

It may be interesting to state that the local Protestant paper, The Arklow Reporter, gave over four columns of a special supplement to an account of the mission.

MISSION AT MONAGHAN.

The mission conducted by Messrs. J. Merton Smith and J. Ritchie Bell was concluded last week in Monaghan. The meetings have been carried on during the past fortnight. Evening after evening the interest taken in the services seemed to deepen as the large audiences listened to the soul-stirring words and songs of the evangelists. The place of meeting was the Town Hall, a large and commodious building, which was well filled every night. On two occasions for special addresses, when overflowing audiences were expected, the meetings were held in the First Presbyterian Church. On Sabbath evening and on Monday the large church was filled to its utmost capacity by an auditory who listened with marked attention as Mr. Smith narrated with genuine feeling the story of his life and conversion. On the last evening of the mission, many were unable to gain admission. The Spirit of God was evidently present in power on the meeting. At the close of Mr. Smith's address, which was on "The Scarlet Cord Bound in the Window," many remained to be spoken to, and professed acceptance of the Saviour.

The singing of Mr. Bell was made the instrument of leading some of the young to decision for Christ. He sang as solos such hymns as "Christ is all," "What will you do with Jesus?" and others, with rare taste and power. Messrs. Smith and Bell have resumed the work left off by them a fortnight ago at Bangor; they afterwards commence a mission at Strabane.

MISSION IN NORWICH CATHEDRAL.

Rev. E. A. Stuart, Vicar of St. James's, Holloway, has conducted a ten days' mission in Norwich Cathedral. The clergy, as a body, did not smile upon the movement, owing, it was said, to the depletion of their congregations by the nave services. Some of the clergy, however, worked vigorously from the first with the Dean. They circulated the bills, announced the services, invited their workers to attend, and were present in the cathedral. The mission opened on Saturday, February 18, with an address to workers. There were about 400 present.

At every evening service there was an after meeting for the penitent. There were Bible-readings daily. The numbers reached 500. There were also special services for children, for the pupils of private schools, and one of the best attended was that for day-school teachers. The Church schools were also remembered. Nor were the clergy forgotten, for they were received at breakfast at the Deanery, when Mr. Stuart addressed them on the miraculous draught of fishes. Thirty of the clergy were present. On Sunday week there was another service for men only, which was, notwithstanding the rain, well attended, while in the evening there was not even standing room in the vast cathedral. The triforium was opened, barriers were erected in the bays, hundreds stood at the west door, and hundreds could not enter at all.

On Monday evening the special mission addresses were concluded. The subject was "Procrastination." The message was most searching and most solemn. In response to Mr. Stuart's appeal, between fifty and sixty persons rose in their seats, as either deciding for Christ or as seeking the prayer of the supplicating multitude. Inquirers remained behind. Some extraordinary instances of spiritual blessing have been vouchsafed. The interest is deep and wide. A thanksgiving service was held on Tuesday evening.—The Record.

RICHARD WEAVER IN BELGRAVIA.

The veteran evangelist concluded an eight days' mission in Belgrave Presbyterian Church on the evening of Sunday last. Night by night the meetings increased until the church was crowded to the door. On the evenings of Friday and of Sunday 140 of Mr. Fegan's boys formed a much appreciated addition to the ordinary audience. A large number of the lads as well as others professed to find the Saviour.

From beginning to end of the mission "the old man eloquent" relied on that old Jerusalem blade called the Word of God. Night after night the Lord worked with his aged servant, confirming the word by tears of penitence. Those of us who worship there, have, during these eight days, seen more of the doings of God in the way of conversions than we have seen in the course of the preceding four years. We did not allow the evangelist to depart without a genuine and hearty "Haste ye back again," from a forest of uplifted hands. As one result of his visit we go on our way rejoicing.

DISTRESSED JEWS IN PALESTINE.

Our correspondents in Palestine describe the condition of the Jewish poor as most distressing. Those who in fine weather can find a little casual work, are unable to do so while the severe winter lasts. A letter from a Christian resident, dated Jerusalem, February 13, 1893, speaks of one of the terrible storms of rain, tempest, and snow that continued for almost a week, followed by cold east wind and sharp frost. The writer says:—"The first day of the storm proper was a terrible one indeed. I went among the wretched shanties of the Jewish 'Box Colony' (outside Jerusalem) to find almost every miserable abode wet throughout; men, women, and children, without fires, were shivering in the cold blast, little impeded by the mockery of walls and roofs consisting largely of scraps of boxes and old tin cans (hammered flat). Many of the people were almost entirely destitute of even the poor rags that served others as bedding. Often two or more families occupied the same room, 10ft. to 14ft. square (or even less), where they spend the cold nights on old pieces of straw matting, or rags, lying in their clothes, piled together like animals for life-warmth. In few places did I find the food supply to reach beyond the poorest breadstuff (often little better than bran). While giving small sums of money for immediate purchase of charcoal, I took notes of the bedding and gave tickets accordingly. I then trudged through the snow and slush to the manufacturers in the city, and loaded myself and two strong porters with quilted coverlets, which we carried to a house in the vicinity and gave out as my tickets were presented. Our gifts were received with bursts of convulsive weeping and streaming tears."

Similar accounts are given by our agents at Jaffa and Jerusalem. The grants for the soup-kitchens having been necessarily reduced when Mr. Scott-Moncrieff left Jerusalem, our agents report that great numbers are in utmost need, whom they are unable to relieve. Some are lodged in our House of Shelter at Jaffa. At Abraham's Vineyard, where the number of workers has been increased, we employ some in stone quarrying, the cultivation of the ground, soap-making, and carpentry. Thousands of the starving Jews could be employed in various parts of the country if adequate funds were provided. E. A. Finn, Secretary.

HOXTON HALL.—The recent Gospel Temperance Meetings here have been specially interesting and useful.

CONVERTS IN HONAN.—Writing from Cheo-Kia-Keo, Honan, China, Mr. J. J. Coulthard says:—"Nine more have been baptized and received into the Church of God in Honan, at our station in Stè-ki-tien, which makes the total number received for the past year twenty-five in connection with our mission in this province, and from the commencement over eighty; but many who believe are lost sight of, and statistics however carefully compiled are never complete, thank God. We hear now and again of some who are living up to the Gospel light received far removed from the mission stations where they first heard the truth."

WILL YOU COME TO INDIA?

To us at the front of the battle-lines, it is specially surprising and sad to read in the home papers that many wish to enter foreign mission work, but can find no openings. Last year, after many urgent appeals, I only succeeded in getting four to come to India for mission work; though several more are preparing. I recently published a call for fifty men, and sent it to many papers. I believe two are now on their way in answer to prayer and our published appeals.

It is utterly unscriptural and unphilosophical to say that the mission question is chiefly one of money. Hindus, Papists, Mohammedans, and Mormons know better than that. They first get men wholly devoted to their cause, men dead to the world, money and everything else, except their crooked faith, and funds are sure to come to feed them through life and to garnish their sepulchres.

Here is something practical. I need six men at once, provided workers can be found to come on New Testament lines. Please study these points carefully and prayerfully:—

1. As to heart experience: 1 Thess. v. 23, 24; Rom. vi. 6; Gal. ii. 20; 1 John iii. 3—10; Acts vi. 3.

2. As to life devotion: Rom. xii. 1, 2; Isa. vi. 7 8; Acts xxi. 13; 2 Cor. vi. 4-10; Rev. vii. 14.

3. Called and sent by God: Mark xvi. 15; Acts xiii. 2-4: 1 Cor. ix. 16; Gal. i. 11, 12, 15, 16; 1 Thess. i. 5.

4. Faith and works for support: 2 Cor. ix. 8; Heb. xiii. 5, 6; 1 Thess. ii. 9, 10; Acts xx. 34, 35.

I am in independent work, with no promise of support from any society or persons; unsectarian and union, co-operating with evangelical Christians. Having no promises but God's, I can give those only to any who wish to come. Any who can venture out at God's call are welcome to come and stay with me as long as He so leads. My office and quarters occupy three small rooms in a block, tenanted by natives and poor Eurasians. Rent £1 per month. I can here accommodate three beside myself, and those whom God sends He will surely provide with the light food and clothing which are most healthful in India. My food, clothing, and other personal expenses averaged £1 monthly last year (fifteen rupees). In 1891, £1 7s. (twenty rupees).

Now I earnestly request (1) that many devoted spiritual Christians search out the above texts and pray with "agonising" (Col. iv. 12, Gr.) that God may send us such workers. (2) That young men who are crucified to the flesh and the world (see Gal. v. 24, and vi. 14), and who have given to God and received from Jesus as above texts indicate, would write to me at once their experience, purpose, and circumstances. Do not write until you have studied these texts on your knees, with special searchings of heart, and write me that you are willing to stand by for sixty years in India.

A WORKER FOR INDIA.

At the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. G. Lampard a large company of friends met on Wednesday last at Ling's Temperance Hotel, Finsbury, E.C., to bid God speed to Mr. John Lampard on the eve of his departure for mission work in India. Wise and loving counsel was given and earnest prayer was offered by Mr. Gelson Gregson, Dr. Heywood Smith, Mr. C. Boardman, and Rev. Geo. Snashall. Mr. Lampard said he had earnestly sought and believed he had Divine guidance in the step he was now taking. His desire was to live Christ and to preach Christ to the natives of India. He was going forth at God's call, unassociated with any society, entirely dependent on the Lord for guidance and confident that the Divine blessing would attend his work. He intended sending home occasional letters descriptive of his missionary efforts and these would be sent to friends who were interested in his movements. Among those present were the Revs. J. M. Gibbon, C. J. Bird, G. J. Hill, Mrs. W. S. Caine, Mrs. Heywood Smith, Mrs. Buller, and Mrs. Boardman. Mr. Lampard is leaving England with the hearty good wishes and loving affection of a large circle of friends, and will be followed daily by their earnest prayers.

MISS READE'S INDIAN MISSION.

In the present crisis of the opium question I venture to send the testimony of that indefatigable labourer, Miss Reade, of the South Arcot Highways and Hedges Mission. She wrote in 1889, before the spread of the evil in the Madras Presidency:—

"My eyes were opened through the cholera to the extreme evil of a vice, of the prevalence of which, especially among some castes, I had no idea. I refer to the use of opium in its various forms. Almost every case of confirmed opium-eaters proved fatal. Medicines have no effect; and so well known is this that a Government practitioner said to me one day, 'It is no use going to that case; he is an opium-eater.'"

During my three years' residence with Miss Reade I was an eye-witness of the blessing of the Lord attending her medical labours, and her testimony cannot be despised. I grieve to say that my last accounts from her were very distressing. With the exception of an absence, caused by most severe illness in 1881, and subsequently in 1886 a few months spent in England, she has been unceasingly at work for more than seventeen years, in which period is included the terrible famine of 1877-8. The need of rest and absence for a time from the scene of her labours is imperative.

Prayer is earnestly asked that some self-denying servant of the Lord may be willing for a time to take charge of this isolated mission, and that more than one might be willing to give help in her enforced temporary absence.

Miss Reade's address is, Thiruvithi, viâ Punrooty, South Arcot, India.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

In a recent letter Miss B. Lawrence, writing from 23, Pasco del Remedio, Caldas de Montbuy, Barcelona, Spain, says:—"The Scriptures we have distributed have been most thankfully received. We are reminded of old times — twenty-four years ago—when the free circulation of the Scriptures was first permitted in this country. We have, so far, only given to persons who we believe desire to know the truth. The books are passed from one to another, and we are repeatedly requested for further copies for friends who are anxious to read and search for themselves the beauties of the Gospel."

Among many interesting cases is the following:—"A well-to-do farmer came one night to buy a large-print Bible; he would not accept it as a gift. He is a cousin to one of the priests in the town, and is himself a staunch Romanist. Nevertheless, he said that he had possessed a small Bible for years, but could no longer see to read it. He wished to compare Scripture with Scripture, and was delighted with the large reference Bible with which we supplied him.

"The school prospers in spite of all the opposition of the priestly party. The children carry the hymns and teaching all over the town. The other evening I was delighted to hear some children's voices singing one of these hymns sweetly and distinctly in one of the most public streets, and no one dared or cared to hush their hosannas. In view of all this we feel encouraged to persevere in our work, and leave our needs to the care of the Master, whose we are and whom we serve."

THE CHRISTIAN LITERATURE SOCIETY FOR CHINA seeks to support a work which has already been carried on in China for several years with encouraging results, but inadequate resources, by the Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge among the Chinese, of which Rev. Timothy Richard, Shanghai, is now the secretary. In the annual report, just issued, we read: "The changes that have taken place in China during little more than half a century are almost incredible. In the great cities modern science is beginning to excite attention, modern improvements have effected an entrance, modern thought and culture must soon follow. The danger now is lest China should adopt Western science and the material benefits of our civilisation, and ignore or reject Christianity, the source and foundation of all true progress." Further particulars regarding the Society may be had from Mr. A. G. Denholm Young, M.A., 2, Kerrsland-street, Glasgow.

LIGHT FOR THE SOUDAN.

Will you allow me to draw attention to the Hausa Association, founded in memory of Rev. Alf. Robinson (C.M.S.), who died at Lokoja, on the threshold of the Soudan, that great Mohammedan territory that calls so loud for light. The Hausa people trade from Egypt to the West Coast of Africa, and are gentle, courteous, and not uncivilised. Many can read and write, and they welcomed such portions of the Scripture as Mr. Robinson and the late Mr. G. Wilmot-Brooke were able to give them in a form they could read.

But these two scholars of the language succumbed to the climate and overwork. They experienced that their missionary work was impossible till they had a certain amount of knowledge, and as they gained more and more they found the existing translation of portions of the Scripture very far from being correct. Mr. Robinson was impressed with the idea that some qualified scholar should devote his efforts to perfecting knowlege of the language, in order to clear the way for those who would follow; and he was convinced that a good translation of the Scriptures would soon circulate, and be the best agency to benefit the Soudan.

Therefore an association undertook to see his wishes carried out, and his brother, Rev. Charles Robinson, M.A., vice-principal of Truro Theological College, has accepted the task of student. He will be accompanied by a doctor, to facilitate friendly intercourse with the Hausas. It is expected that the work will occupy at least three years, and require £1600. We are anxious that the brave and valuable men starting out to this task should have no anxiety on this score. Any help will be thankfully acknowledged, and further information given by the secretary, Rev. J. O. F. Murray, Emmanuel College, Cambridge, or by myself,

M. E. Sinclair,
Financial Secretary.

GATHERED IN.

BY MRS. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

In memory of several beloved saints recently called home to be with the Lord.

I.

Gathered in like ripened grain,
Housed with forecast and with fear,
From the coming autumn rain
That the farmer knew was near:
Garnered though the sun was bright,
And the foolish wondered why
There was cause for haste or fright,
Since no signs were in the sky,

II.

Gathered in like scattered sheep,
Called to follow and obey,
From the pleasant slope or steep,
Where in peace they fed and lay;
Brought secure within the fold,
Never one left out astray;
For a stalking lion bold,
Greedy hungered for the prey.

III.

Gathered in as ships at sea,
When the raging waves run high,
Beat beneath some friendly lee,
Where they can at anchor lie:
Sheltered from the tempest's blast,
Comforted in sight of shore,
Till the fearful night is past,
And the winds prevail no more.

IV.

Thus the Lord is calling in
Many choice ones to the tomb,
From that storm of wrath and sin,
Soon to burst in lurid gloom;
He has folded them to sleep
With a Father's tender love,
While each grave-bed angels keep,
Watching from the heights above.

V.

Weep not, then, that they are gone,
Rather weep that we are left;
Theirs with joy to wait that dawn
When the sacred graves are cleft;
Ours to warfare and to stay,
Breasting evils yet to rise,
Grieved from sorrows fresh each day
That are hidden from their eyes.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

Mr. Chas. Cook, of Hyde Park Hall, conducted through February a mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. Miss Rose Williams added much to the enjoyment of the services by her sweet rendering of sacred solos. Despite the bad weather during the latter part of the month, the services were well attended; those on Sunday night, as usual, were filled.

Mr. Cook had large audiences on Saturday nights, when he has given his popular lectures on "Prisons at Home and Abroad," some illustrated by dissolving views, others being costume lectures. The month's work has not been without blessing, as many have found their way into the inquiry-room to be dealt with about salvation.

THORNE EVANGELISTIC MISSIONS.

At a recent meeting of the committee Mr. Henry Thorne gave a very encouraging report of his missions, which have been attended with very blessed results:—

Ealing: Fifteen days' mission. Large gatherings and a number of professed conversions. Burton-on-Trent: Nineteen services held in ten days; a goodly number found their way into the inquiry room. Hackney: Ten days' mission, and very great success attended the services. Tunbridge Wells: Ten days' missions; many remarkable cases of conversion. At the Polytechnic in July last many young men were led to the knowledge of the Saviour. Mr. Thorne reported work in Annan, Dumfries, Carlisle, and Hawick.

In the autumn a successful ten days' mission at Upper Clapton; several striking cases of conversion. Warminster: Ten days' mission in the Congregational Church; over eighty persons made profession of faith in Christ. Newcastle-on-Tyne: In two of the Churches a very great awakening, especially amongst young people. Fulham and Brompton: In connection with the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., when 113 persons accepted Christ as their Saviour. The report closed with a three-week mission at the Edinburgh Castle in connection with Dr. Barnardo's work, attended with much blessing.

The committee thank God for these manifest tokens of his favour and blessing.

WORK FOR THE UNEMPLOYED.

Sir,—In view of the great distress prevailing in London and the country, will you allow me to state that the Committee of the Self-help Emigration Society are prepared to give financial and other assistance to men able and willing to work on the land, and also to families to enable them to proceed to Canada in April next?

Clergymen and others interested in particular cases should apply to me for forms without delay, as the funds in hand for this purpose are limited. The Society has over fifty representatives in Canada who provide employment for its emigrants, and subsequently look after their interests.

The experience of the last nine years proves this work to be one of the best means of permanently relieving distress.

Yours, &c.,
Edward Wilson Gates.

Seamen's Bethel at Falmouth.

Fifty years ago the sailors' mission began in an old sail loft at Falmouth, and during the whole of that time only three missionaries have been in charge—Mr. Trotter, Mr. Bailey, and Mr. Badger, the present missionary. It is impossible to give an account here of the good work that has been done at the mission during all these years. The fact that the mission has existed fifty years in a small town like Falmouth and with all its work constantly before the public view and open to every kind of criticism, is eloquent testimony of its worth. The ravages of time and the success of the work have caused the building to become unsafe and the audiences too large to accommodate with ease. The committee are therefore appealing for subscriptions to enable them to build, not only a new, but a much larger Bethel than the present one.

MESSRS. VEALE, CHIFFERIEL, AND CO., LIMITED, 31, CURSITOR-STREET, E.C., publish a striking portrait of Dr. Clifford, of Westbourne Park Chapel. It is produced in the best style of lithography. Proofs on India paper, 5s.; copies, 1s. each.

WORK IN CENTRAL FRANCE.

Dear Sir,—You were good enough last year to insert two letters (dated April 14 and July 21) on behalf of the work of Pastor Abel in Le Puy. I told your readers then he was collecting money to build a Protestant church (Eglise Réformée) in a respectable part of the city, the room hitherto used for public worship being badly situated. Since then complications have arisen.

The house he rented was the property of a Protestant, who has since had business losses; he has been compelled to sell the property, which passed into the hands of a Catholic. This is probably just what the Catholics were waiting for, and now they have asked the present proprietor to sell it to a Catholic Fraternity, who say they wish to turn it into an Orphan Home. To those at all acquainted with Roman Catholic tactics it is quite evident that the main aim of the fraternity is to turn the Protestants out of their present building, and thus out of Le Puy, for no "good Catholics" in that fanatical city will rent a house for the heretics to use as a church, nor will they sell a piece of ground on which to build one. Here, I think, your readers will recognise the hand of God in Pastor Abel being led to "rise up and build" before he knew that he might so soon be turned out of his present quarters. He is thus able to checkmate the Romanists, for he has already purchased a site to which the only condition attached was that he should not erect a manufactory thereon.

Here is the position in a few words:—He may be turned out of his house in five months. He has purchased a site which must be paid for by March 25. He has many subscriptions promised, but the largest are to be given on the completion of the building. The French Protestants all over the country (so few, alas!) have responded generously to his appeals, but he needs more money than they can give.

Here comes the sad part of the affair. Pastor Abel should have been at present on the Riviera collecting for the new church among the well-to-do followers of Christ who pass the winter there. But a domestic trial has just come upon him. His youngest daughter, a sweet child of eleven, is seriously ill, and threatened with consumption. He cannot leave her, and his heart is sorely burdened with the responsibility of collecting money and his apprehensions for his child. He who says to the tried one "Cast thy burden upon the Lord" says also to His followers, "Bear ye one another's burdens." Who will help to bear the burden of this afflicted father by setting his mind at rest at least as to the purchase of the ground?

This is the only Protestant work of any kind or denomination in Le Puy, and great will be the joy of the Roman Catholics if they succeed in turning Pastor Abel and his work out of the town. For those who may not have seen my former letters I may add that the church is in connection with the Société Centrale of France and the Société Evangélique of Neuchatel. Professor F. Godet, whose commentaries and Biblical studies are so much valued by English Protestants, is president of the latter society, and he takes deep interest in the work in Le Puy, often writing encouraging letters to the pastor.

Communications may be addressed to Miss Green, Moorlands, Bickley, Kent, or to—

Yours in Christ Jesus,
Auguste Berthe,

MEVAGISSEY, CORNWALL.—A three weeks' united mission has been conducted amongst the fishermen here by Mr. John Elliott. Numbers have professed conversion, especially amongst the young people. The Methodist, Bible Christian, and Congregational ministers united heartily in the work, and night after night had the joy of pointing anxious souls to Christ. Mr. Cooke, another evangelist, has been secured to carry on the meetings, as Mr. Elliott has had to leave in order to fulfil a previous engagement with the Y.M.C.A. at Trowbridge, in Wiltshire.

THE FEAST OF PURIM, commemorative of the defeat of Haman's wicked plot (Esther ix. 20—28), is a joyous season in Jewish homes. The poor Hebrews of East London know little of the joy, and their offspring are strangers to the festivity. It was timely, and well, therefore, that on Thursday evening last Mr. H. Ehrlich, of the Hebrew Conference Hall, Whitechapel, should collect some three hundred Jewish children, members of his Band of Hope, and make them happy in true Christian style. In the course of the evening, the children had the story of Esther briefly explained to them, and were shown that, as the Jewish people were saved by the cutting off of Haman, so the death of Christ had, by God's goodness, redounded to the salvation of men.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.

Who in Paris will come forward to strengthen the hands of Miss de Broen to continue her wonderful work for the poor of Belleville, and to make known the office of her mission, with its pleasant reading-room, and homelike surroundings at 205, Rue St. Honoré? As a tourist, passing the winter in Paris, it has been my privilege to visit Miss de Broen's mission, and so consider its many aspects, and to see for myself its great proportions, and its need of permanent support. I see the necessity of working this mission on a co-operative basis, to save Miss de Broen from undue strain, and to enable the mission to grow into fuller development in its various departments. Unfortunately the medical department is closed for want of the wherewithal to carry it on, and I now make an appeal for the sick and suffering of that part of Paris, namely Belleville, which to the passing stranger is but a name.

My attention was first called to this mission by an appeal at Christmas in its behalf, printed in the New York Herald, which is circulated in Paris. That appeal moved me to visit Belleville, and Miss de Broen's ouvroir, where 130 elderly women were sewing with their matron and assistants. They looked clean, with their white caps, though very destitute, and my heart rejoiced that friends were raised to welcome and help these weary sisters of ours, whose lives have fallen in this communistic part of Paris. Cannot a committee of one hundred ladies and gentlemen be formed, who will organise permanently for the support of this mission?

In closing, may I ask this question of each of my readers, Shall the Belleville Mission languish because of the materialism of the times, or shall we show ourselves sons and daughters of the King, by our fidelity to Him?

"THERE CAME OUT THIS CALF."

Aaron professed to be greatly astonished that the calf should come out; but of course the calf took its shape from the mould in which it was cast; and who prepared that mould but Aaron himself?

Do we not see just the same thing to-day?

Hear how that father laments over his son. "I could not have believed he would turn out so badly; he takes no notice of anything I say to him." But when he was a child he was allowed to have his own way if he only teased and cried long enough. It was much easier to give the child the sugar he cried for than patiently to teach him that he would never get anything by crying for it. Much easier, a few years later, to let him choose his own companions and follow his own pursuits than to take some care about these things, so as, at the same time, to keep his affection and maintain a wise and firm control over him. The mould was made, and the result might have been expected.

Look at that mother, who is breaking her heart because her daughter is obstinately bent on marrying a godless young man! Yet the mother suffered her child to go where she would not have thought of going herself. True, the girl had professed conversion, but she was not taught how the Lord loves obedience, and how there can be no fellowship between light and darkness. "You know young people must have a little pleasure," was made the excuse for all sorts of worldly frivolity, and what has come out of the mould is nothing more than might have been looked for.

When Eli was very old he feebly remonstrated with his ungodly sons, and they did not heed him; but God's charge against Eli was that he did not restrain them when he might have done it (1 Sam. iii. 13). How different what God could say about Abraham—"For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment" (Gen. xviii. 19).—The Believer's Pathway.

CLAPHAM AND BATTERSEA.—The anniversary services were held at the Union Tabernacle on Feb. 26 and 27. On Sunday the preachers were Revs. T. A. Carver and J. C. Pye. On Monday a public meeting was held. The report read stated that house to house visitation, tract distribution, open-air preaching, and other evangelistic efforts afford means of bringing the Gospel to the perishing, and the good results are shown in the changed lives of not a few. The work in connection with the young in the Sunday-school and Band of Hope has also been much blessed. It was also stated that the building stands in a very poor neighbourhood, and much has been done, especially during the winter, to alleviate the suffering of those out of employment. Addresses followed by various well known friends.

ADVENT CONFERENCES.

Sir,—The moving appeal lately inserted in The Christian to conveners of conferences will, it is to be hoped, effect its purpose. But if these conferences on the Lord's coming are to secure a maximum of advantage, care needs to be exercised in the selection of subjects. Long experience in Australia, coupled with careful noting of the arrangements in England and America, has forced the conviction that there is room for considerable amendment in this matter. Judging by what has hitherto been usual, it appears to be considered needful to present as complete an outline as practicable of prophetic truth, necessarily including many details.

But this is a proved mistake. The want is united testimony by all who expect the Lord to the fact, the certainty, and the imminence of his return. Given this, and the first requirement of the case is met. Details may be safely left to individual study. Besides, what may be called advanced subjects, well enough suited to spiritually-learned Christians, are wholly beyond the uninstructed. And yet these uninstructed usually constitute more than a moiety of those attending such meetings; while they are the very parties it is of most importance to reach.

Next, the subject wants to be presented on its practical side. Not long since I was referring to these matters in the presence of some missionaries in India, when one of them, with a look of surprise, said, "We are practical men," implying, and evidently intending to imply, that pre-millennialists are unpractical dreamers. I am afraid that the ordinary syllabus has responsibility here. The best and largest meeting on the coming of Christ I saw in Australia was where only two addresses were delivered—one on "Girded Loins," the other on "Lighted Lamps." Multitudes of Christians do not realise that the certainty of Christ's coming is the most practical subject in the New Testament; and that among the incentives to holiness it occupies the premier place. And yet both are facts.

The personal interest of the Lord Jesus in his return, when He will receive his bride, secure his royal rights, and obtain vindication of his character, I have never seen so much as hinted at in any programme issued either in England, America, or Australia. And yet this is the primary matter.

If space permitted, facts could be adduced that would much more than confirm what has been stated. I trust Sir S. A. Blackwood and others will see to this matter. If the pattern is rightly set in England it is sure to be followed elsewhere.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to express through your columns my deep gratitude to the very large number of Christian friends who have remembered me in prayer during my recent severe illness? The knowledge of their prayerful sympathy was a great joy and comfort, and one of the many loving-kindnesses and tender mercies which the Lord has vouchsafed to me.

I am thankful to say that, through his goodness, I am greatly restored, and am on my way to the South of France.

May I, however, avail myself of this opportunity of saying that it would be a further kindness if requests to attend meetings, or to undertake evangelistic work, were not addressed to me for some time to come, as I am under strict medical orders to abstain from anything of the kind for at least several months? The labour of correspondence will thus be saved, both to my friends and to myself.

Yours very truly,

S. A. Blackwood.

THE LORD'S SUPPER AND SACRAMENTALISM.

Dear Sir,—I notice in this week's Christian that "C. S. R.," in his letter bearing on "the Lord's Supper and Sacramentalism," makes an astonishing statement, which may not be far from the exact truth—"Since the death of Dr. Horatius Bonar, there is not one left who proclaims the truth of the Lord's Second Coming as the hope of the Church and the saint."

This theme, to me, is one of the most sublime; and one that I very often dwell upon in the pulpit. I have said to my people more than once, that if we were to preach in proper Scriptural proportion, we should give much more time to the Second Coming of Christ—to the "glories which follow" the sufferings—than to the first coming of humiliation; though it is impossible to insist too strongly on this first coming, being the foundation of our good hope in connection with his second coming. It seems to me that the words in the introductory verses of the Book of Revelation intimate most plainly what a blessing congregations who "hear the words of this prophecy" will receive.

In conclusion, may I be allowed to thank Mr. R. Scott Moncrieff for his letter in your last issue? It is hardly possible to insist with sufficient force on his statement: "I do not find in the New Testament a single passage in support of the doctrine that unless the bread and the wine at the Lord's table are consecrated by a priest, there can be no koinonia, etc." We want to see greater simplicity and less formality prevailing, with regard to this simplest of Christian rites. Probably in the days of the Apostle, the person at whose house there was a partaking of bread and wine, in remembrance of their absent Lord, took the lead in the little service that might be conducted, such as asking God's blessing on this memorial supper, and giving thanks for all that it set forth, so that a woman could—to use an ecclesiastical phrase—"consecrate the elements," and preside at the feast, if she was mistress of the house.

Such ideas sound revolutionary, but they are only a turning back sufficiently far to get at these blessed days before the leaven of unscriptural ceremonialism had come in to obscure the truth.

I remain, yours,

W. Lancelot Holland,
Incumbent of St. Thomas' English Episcopal Church, Edinburgh.

March 3.

INDIA AND OPIUM.

Sir,—In your issue of March 2 I find a letter from Brigade-Surgeon Pringle, in which he suggests that the best message for me to take back to the people of Lower Bengal is the abolition of the opium traffic by the British Government.

My experience of the state of Lower Bengal is quite different from that of Dr. Pringle. I have, however, no wish to enter into any controversy with that gentleman. But I cannot agree with him when he considers the best message which I can convey to the people of Lower Bengal to be other than that which was given by our Lord to his disciples (Mat. xxviii. 19), viz., the Gospel (John iii. 16). This surely is the "best message," and the real obstacle to the evangelisation of Lower Bengal is the want of evangelists.

I rejoice to find in another page of your issue (p. 19, "To Christian Endeavourers") this view strongly corroborated, and I earnestly trust that the forcible appeal there made will impress itself on the hearts of all who recognise the obligation laid upon every member of the Christian Church to carry out the last command of our risen Lord. The disciples did not refrain from preaching the Gospel on account of the shortcomings of nations or governments. They carried out our Lord's command, and gave his good news to the Gentiles. Would that I could tell the people of Lower Bengal that thousands or even hundreds of Christian men and women are coming from England to give to their fellow-subjects in that province the best message that ever was, or can be, given to the world.—Yours faithfully,

Norwood, March 2. J. Monro.

THREE VITAL TRUTHS.

Dear Sir,—In a short critique in one of the London morning papers upon my pamphlet, "The Three Vital Truths," noticed by you in The Christian of March 2, I am accused of contending for a "shibboleth," and the writer alleges that, although the Bishop of Durham does not use the word "vicarious" in his statement of the doctrine of the atonement, "the thing is there all right."

We have the Bishop's distinct statement of what he teaches and what he does not teach. You quote in your notice his own analysis of his teaching, which he summarises in what he calls "The Three Vital Truths." In addition, he gives in the clearest terms what he denies. Among other things he says, "Christ was not a substitute for man or men," and "I do not know any passage in the New Testament in which Christ is said to have delivered men from future suffering or from the penal consequences of sin." If words mean anything, the Bishop denies the death of the Lord Jesus as an atoning sacrifice for sin, whereas redemption and the forgiveness of sin through vicarious death is one truth taught throughout Scripture, commencing with Abel's sacrifice, and "by it" the apostle says, "He being dead yet speaketh." The apostle Jude exhorts all who are partakers of the common salvation "to contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints," and I invite all evangelical Christians to help to carry out this exhortation by assisting in the circulation of my pamphlet. I shall be glad to receive communications on this momentous subject, and will send a copy of my pamphlet to any one who desires it.

Yours in the common faith of God's elect,

C. Underwood.

BOOKS FOR PREACHERS.

Dear Sir,—Permit me to appeal to your readers for gifts of books of a theological, expository, or biographical character suitable for inclusion in the "Preacher's Library" at this office. We are anxious to make the library of greater use to our members, and hence it has recently undergone a process of sifting and sorting which needs to be completed by a large addition of good standard volumes, new or second-hand.—Yours faithfully,

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. William Forbes gave addresses at Rainham, Essex, last week.

Under the auspices of the National Temperance League, a very satisfactory series of meetings has been held in Cambridge.

At Hinckley an eight-days' temperance mission, at which Mr. Robert Clough was the principal speaker, was brought to a close on Sunday week.

Mr. T. Barker, of Newcastle, has held a seven-days' mission in connection with the Kingsbridge and Dodbrooke Total Abstinence Society.

Mr. J. Louis Fenn has been holding at Portsmouth, in connection with Miss Weston's work, a capital series of Gospel temperance meetings.

A Chicago Mission sends a coffee-wagon through the busy part of the city in the early morning, selling coffee, as an antidote to alcoholic drinks, for 3 cents per cup.

Dr. Gray states that no alcohol whatever has been allowed in the workhouse at Newmarket during the last twelve years, and that the best results have followed.

The good work of the London Temperance Hospital grows, the statistics of the past year showing an increase of 45 per cent. in the total number of cases treated over the year before.

A handsome statue from the chisel of Miss Redmond, of Father Mathew, the famous Irish advocate of temperance, has been unveiled in Upper Sackville-street, Dublin.

The inhabitants of the heavy woollen districts of Yorkshire have had a treat during the past fortnight by the visit of Mr. J. Leicester, who has been engaged for sixteen nights by the Temperance Union.

Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard have arranged to meet the members of the B.W.T.A. of South London on Tuesday, March 14. The gathering will be held in Roupell Park Wesleyan Church, Tulse Hill.

The drink map of Salford, issued by the Corporation, shows that Salford has 800 public-houses in excess of the normal supply. In many parts of Manchester they absolutely swarm, and the city at large is positively cursed with them.

It is proposed to form a public-house mission for the districts of Merton, Wimbledon, Balham, Southfield, and Wandsworth. Mr. J. Nicholson, 5, Trafalgar-terrace, Wimbledon Park, Surrey, will be happy to receive communications from sympathisers

It is stated that out of 50,000 children examined by doctors in 105 schools over the country, more than thirty per cent. were found suffering from physical or mental defects, largely attributable, either directly or indirectly, to the drinking habits of their parents.

Miss Connell, of Gateshead, member of School Board and Board of Guardians, has been addressing successful meetings in York. One of these consisted of eighty teachers of elementary schools in the city, to whom an address was given on the best method of introducing temperance teaching into schools.

The City of London Total Abstainers' Union held lately a warehouse meeting at the premises of Messrs. Ward, Sturt, and Sharp, Wood-street. Mr. Samuel Cawston presided. The principal speaker was Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., who delivered a stirring address upon the advantages that would result from total abstinence.

The Nottingham Temperance Mission states that the Sunday Gospel Temperance meetings have been well attended, week-night meetings and open-air meetings have been held, whilst the Saturday evening entertainments during the winter months have had a good effect. A female temperance missionary has been appointed.

In temperance circles the Veto Bill forms the chief topic of debate. Varying views are, of course, freely expressed; many would have been glad to see Sunday closing made general and compulsory (as in Scotland), but few are disposed to insist on personal views, the feeling being rather, "Let the Bill pass; it is something gained."

The West London Band of Hope Union, with which is affiliated seventy temperance societies, held last week its sixteenth annual public meeting at Chelsea Town Hall, under the presidency of the Hon. Conrad Dillon. During the evening the Bishop of London spoke at considerable length in commendation of the temperance cause, and congratulated his hearers on the spread of teetotal principles.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A Y.M.C.A. has been formed at East Grinstead, and another at Ballynafeigh, Belfast.

The Berlin Y.M.C.A. is showing splendid vitality, and has a large and rapidly increasing membership.

The York Association has held successful meetings at the Soldiers' Institute to provide funds for the altering and improving of its rooms.

The memorial to the late Provost Swan, of Kirkcaldy, is to take the form of a suite of rooms for the local Y.M.C.A., a free site for which has been given by Mr. Nairn.

The annual meetings of the Eastbourne and Bournemouth Associations were held last week, and passed off very successfully. Mr. E. J. Kennedy was the deputation from the National Council in each case.

The members of the Newport (Mon.) Association are conducting with great success a weekly lantern service in the Model Lodging House, which is much appreciated and largely attended by those for whose benefit it is provided.

The Hastings Y.M.C.A. has held a most successful demonstration against betting and gambling. The Mayor, Dr. Croucher, was in the chair, and addresses were delivered by Mr. George Williams, Archdeacon Sinclair, and Mr. E. J. Kennedy.

The Westbourne Grove Association held last week its annual meeting. The report showed 150 members, and tokens of good work all round. After a sympathetic speech from Mr. J. D. Allcroft, addresses were given by Rev. W. R. Mowll, Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, and Mr. R. Burn.

The Southport Y.M.C.A. has had a visit from Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness, who conducted two services in the largest hall in the town on Sunday, February 26, and lectured on "His recent experiences on the Congo" on the following day. A visit from Mr. Hudson Taylor is expected shortly.

Through the kindness of the late Mr. Horace Smith, of Springfield, Mass., 5,000dols. has been bequeathed to the secretarial department of the Y.M.C.A. Training School, a like sum being left to the school for Christian workers. The central branch of the Y.M.C.A. receives from the same source the sum of 25,000dols.

Dawlish Y.M.C.A. formally opened their rooms at Lawn Terrace House on Thursday. Situated in a central position, well lighted, lofty, and adapted to the work, they make a capital home for the association. At the evening meeting there was a crowded audience in the Shaftesbury Hall. Mr. Henry Gadd, J.P., of Exeter, occupied the chair.

A very successful mission to young men terminated at Stratford Y.M.C.A., on Sunday last. Among those who took part in the mission were Lord Bennet, Mr. W. R. Lane, Rev. J. G. Train, Mr. Graham Aspland, and others. Great blessing is reported at all the meetings, both in conversions and deepening of spiritual life.

The Y.M.C.A. at Kingstown held on Tuesday week its seventh annual meeting in the Town Hall, Mr. John R. Fowler in the chair. There was a large attendance, and stirring addresses were delivered by Revs. R. C. Hallowes, of Arklow, S. Prenter, of Dublin, and G. Hanson, of Rathgar. Mr. W. A. Boyd, secretary of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., also addressed the meeting, while Mr. S. A. Martin, secretary of the association, gave a satisfactory account of the work during the past year.

The ninth annual meeting of the Hackney Y.M.C.A. was held last week. The report, presented by Mr. F. L. Porter, the secretary, stated that the association now numbered 269 members, 920 having joined since its foundation in 1884. During the year two of the members had gone out to the mission field, one to the Congo and the other to Central China, whilst five other members were preparing to go out during the present year, one of them having been among the first to respond to the London Missionary Society's call for 100 additional helpers.

The monthly meeting of the English National Executive was held on Friday afternoon at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams. Reports of exceptional interest were presented by the travelling secretaries. The associations in the Midland district were said to be characterised by unprecedented healthfulness and activity, almost without exception; and the accounts given of individual associations in other districts were very encouraging. In cases where difficulty exists, advice was taken by the officers with a view to its removal. Among the resolutions that were passed was one to the effect that the Jubilee of the association, to be celebrated next year, when the International Conference will be held in London, should be marked by the Council in the raising of a special Jubilee fund for the provision of several additional travelling secretaries.

The Finsbury Park Association held its annual meeting on Friday last, Lord Kinnaird presiding. The secretary presented a report going over the usual range of agencies carried on, and showing that the association is doing a good and useful work, and exerting a healthy influence among the large numbers of young men who abound in the neighbourhood. The financial statement showed a deficit of over £168, and considering that the total expenditure was only £360, this fact was much commented upon, Lord Kinnaird describing it as a shame and disgrace that there should be any difficulty in raising enough funds for the support of the association in such a neighbourhood, and with such a palpable need of the work it was doing. The other speakers were: Mr. Hind-Smith, Revs. W. Hind, J. B. Wane, and H. H. Pullen, all of whom heartily supported the claims of the association and pleaded its cause.

Dr. W. M. Sinclair, Archdeacon of London, preaching in St. Peter's, Nottingham, on Monday week, to a large congregation, in aid of the Y.M.C.A., took for his text 1 Thessalonians v. 23. In the course of an eloquent sermon he said that what was required in the great towns for young men could only be obtained by co-operation. It would be an admirable thing if they had no divisions, if all belonged to the same denomination or society. They must look facts in the face, and although the great body to which he belonged—the National Church—was by a long way the most numerous, the misfortunes of the past had bequeathed them many independent denominations, who could not see things as they saw them, though they held the Apostles' Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the two Sacraments, and the authority of Scripture, which was all that their own Church required to be believed by members. Co-operation with such believers was not only wisdom but a duty, and they were delighted to say with St. Paul, "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."

THE Y.W.C.A.

Wigan Y.W.C.A., established a year ago with three members, now reports over sixty.

Westbourne Park Y.W.C.A. reports 159 members, an increase of thirty during the year. The classes conducted at the Home for Young Women include one for dress cutting and making, which is well attended.

A meeting on behalf of the London Y.W.C.A. was held at Abbey-road Chapel on Wednesday week. The chair was taken by Rev. H. E. Stone, and addresses explaining the work of the Association were given by the Hon. E. Kinnaird and Mr. H. Kidner. There was a good attendance. A collection was taken for the London work. Mr. Stone preached a special sermon to young women on the preceding Sunday evening.

The committee of the Y.W.C.A. Home, Hastings, feel that a larger house has become a necessity. Between 500 and 600 business girls, school teachers, and others from London, &c., have been passing through the Home each year, seeking rest and change, and the workers feel increasingly the uncomfortable and inadequate size of the present house. A beautifully-situated house, in every way most suitable, has been offered privately for sale for £5000. The workers would be thankful for help to obtain this house. Communications should be made to Miss Douglas Dale, Haroldene, Holmesdale Gardens.

The meeting for special prayer held at the London office of the association on Thursday was divided into four parts of half an hour each, presided over by the Hon. E. Kinnaird, Miss Ardill, Mrs. C. E. Tritton, and Mrs. F. A. Bevan. Subjects ranging over the entire work of the association were allotted to each half hour. Thanksgiving was offered for funds received and for blessing upon the work. Earnest prayer was made for the increase of funds, for the workers, for the various departments, and for greater spiritual power throughout the branches. The work of the F.H.U. amongst the factory girls of London was specially remembered.

A Y.W.C.A. MISSION.

In spite of wet weather, forty to sixty gathered nightly at the Central Institute during the week of prayer for young women, and many found it a time of blessing as well as of preparation for the mission which followed. Though the speakers were different each evening, the consecutiveness of the teaching, without prearrangement, showed the Spirit's guidance, as step by step they led from the work God, by the Holy Spirit, desires to do in his children, to that He waits to do through them! The claims of the world were forcibly urged by Mrs. Bannister, and missionary service shown to be not for the few but for all, not a matter of choice but of obedience, and of debt, —Christians being debtors to the world—entrusted with the Gospel to pass it on.

The mission conducted by Miss Salome Parker, of Wimbledon, assisted by Miss Mercer, was well attended, and proved a time of fruitful seed-sowing. It was closed by Rev. W. H. Stone, of Hatcham, who urged his hearers to decision in a solemn, pointed appeal, which will not soon be forgotten.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The Christian Endeavour Society at Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel recently held a missionary meeting, which was addressed by Rev. R. Wright Hay, of Dacca. Rev. J. R. Wood presided. The large lecture-hall was well filled, principally by young people, who listened with deep attention to the impressive address given by Mr. Hay.

He commenced by reading a part of the last chapter of Matthew, and commented upon the words "Come" and "Go," which occur so often. The word "missionary" (he said) does not belong to any class of Christians, and he did not like to be called a missionary for that reason. It seems to be stuck like a label to particular Christians, as though they had special relationship to the heathen and to Jesus Christ. The word simply means one who is sent, and every Christian is a sent one. We must all of us realise that a missionary is sent by Jesus to those who do not yet know Him, and whose salvation will depend upon our faithful delivery of the message entrusted to us. He did not like the word "foreign" missions. It means we Christians are at home in some particular part of the world, and that is not the true conception of the position of Christians in the world. Do not think of your part of the world as home and other parts as abroad. Recognise your duty towards the whole world, and seek from Him at what particular part you are individually sent.

He wished them to think of one solemn fact, that if the people of India were so divided among all the missionaries of all societies, so that each missionary had 50,000 people depending upon him for the Gospel, there would still be 200 millions who had not heard the Gospel.

CHICAGO NOTES.

The Salvation Army has made an aggressive effort on the west side, and has rented the old Carousal Building, West Madison-street, and fitted it up. Meetings are to be held here each evening, but the special work will be the training of recruits for army duty.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, also on the west side, have finished a commodious church home, connected with the Trinity Reformed Church. A score of these young people's societies are very active just now.

Dr. Atterbury, secretary New York Sabbath Committee, writes:—"The question of closing the Chicago Exposition on Sunday seems now about settled. Those who favoured the opening have apparently abandoned all hope of any reversal of its action on the part of Congress. For this result we are very thankful."

The Pastors' Alliance of Chicago has come to be a gathering of great power. Never in the history of the city has there been more harmony of feeling then at the present. The meeting just held has raised a very important committee, consisting of one minister and one layman, from the principal denominational churches, to have "general supervision of the Evangelical services at the World's Fair grounds, and in the city during the exposition." These brethren are expected to make special preparations, and open all the churches possible for divine services.

Dublin Prison-gate Mission.

The sixteenth annual report of the mission, which was presented to a public meeting held in Dublin a few days ago, gives a cheering account of the blessed results which have followed the labours of the workers during the past year. Since its institution the mission has been the means of bringing joy and peace to hundreds of those who, had they not been met at the prison-gate by the ladies of the mission, might have gone downward and downward in crime. Unfortunately the funds have been exhausted, and the bank account slightly overdrawn. It is to be hoped that friends will lend a helping hand, so that the work may not suffer.

At the meeting, Mr. Wigham, the chairman, stated that half the women who in Dublin were sent to gaol, were sent either for drunkenness or for offences committed when under the influence of drink.

GREENOCK, N.B.—The Christian Mission here has lately had a great deal of blessing, especially among young men. In addition to our regular Gospel meetings, we carry on rescue work and naval work among the sailors and marines of the warships at the anchorage. A short time ago we had blessed fellowship with Mr. Richard Murphy, evangelist, Airdrie, and Mr. John Clunie, evangelist, Paisley, as also with Mr. Daniel McCann, evangelist, Glasgow; with each of these we have had much blessing.—W. Fisher, Hon. Supt.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

The Bampton lectures this year are on the very important and pressing subject of inspiration, and there is no one likely to deal with it more calmly, judicially, and Scripturally than Professor Sanday. The second lecture (on the Old Testament) was delivered last Sunday, and the remaining ones will deepen in interest as the plan is unfolded.

A welcome accession to the spiritual forces of Oxford City life has lately come in Rev. A. R. Ezard, late of Brecon, who has been appointed minister of the George-street Congregational Church. The post has been vacant for over two years, and Mr. Ezard's advent will therefore be all the more valuable at this important central church.

Mr. Charles Underhill has been delivering a course of three prophetical lectures at the Y.M.C.A. on Friday evenings on "Our Lord's Last Discourses and the First Resurrection," the main point illustrated being the practical importance of the study of prophecy.

Rev. Charles Berry, of Wolverhampton, preached twice last week at Mansfield College with great acceptance. A novel plan is being tried there just now of having some prominent minister for a fortnight at a time during term "in residence" as chaplain, for personal intercourse with the students and counsel on practical pastoral work.

Captain Williams, R.N., the lay secretary of the Protestant Reformation Society, lectured on behalf of the society in St. Aldate's Rectory Room on Tuesday week to a crowded audience. On the Sunday previous the annual sermon was preached in St. Aldate's Church by Rev. C. J. Casher, president of the University Protestant Union, whose Biblical scholarship and firm grasp of essential Protestant truth are proving most valuable in Oxford, and will be of increasing service to Evangelical religion as time goes on.

CAMBRIDGE.

A meeting was held in the Henry Martyn Hall on Monday evening, Feb. 27, under the auspices of the Colonial and Continental Church Society, for the purpose of hearing an address by Canon Hurst on the work of the society, Rev. H. C. G. Moule presiding. The chairman drew attention to his personal experience of the valuable work done by the society in continental health resorts. Canon Hurst gave interesting reminiscences of his work in Newfoundland; stress was also laid upon the special pleas from the Bishops of Athabasca and Mackenzie River for workers.

The University sermon was preached on Sunday last by the Bishop of Rochester.

Dr. Fairbairn, Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, preached a powerful sermon in Emmanuel Congregational Chapel last Sunday morning on Job. i. 9.

Sermons are being delivered upon Sunday evenings during Lent in St. Michael's Church, by Professors Kirkpatrick, Stanton, Ryle, and Robinson.

An evidence of the good results of the recent mission held by Rev. G. C. Grubb is the conversion of a young business man in Cambridge, who is now bearing bright testimony to the reality of the change. Formerly deeply versed in spiritualism, he is now an active Christian worker in Barnwell. Often, moreover, the hearts of Christian men are gladdened by news of blessing resulting from the Gospel addresses at the Sunday evening meetings of the Cambridge Inter-collegiate Christian Union.

Rev. R. H. Walker gave the address on Monday evening last at the Henry Martyn Hall to the weekly meeting of the Cambridge branch of the C.M.S., presided over by Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Ridley Hall. A marvellously graphic, interesting, and fluent account was given of work in Uganda. Mika Sematimba, Muganda chief and evangelist, gave an address in the native tongue, interpreted by Mr. Walker.

The British and Foreign Bible Society held its annual meeting of the University branch at the (smaller) Guildhall on Monday afternoon. Rev. Dr. Kingsmill and Rev. R. H. Walker (from Uganda) urged the claims of the society, especially emphasising its invaluable aid to the work of the missionary in the foreign field.

PREVENTIVE AND RESCUE WORK.—Some men of Kensington have determined to associate themselves in a league for the support and extension of Preventive and Rescue Work. They believe that until men take up the question and openly endeavour to create a healthy public opinion, very little will be achieved in the direction of social reformation. A public meeting will be held at the Town-hall, Kensington, on Friday, March 17, at 8 p.m., to discuss the matter.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Glasgow Poor Children's Fresh Air Fortnight has received the gift of £1,600 from a lady to provide one of two needed Fresh Air Homes.

A meeting of twenty-four F.C. ministers in the North who oppose the Declaratory Act was held at Inverness on Tuesday last week. A resolution was passed embodying their objection to the Act.

The death of Professor W. Minto, of Aberdeen University, at the age of forty-eight, removes a figure well known in the literary, educational, and political world. He was widely esteemed as an active public man.

The Glasgow Mission for the care and help of girls and women carries on a variety of agencies of an educative, preventive, and reformatory sort. At the recent anniversary its work was warmly commended by the Lord Provost, Dr. Stalker, and others.

A missionary conference was held last week in Bonnington U.P. Church, Leith. One speaker said that ministers could help missions greatly by taking steps to extend and deepen the interest in them. The weekly meeting might now and then be turned into a missionary prayer-meeting.

At a meeting of the West of Scotland Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals it was stated that a clause had been framed to render cock-fighting illegal, in view of the recent decision of Scottish judges. It is desired to have the law amended this session of Parliament, if possible.

During the past month, fourteen additional orphans have been added to those under the sheltering wing of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland, making 320 under its care. A country house has been secured in a healthy district near Glasgow. About £300 will be needed for furniture and fittings.

At a social meeting last week to celebrate his ministerial Jubilee, Dr. Jeffrey, of the Caledonia-road U.P. Church, Glasgow, received a number of congratulatory addresses. It was stated that during his thirty-seven years' pastorate at Caledonia-road the congregation had raised for various purposes about £47,000.

A meeting of the First F.C. congregation, Thurso, was convened for Monday week to elect a colleague and successor to the venerable Dr. Taylor, now laid aside by illness. Mr. Hall, of Cullen, and Mr. Fraser, probationer, Dingwall, were nominated, but no agreement was come to, and a motion for delay was eventually passed.

A Children's League in connection with the Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is about to be formed. At a meeting in Edinburgh on Saturday, the scheme was discussed and officers appointed. Lady Clementina Hay, the little daughter of the Marchioness of Tweeddale, is president of the League.

At a Conference in Dundee on the Church and its relation to the liquor traffic some strong statements were made. One Glasgow Baptist pastor suggested that taking the abstinence pledge should be made a condition of membership in the churches. Any man who could not come up to that standard was, he thought, hardly worth having about a church.

The Aberdeen Free Presbytery held a meeting on behalf of missions to the heathen last week. The claims of Africa and India were strongly presented by Dr. Laws, of Livingstonia, Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale, and Rev. Lewis Davidson, of Edinburgh. Mr. Henderson, of Devanha House, who presided, has a daughter working as a medical missionary in India.

In the current Free Church Monthly, a number of leading ministers write as to the best way of celebrating the jubilee of the Church at the approaching Assembly. Principal Rainy thinks there should be thankofferings for past mercies, but there is need of humility and searchings of heart; the greatest need will be the spirit of faith, consecration and self surrender.

At last week's meeting of the Free Church Commission of Assembly, Professor Lindsay defended the action of the recent Decennial Conference in Bombay on the opium question. He declared that every member of the Conference was opposed to the opium and drink traffic, and the state regulation of vice, but some objected to the passing of resolutions that carried no representative authority.

At the annual meeting last week of the Glasgow F.C. Presbyteral Temperance Society, gratification was expressed at the introduction by the Government of the Direct Veto Bill. Dr. Stalker said that "You can't make men sober by Act of Parliament," and "You can't diminish the amount of drinking by decreasing the number of public-houses," were old hack arguments which had been led to the tan-yard long ago, and compensation to the publican might also be classed amongst the antiquities of the question.

At a meeting of the Free Assembly Commissioners in Edinburgh last week, Dr. Walter Ross Taylor, of Glasgow, deplored the acrimonious methods of controversy that were too common in connection with Church questions. He appealed to brethren who had anything to do with the conducting of controversies in the Church, that they should so carry these on as to let all in the Church know that, however they might differ upon some points, the Free Church of 1893 was as earnest in its maintenance of Evangelical truth, and as earnest in its preaching of the Gospel, both at home and abroad, as the Church of 1843.

IRISH NOTES.

A series of lectures on Christian Evidences is being delivered in Alexandra College, Dublin, by Rev. Canon Wynne, and others, and is attracting special attention.

The Belfast City Mission has had a prosperous year. Revs. R. C. Johnson and Jas. Grubb have promised to remain in connection with the mission for another year.

Mr. John Topham, of the London Band of Hope Union, has been engaged by the Hibernian Band of Hope Union to deliver a series of scientific temperance lectures in the principal day schools in Dublin and the suburbs.

Through the enterprise of Mrs. Pim and the ladies associated with her in carrying on mission work among the blind in Belfast, a home has been purchased at a cost of £1500, and towards this amount Mr. Foster Green has contributed £1000.

Much regret is felt at the death of Rev. E. F. Rambaut, for twenty years incumbent of Christ's Church, Blackrock. Mr. Rambaut was a zealous Evangelical minister, a great opponent of Ritualism, and an earnest sympathiser with Christian Union. He was a frequent speaker at the annual Christian Conventions in Dublin.

Evangelistic services have just been held in Springfield, by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist Conference Evangelist; at Inishmore by Rev. T. Dalmsley; at Pettigo by Rev. John Coulter; at Irvinestown by Rev. Wm. Alford; at Loughgale by Rev. Wm. Maguire; and at George-street Hall, Dublin, by members of Rev. Thomas Connellan's Evangelistic Committee.

In the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, on Saturday last there was a largely-attended meeting specially convened for prayer and supplication to God, to seek for his over-ruling guidance in the present crisis, for the spread of truth and righteousness, and for the future welfare of Ireland. The Archbishop of Dublin presided, and a large number of ministers were present.

CRUMBS OF COMFORT.

"I am the Lord that healeth thee."

Dost thou hear that, weary soul? Is it not the message thy heart yearns to hear? Tossed and troubled, tried and tempted, worn by sickness, bowed down by grief, too weak and weary to struggle any more—lift up thy head! See thy God coming with healing in his beams; balm to pour into thy bleeding wounds; songs for thy sighing.

What is thy distress? Is it past sin that rises up before thee as a great mountain? Listen! "I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." Is it present falling back into sin that thou dreadest? Here is a word for thee! "He will keep the feet of his saints." Is it some secret heart-break which none but thy God may know? "As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you, and ye shall be comforted." Is it great bodily suffering which racks thy frame? Behold! "There is a city whose builder and maker is God, where the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick."

Truly these are leaves from the tree of life, which shall be for the healing of the people.

Mildred F. Foss.

A FAITHFUL WITNESS.—An esteemed correspondent calls attention to the useful testimony that is being borne by the American monthly magazine, The Truth. He says: "It has entered upon its nineteenth year of publication, and though it is not expected that it will ever become popular, its subscribers steadily increase in numbers. It has advocated from the beginning, and has never in a single sentence swerved from the defence and advocacy of, the doctrines of the Word on which it was founded. It maintains: 1. The verbal inspiration of the Scriptures. 2. The Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ. 3. The absolute necessity of regeneration by the Holy Ghost. 4. A present and certain salvation for the believer through the blood of the Son of God. 5. The personal and pre-millennial advent of the Lord Jesus as the hope set before the Church. I thank God for The Truth, and wish it God speed in its work. The cost is one dollar per annum; and it is issued by The Gospel Publishing Company, 83, Fifth-avenue, Chicago."

The Book World.

A Three-corner Plot. By Mary J. Jay. (1s. Jarrold & Sons.) A delightful story for young girls. Very simple, yet singularly pleasing and attractive.

Out in the Sunshine. By Mrs. Clayton Adams. (1s. G. Stoneman.) A little book of poems, simple and sweet, and mostly appealing to the sympathies of the young folk.

Messrs. S. Bagster & Sons have published a neat and well-printed pocket edition of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, with many illustrations. We hope that through its issue the old but undying allegory will find many fresh readers.

Pearlia. By Haine Whyte. (Bristol: J. W. Arrowsmith. London: Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) Here we have three short interesting stories, the first being that of a little one who is early called to the fold above, and who leaves a bright testimony to Him she had learned in childhood to love.

A Way of Escape. By Dora Miller. (1s. A. Holness.) A story of the Lord's leading, illustrating from actual life the beauty and profit of simply doing his will and trusting his promise. The brief motto of the book might, in fact, be, "Let thy widows trust in Me," for truly Mrs. Newton was led by a way she knew not.

In a charmingly told little story, called the Reformation at Heath-end Stubbs (Elliot Stock), Rev. H. J. Marston, of Icomb Rectory, tells how an unpromising lot of country villagers were changed by the simple preaching of the old Gospel, when the Oxford "New Lights" of the parish pulpit and the vapourings of the Radical cobbler had alike failed to influence them for good.

Manual of Health and Temperance. By T. Broadribb, M.A. (1s. 6d. Longmans & Co.) The secretary to the Education Department, Victoria, having provided a simple handbook for use in elementary schools, on health and temperance, Rev. W. Ruthven Pym, of Sheffield, has adapted it for use in English schools, adding besides some telling extracts from "Gough's Orations."

A revised edition of Dr. A. Maclaren's volume of discourses, Paul's Prayers and other Sermons, has been sent out by the publishers, Messrs. Alexander and Shepheard (5s.). In the first edition several sermons that had appeared in a former volume were inadvertently included; these are now replaced by other sermons. We are glad of the opportunity of again commending these glowing and practical expositions of Holy Writ.

Jacob's Inheritance. By Emilie Searchfield. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) A simply-told and interesting story of life and work amongst brickmakers—rough and reckless under grievances, but at length won by Christian influence and love. From the same publisher we have also Nell, the Clown's Wife, by Emily Gradidge, and Sinclair's Museum, by W. J. Forster (1s. each), pretty and wholesome tales which the little ones will prize.

Teetotaler and Traveller. By Mrs. M. A. Paull Ripley (1s. and 2s. National Temperance Publication Depôt.) An able and interesting memoir of one who rendered valuable service to the temperance cause both by lecturing and evangelising. For many years Mr. Ripley acted as a conductor of tourists on the Continent, and hence he had wide opportunities for observation and witness. Paull Ripley's practised pen has produced a readable memoir worthy of the husband she has lost.

Pastor C. H. Spurgeon: His Conversion, Career, and Coronation. By Rev. Danzy Sheen. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Primitive Methodist Book Room.) Mr. Sheen, as the only Methodist minister trained in the Pastor's College, has rendered his tribute of love and remembrance to the departed president, paying, as is but natural, great attention to the circumstances of Mr. Spurgeon's conversion in the Colchester Primitive Methodist Chapel, and proving that the preacher on that occasion was Rev. Robert Eaglen. To Methodist friends especially this memoir will be of great interest.

The Church of the Netherlands. By Rev. P. H. Ditchfield. (6s. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.) The fourth of a series of volumes on "National Churches," edited by the present author, this work, compiled from the writings of many authorities and historians, appears to be marked by a spirit of candour and impartiality; it is certainly a very instructive record, and of great historic interest to the student of ecclesiastical history. While we do not follow the author in all his ecclesiastical predilections, we give him credit for holding a fair balance between right and wrong methods of propagandism. In the history of "national" churches throughout the Christian era, ecclesiasticism, the lust of power and privilege, and the iniquitous use of such power, have been far more prominent features than the spirit of New Testament Christianity. Of this truth, the chequered career of the churches in the Netherlands is a conspicuous example. Incidentally, we have clear statements as to the rise of some famous controversies on the doctrines of grace, that have not yet burned themselves out.

Behold the Man! and other poems. By John Evans. (3d. George Stoneman.) Some thoughtful and well-executed verses on the Life of lives are followed by pieces on various subjects.

Messrs. Marshall Brothers, Keswick House, Paternoster-row, have published in the form of a penny booklet the papers entitled "Wanted—Crown Advocates," by Miss Marston, of Algiers, which recently appeared in our columns.

The Ministry of Rev. E. G. Gange is a very interesting sixpenny "Extra," issued from the Office of the "Bristol Christian Leader," 70, Park-street, Bristol. A brief sketch is given of the history of the Broadmead Church since its foundation in 1640.

The Sacraments and Sectarianism. By "A Hebrew Christian" (6d. Bristol: J. V. Stone, 1, St. Stephen-street), is not, in our judgment, likely to prove of much assistance to inquiring minds. The pages contain many statements that are open to question.

Our Theological Education. The inaugural address, wise in substance and timely in character, delivered in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh, on Nov. 1, 1892, to the students of the United Presbyterian College, by Principal Hutton, D.D., has been published in a neat pamphlet by Andrew Elliot, 17, Princes-street, Edinburgh.

A new penny illustrated religious weekly, under the title of the Christian Pictorial, has appeared. Among the special features promised are a series of papers on "The Creation Tablets," by Mr. Pinches, of the British Museum; articles on "The Invisible Things of Creation," by Mr. B. Lomax, F.L.S., of the Brighton Museum; "Sketches of the House of Commons," from a Christian and philanthropic point of view, by a Member of Parliament; papers on Christian Art, etc. Many well-known divines of all the Churches are in the list of contributors.

Land: Its Attractions and Riches. Messrs. Dowsett & Co., 3, Lincoln's-inn-fields, write concerning this work, which we reviewed some months ago:—"In order further to spread the influence in favour of land which the book carries with it, we are willing to sell off the remaining copies at very far below actual cost price. It comprises nearly 900 pages, in ninety-three chapters, by fifty-seven well-known authors, nearly all specialists in their subjects. It is published at 27s. 6d.; from this date we are prepared to sell copies at 10s. each, or 11s. post-free."

Romanism Exposed. A very useful pamphlet in the Romanist controversy is An Old Sword Unsheathed, being a plain statement of the chief differences which exist between the teaching of the Church of Rome and the Roman Catholic Bible, largely taken from the writings of the late Dr. C. F. McCarthy. (3d. Dublin Office of Irish Church Missions.) In Vaticanism in Ireland, Mr. Wm. Pentland maintains that "altar denunciation" is a prolific source of crime and outrage, and that the Roman Catholic religion of to-day is not the ancient Irish Christian Faith. Mr. Pentland was formerly a Romanist, and he knows whereof he testifies. Scripture Proofs of the Main Doctrines of Christianity, and on the Leading Points of Controversy with the Church of Rome, is the long title of an excellent little book by Rev. Dr. Charles H. H. Wright, the well-known Biblical scholar and Protestant writer. (2d. John Kensit.)

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

A girl is prized in Kaffraria just because she represents so much property to her father. He marries her as soon as possible to any old man who will present him with many head of cattle. The older the man is the better; the sooner she will be a widow, and married a second time.

Too many fathers make their boys feel that they are of little or no account while they are boys. Lay a responsibility on a boy, and he will meet it in a manful spirit. On no account ignore his disposition to investigate. Help him to understand things. Encourage him to know what he is about.

A superintendent of a Sunday school in Rome writes:—We find many children that cannot tell who Jesus Christ is, what He has done for man, nor whether He died upon the cross or by reason of some disease. The ignorance of African or Chinese children is not much greater than that of the children of papal Rome.

There are things well worth our copying in Austria. If a boy in Vienna is left orphaned and destitute, the mayor appoints him a "father;" if a girl, a "mother." Then the little one is boarded out and the Waisen Vater or Mutter is responsible for their well-being and their being properly placed out in life when the right time comes.

COSTERS' HALL.—The Young Men's Bible Class connected with the Costers' Hall, Hoxton-street, held its annual meeting on Thursday week, Mr. W. J. Orsman presiding. The secretary gave a good report of the year's work just brought to a close. Not only have the attendances been increased by a large number, and the members also, but above all the Spirit of God has worked amongst those attending the class, and great good has been the result.

GIRLS AT PECKHAM.—Miss L. Needham, 247, New Cross-road, S.E., secretary of the Peckham Girls' Evening Home, writes:—"We have up to the present met at the Board School, which has proved very disadvantageous in many ways. We are trying to find another room. We can only afford to pay 1s. 8d. a night three times a week. We are seeking to know of a room or shop that would be suitable for our meetings in the vicinity of Rye-lane, Peckham."

Obituary.

REV. GEORGE HILL DICK.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. George Hill Dick, pastor of Eglinton-street U.P. Church, Glasgow. Though he had been in failing health for some years, he was able to preach in his own pulpit on February 19th. Catarrh of the bowels resulted in his death in the short space of three days. The deceased clergyman's ministrations extended over a period of twenty-six years, four of which were spent at Stockbridge, in Berwickshire, and the remainder in Eglinton-street, where he succeeded Rev. Dr. Walter Morrison in 1871. Highly esteemed among his ministerial brethren and by an attached congregation, his death will be deeply regretted.

MR. PHIPPEN, OF READING.

In the death, at a comparatively early age, of Mr. Phippen, nurseryman and florist, Reading has lost a devoted and faithful Christian worker, deeply interested in Gospel and Y.M.C.A. work, as well as temperance and philanthropic efforts. One who knew Mr. Phippen writes: "I should like to express the deep sorrow which is felt by the removal, at so early an age, of a useful citizen and ardent Christian worker. His burning desire to uplift the fallen and impoverished was very manifest by his endeavours to administer to their temporal wants, and then to advise them as to their spiritual interests. His regular attention to the tramps, and the fact that he was instrumental in gathering together all the known thieves of Reading to a supper, was evidence of this. As an employer he was greatly respected, not only for his skill in his profession, but also for his general urbanity and kindliness. To many his loss is irreparable, and the greatest sympathy is felt with his sorrowing widow and other relatives." It is thought that Mr. Phippen contracted the poison into his system during his work amongst the poor in the late severe weather. The seat of the blood-poisoning was near the heart, and could not be touched. He was conscious to the last, and his last words were, "He is calling me."

THE BISHOP OF MOOSONEE.

The Church Missionary Society has received a telegram announcing the sudden death, on January 12, of the Right Rev. John Horden, D.D., Bishop of Moosonee, presumably at Moose Factory, whence intelligence must have been conveyed by foot messengers to Mattawa, the nearest telegraph station. Mr. Horden went out in 1851 to Moose Fort, on Hudson's Bay, as a pioneer missionary, and was consecrated first Bishop of Moosonee on December 15, 1872. His labours have been marked with success, the whole of the Indian population of the Moose district being now nominally Christian. It is believed that the Bishop had just completed the revision of his translation of the whole Bible into Cree, into which language he had also translated the Prayer-book and several works. His widow and family were expecting his speedy return home when he had carried out his purpose of resigning, after a missionary career of forty-two years. The Bishop was sixty-five years of age.

Few (says The Yorkshire Post) may remember his old connection with Derby, but to the northern blood in his veins he doubtless owed much of the dogged perseverance and powers of staying which enabled him to work on in the mission field when numbers of younger clergy went home invalided. Horden was the very man for a pioneer, and when he went first to the territory of the Hudson's Bay country it was pioneers who were wanted. Even when a Bishop, he abated nothing of his simplicity of life. He has known the peril of starvation, with no white men within reach, and only starving Indians around him. He has been accustomed to do without things which he could not provide for himself. He could make his own clothes, procure his own food, build his own house, paddle his own canoe on the long river voyages of the Far West, and play his own harmonium at services in a settlement. He was idolised by the Indians, amongst whom he had spent his whole life, and was an object of scarcely less admiration and respect to the white agents of the Hudson's Bay Company. His successor in the field has already reached the diocese, but there is something peculiarly pathetic in the death of the Bishop so far away, just when his relatives and friends were hoping to welcome him home to the rest he had so well earned.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—At the monthly prayer meeting, held in the committee room (20, Berners-street) on Friday, Feb. 24, Rev. W. R. Mowll gave an address on 2 Cor. vi., insisting upon the need of being separated to God if we are to be in any way successful in his work. To meet the wishes of many friends, the prayer meeting for next month is altered from Friday to Thursday (March 23, at 3.30 p.m.).

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. James Sprunt concluded on Sunday last a fifteen days' mission at the Gospel Hall, New Brompton, Kent. The Lord graciously owned and blessed the preaching of the Word to saints and sinners.

Shrawley, Worcestershire.—Mr. R. Jones has just concluded a five weeks' mission in this needy part. House-to-house visitation was carried on daily by this evangelist. Many got a blessing there and then.

Rev. Thos. Cook conducted a five days' mission, from February 26 to March 2, at the Wesleyan Church, Green-lanes, Stoke Newington. The church have to praise God that all the services were attended by the power of the Holy Spirit, and much blessing is the result. Sinners were converted, and believers edified and quickened into newness of life.

Poole.—The Christians of Mount-street Hall have been much helped through Mr. David Newell, evangelist, Banbury, holding a fortnight's Gospel services. Attendances large the last Sunday, hall and class-rooms overfilled. Many professed conversion. A marked feature was his afternoon cottage meetings in many parts of the town with great encouragement.

Berkhamsted, Herts.—Mr. T. Goudie has finished a nine days' mission in Claremont Baptist Chapel. Much interest has been aroused; many have listened attentively to the Gospel. From the beginning God's blessing rested upon the meetings, and many anxious souls were dealt with in the inquiry-room. Mr. Goudie begins, on 11th inst., a twelve days' mission at New Barnet.

Mr. Rowland Sturt, of the Evangelisation Society, has been conducting a fortnight's mission at Hawkhurst, Kent. The meetings, both on the week nights and Sundays, have been well attended, and a great spirit of hearing has been manifested. Many are already expressing their gratitude for the faithful and impressive words to which they have listened, and further results are expected.

Chipping Norton.—A very interesting ten days' mission has been conducted by Mr. W. Sampson. Every preparation had been made. On the first Sunday there was a mighty move, many seeking pardon. The second Sunday was like a Pentecost, with some striking conversions. The Tuesday farewell meeting was a memorable time. The mission has produced substantial additions to the church.

Prescot and St. Helens.—A seven days' mission of remarkable power has just terminated. Rev. J. T. W. Stafford was the missioner, and his heart-searching appeals will be long remembered. The church was filled at the week-night services, and people of every persuasion and of none flocked to the services. Numbers came forward as inquirers, and the work is still going on. It is many years since such a wave of spiritual blessing passed over the town.

Rev. B. Fay Mills.—Great preparations are in progress for the evangelistic services to be held in Milwaukee by this evangelist. These meetings will begin April 5, and continue until the middle of May. For three weeks the campaign will be carried on in various districts, then all portions of the city will meet in the Exposition Building, where the closing two weeks will be devoted to mass meetings and combined efforts of evangelist and all Christian people to win souls and bring them to Christ.

Sheffield.—A successful eight days' mission, conducted by Rev. H. Owen Rattenbury, has closed at Carver-street. Visitation and distribution of invitation cards were efficiently accomplished. A wide district was mapped out into eight divisions, to each of which a superintendent was allotted, with from twelve or fifteen earnest workers. Every house in the vicinity was visited three, four, or even five times. Congregations throughout quite up to expectation, and earnestness characterised the services. During the eight days many professed to have turned from darkness to light.

Miss Radcliffe has held a week's mission at Southport in connection with the Y.W.C.A. The afternoon Bible readings proved full of interest, while the evangelistic meetings were well attended. The mission has been a season of much blessing, some having found Jesus as their Saviour, and others having taken a step forward in the Christian life, resolving that in future "in all things Christ shall have the pre-eminence." The concluding meeting on Friday night proved that our prayers had been abundantly answered, for many testified to the great blessing they had received, for which we thankfully praise our Heavenly Father. A. Swift, Hon. Sec.

Mr. Henry Thorne has just concluded a month's work at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, where his services have been greatly appreciated by the people, and blessed by God to the salvation of many souls and to the quickening and edifying of Christians. During the month the evangelist has also delivered Bible-readings to the lady workers at Deaconess House, and addressed meetings at other branches of Dr. Barnardo's work, including the Girls' Village Home at Ilford and the Boys' Home, Stepney Causeway. Mr. Thorne was able also to render assistance to Mr. Blackham, the founder of the P.S.A., who during the month, at the request of Dr. Barnardo, undertook the formation of a branch of this new movement at the Edinburgh Castle, where it promises to be a great success. S. E. B.

Leeds Central Mission.—A series of special services have been conducted here by Revs. S. Chadwick and V. C. Cook. One who was present says:—Much prayer had been offered for this special effort, and God honoured faith. Men, women, and children were saved every night. Drunkards, "gaol-birds," tramps, backsliders, and many long prayed for were the "slain of the Lord." The results are the more remarkable when it is remembered that almost without exception there have been conversions here every Sunday night during the past two and a-half years. But in spite of this we seem only to have touched the fringe of the great multitude outside the Church of Christ in this city. Truly "the harvest is great." A new convert was heard to remark he only wished all the men who were in the many taprooms in Leeds could be transferred to that meeting, and they would never enter a public-house again.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman has been conducting a united mission in Peekskill, N.Y. The merchants closed their stores part of the time of the meetings at seven o'clock every night, so that they and their employés might attend. One day was devoted to prayer, and after dinner every business house in the town closed its doors and kept them closed until the next morning. Even the saloons joined the movement. The most prominent liquor dealers in the city shut their doors. At 8.30 o'clock in the morning of that day a hundred "neighbourhood prayer-meetings" were held at various residences about town, all simultaneously. Other meetings were held during the day, and in the afternoon a monster meeting was held in the Opera House. At night another mass meeting was held, and after the Opera House was packed almost to suffocation, a large church across the street was filled with the overflow. Several hundred converts are reported. Peekskill was shaken to its foundations, and enthusiasm ran high.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been constantly engaged since New Year's Day in meetings along the Hudson River valley, commencing with the three churches of Waterford, and successively working in adjoining towns until now Albany, the largest city of the locality, has been reached. Remarkable answers to prayer and large outpourings from on high have attended these efforts, and much prayer is being offered for the mass meeting to-morrow, Feb. 19, at the First Presbyterian Church of this city. Several hundreds if not thousands of children and youth will be present. I hear also of a powerful revival at Peekskill, near by. The prayer of your readers is asked upon this whole region, where Mr. Hammond may yet labour. At a meeting recently held by him in this city the scene was described by eye-witnesses as "a Pentecostal outpouring," "Wonderful," "Never saw such manifestation of God's power." Even Mr. Hammond said the blessing was more than he had expected. May this good work go on.

Edw. D. Vance.

WAKEFIELD.—The West Riding Industrial Home for Discharged Female Prisoners is doing a good work in taking hold of women immediately they are discharged from prison, and providing them with home and work. The annual meeting of this institution was held on Wednesday week at the Home, St. John's, Wakefield. Mrs. Godfrey Armytage, hon. lady superintendent, read the report, which stated that during the past year thirty-one women had been admitted, and there were thirty-two inmates at present.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a blessing on the Conference on Continental Evangelisation in Exeter Hall on April 27 and 28.—For a mission at Parkeston, near Harwich, to be conducted by Rev. E. E. Gill, from March 18 to 28.—For a mission on Great Glenn, conducted by Rev. W. Hay Aitken, from March 11 to 24, that there may be a large number of conversions and Pentecostal power.—For blessing on special services in Magheragall Church, March 20th to 27th.—For a Christian worker of long standing in a sore trial.—A Christian in very great perplexity and trial requests the earnest prayers of God's people that he may be graciously sustained and Divinely guided, and may not be tried above that he is able to bear.—For Union Gospel Meetings now going on in Malmo, Sweden.—For a mission to be held by Rev. E. T. Reed at Lymm, March 12 to 19.—For special mission to be held at the Boaler-street Gospel, Liverpool, commencing March 12, conducted by Mr. James Wharton. PRAISE.—For tokens of blessing on a five weeks' mission conducted at Shrawley.

Personalia.

Rev. T. B. Stephenson, D.D., ex-president of the Wesleyan Conference, who was recently married to Sister Ella (Miss Macpherson), is now in Rome.

Dr. F. W. Baedeker addressed a meeting in Chatsworth-road Chapel, West Norwood, on Monday evening, on his missionary tours in Germany and Russia, and his visits to the persecuted Stundists.

Miss Cusack lectured last Thursday at Birchwood, Dedham, on "Ritualism the Stepping-stone to Romanism." Mr. R. Scott presided, and much interest was awakened by the weighty statements of the lecturer.

The Lord Chamberlain, Lord Carrington, accompanied by Lady Carrington, paid a visit to Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, on Sunday evening last, and occupied a seat on the platform during the service.

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, who is ever doing and giving for the Baptist cause in America, has just contributed £10,000 to the Northern Baptist Centenary Fund, and Mr. J. B. Colgate (whose name is also well known) has given £2000 to the same object.

Father Chiniquy writes that his house, the "Converted Priests' Home," at St. Anne's (Ill.), has been burnt to the ground, and his fine library, 2500 valuable volumes, has been reduced to ashes. Our aged friend pleads for sympathy and prayer in this heavy loss.

Mrs. Hilton, founder of the Stepney Crèche, we deeply regret to say, lies dangerously ill from a complication of gout, bronchitis, and pneumonia. According to our latest information there was a faint improvement, but the physician gives little hope of recovery.

Rev. G. W. Olver, B.A., sailed from Calcutta for Burmah on Feb. 4, having completed his work in India. His conduct of the business of the Triennial Conference of Indian Wesleyan Missionaries, says an Indian contemporary, was the subject of universal admiration.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth holds the two concluding Holiness meetings on the 16th and 23rd inst., at the Rink, Regent-street, Oxford-circus, when she will be specially pleased to see any friends who have received personal blessing at any preceding meetings of the present series.

Mr. F. B. Paton, second son of Rev. Dr. J. G. Paton, has been ordained as a missionary to the New Hebrides. His sphere will be in the cannibal island of Malekula. Mr. Paton enjoys the distinction of being the first young man born in the New Hebrides to go to that field as a missionary.

Rev. W. Y. Kelley, D.D., of New Haven, Conn., who has been elected to the editorship of The Methodist Review, is described by The New York Advocate as a preacher of rare beauty of style, an enthusiastic student of literature, a chaste writer, proficient in ancient and modern languages, and well versed in Church history and theology.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon has, we hear, resumed his evangelistic work in New Zealand for the months of February, March, and April. There is, it seems, a possibility that he may go to the United States, in response to Mr. Moody's invitation to assist in the evangelistic services at Chicago during the World's Fair. "He is evidently waiting, as we are," says The Sword and Trowel, "to ascertain the will of the Lord concerning his future movements."

The Archbishop of York has given evidence of his real interest in the serious revelations as to clerical distress, by announcing that he will contribute £1000 a year for three years, to be given in annual grants to increase the income of some of the poorest benefices in the diocese. Wishing to make the benefaction doubly efficacious, he requires that in each case the grant should be met by an equal amount, derived from the contributions of parishioners or from others interested in the parish.

Miss Mason's House of Rest.

The meetings at the House of Rest, St. John's-Wood, on Friday, were very well attended. The earnest character of all made the time one of special interest and of much spiritual refreshing. In the afternoon, Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant spoke on the abandonment of the Christian to God's will. He pointed out the satisfaction, restfulness, peace, and joy which follow the entire surrender of spirit, soul, and body to the guiding hand of the Lord. At the prayer meeting which followed, special thanksgiving was given for those friends who had at any time contributed to meet the needs of Miss Mason's work. The sum of £900 is still required to complete the Aged Workers' Home.

In the evening, Rev. J. A. Bevan gave a solemn heart-searching address, and appealed to those present to consecrate themselves and all they had, in a definite manner, to the care and keeping of the Saviour.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Miss Peacock, of Pavenham, Bedford.

We direct the attention of our readers to the powerful presentation of facts with respect to the three great moral evils that afflict India, which we reproduce on page 23, from the columns of The Methodist Times. Our contemporary has done good service to the Church of Christ by pourtraying in all their naked hideousness the trinity of wrongs that hinder the progress of the Gospel in our great Dependency.

The paper on "The Book of the Kingdom" is crowded out this week. It will appear in our next. Meanwhile we have received the following note:—

Dear Sir,—Before your useful papers on the Kingdom of God conclude, you might be glad of the following summary of the writings of the New Testament from Dr. G. A. Jacob, published thirty-five years or more ago, which I can only give from memory.

The four Gospels of Christ contain the Founding of his Kingdom; the Acts of the Apostles, the Proclamation of his Kingdom; the Epistles, the Laws and Regulations of his Kingdom; the Revelation, the Conflicts and Triumph of his Kingdom.

C. S. Bird.

Bishop's Waltham.

We regret to say that Sir Lambert Playfair, H.B.M. Consul-General in Algeria, has served a notice on missionaries of the North Africa Mission in Algeria, ordering them at once to cease their work or to withdraw from the country. In case of their disregarding this order, it is said that Lord Rosebery will withdraw the protection of the British Government. This is a serious case, and the Council of the Mission ask that it may be laid in prayer before the God of missions. Much wisdom and grace, as well as courage and determination, are needed. Pray that these may be given, and that the will of Him who sitteth upon the throne may be very plainly revealed and obediently carried out.

We desire also to commend to the prayerful sympathy of our readers, Madame Thoumaian and her husband. The latter, we learn, has been with others put into prison at Marsovan by the Turkish authorities. Full details are not known by Madame Thoumaian, who is in England, but there has been much oppression of the Armenian Christians of late.

Beholding by faith the rainbow-circled throne, and Him that sitteth upon it, should not his people possess their souls in peace? Is it not unworthy of the saints of the Most High to be over-excited and impassioned respecting the conflicts of the hour, as if there were not One sitting upon the throne? "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee." The rainbow of promise round the throne is like unto an emerald—the colour of the green earth—as if doubly to assure the seer that the rainbow is the token of God's covenant with the earth. We may be assured that our little sister, the Emerald Isle, is within the circle of his exceeding great and precious promises.

There is at the present time much distress among the London poor. An East-end missionary writes:—

Fearful cases of starvation appeal to me as I visit some 170 lodging houses, with 7742 adults living in them. I will give you a case. A young man and his wife tramped from Bristol to London in search of work. Her feet were bleeding with the rough usage when she arrived. We invited them to our free breakfast on Sunday morning. The man could not eat anything., but that is a common thing with such as have not had food for a day or two. Next day, being very ill, he was sent to the infirmary; small-pox set in, and he died. His poor young wife was taken seriously ill, and lay for a week or so in the infirmary. She is better now, and I am sending her to her broken-hearted mother in Bristol.

These sad stories should touch all our hearts. We shall be glad to receive contributions towards our fund for the relief of London poor.

We gladly note that Messrs. T. S. Heley, J. E. Taylor, and others, of considerable experience in rural evangelisation, have called an All-day Conference on Village Missions. Those who know the spiritual condition of not a few of our rural districts are well aware that the whole subject demands close and careful attention; for in many parts the ignorance of the Gospel in its simplicity and fulness is nothing less than deplorable. The Conference will be held at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Wednesday, April 19, and will, we trust, prove the means of calling forth fresh workers for a field so much neglected.

That Mr. Cremer should, for the time being, if not for the whole of the session, have lost his chance of bringing his motion before the House of Commons for the establishment of an International Board of Arbitration between this country and the United States, is much to be regretted. The Government may need the time for the transaction of the "necessary business of the country" which otherwise would fall to the "private member," but it will not be a happy circumstance if private members are reduced to mere voting machines to support or oppose the men in office. Never yet in the world's history have moral reforms been started by rulers; that work takes its rise in the convictions of the individual conscience, and proceeds through agitation and struggle to its destination in formulated law, the party in power resisting so long as they can, and then finally registering the will of the nation. We must keep individual action free, or Governments will become oppressors.

Workmen's clubs, and probably some social institutions of a higher grade, will be overhauled and reformed in the course of the present attempt to pass a Local Option Bill. The publicans are opposed to them because they intercept their trade, and can keep open for longer hours. Philanthropists oppose them because they believe them to have a demoralising influence on the people who frequent them. So between these extremes they will probably be pretty tightly squeezed, especially if the press should join in the hue and cry. Already the Christian World and the Daily News have told more of their doings than is calculated to promote their longevity.

If the workman's club is to be reformed in the matter of the sale of drink, how is the gentleman's club to be ignored or let off scot-free? At the first reading of the Bill, one of its opponents fired a broadsider into the National Liberal Club, but then he should have remembered that his remarks were applicable also to the Carlton, and in fact to almost every club there is. The cleansing process once begun, will go on from one abuse to another, the clashing of interests and the jealousies of classes helping it forward as well as the zeal of Christians. In a small American town the keepers of the large saloons joined the reforming party in sweeping away the small and most objectionable saloons; this done, the keepers of the small places retaliated by joining to suppress the large ones.

Dr. Pierson's address before the Mildmay Conference last year, on "Love in Wrath," is a timely deliverance. Exception will no doubt be taken to his precise and formal, not to say rigid, mode of thinking; but that apart, the burden of his message is good, and the age undoubtedly needs it. The extravagant lengths to which the teaching on the Divine goodness has gone, or rather the omissions from it of certain facts and truths, are already beginning to bear deadly fruit among old and young. The tone of a good deal of what one hears is not that men ought to repent and believe and be righteous, but that God and his people ought to feel much indebted to them if they will kindly do so. Is not the confessedly disorderly state of our Sunday schools, for which Boys' Brigades are the new and not wholly unobjectionable remedy, a case in point? For moral obligation we are substituting mechanical obedience.

The homage paid to religion is often very curious. The death and the funeral of M. Taine have revealed his respect for Protestantism, in which faith he had both his son and daughter taught, and according to which he himself was buried, although he did not accept its teachings. He said, according to The Times, that it "represented the traditional religious form which he desired for his children." So, too, Renan had his daughter "confirmed by a Liberal pastor." It is said that unbelievers in France generally favour, if they do not even enjoin, the attendance of their wives and children on the services of the Romish Church, and that frequently they embrace, at least in form, on their death-bed the faith they rejected when they were well. Such conduct is strangely illogical and inconsistent, not to say cowardly; for the idea seems to be to live as they like, denying God, and yet by a family proxy keeping on good terms with Him in view of the day of need.

The mistakes into which materialistic thinkers of the present day fall are by no means new, and their refutation has not been reserved for these times. To advise a course of reading in the old theologians might be regarded as an insult by "the advanced school," and yet it might save not a few from making an absurd use of terms, and from great confusion of thought. Sir W. Hamilton confesses his vast indebtedness to Augustine. The term "law," which is so commonly used in relation to the course of nature as the equivalent of power or force, as if law compelled things to follow in a certain succession, was thus defined by Dr. John Owen in his treatise on "Indwelling Sin":—"A law is taken either properly, for a directive rule, or improperly, for an operative effective principle, which seems to have the force of a law."

In an old treatise (1697) on "The Immortality of the Soul Asserted and Practically Improved," written by Timothy Manlove, a friend of John Howe, the absurdity of the idea that the soul is only a form of matter and motion, is hit off with great wit. "Is it possible," says the lively writer, "that any man in his wits should believe, that the notions of moral good and evil, the remorse of a bad conscience, and the joys of a good one, should proceed from nothing else but the shufflings and cuttings of the spirituous parts of the blood up and down the cavities and ventricles of the brain?" And again: "How came these little particles in the brain to dance themselves into a notion so foreign to their nature? Yea, or so much as to start a question about it? How comes that which, according to our author's notion, was no better than wheatmeal or malt the other day, to phansy itself immortal to-day? Sure it is well improved in a very little time." Men make no headway on these great themes without the Gospel of light and immortality.

In the March issue of The Homiletic Review, Rev. Dr. Balgarnie, of Bishop Auckland, has a thoughtful study of the miracle at Gibeon (Josh. x.), with special reference to the light which later Scripture throws upon the story. He suggests that the ancient Hebrews did not understand the quotation from the Book of Jasher as implying the actual standing still of the sun and moon. Having pointed out that this is not the only "light" miracle associated with the history of Israel, he asks:—

> Was the sudden, unexpected, mysterious flashing forth of the Divine radiance upon Gibeon the Shekinah brightness they had been familiar with in the wilderness, and whose permanence for the night was all they needed for the victory—was that in their minds the sun that stood still and the moon that did not withdraw?

Having referred to passages in which "the glory of the Lord" is described as eclipsing and outshining the natural sun, Dr. Balgarnie mentions among other references to the event, Zech. xiv. 6, in which the prophet declares that Jehovah's intervention on behalf of his people will be repeated in the latter days with all its terrible accompaniments. "The battle is to be refought, the hailstorm shall once again defeat the foe, and the day is to be preternaturally prolonged from nightfall until the morning." "Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle.... It shall come to pass that at evening time there shall be light." (See R. V., marg.). Dr. Balgarnie concludes:—

> The miracle involved no suspension of the laws of nature; had nothing in it that was intrinsically impossible; was fraught with Divine instruction to the people of God; and was a sign of the Judgment Day to his enemies.

Priesthood.

Dear Sir,—In The Contemporary Review for March is an article upon "The Holy Catholic Church" by Rev. R. E. Bartlett, excellent in tone in its references to Nonconformists, candid and plainspoken as regards the untenable position sometimes taken by Anglicans in attempting to unchurch believers who refuse to acknowledge official priesthood in the Church other than the priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ.

But in Mr. Bartlett's article some things are taken for granted which are the key of the position if he could establish them by adequate proof from authentic history, but which, in default of such proof, leave the assumption that official priests are admissible in the Christian system wholly without foundation; and the whole fabric of sacramentarianism in the hands of priests must fall to the ground. He says:—

> "Few persons who have studied the subject would now refuse assent to the very guarded and moderate statement prefixed to the English Ordinal: 'It is evident unto all men diligently reading Holy Scripture and ancient authors, that from the Apostles' time there have been these orders of ministers in Christ's Church: bishops, priests, and deacons.' For this statement in no way militates against the view put forth with unanswerable learning by Bishop Lightfoot in his 'Essay on the Christian Ministry,' that these three orders were never formally instituted by the Apostles, but were evolved gradually to meet the needs of the Church, first the diaconate, then the priesthood, finally the episcopate."

Now will some honest English Churchman, Mr. Bartlett or another, kindly favour me with the authorities for assuming that from the Apostle's time, say from the supposed date of the death of the Apostle John (or earlier), there have been in the Church these orders of ministers, "bishops, priests, and deacons"? Moreover, does not Dr. Lightfoot's admission that the three offices "were gradually evolved to meet the needs of the Church" in the following order, "deacons, priests, and bishops," contradict rather than sustain the contention that "priests" (no one denying that deacons and bishops or elders) had been recognised from the Apostles' time? Neither the English Ordinal nor Dr. Lightfoot asserts that the three offices existed in the Apostles' time, although we all know that the first and last named did so exist in their days and with their sanction; in what year of the Christian dispensation, may we inquire, was the office of priest sanctioned? Does the expression "from the Apostles' time" signify from a period during the lives of the Apostles or of some of them? or does it refer to the period immediately after the last of the Apostles died—say the close of the first or the beginning of the second Christian century? Vague assertions upon a point of cardinal importance ought to be avoided.

But we must really go back one step further. Is it conceivable that the Great Head of the Church, and his chosen Apostles in their manifold utterances and writings, extending from A.D. 60 to A.D. 90, the great formative period of the Christian dispensation, should have wholly ignored the question of priesthood, had they designed that it should have place in the equipment of the Church? To any one brought up outside of a system which has familiarised the minds of its adherents with the idea of priesthood as part and parcel of Church order, it is quite inconceivable that priesthood should be recognised only upon the authority of "ancient authors" who were not inspired men. The adage so familiar to Romanists and Anglicans—quod semper, quod ubique, quod ab omnibus—(which, be it remembered, is not found in the Word of God)—will not avail in this discussion, unless semper be held to exclude the aforesaid period from 60 to 90 of our era, and unless ab omnibus be held not to include the vast multitude of faithful people throughout the Christian age who have protested against priesthood as dishonouring to the Lord Jesus Christ.

This question is really the kernel of the controversy with Rome, and with Romanising men in the Church of England. We need have no quarrel with Episcopacy if the bishops in their rule and manner of living are in accord with Scriptural simplicity, but we prefer the alternative word which calls them "elders," a word which is never associated with prelatic pride, or lordship over God's heritage. But there must remain an undying hostility to official priesthood in the minds of Bible-loving people, as well as to its baneful product, priestcraft. Is there not a cause for warning when we behold the advancing tide of superstition and formalism within our borders? Yours truly

James E. Mathieson.

Eleventh Hour Labourers.

By Rev. F. L. Chapell.

If our Lord's parables cover the whole Christian dispensation, as some excellent interpreters suppose; and if we are now nearing the end of the dispensation, the eleventh hour labourers, mentioned in Matt. xx. 5, 6, may represent a class hitherto unemployed, but now called into service because of the urging of the work during the closing days.

The call at the third, sixth and ninth hours is more ordinary and normal, since these are the common greater divisions of the day, which labourers are wont to observe. But rarely do we hear of workmen being engaged for only the last hour of the day. The action of the householder is unusual and may represent the urgent need of hitherto unemployed labourers as the dispensation is closing.

And is not this the meaning of much that we are now beholding? Certainly a class of Christian labourers hitherto unemployed are by some power being urged into the work. And can we deny that they come at the call of the Master? Do they not also work with a zeal corresponding to the urgency of the time? Faith missions, special missions, personal missions, independent missions, undenominational missions, etc., are now added to the old-time and long-time methods of evangelisation. They do not supersede those in the field before them any more than the bicycle supersedes the use of horses and carriages, but simply meet the more urgent demand of the swift-going times.

But if the Lord of the vineyard pays these last first, and gives them equal reward with those in the field before them, are they not precious in his estimation? And are not their labours worthy of special attention? Is there not some need of report concerning these? The regularly established and old time societies have their well-known magazines and reports. Would not some special notice of the Eleventh-hour Labourers be in harmony with the spirit of the Watchword? So it had seemed to some of its conductors and readers. Something of this sort, therefore, may be expected hereafter in connection with the Watch Tidings; something that shall show the spirit and temper of those who are so strongly urged to work while it is day.—The Watchword.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

MISSIONARY FAREWELL IN DUBLIN.

A great crowd assembled in the Christian Union buildings, Dublin, on March 6th, to bid Godspeed to fourteen young men about to leave Dublin for Mr. Moody's Training School, Chicago. It will be remembered that during Mr. Moody's visit to Dublin, an offer was made by him to twenty-five young Irishmen to be trained free of expense for work in the mission field. Eleven have already been sent, and the fourteen now en route complete the number. The chair was occupied by Lord Bennet, and Major Whittle, Miss Whittle, and Mr. Stebbins also came up from Belfast in order to take part in the proceedings.

The following are the names of the men who are leaving: Mr. Wm. S. Anderson (Belfast), Mr. A. W. Davidson (Hillsborough), Mr. F. W. Wallace (Parsonstown), Mr. W. J. Agnew (Ballina), Mr. J. Cleaver (Athlone), Mr. Chas. S. Wakefield (Portadown), Mr. Richard Lambert (Omagh), Mr. Edward E. Lowans (Newry), Mr. Jno. Porter (Dunmurry), Mr. J. J. Craig (Belfast), Mr. W. M'Coy (Belfast), Mr. Colin Bain (Dungarvan), Mr. W. Hunter (Dublin), Mr. T. W. Boyce (Bessbrook). The programme of the evening was a long one, but time was found for nine of the young men to give a word of testimony and say what had led them to offer themselves for mission work. Many referred to the praying mother left behind, whose supplications for their conversion when children remained graven on their memory. "Seven years ago," said Mr. Anderson, "I heard the voice of Jesus saying 'Come unto Me and I will give you rest.'" Now He calls me the second time saying 'Follow Me, and I will make you a fisher of men,' and I say here," he added, "there is no one else who could make me leave that dear lonely mother in Belfast but Jesus Christ." Mr. Wallace referred with gratitude to the benefits he had derived from being a member of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., and urged all the young men present to join its ranks. Mr. Wakefield told of his conversion through Mr. Moody in Belfast in September last after a long period of anxiously seeking the Saviour. His resolve to go to the foreign mission field was the result. Mr. Cleaver, a fine fellow, six feet high, referred to himself as an old soldier, and one who had been much influenced by the story of the Centurion. Like him, he believed in marching orders, but when he had made up his mind to obey the command and "go," the difficulty was that he had no means and no plan of how to proceed to get into missionary work. He prayed much on the subject, and now God had graciously opened up the way through Mr. Moody's kind offer.

As each young man concluded his remarks, he was the recipient of a beautifully bound copy of the Oxford Teacher's Bible, the gift of Mr. William Fry.

Mr. Fry, in whose hands Mr. Moody had, before leaving Dublin, left the selection of the candidates, gave a short account of how he had carried out the task committed to him. There had been eighty applicants, and strict and full inquiry was made concerning each. Only those had been accepted who had given satisfactory proof that their sole object in wishing to go out was that they might be better enabled to serve Christ. With one or two exceptions, all had left situations of trust and independence for what was, humanly speaking, an uncertainty. When Mr. Fry called upon all the Christians present who would promise to pray for the young men, there was a spontaneous response from the multitude present.

After Mr. Stebbins had rendered a solo, "Go Forth," which had been specially composed for the occasion, a hearty sympathetic address abounding in luminous points was delivered by Major Whittle. He described how the words and influence of Mr. Moody many years ago had led him one night, as they stood together under a lamp in the streets of Chicago, to decide to give up his business and engage wholly in the work of preaching the Gospel, a step which he never regretted. Major Whittle also announced the interesting fact that it was owing to the success which attended the acceptance ten years ago of Mr. Moody's two first Irish candidates, Messrs. Hyde and Stevenson, members of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., that he had resolved to invite twenty-five others at the present time. Our readers will join in wishing that the men who have now gone out may render a similar good account of themselves.

At the close of the more public gathering, some twenty of the friends adjourned to the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., where much prayer was offered for God's blessing on the departing band of young men. The party had another hearty farewell meeting at Liverpool the following day, and when the ship touched at Queenstown a number of Cork friends went on board, and bade them a last Godspeed.

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL.

The fifth and last week of the mission in Bangor was truly glorious. The large gatherings, the earnestness on the faces, the breathless attention, the quiet power, the anxiety of many in the after-meetings, the warm grasp of the hand, and brightness on the face of new converts, the joy of backsliders restored, the life, liberty, and gladness among the believers, and the expressed desires and earnest prayers of many to be filled with the Holy Ghost for service, were all so unmistakably from the mighty presence of God, that we feel like shouting, "Hallelujah! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

After being here for two weeks, Messrs. Smith and Bell were obliged to leave for Monaghan. During their absence the work was carried on here by ministers of the various denominations, on all of whom the "Power from on high" rested, so that the young converts were much strengthened, and the work of grace solidified and deepened. After two weeks' absence, the evangelists returned, and a hearty welcome awaited them, the Trinity Presbyterian Church being crowded with eager listeners. During the week the interest not only continued unabated, but increased to the end of the mission.

Mr. J. Ritchie Bell sang at all the meetings, and was ably assisted by a large choir. The Gospel songs were most sweetly rendered, and not a few have had their hearts reached by melodies, telling of the Saviour's love.

A feature of the closing week was an all day of meetings, on Thursday, March 9; a number of the shops were closed all day, and most of them from three o'clock. The meeting for prayer at 8 a.m. gathered 160 people, which in a small place like this was astonishing. At 10.30, the Wesleyan Church was filled below, and part of the gallery. Rev. Jas. Robertson expounded "Christian Life," and God helped him much. Mr. Stebbins, evidently led of the Spirit, spoke a few words on "The Cross," before singing with Lord Bennet, "There is a green hill far away." Lord Bennet told the story of his conversion. The question box brought a lively time, and some very homely everyday truths were discussed, Mr. Smith, Rev. Henry Montgomery, and others answering the questions.

At three o'clock the Wesleyan Church was well packed; the subject for the meeting was Christian service. The speakers were Rev. Dr. Rogers, Mr. B. D. Wise, and Mr. W. H. McLoughlin. It was a day much to be remembered. S. G. M.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

Before Mr. McNeill left Ireland in December last he received a hearty request to return and engage in evangelistic work in the southern and western parts of the country. This mission was commenced on Sunday week, and has more than justified the wisdom of those who suggested it.

On the afternoon of that day a goodly company had assembled in the Whitworth Hall, the largest hall in Drogheda, where Mr. McNeill (who looked fatigued after his two months of unbroken labour in Scotland) gave a Gospel address from the closing chapter of the New Testament, "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." In the evening there was a much larger meeting, when the preacher discoursed with tenderness on the 23rd Psalm.

The meetings steadily grew in numbers and interest from day to day. The Magdalene Hall was filled every afternoon with town and country people, and the Whitworth Hall was packed every night with representatives of every class and section of the population of Drogheda. On Friday night there were about seven hundred persons present, a large meeting for a town in which the entire Protestant population amounts to less than nine hundred souls out of a total population of twelve thousand. All the Protestant clergymen of the town have attended, as well as a number of their country brethren, and contingents of people eager to hear the Word have driven from the neighbouring towns, including Dundalk, which is twenty-five miles distant

We have never heard Mr. McNeill preach with greater power than in his closing address on Friday night, when he expounded Paul's counsel to the Philippian Christians, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you to will and to do of his good pleasure." This great and comprehensive text he handled in a way that enchained the meeting, and no person could fail to realise that a power not of man was present.

Mr. Burke's singing of such hymns as "I heard the voice of Jesus say" and "When the mists have rolled away" will not be soon forgotten, and will no doubt remain echoing in the ears and hearts of many who seldom or never hear the words which make wise unto salvation. A. H.

MR. CHARRINGTON'S WORK.

Few people have any conception of the amount of work being done in connection with Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. On Monday last the twenty-fourth anniversary was held, and, as one speaker said, "It would take a week to relate all that was being done, and then much would be left out." It certainly is a remarkable network of evangelistic and mission operations. The sight presented every Sunday night, when nearly 5000 persons can be seen eagerly listening to the Gospel, is well worth a journey to witness, and has often been the means of stimulating Christian labourers.

Mr. F. N. Charrington, L.C.C., was the principal speaker. He thanked the numerous workers for all their assistance during the past year. He paid a telling tribute to Mr. Warry, who had been obliged to relinquish work on account of age, and, amid tremendous cheering, announced that Mr. Joseph Clarke, who used to be in the Navy, had now "signed on" to work as visitor and local evangelist. He took his hearers over the early part of the work, and showed how from small beginnings the Lord had blessed, till in that Great Hall they were holding meetings every night all the year round, and had held more than

SIX THOUSAND CONSECUTIVE NIGHTS

Gospel Temperance and other meetings. It proved that the grand Gospel had not lost its power, and he knew of no other place on so large a scale opened every night. The devil's agents are hard at work. Think of what mischief is done in those 365 music halls. The Great Assembly Hall held 1000 persons more than any music-hall in London, and was the LARGEST MISSION HALL IN THE WORLD.

He hoped the attempt of our legislators to give the people some control over the liquor traffic would not be fruitless. He related how they had recently been enabled to secure large premises for the purpose of extending their children's work, and they still needed £1000 for that part of the work. The year had closed better than the previous one, but they still required £200 for present needs. They were going to have a bazaar at Easter on behalf of the Children's Hall, and trusted friends outside would send to the Great Assembly Hall their contributions, either in work or money. The mission was inadequately supported. Their own poor people contributed over £1000 a year in weekly offerings. During the past year they did their utmost for a work that had been such a blessing to them; but he thought the rich ought to help the poor more than they did.

Miss Turner spoke of the work of the Y.W.C.A., and gave some encouraging incidents of the past year's labour. Rev. Marmaduke Hare, rector of Bow, said that ever since he came to East London he had never heard anything but good of Mr. Charrington's work. He had always rejoiced while at Watney-street, and since he had been rector of Bow he had come across many men and women who had been brought to the knowledge of the truth in Christ Jesus through the work carried on by Mr. Charrington.

Mr. R. C. Morgan felt great sympathy with the children's work, and thought the new scheme propounded by Mr. Charrington would be one of the grandest adjuncts to an already splendid work.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, very warmly commended the work of the mission to the sympathy of God's people, and addresses were also delivered by Mr. E. H. Kerwin, Mr. G. Nokes, and Captain A. Hamilton. It was a most enthusiastic meeting.

Joshua and the Land of Canaan.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

LIFE IN THE LAND.—Joshua xxii.

When the seven years of fighting came at last to an end, the children of Israel settled down to the enjoyment of their land. It was like the clear shining of the sun after a wild morning, or like a happy and prosperous manhood after a tempestuous youth. The comparative silence of the record suggests the engrossing interest with which the people gave themselves to the culture of the land and the occupation of great and goodly cities which they had not built, of houses full of all good things which they had not filled. Their cisterns which they had not hewn out poured forth refreshing waters to vineyard, oliveyard, or garden, and they ate and were full. What a delightful contrast to the march in the desert, and the garments of the warrior rolled in blood!

As it matures in Christian experience, the soul, though it never ceases to walk carefully, realises more fully the blessings of the heavily places. It is satisfied with the goodness of the Lord, and is like a watered garden. Breezes from the mountains of myrrh fan it. The air is heavy with perfume. In the exquisite language of the Song of Songs, the vines bud, their blossoms are open, the pomegranates flower, and at the door all manner of precious fruits, new and old, are laid up.

It is in such seasons that we learn the meaning of rest, the true source of unity, and the need of patience in dealing with the erring or fallen.

I.—OUR FIRST DISCOVERY IS THE MEANING OF REST.

"The Lord gave them rest round about, according to all that He swore unto their fathers" (xxi. 44). "And now," said Joshua, addressing the two and a-half tribes, "the Lord your God hath given rest unto your brethren, as He spake unto them." And this was the climax of Jehovah's dealings with the chosen people. For this He brought them up out of the sea with the shepherds of his flock. For this He put his Holy Spirit in the midst of them. For this He caused his right hand to go at the right hand of Moses, dividing the water before them, to make Himself an everlasting name. For this, He led them through the depths, as a horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble. The Divine intention through it all was that as cattle go down into the valley, with its shade and succulent pasture, to hide themselves from the burning heat, so the Spirit of the Lord should cause them to rest (Isa. lxiii. 14).

And there was a very distinct measure of rest. The land rested (xi. 23), and the people also. But it is equally clear that Canaan did not exhaust God's ideal. Fair as it was, its benediction did not go beyond the narrow circle of mere worldly prosperity and material interests. The rich man of the parable well deserved to have the epitaph fool written on his monument, because he said to his soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease. How impossible it is for the soul to take its ease, just because of some large increase in worldly prosperity! As well expect it to grow fat on husks! It was equally impossible that the mere possession of the land of promise could give rest to hearts with infinite capacity for love, or to minds with an insatiable appetite for truth. The rest of Canaan, like so much else in this book, could at the best be only a type and shadow of that spiritual repose, that holy tranquillity, that unspeakable peace, which fill the souls of men with the rest of God Himself. Listen to these words, my rest, his rest, the Sabbath-keeping of the people of God. These are more than Canaan, with the joys of harvest and the song of the treader in the press. Therefore it is truly said in the Epistle to the Hebrews, "If Joshua had given them rest, then would He [the Spirit of inspiration by the mouth of David] not afterward have spoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." (Heb. iv. 8, 9).

There is rest for us from the first, amid the foes of God, but it gets more intense as the years go on, as the hue of the sky deepens from the pale blue of April into the ultramarine of August.

The cause of this is in the ever-growing conviction that God's way is perfect, his will loveliest, his plan best. When first we enter into rest, we have to watch against distrust, to reason with ourselves that all must be well, to solace ourselves with promise and assurance. But, as the days pass, each utters speech to the next, and the accumulated voice of experience gathers volume within the secret chambers of the heart. We come to know Him whom once we did but trust. We remember that not one good thing has failed of all He promised. We see that the most threatening tempest clouds of our lives have either been dissipated or have broken in showers of blessing. We remember that things we prayed against, and fought against, have been our greatest blessings. We are driven to admit that whenever we got our way, it was gall and bitterness, but that when God had his, it was milk and honey. We confess that all the paths of the Lord have been mercy as well as truth, that light has led us, and goodness followed us, and that God has been our exceeding joy.

When such thoughts throng the heart, whilst from some summit in life we review the past, our hearts are filled with emotions of tranquil restfulness. Why should we fret and chafe, or beat our breasts against the bars, or allow our souls to be disquieted within us. All is under law, all under love, all things are working together for good. He will give grace and glory. No good thing will He withhold from those to whom He has given his only begotten Son. In Him the tenderness of motherhood and of fatherhood blend. There is not a step He does not weigh; not a path He does not winnow; not a tear the shedding of which has not been to Him a subject of anxiety; not a stab of pain, the edge of which He has not felt before it touches us; not a sorrow, the weight of which He has not felt before He allowed it to impinge. Such a God is thine, oh my soul: hush thee, trust Him, He is doing all things well, be still and at rest. Thou art as safe as if the gate of pearl were behind thee; thy joy cannot rust or be stolen; every wind is a south wind, every shore thy native land, every circumstance a rough packing-case containing the gifts of thy Father's love.

And so the rest, born of trust, gets ever deeper, because the trust enlarges with growing knowledge. The more we grow in the knowledge of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, the more absolute is our trust in his everlasting, all-pervading love, and the more unbroken is our rest. It is true that the people entered into rest when they crossed the Jordan; it is also true that seven years after, they drank higher up the stream, where the waters were more pellucid. A meet emblem this of the successive increments of restfulness experienced by those whom the Lamb leads ever further into the heart of the land, unswept by tempests, and within the limits of which there is no more sea.

II. OUR SECOND DISCOVERY IS THE TRUE CENTRE OF UNITY.

The forty thousand warriors who had so nobly fulfilled their early promise received the public thanks of the great leader, and his last advice, "Turn ye, and get you into your tents . . . . only take diligent heed to do the commandment of the Lord." He expressed also in the name of the congregation his fervent desire that they should have much cattle, silver, gold, brass, and iron, with very much raiment—words and wishes which they most certainly deserved.

When they reached the fords of Jordan, and reflected that the stream would presently divide them from the rest of the people, a sudden fear seems to have taken them, lest, in coming days, the seven tribes and a-half might say to their children, "What have ye to do with Jehovah, the God of Israel? For the Lord hath made Jordan a border between us and you: ye have no portion with us." To obviate this, and to make clear for all coming time their identity with the rest of the people, they built an altar on the western bank of Jordan. It was a great altar to see to, not intended for burnt-offering or meal-offering, or for religious rites, but as a perpetual witness that its builders were leal-hearted Israelites.

It was a great mistake. No pattern for its shape had been received from God, nor any direction as to its construction, whilst if they had obeyed the Divine instruction, that three times in the year all their males should appear before God in Shiloh, there would have been no need for this clumsy contrivance. In their view the unity of the people could not be preserved by a merely spiritual bond, but by an outward and mechanical one. The common ties of the altar at Shiloh were insufficient; there must be in addition the great altar of Ed. There was in vogue, however, a truer conception—that of Joshua and the rest of Israel.

Similarly, life in the heavenlies begets in us a truer conception of the true unity of the people of God. And here is another remarkable parallel between this book and the Epistle to the Ephesians, which, whilst it is specially the book of the heavenly places, is also the revelation of the mystery of that body which, amid the diversity of its parts, partakes of the unity of God Himself.

In the early stages of Christian life, we suppose that unity can only be obtained by the formulation of a common creed, and the inclusion of all believers in some great visible body. We build the altar of Ed. Ignorant of God's principle of unity, we make one for ourselves. In a word, we mistake uniformity for unity.

But as we go from strength to strength we discover that all true souls who meet around the altar are one. Coming from all points of the compass, fired by the same hopes, suppliants at the same meeting place, reliant upon the same blood, the common attraction establishes an organic unity, like that of the tree, the multiplicity of whose parts is subsidiary to the one life force, or like that of the body, the variety of whose members is subordinate to the one animating soul.

The nearer we get to Christ, the more clearly we discern our unity with all who belong to Him. We learn to think less of points of divergence, and more of those of agreement. We find that the idiosyncrasies by which each believer is fitted for his specific work do not materially affect those depths of the inner life which in all saints abut on the nature of the living Saviour. As the scattered sheep browse their way up towards a common summit, they converge on each other, and there is one flock, as there is one Shepherd.

It is the supreme vision of the Bible, granted to the most eminent saints, that though the new Jerusalem comprehends the names of the tribes of Israel and of the Apostles of the Lamb, is garnished by jewels of many hues, and has gates facing in all directions, it yet is one, the Bride, the Lamb's wife. What wonder, then, that the world, and sometimes the professing Church, supposes that the Lord's prayer is not fulfilled, and that the unity has yet to be made? The unity is made, but only the spiritual with spiritual discernment can detect its symmetry.

III.—WE DISCOVER THE NEED OF PATIENCE IN DEALING WITH THE ERRING AND FALLEN.

When first the tribes of Israel heard of the erection of the altar, their impulse was to go at once against their brethren to battle. Shiloh was the mustering place, for it seemed as if an offence had been perpetrated against that holy shrine.

But wiser counsels prevailed, and it seemed best to depute Phinehas and ten princes, men of note, to go as a deputation in the name of the whole congregation of the Lord. They found the warriors in the land of Gilead on the point of dispersing to their homes, uttered their remonstrance, and quoted the warning instances of Achan, and Beth-peor, as reasons for fear lest the sin of one should be visited in judgment upon all. Their contention was, that none of the tribes of Israel, or even of individual members of the commonwealth, could sin without involving the whole in judgment. "Rebel not against the Lord, nor rebel against us."

So deeply had the spirit of love wrought in their hearts, that they even proposed to share the land of western Canaan, wherein the Lord's Tabernacle dwelt, with their brethren. "If the land of your possession be unclean, then pass ye over unto the land of the possession of the Lord, and take possession among us."

There was a gentleness, a winsomeness, a desire to attract back the erring, which are quite beautiful, and in striking contrast to much that had been, and was yet to be. And it had its desired effect in eliciting a frank disavowal of any desire to turn away from following the Lord, accompanied by a simple explanation of the motives which had actuated them. Thus the whole episode resulted in a tightening of the bonds of brotherhood, and in glad protestations of thankfulness and praise. "The thing pleased the children of Israel; and the children of Israel blessed God, and spake no more of going up against them to war."

So always. The fiery persecutor ends by beseeching men by the mercies of God. The sword is laid aside for the olive branch. And we who had commenced life full of harsh judgments and impetuous heat, whilst not relaxing our steadfast allegiance to truth, learn to deal gently with the erring, restoring them in a spirit of meekness, bearing one another's burdens, and counting it a greater gain to win a brother than to overcome him in argument, or destroy him by sarcasm.

Thus, in the golden autumn, the fruit which had been acrid enough in its first inception becomes mellow and luscious. The fierce beams that struck like swords fall slanting in softening radiance; and Peter, the vehement disciple, administers consolation to suffering believers, out of a heart softened by years of attempering trial.

WORK AMONG TRAMPS.

The report of the Tramps Mission for the past year is full of interesting and encouraging facts. A new and very important sphere of labour has opened to the mission in the visitation of tramps' lodging-houses in various towns. Members of the Young Men's Christian Associations and town missionaries have responded to the appeal made to them for help, and rendered valuable service in visiting the tramps in their lodgings, reading the Word of God to them, distributing Gospels, tracts, booklets, &c. The visits have been gratefully received, and a rich blessing has rested upon the same.

During 1892 the chaplains of Unions and other workhouse authorities have welcomed the efforts of the mission in the casual wards, and testified to their great value. The tramps are encouraged to attend the religious services held by the chaplains, and many avail themselves of the opportunities. In the casual departments of the Unions there are waiting or reception rooms, and it is in these that the tramps are assembled on Sundays. It is an affecting sight to witness the fixed and eager attention of these friendless and homeless ones, as the message of God's love to the lost and perishing is given. One happy result of these efforts has been that many tramps have given up their wandering life, and in the fear of God are now earning an honest livelihood.

Some affecting incidents, the results of efforts put forth to win souls to Christ, are given in the report, and the committee trust that friends will be glad to participate in this work of faith and love. The secretary, Miss Barnett, 2, Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham, will be glad to give further information.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE IN INDIA.

Mrs. Haig writes from Ahmednagur, Bombay:—Our special work is the training of native Christian lads and young men as teachers for mission schools, and our old students are employed as teachers, preachers, evangelists in most mission stations where the Marathi language is spoken. We have also day and Sunday schools for Hindu children, and they have been fruitful in many conversions.

From the beginning our society has devoted much attention to the preparation of Christian literature for Indian readers. In the early days of the society readers were few; now, though the percentage of those who can read is still low in comparison with Christian countries, yet it has enormously increased during the last few years; and to meet the wants of this ever-increasing number, our society is devoting special attention to this branch of its work. The majority of the people are poor, and in order to be within their reach, the books have to be sold under cost price.

Now is the time of opportunity for getting good pure books into the hands of the young before their minds are defiled by the low and impure. A few months ago we made a new departure in coloured picture books—'The Life of Christ,' 'Ruth,' and 'Esther.' These met with a ready sale, and the edition of the 'Life of Christ' is already exhausted. The books have found their way into many zenanas and dark homes, and so made known the story of the life and death and resurrection of the Saviour of the world. The Secretary of our society is Rev. J. Johnston, Christian Literature Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

A BILL has been introduced to the United States Senate which, if it becomes a law, will give stricter prohibition to Alaska than it has ever had.

The Divine Promises.

By D. L. MOODY.

Let me say a word or two about the promises given in the Word of God. Some people seem to think that a good many of these promises are unreliable. There are certain promises that they think have never been broken; but they do not see how others are going to be fulfilled. Some promises, of course, they see fulfilled every day, and they cannot help believing them. I believe you could heave an ocean sooner than you could break a promise of God.

But we have got to remember that some of the promises were given on conditions, while others were unconditional. God promised to Adam in Eden that the world should have a Saviour, and no power on earth or in perdition could prevent Christ coming into the world at the appointed time. Again, when Christ was about to leave the earth to return to the glory, He said He would send down the Holy Ghost—the promise of the Father. There was no condition attached; He did not say that if the apostles did so-and-so, the promise would be fulfilled. And so, ten days after He had ascended on high, the Holy Ghost came. There are other unconditional promises in God's word, and I merely mention these two to show what I mean.

There were other promises to which conditions were attached. For instance, we read in Psalm lxxxiv. 11: "No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." If I am walking uprightly in the sight of God and man, I can claim this promise; but if I am not I cannot claim it. The promise is only for those who fulfil the condition. Again in Deut. xi. 26, 27, there is a promise made to the obedient: "I set before you this day a blessing and a curse; a blessing if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you this day; and a curse if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God, but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods, which ye have not known." Here there is a distinct promise to the obedient, and also a threat uttered against the disobedient. If I am disobedient and disloyal to the truth I cannot hope to receive the blessing that is offered to the obedient. But if I am an obedient child and walk consistently in the commandments of God, I can claim the blessing instead of the curse.

Take the promise made to Abraham in Gen. xv. 5, "Look now toward heaven and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and He said unto him, so shall thy seed be." There is not a word said here about Abraham being obedient or disobedient; it was an unconditional promise of what God would do. That promise has been literally fulfilled. Every Jew that you meet is a walking monument of the faithfulness of the covenant-keeping God in his promise made to Abraham. To-day, Abraham's seed are like the stars of heaven for number, or as the sands on the seashore. His descendants are not to be reckoned amongst the other nations; they have been kept distinct and separate all these centuries.

In America there may be found those of almost every nationality under heaven—English, Scotch, Irish, French, Germans, Italians, Bohemians, etc. All these, before they are very long in the country, become so Americanised that you cannot tell where they came from. But if you take a Jew to America, and keep him there for 500 years, he will be a Jew still. They do not mix with other peoples.

I would doubt my own existence as soon as I would doubt the Word of God. I do not know where all the unbelief in the present day comes from. If we only let the Scripture speak for itself, we shall see that all these promises of God are going to be fulfilled. Christ said, "The Scriptures cannot be broken." For six thousand years men have been trying to break God's Word; but they have not done it, and they never will. So when we come to a promise that is for us, let us believe it, and lay hold of it.

Take again the promise made by God to Joshua. "No man shall be able to stand before you all the days of your life if you meditate on the law of God and do it. Be of good courage." Joshua was a man of great courage, and no man was able to stand before him. When the Israelites got their eyes off God they became so discouraged that one giant nearly scared them out of their wits. But in the days of Joshua, the towns and villages of Canaan were full of giants; yet they could not stand before the people of Israel, because they had this promise of God behind them.

Turn over to the closing part of the book of Joshua. The old hero is going home. He calls around him the elders of Israel, and here is his dying testimony: "Behold, this day I am going the way of all the earth; and ye know in all your hearts, and in all your souls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spake concerning you; all are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof" (Josh. xxiii. 14). Everything had been fulfilled to the letter. Joshua had tested God forty years in the brick kilns of Egypt, forty years in the wilderness, and thirty years in the promised land. At the age of 110 the old warrior is going to his rest, and his last testimony is to the unfailing goodness and faithfulness of God. You will find that it is those who do not feed upon the promises who are finding fault with God, and say that He does not keep his word. Any man or woman who feeds on them and complies with the conditions will prove them to be true. They are like the old Scotchwoman who had certain promises marked in her Bible with the letters "T.P." Someone asked her what it meant, and she said it stood for "Tried and proved." Every time she found a promise come true in her experience, she put the letters down—tried and proved.

If you want to draw comfort from these promises look well to see if you are complying with the conditions; if you are, lay hold of them and make them your own. There is an old saying that "there is no desert without a fountain, and no night without a morning." And there is no sorrow on earth for which you will not find some promise of comfort in the Word of God, if you will only look for it and fulfil its conditions. Even if you have got into some darkness or bondage, if you are a child of God, you will get a promise that will help you and lead you, if you will come to the old Book.

MISSIONARIES FOR S. AMERICA.

South America has for some time been on the hearts of Dr. Grattan Guinness and those who labour with him at the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions. Some of the students have shared the concern for the unevangelised millions of that neglected continent, and five of them — Messrs. R. Stark, F. Peters, J. Jarrett, T. Joyce, and T. Berkeley—are hoping, at an early date, to proceed to their sphere of labour.

In a circular just issued, Dr. Grattan Guinness says:—"In the September number of Regions Beyond for 1891, we published an article on the needs of Peru. We referred to its extent, to its coast line, 1400 miles in length, its lofty mountains higher than the Alps, its broad plateaux traversed by railways, one of which crosses the Andes at an altitude of 15,600 feet, and to its mixed population of 3,000,000 of souls waiting for the word of life. In Lima, the capital, whites, Indians, blacks, and Chinese are intermingled. The aboriginal Inca Indians form fifty-seven per cent. of the population of the country. The prevailing language is Spanish, and the State religion is Romanism. Peru is in a sadly neglected condition. Lima has the reputation of being 'one of the gayest and grossest capitals in the world.' The native Indians are 'wholly uncared for by the Government in every sense—religious, educational, and political. The "priests" of the various provincial districts are habitually drunken, extortionate, and ignorant.' Among the many towns in Peru calling for missionary labours we may mention Truxillo, with a population of 13,000 souls, Arequipa with 20,000, Huamanga with 26,000, and Cuzco with 40,000. We are glad to say that some hearts have already been stirred by our article on Peru to feel for its needs, and that several of our students have volunteered for missionary work in that country, and in the neighbouring state of Bolivia."

Four other missionary volunteers from the Institute are: Mr. James Hayter, who goes to Honduras; Mr. Charles Pittman to South Africa; Miss Matson to South Africa; and Miss Watz to China.

PRAYER UNIONS.—The annual conference of the Associated Prayer Unions will be held at Exeter Hall on Monday, March 27. The conference will be composed of representatives of the various University, professional, and business prayer unions, but the public will be very heartily welcomed. Devotional meeting, 4.30; conference, 5 p.m.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

IX.

THE SEVEN EPISTLES AND THE SEVEN PARABLES.

"In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established."—2 Cor. xiii. 1, quoted from Deut. xix. 15.

Such, as we have already seen, is the Divine procedure in matters of prophetic testimony, as well as the Divine law relating to legal evidence. In several important instances, Joseph's, Pharaoh's, and Nebuchadnezzar's dreams, the revelation was "doubled" in order to attest its certain accomplishment. And such, it has been suggested, is the method adopted in the Apocalypse, where "the things which (were) shortly to come to pass" were prefigured in a twofold series of visions,—the seven seals opening out into the seven trumpets, and the seven signs expanding into the seven vials. Such, it is urged by some, is also the case with regard to the Epistles to the Seven Churches, to which a parallel is found in the seven parables of our Lord in Matt. xiii.

The subject is deeply interesting. In those epistles (chs. ii. and iii.) was revealed to the Apostle the view of the spiritual condition of the seven churches which were in Asia, as seen by Him whose eyes were as a flame of fire, and whose omniscience was infallible. It has, however, been held by many that not only was the condition of the whole Church then militant here on earth (represented by the seven localised churches) made known, and thereby the characteristics of the visible Church in all ages exhibited,—but that beneath the surface there lay a prophetic description of the successive conditions of her spiritual history,—beginning with the Ephesian and ending with the Laodicean stage.

It cannot be said that this is a fanciful or far-fetched view. It is at least open to thoughtful examination, and may be found to have much to support it in the agreement of the facts of history with the Divine delineation. And its probability would be greatly increased if it appeared likely that the order in which the various phases were described corresponded with that exhibited in another sevenfold series of utterances by our Lord concerning the Church.

That there is such another series is undoubtedly the fact. The seven parables of Matt. xiii. relate to "the Kingdom of Heaven," the term so constantly used by Christ to denote that polity—that outward and visible Church—which He came to establish on earth. And that there is much to lead to the supposition that the two series are very closely connected, is also the case.

Apart from the contents of the parables and of the epistles, there are three very remarkable points of correspondence, quite sufficient of themselves to suggest identity of subject. First, there is the fact that the seven parables are expressly declared to relate to "the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. xiii. 11), and that the seven churches are represented by "the mystery of the seven golden candlesticks" (Rev. i. 20). Next, is the repeated call for attentive and intelligent hearing uttered by our Lord (Matt. xiii. 9 and 43), corresponding to the urgent warning of the Spirit to the same effect, seven times sounded (Rev. ii. and iii.). And lastly, there is the peculiar and significant coincidence in the change of position of our Lord, in the midst of the parables, and of the Spirit's call in the midst of the epistles. For it will be seen that in the first case Jesus left the seaside, where He had been speaking to the multitude, at the close of the fourth parable, and spoke the remaining three to the inner circle of his disciples; and that at the close of the fourth epistle the Spirit's warning call follows, instead of preceding, the promise to the overcomer; i.e., instead of it being addressed to the Church as a whole, it is spoken to the select number who are really engaged in the conflict.

These are presumable indications of identity of subject, and of the method of its treatment. The next question is whether there is internal evidence in each of the series in favour of the hypothesis that the revelations of the seven parables and of the seven epistles have a chronologically successive meaning. An extremely interesting, as well as exhaustive, inquiry into this part of the subject will be found in a work, which I believe is not widely known, but which deserves most careful examination. I refer to "The Javelin of Phinehas; or, Christ's own Judgment upon Christendom," by the late Rev. William Lincoln, and it is mainly therefrom that I now extract the following condensed statement of the points of correspondence between the two series of utterances from the lips of the Great Prophet, and of the alleged applicability of their teachings to the principal features of the growth of error in the visible Church during the past eighteen hundred years. It is, of course, impossible within the limits of this paper to do more than present the matter in the very briefest form, a method which, while it invites inquiry, deprecates hasty judgment.

Assuming, then, as an hypothesis, that in the seven parables and the seven epistles is exhibited a twofold and parallel prophetic view of the course of the Church—both true and false—in its relation to the world, the successive periods may be indicated as follows: premising that each stage of moral character does not necessarily terminate with the end of the particular parable or epistle, but is to be found, more or less, in all, the main features relating to the special period concerned being prominent. It must, moreover, be borne in mind that the parallel view is not necessarily one of similarity, but often of contrast, and that it is the view not easily apparent to all, but pre-eminently that taken by the Lord Himself, and presented in both series in language and symbols of peculiarly mysterious character.

First Parable.—This, while setting forth certain main features of the Kingdom of Heaven, common to every stage of its history, discloses the fact that from the very first, the unfruitful hearers would be to the fruitful in the proportion of three to one, thus laying the foundation for the mixture of the false with the true.

First Epistle.—Exhibits a condition of the Church in which it is manifest that there are a number of "them which are evil," of false professors of religion, "liars" who claimed to be "apostles," and "Nicolaitanes," i.e., destroyers of the people, by means of union with the world.

Second Parable.—This, like the first, is applicable to the whole of this dispensation. It commences with the earliest sowing of the seed by the Son of Man, and continues to the end of the age and the establishment of the kingdom of glory. But it declares the solemn truth that, from the beginning, Satan's work has been to produce a counterfeit of the true Church, to mingle the tares with the wheat—"the children of the kingdom" with "the children of the wicked one."

Second Epistle.—Also reveals the presence in the Church of those falsely claiming to be Abraham's seed, while really of the "Synagogue of Satan"; and then predicts the terrible persecution under Diocletian, which lasted exactly ten years (or ten prophetic days), from A.D. 313 to 323. The name, Smyrna (myrrh), may perhaps be regarded as symbolising the fragrance resulting from the bruised and suffering condition of the churches.

Third Parable.—Brings to view the visible Church, or "Kingdom of Heaven." It has now become a tree, wide-spreading, influential, imposing, and the "fowls of the air" (interpreted as "the wicked one," verses 4 and 19), make it their abode.

Third Epistle.—Also speaks of Satan's dwelling-place or "throne." The "deeds" of the Nicolaitanes have developed into "doctrines" akin to the doctrine of Balaam, and union with the world has thereby been regularly established. Yet a faithful testimony to Christ, even unto death, is still maintained.

Fourth Parable.—The woman hiding leaven in the meal till the whole is leavened. Leaven, the invariable type of subtle evil, is surreptitiously introduced. A woman, type of the Church (whether true or false), is the agent; resulting in the permeation of the whole mass by the corruption. "The Church, the Church," is now the cry.

Fourth Epistle.—"That woman Jezebel" is the prominent character, actively promoting the corruption of the Church by seducing to conformity to, and union with, the world—or spiritual adultery—the very "depths of Satan." The nominal Church not only leading the movement, but, like Jezebel, fiercely persecuting the true servants of God.

Fifth Parable.—A small treasure, yet so unspeakably precious that the finder, to procure it, gives up all, is in the large field, and the field is "the world" (see v. 38). The few jewels among the mass.

Fifth Epistle.—Much outward profession of life,—"a name that thou livest," but in reality a condition of death (the inevitable result of spiritual adultery, predicted in the preceding epistle, ch. iii. 23). But a few living witnesses, undefiled with the world (compare ver. 4 with Jas. i. 27). A bold testimony to the truth is delivered by such. The "names" of the "few" are prominent in the history of Reformation times.

Sixth Parable.—In this is again set forth the value to the seeker of the "one pearl of great price." There the world drops out of sight, and the Church is alone seen in her unity,—one in the sight of her Saviour, and one in the realisation of her members.

Sixth Epistle.—If the previous epistles have found their counterpart in the successive conditions which have characterised the Church, this, which is addressed to that of Philadelphia, or "brotherly love," may well be regarded as denoting the period in which Christians have learned to ignore outward names, and to recognise the unity of the body to a degree previously unknown. This is the day of the open door for service, and at the same time of an immense amount of outward but unreal profession—men claiming to be the true people of God, or "wheat," but in reality of "the synagogue of Satan," "tares" of his sowing. A day, too, of quickened expectation of His return, who saith, "Behold, I come quickly."

Seventh Parable.—Clearly relates to the end of the dispensation, touched on already in the parable of the tares, but here the exclusive subject. The final separation of the good from the bad, and the rejection of the latter.

Seventh Epistle.—Reveals the fearfully corrupt condition of the professing Church; thoroughly self-satisfied, full of influence, riches, and power, but with Christ so entirely out of her sight that He is represented as standing without her walls, and addressing Himself to the individual believer, here and there, who will hear his voice. The rejection of the professing mass, as loathsome and disgusting to Him, is declared.

It will probably be admitted, on an examination of the two series of Divine teachings, that there is at least some ground for the supposition that they are both intended to serve a double purpose—first, to declare truths of the most important character concerning the condition of the Church at all times of this dispensation; and then to afford a consecutive view of her history with especial reference to her fatal alliance with the world. This latter element may be more apparent in the seven epistles than in the seven parables. Indeed, the correspondence of some of the delineations with certain phases of that history are so striking that even Archbishop Trench, who strongly opposes the consecutive view, is compelled to allow it. "Smyrna," says he, "represents excellently well the ecclesia pressa in its last two and most terrible struggles with heathen Rome. So, too, for such expositors as see the Papacy in the scarlet woman of Babylon, the Jezebel of Thyatira appears exactly at the right time, coinciding with the Papacy at its height, yet at the same time with judgment at the door, in the great revolt which was even then preparing."

Both together, they afford a most marvellous exposition of the view which the Great High Priest takes of Christendom, and of that union of the Church with the world, which, whether in the days which were before the flood, in the times of Israel in the wilderness, and subsequently when established in the land, and then in the Christian dispensation, it has ever been the object of the enemy to bring about. Too well has he succeeded. Christendom in the mass is little better than a baptized Paganism. The leaven has corrupted the whole. Happy are they who hear and obey the voice from heaven, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

QUA IBOE.—Messrs. Bill and Baillie, with their wives and two native teachers, labour here, on the West Coast of Africa, among a population of 500,000 people, hitherto unevangelised. During five years of self-denying work a church of forty members has been gathered, and twenty or thirty attend the inquirers' classes. The influence of the Gospel is extending and deepening, and about forty refugees—accused of witchcraft, which is punished by instant death—live with their families on the mission ground, and so are saved from their doom. The converts include a chief, who has shown ample evidence of change of heart. The new report is very encouraging. Copies may be had from the hon. sec. of the mission, Mr. D. C. Hamilton, 43, Laburnum-terrace, Belfast.

Cross-bearing.

BY DR. HUGH MACMILLAN.*

This law of the kingdom is to be carried out in every cross-bearing which we have to endure. If we bear it patiently we rob it of its sting, and convert it from a bane into a blessing. We make the thorn that wounds us to blossom and fruit for our good. We act as the freemen of Christ, who are forced by outward circumstances, but who yield their souls a living sacrifice, and whose acts are therefore priceless, free. We are perpetually meeting the Crucified One on the path of life. We are continually impressed into his service. We are "compelled to go with Him a mile" on the path of duty. We are commanded to deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow Him along the strait and narrow way that leads to Gethsemane and Calvary.

We are, it may be, in a situation where those about us are disagreeable, and the circumstances trying and the duties unpleasant. We are tied down to a work we dislike, while we are filled with longing for a work which we love; bound to some mechanical, inferior employment, while we feel within us faculties and inspirations for higher service. We are placed, perhaps, in homes which have no attraction or brightness for us, while we have visions of the Eden that might be ours if our circumstances were different. We are wronged or maligned, or undervalued or unloved, wrestling with care, or sorrow, or penury.

We come in, as it were, from the country, like Simon the Cyrenian, thinking only of our own selfish pursuits and enjoyments, and at the strait gate of life, in some crisis of our history, we encounter the Crucified One, and life puts on to us at once a painful aspect. Our holiday pleasure is spoiled, our plans are thwarted, and henceforth we have to gird ourselves for toilsome effort and patient endurance.

The Saviour is thus constantly crossing our path, meeting us as He is said to have met Peter, in the beautiful legend of the Early Church, on the Appian Way, when he was fleeing from the persecution of Nero. "Lord, whither goest Thou?" said the trembling and awestruck apostle, as he saw his Master with his face and step steadfastly turned towards Rome. "I go back to Rome to be crucified a second time," was the reply; and the conscience-stricken apostle, ashamed of his cowardice, went back at once to die with his Lord the martyr's death. Jesus is meeting us, bearing his cross, and asking us to take it from Him, to help Him in the form of some hard duty, some painful self-denial, some humbling employment, some patient endurance of suffering or wrong.

Whatever form of cross-bearing is laid upon us, we feel at first that it is a pressed service, a compulsion which is trying and oppressive. We feel the pain of having to give up our own way, and so have our liberty restricted. At first we are filled with resentment against the Gospel of Christ for spoiling our plans and pleasures. But by-and-by, as God's grace works in us, and makes us willing, the service that we most hated we shall learn most to love. The cross that crushed us to the earth will support us and lift us to Heaven; the things that seemed against us we shall find working together for our good; the compulsion of painful circumstances that brought us to Christ will issue in richer life and grander liberty; and the constrained service will be changed into a lifelong fidelity. How thankful should we be to be brought into Christ's companionship, even if it be by the pressure of the heaviest cross that was ever laid upon human shoulders! How thankful should we be that we may still carry Christ's cross for Him by being crucified in our own souls to the love of sin and the world; by bearing our own sufferings patiently and meekly, and thus knowing the fellowship of his sufferings; by sharing with Him his love for the souls of men and his keen solicitude for their everlasting salvation, undertaking the heavy labours connected with the preaching of the cross, and enduring full sympathy with Him, continual sorrow of heart because of the sins and pains of the ungodly. . . .

We cannot, indeed, in one sense help Christ to bear his cross. Our sufferings, our merits, will not be allowed to compete for a single moment with his infinite atonement. In the sense in which we need Him as our Saviour from sin He stands alone—in an awful supremacy of suffering and in a glorious supremacy of grace. He has trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there were none with Him. And He might have carried on the work of grace which He thus inaugurated unaided, as He finished the work of creation without help of man or angel. Who are we, and what is our power of service? We are dismayed and disheartened when we think how little we can do in contrast with the magnitude of the work. And yet one of the deepest things in Scripture is the assurance that God has need of us—that He cannot carry on his work of salvation without us. Not more truly did Simon the Cyrenian help Jesus to carry his cross on Calvary than we can help Him still in making that cross efficacious in healing the sins and sorrows of the world. The cross is ours as well as Christ's. There is a Divine necessity laid upon us. We are under Divine compulsion to carry the cross of Christ into the heart of the world's sufferings, to bring its soothing and elevating and healing power to bear upon the case of those who feel life's burdens too wretched to be borne. The love of Christ constrains us. By the irresistible power of that love which even the cross itself has left unexhausted, let us help the Lord to bear the burden of the world's misery, and by bearing it to bear it away, and so end it for ever.

And assuredly we shall find that such gracious compulsion is our grandest freedom and expansion of soul; and such love-constrained service the highest blessedness of man. And whatever be the cross we ourselves may have to bear—and life for each of us is full of crosses—cross purposes, cross callings, cross relationships, cross necessities, cross circumstances and issues of life—let us seek to carry our cross for the sake and in the spirit of Christ, as the Divinely-appointed means by which we are to be crucified with Him to the world and the world to us. And however long it may remain, and however hard it may press, we shall assuredly realise the truth of Christ's own words, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." If we take up the cross of others our own cross will fall; and if we take up our own cross and follow Christ, our sorrow will be turned into joy. The cross will crown us, and our bondage will make us free.

LEPERS IN JERUSALEM.

The twenty-first report of the Leper Home is a record of devoted work under the auspices of the Moravian Church. At the end of last year there were twenty-four patients, eleven men and fourteen women. In most cases the disease had made terrible ravages upon the wasted frames. On the whole the inmates lead lives of contentment, thanks to the efforts of the "house father," Mr. Karl Schubert, and those who work under him.

The Word of God is highly prized by some of the lepers. One has declared that "were it not for the comfort that we derive from God's Holy Word, we should have died in despair long ago." The workers aim at spiritual results, and they are cheered by many indications of God's blessing. What but the grace of God could lead one stricken inmate to say, "Leprosy is nothing to me so long as the Lord is on my side"; and another to exclaim, "Surely it is better to be a leper and have fellowship with Christ, than to be in good health and far away from God"?

Three of the lepers died during the year. One of them was Salieh, the young man who penned the grateful letter which Bishop La Trobe published in his pamphlet, "Work among Lepers." At the last he was asked whether he was at peace. "Yes," he whispered, "there is peace, there is light, there is joy." The others both confessed Christ, the last words of one of them being "Whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's."

There is also work done among the lepers outside the Home. Copies of the report may be had from the secretary, Rev. B. La Trobe, 7, Furnival's-inn, E.C. The position of treasurer, held by the late Dr. Drury, of Bournemouth, has been accepted by Mr. H. Osborne Essex, 12, Fleetwood-street, Southport.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS MIRACLES.

Since our Lord says so much about his works as strengthening his claim to our faith, we must not pass them by unnoticed. There is a wrong way of looking at the miracles of Christ. Among the multitudes who followed Him there were not a few in whom the miracles excited nothing but wonder. Such persons regarded Christ much as they would regard a mere conjurer able to do extraordinary things. Do you remember how "exceeding glad" Herod was to see Him? But it was only because he hoped to have a little sport out of Him by seeing some of his miracles (Luke xxiii. 8, 9). Before such a man Jesus will do no work, and speak no word. His miracles were for a higher and holier purpose than that of gratifying the curiosity of one whose heart was entirely closed against Him. Do not fall into the same mistake. If you delight to think of his miracles, seek also to know why He performs them. How do they help you to believe in Him?

(1) They are the evidence of his being sent from God. Moses was sent from God to the Israelites in Egypt. "But," said Moses, "how shall they believe that Thou hast sent me?" Three signs were given him to show the people. First, his rod cast upon the ground became a serpent, and again became a rod in Moses's hand; next, his hand put into his bosom became leprous, and again was made whole as before; and, third, the water of the river poured upon the dry land would become blood (Exod. iv. 1—9). These miraculous signs were to convince the people, so that they might be assured that in receiving Moses they were receiving God who had sent him. Jesus is the Sent One from the Father. For evidence of this He often appeals to his works. He describes this witness as greater than that of John the Baptist (Jno. v. 36). When men were rejecting Him He showed that they were without excuse because they had the evidence of his works (Jno. x. 25, 37, 38). To Philip He said, "Believe Me, that I am in the Father, and the Father in Me; or else believe Me for the very works' sake" (Jno. xiv. 11). Nicodemus admitted the testimony of his works (Jno. iii. 2). They are not unimportant to us. We know from their testimony that He was sent from God, and that God was with Him (Acts x. 38). How could we refuse One who comes with such credentials? What the prophet foretold has been fulfilled in his life, "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing" (Isa. xxxv. 5, 6).

(2) They symbolise the work He does. Some of Moses' miracles were terrible judgments upon Pharaoh and his people. So also were some of Elijah's. It was the mistake of James and John that they wanted to repeat similar miracles of judgment (2 Kings i. 5—12, with Luke ix. 54). None of the miracles of Jesus were of that character. Only one could be described as a miracle of judgment, and that was upon a leafy, yet fruitless tree, not upon a living person (Mark xi. 20). He came, not to destroy, but to save; and his miracles were in keeping with the object of his coming. He is repeating now in the spiritual experience of men just what He did when on the earth. As then He had power over every bodily disease, so now has He power over all the diseases of the spirit. Learn to make this practical use of his miracles. Was He ever confronted with a case too difficult for Him to meet? Not one. The blind, the dumb, the lame, the palsied, the demon-possessed—He could deal with them all. Even death was powerless against his word. The disciples might be baffled (Mark ix. 18), but He never! Do you ever complain of spiritual sickness? Remember his power is just as unlimited in meeting your need. He can remove blindness from the heart; can open dumb lips; can heal backsliders; and can quicken even the dead. Expect a salvation worthy of Him.

His miracles help you—do they not? Read them again; and see in every one an evidence that Christ is what He claimed to be. The Saviour whom we trust is manifestly sent and indwelt by the Father.

"MY FATHER'S HOUSE."

John xiv. 2.

"My Father's house." This is Jesus's name for heaven. How simple, how beautiful, how attractive it is. The Apostle John once had a glimpse of it, and he did his best to describe it in the closing chapters of Revelation. He tells how beautiful it was, the very street being of pure gold, and the gates, each one was made of a single pearl. But when we think of our homes it is not of their beauty, or grandeur, but of the loving hearts that are there; and when Jesus thought of heaven it was as "My Father's house."

No one could have described it better than He. He had not paid it only a short visit: He had lived in it thousands of years, and He knew it very well. He was shortly to return to it; it was dearer to Him than ever, and the dearest thought of all was that it was his Father's house. How pleasant it must have been to Him to know that very soon He would see home, sweet home, again.

You boys and girls have some place here that you call "My father's house." You are very fond of it, it is the centre of your very life, for in it dwell those who are nearest and dearest to you. To you there is no place like home; you would not exchange it for any in all the wide wide world.

The great wish of Jesus Christ is that all of you should be his brothers and sisters. He came down here to lead us all to know God as "Our Father," and so to touch our hearts with love to Him that we should think of his Father's House as our future home.

But at present you are living in a world that has many dangers, many pitfalls for unwary feet, and you must be careful how you walk and where you walk, so that you may reach that Home at last. If you had wandered away from your home down here, and wished to return, you would not take the first path you met, you would make careful inquiry from those you thought knew the way best.

I cannot see your hearts, but I want you all to ask yourselves, Am I on the right road to the place Jesus called "My Father's house"? If you think more of pleasure, and how to please yourself, let me tell you that you are wandering farther away from it. There is a narrow path that leads straight to it. Do not be afraid, if you are in downright earnest you cannot miss it. You will see in it the footmarks of Jesus all the way.

Oh, happy, happy will you be if your little feet step in them. They may lead you to trial, and danger, and temptation, but if you will stick to the footmarks they will lead you on in perfect safety to your Father's house.

As you get near the end of the journey, you may be afraid of the stream that you will have to cross. Oh, so many are afraid of the river of Death. It flows through a dark valley, but there is nothing in it to harm you.

With Jesus as your friend you will not find it a roaring torrent deep and wide, but a stream which you can safely wade over.

There are many children just now that are at school, and they are going home very shortly to spend Christmas, and they are so joyful about it that they take no notice of things which at other times would greatly annoy them. Why? They are going home! And so the troubles of this world and death itself are as nothing to the dear child of God, whose heart is filled with joy because he is going home to the place Jesus called "My Father's house."

EAST LONDON "CRIPPLES."

Rev. J. L. Brooks and Mrs. Brooks, of Stepney, invited about 250 crippled children (members of C. L. Boyer's "Home Cripples' Band") to tea at the meeting house last Friday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks welcomed the little arrivals, and loving hands soon made them comfortable and happy. Terribly afflicted as so many of them are, yet their smiles and calls of recognition to the workers manifest the value of this work in helping to relieve them of the burden of their pains.

After tea short addresses were delivered by various friends. Recitations and sacred songs were rendered by members of the band.

"DID HE DIE FOR ME?"

Words of a little nine-year-old Hindu girl, on first hearing the story of the Crucifixion from the lips of Mrs. N. F. Oldham, in India.

The Christian teacher was telling
The story of Jesus' love;
How he left the mansions in glory,
And his beautiful home above,
To come to earth's sin and sorrow,
To suffer and die for men;
And her heart strangely warmed as she told it,
Though repeated again and again.

There were thoughtful dusky faces
Upturned to catch each word;
There were eager, wondering glances,
For these had never heard
Of a tender, loving Saviour,
Who cares for the children too,
And it came in strange revelation,
This story so sweet and new.

One little Hindu maiden
Among the group that day,
Overcome with deep emotion,
To her tears and grief gave way,
As with wringing hands outreaching,
She cried, "O, can it be
This Saviour, this dear, loving Saviour,
Did truly die for me?

"No one ever before has told me
A story I love so well.
Will you say it again, dear teacher,
So that I may go and tell
Of the love of such a Saviour—
Even mine you say to me?
I'm so glad you came to tell us
That he died for even me.

"May I go and tell my people
Of this Christ who died to save,
And of God, who loves the wide world so,
That his only Son He gave
To be such a gracious Saviour,
That He reaches across the sea,
And has sent some one to tell us
That He died for even me?"

THE INVALID SISTER.

"I wonder, sister, if the Lord
Is thinking of us now,
As there He sits upon his throne,
With radiance on his brow?
I wonder if He thinks of us,
At such an hour as this,
With thoughts of gracious sympathy,
And loving tenderness?"

"He does, I know, my sister dear,"
The elder one replied;
"I know He loves us with a love
So often proved and tried;
He thought of us when He, in love
Our souls' deep misery met,
And having loved us unto death,
He never will forget.

"It seems as though I see Him now,
The centre of Heaven's throng,
While hosts unnumbered round Him wait
In holy happy song;
And near the throne bright spirits stand,
His pleasure to fulfil;
And yet, I know, amid it all,
He thinks upon us still."

And shining angels bore the words
Up to the streets of gold,
And to the Master's listening ear,
The loving converse told;
It fell like incense on his heart—
Like streamlet's running rill;
He answered with a gracious smile,
"Yes, I remember still.

"Go, tell them they are ever mine,
For them I suffered, died;
Go, tell them that their every need
By Me shall we supplied;
Go, bid them keep their hearts for Me,
Responsive to my love,
Till I shall call them hence away,
To dwell with Me above."

IRELAND'S YOUNG MEN.

Now, when all eyes are towards Ireland, and the name is on every lip, many will doubtless be interested to know something of what work is going on to win her sons for Christ, and more especially in the south. In the providence of God the Y.M.C.A. has gained a firm footing in the southern capital, and in the City of Cork there is a flourishing Association. On Sunday evenings after the church services are all over, it is cheering and inspiring to see the lecture hall crowded with young men listening eagerly to the simple story of God's love and the way of salvation as manifested in the death of Jesus on Calvary. This must have far-reaching results, and the committee have been much encouraged from time to time by hearing of definite cases of conversion. Men who were utterly careless, and even open scoffers, men who were slaves to drink and impurity, are now to be found regularly attending the meetings, and showing forth the regenerating power of the Gospel.

Quite recently a young man came seeking help to obtain employment, and on inquiring if it mattered what religion he belonged to he was told not. "Because," said he, "I don't belong to any religion"—in fact, he was an avowed Agnostic. The secretary had a short talk with him, and invited him to attend the Sunday night Gospel meeting. He promised he would, and from that time he became a regular attendant, and at a recent meeting, to the great joy of the workers, he was one of the first to request prayer, and has since decided intelligently to accept Christ as his Saviour, and to become his follower. In a conversation with the secretary afterwards he said he could not account for the power that softened his heart and melted him to tears, but he was deeply impressed with the reality of the whole meeting. Now he is bringing other young men to the meetings with him.

The work has greatly extended of late, and has now several vigorous agencies, viz., three cottage meetings in different parts of the city; a large boys' branch, which has already been greatly blessed and several lads won for Christ; a "Foreign Missionary Parliament," which seeks to disseminate missionary interest among the members; a weekly Bible-class; a workers' training class; and two weekly prayer-meetings. The progress of the work was such that the committee decided early last year that enlarged premises were demanded, and after much prayer and waiting on God they were led to purchase a plot of ground and erect a building. They began by doing what they could for themselves; and by putting forth strenuous efforts to raise the money needed they have raised about £3500, and will require about £1500 more to complete. As they have promised not to go into debt, we sincerely hope that this sum may be speedily forthcoming, and so enable them to enter the new premises for next winter's campaign. Communications should be addressed to the general secretary, Mr. T. A. Bailey, the Y.M.C.A., Cork.

We are very glad to find that while there is much that looks dark and cloudy concerning Ireland to-day there is this bright lamp of hope shining all the brighter because of the darkness around. Erin's future welfare lies greatly in the hands of Erin's sons, and if they can be only banded together for God and right, who knows the possibilities that lie before them for good? All who are interested in the welfare of our sister isle are earnestly asked to pray for this and similar efforts.

FRENCH BRANDY, according to Deputy Guillemet, of the Department of the Vendée, is one of the most dangerous drinks served out to Parisians. M. Guillemet has studied the subject, and has drawn up a report on it in which he exposes the abominable way in which this spirit is doctored and adulterated.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 19.—2 KINGS XXI.

Such sin is revealed in this chapter as recalls the worst abominations of the heathen. And this of the redeemed people of God, incited by the son of the good Hezekiah. How sad the record, that they did even more evil than the nations whom the Lord destroyed before Israel. There could be only one result to all this, that the Lord's help should be withdrawn, and that they should be left to reap the bitter harvest of their sins. God does not cast us off till we have cast Him off, and even then He punishes us by withdrawing to his place only till we acknowledge our offence and seek his face again. Our only defence and salvation consist in our union with God, his deliverance around us, his grace within. But directly we yield to sin, it is as if some obstruction had come into the pipe of communication, and the water falls in the fountain, but not because of any failure in the cistern.

In this reign Hosea, Joel, Nahum, Habakkuk, and Isaiah lived and prophesied. Perhaps their blood is included in that which Manasseh shed. The more sin, the more warning voices. But the greater light, the darker sin. And yet, as we learn from 2 Chron. xxxiii., even Manasseh was saved. In his affliction he sought the Lord. Such is the gain of pain. But his personal repentance could not obliterate the terrible results of his sins or their effect in incurring the penalty of captivity. We may be pardoned, but there is a harvest which even pardon does not avert.

Amon was not stayed by the example of his father's sins or regrets from following the sinful courses to which from childhood he had been inured. As the twig is bent the tree grows. Oh, soul of man, remember that example is more decisive than words.

MONDAY, MARCH 20.—2 KINGS XXII.

How came Josiah, at the age of eight, to seek after the God of David his father? In the midst of his father's court that young life grew up as a young palm in the desert waste. Perhaps one of the prophets, or some attendant, had made him the subject of special care and love, teaching him in the ways of the Lord. At the age of twelve he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem, and at eighteen he put his hand to the greatest work of all, the cleansing of the Temple and the restoration of the holy rites. This is work to which we must all bend our heedful care. The temple of the body must be kept holy for the Holy Ghost, and the inner shrine of the spirit should be maintained in perpetual repair. It is at such times, when rubbish is being cleared, and breaches made good, that the Word of God is found, and comes home to us with new freshness, and becomes first the critic, and then the joy of our hearts.

Probably Shaphan would read Deut. xxviii., xxix., xxx.; and there was plenty in these chapters to fill the young king with dismay. Oh, to read the Bible always with a particular reference to oneself, and then, like Josiah, to proceed at once to put its injunctions and precepts into practice. There is great encouragement here. One copy of the Scriptures, like a seed long buried, suddenly fructified, and led to a reformation. So was it when Luther began to read that copy of the Vulgate at Erfurt. One copy of the Bible is enough to upheave a nation.

There was evidently a godly remnant in Jerusalem, who had survived the massacre of the former reigns. Of these Huldah was one. Women should always live in the uplands, beholding sights and hearing voices which are hidden from the rest of us. The greatest of anomalies is a thoughtless and irreligious woman.

TUESDAY, MARCH 21.—2 KINGS XXIII.

What the king had found good for himself, he gave to his people. It is a good habit to circulate the Scriptures. And how beautiful it was that this covenant should be formed. Let us give ourselves to be only, utterly, and always for God, and then set ourselves to destroy evil, beginning with ourselves.

It is almost incredible to find that the emblems of the most obscene idolatry had been set up in the Temple, and that the holy place had been desecrated by abominable rites. But is there not a solemn warning to us all? Baal-worship is simply the adoration of human energy, and the Asherah the licence of love. May there not be more of these than we know, even in Christian hearts? The valley of Tophet, so called from the drums, Toph, used to drown the cries of little children when made to pass through the fires there, was the scene of the fires that smouldered always, consuming filth, and thither were the idolatrous emblems brought. We need to be baptized in fire. In us the consuming fire should burn. Refining fire go through our hearts!

When the purgation of evil is complete so far as we know, we may turn to eat the Passover; and we shall be at one with all the scattered people of God in the act of solemn commemoration (2 Chron. xxxv. 1—19).

The end of Josiah was very tragic (2 Chron. xxxv.). It was the result of his own folly and presumption. A long God-fearing life may end in self-incurred disaster, unless we carefully walk with God to the very end. There is never a moment in the life of the most matured saint when he may lean to his own understanding.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 22.—2 KINGS XXIV.

Note the entail of Manasseh's sin! He had lived, been forgiven, and died years before, but Judah was irrevocably doomed for his sin. The poison had eaten so deeply into the heart of the people, that only the severest measures could eradicate its effect. Mark also the emphatic statement of the second verse, that the Lord sent against him bands of foes. Nebuchadnezzar, then at the beginning of his reign, little realised that he was only an axe with which God hewed, the rod of his anger, the staff of his indignation. Ungodly men are sometimes permitted to vex God's people for their chastisement. The best way of escaping them is to turn instantly to God in confession and prayer. "At the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah."

Jehoiakim was not honoured with burial (Jer. xxxvi. 30). The battle of Carchemish was one of the decisive battles of the world. When Jehoiakim was carried to Babylon, where he lingered for thirty-seven years, the sacred vessels were carried thither also; whilst many royal and noble persons, amongst whom were Ezekiel, Mordecai, and Daniel, accompanied them. The false prophets were vigorous in predicting the return, but Jeremiah, like a brazen wall, resisted their unanimous assertions (Jer. xxvii. 16).

Then Zedekiah, infatuated and enticed into a league with neighbouring nations against Babylon, brought on himself and his people a yet more overwhelming destruction. How foolish and insensate is that departure of the heart from the living God which deprives it of rudder and chart, and leaves it to drift before the tide. The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom, and only those have sound understanding that keep his commandments.

THURSDAY, MARCH 23.—2 KINGS XXV.

This was the third siege of Jerusalem. It lasted a year and a half, until the people were reduced to the most fearful deprivations, and perpetrated atrocities which are almost inconceivable (Lam. ii. 20—22; iv. 3). If only Jeremiah had been allowed to sway the king's counsels, much of this would have been averted, but it seemed as if a judicial blindness had been allowed to veil his eyes. And the retribution was terrible: Zedekiah blinded and a captive; the Temple in ashes; the city walls and buildings razed to the ground; the remnant of the precious things carried off; the principal men put to death, whilst a miserable handful of 832 persons were driven into captivity; and as to the remnant of the poorest, like harried sheep, they took refuge in Egypt, and the land was left desolate for seventy years to keep her Sabbaths.

Such is the vengeance of God. He pleads long with man, but if he will not turn, then He whets his sword, and becomes the terrible avenger of sin. Such a story as this makes it possible to understand the anguish of the Hereafter, where men receive the reward of bad things done in the body. But, amid all, we recall the tears of the Book of Lamentations, like the tears of the Son of God. There is that in God which weeps whilst He chastises, which cries, "How shall I make thee as Admah and set thee as Zeboim?" Nor are tears all. He is the Redeemer. He gathers again the outcasts of Israel. There will be a return from the captivity, because He delighteth in mercy.

FRIDAY, MARCH 24.—1 CHRON. I.

Only a list of names. We stand before the stream of humanity, passing onwards with never-ceasing volume, and over the brink into the unseen. A few names only stand out with any special meaning for ourselves. Adam (1), Abraham (28), Isaac (34), Esau and Israel (34). But what do we know or care of the rest?

But let us remember that these are the great branches of the family of man. Adam the root, and these the boughs. Our Anglo-Saxon race can trace its descent, for instance, to the sons of Japheth; and claim its lineage with these mysterious echoes from the great past. But these lines of descent, which ramify in various directions, are briefly mentioned, to be almost at once dismissed; because the inspired scribe, who may have been Ezra, is eager to follow the particular thread which leads one to David, and his royal line, and the Divine Man.

That, after all, is our supreme Guest. Adam was the figure of Him that was to come. By our natural birth we are born into the first Adam, but there must needs be a second before we can be born into the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. Only those that are of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. What is there to allure us in this mention of the dukes of the line of Esau? We belong to a nobler line, that of Israel, the prince with God! Our brother, Jesus, has made us scions of the Royal House of Heaven.

SATURDAY, MARCH 25.—1 CHRON. II.

The genealogy is now traced from Israel to David and afterwards the sons of Judah and their families are enumerated. It is like reading a page out of the Book of Judgment. Er was wicked. Achar, the troubler of Israel. Maacah, Caleb's concubine. Our Lord Jesus came from a stock which had been deeply tainted with sin. Marvellous that from such a ground so sweet a fruit could have been reared—so peerless a flower!

What a chapter might be written of the line of spiritual descent! No doubt there is such a record being kept by some angel scribe, and we shall be allowed to see it some day. We shall then be able to trace our spiritual progenitors back and back to the days when the heralds of the cross first bade men come to Jesus, and beneath their words souls were regenerated through the Holy Ghost. Of course every spiritual birth is due to Him, and yet there is a distinct part performed by each saved soul as it wins another to Christ.

Children are a heritage of the Lord. Blessed is he that hath his quiver full of them. Interpreted literally that sometimes seems a hard saying in our overcrowded land. But, spiritually, it is ever so. And we should fret, with the bitterness of an Eastern childless wife, until the Lord honours us with spiritual children.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

MARCH 26.

Review of Quarter's Lessons.

Golden Text—Psalm cxix. 105.

This series of lessons extends from B.C. 536, when the first return from captivity took place under Zerubbabel, to about B.C. 430, when Nehemiah paid his second visit to Jerusalem.

The Babylonian kingdom, represented by the head of gold in Nebuchadnezzar's vision (Dan. ii.), fell shortly before our first lesson. The Persian kingdom had then commenced under Cyrus, by whom the decree for the return of the Jews was issued.

There were three separate returns from captivity:—The first under Zerubbabel; the second under Ezra, B.C. 458; and the third under Nehemiah, B.C. 445. Both the second and third took place while Artaxerxes Longimanus reigned in Persia.

The first six of these lessons deal with events connected with the first return. The prominent persons appearing then were Zerubbabel, the governor; Joshua, the high priest; Haggai and Zechariah, the prophets. About 50,000 people returned (Ezra ii. 64, 65). Their first work was to build the Temple. They prepared for the service of God before they built the walls of the city. Was not this beginning at the right end? It was about fifteen years after the laying of the foundation before the Temple was completed. What caused the delay? Recal the discouraging effect of the wailing of the old men (Ezra iii. 12, 13), and the opposition of enemies (Ezra iv.). Recal how the two prophets Haggai and Zechariah stirred up the people. What special lesson was taught by the two visions of the filthy garments and of the golden lampstand? See golden text.

In lessons vii. to x., Nehemiah appears. After his visit to Jerusalem he stayed there as governor for twelve years (v. 14), and then returned to the king, with whom he stayed long enough for many evils to develop in Jerusalem, which he remedied at his second visit (xiii. 6, 7). His work of reform commenced, as every good work does, with earnest prayer, which, after some months' delay, received an abundant answer (i. and ii.). The rebuilding of the city wall was not accomplished without difficulty and danger. Who were opposing them? And what various methods did their enemies adopt? And how did Nehemiah deal with them? The character of Nehemiah is seen in his work. Before everything else he is a man of God, whose habit was to refer everything in prayer to God, and to expect God to do what he asked. But his deep sympathy and compassion for his people are just as prominent. It was this that led him to pray, and the consciousness that they were God's people enabled him to pray with faith. His treatment of his enemies and the vigorous and determined manner in which he reformed abuses show that piety does not necessarily mean weakness. The times needed such a man, and God raised him up for the work.

The story of Esther goes back to a period before the time of Ezra. The Ahasuerus of this book is the Xerxes of history. The purpose of this narrative seems to be to indicate God's marvellous care for those Jews who remained in the land of their captivity.

To tell the whole story of these lessons, and to show how the hand of God is in every event, will be a profitable review.

The Kind Commandment.

"Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile."—St. Mark vi. 31.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE HARVEST OF A QUIET EYE," "GLEANINGS AFTER HARVEST," ETC.

(Concluded.)

The Sabbath, therefore, must be regarded in two aspects. Though a day, pre-eminently of Rest, it must be not only a Day of Rest,* it must be also a Day of Worship, God's Day, and thus, in the highest sense, man's day. Some hours of it must be given to direct worship, after the manner of that Son of Man, who, "as his custom was, went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day." The whole day should be set apart from the world for more or less conscious communion with God. But some part of it must be offered directly to God. That is, in consideration of his spiritual being, and with a view to his hereafter, a necessity for man's true life. In its requirement of worship, as well as in its requirement of rest, "The Sabbath was made for man." The enemies of God, aye, and the irreligious and thoughtless of mankind, do their utmost to represent this command as a hardship. So did the devil, when man, to his ruin, first listened to him, try to represent as a hardship God's solitary requirement of man's obedience for man's good. Even now, as then, man, reaching after forbidden fruit, after liberty—falsely so called—would fall into real bondage.

"Where the apple reddens
Never pry,
Lest we lose our Edens,
Eve and I!"

"It has," says one, "been demanded as a right, entreated as mercy, on behalf of the labouring man, that he should have one day in seven for the recreation of his bodily energies. All well and true. But he who confines his conception of the need of rest to that, has left man on a level with the brutes. 'Thou shalt do no work . . . nor thy cattle.' Let a man take merely lax and 'liberal' notions of the Fourth Commandment—let him give his household and dependents immunity from toil, and wish for himself and for them no more—he will find that there is a something wanting still. Experience tells us, after a trial, that those Sundays are the happiest, the purest, the most rich in blessing, in which the spiritual part has been most attended to. Those in which the business-letter was put aside, and the profane literature not opened, and the ordinary occupations entirely suspended. Those in which, as in the Temple of Solomon, the sound of the earthly hammer has not been heard in the temple of the soul. For this is, in fact, the very distinction between the spirit of the Jewish Sabbath and the spirit of the Christian Lord's Day. The one is chiefly for the body—'Thou shalt do no manner of work'—the other is principally for the soul—'I was in the spirit on the Lord's Day.'" Rest, for weary body and soul, and worship—the highest refreshment for its needs—worship for his spirit.

Let the day, therefore, be given to the Lord, "not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver." Let not the aim and the endeavour be to try with how little we can satisfy the requirements of our Maker and our Saviour. Let us not desire, even, to give unto our God that which costeth us nothing. Let us give Him his tithe of our possessions,† and his seventh of our time, and his whole of ourselves, our souls and bodies. It is no losing venture to "lend unto the Lord." For look, what we lay out He will pay us again. Royally—a City for a Pound, albeit the pound, even, was his trust at the first. Pour out, of your time, a libation for your God. The whole of the remainder shall thus be sanctified, even though employed in common uses. Give of thy time, at his requirement, and He shall give thee whole eternity in return.

What an addition of spiritual character we find given to the day, as we pass on over the bridge of the centuries from the first Adam towards the second! See, in Isaiah lviii. 13, 14, how high the requirements have risen for the spirituality of the day. From Exodus to Isaiah we find a higher and more heavenly tone given to the Sabbath, as the Gospel light began to streak the sky. Spiritual blessing is more and more brought forward as a recompense to those who hallowed God's Sabbaths, and dedicated thoughts and words and acts to his service; not speaking their own words, nor doing their own pleasure, on his Holy Day.

With a view to the immortal needs of our nature, it is wise not to barter and haggle with God as to his special share of the day. For, indeed, his share is, in the truest sense, our share. It is true, in his service, as of money, so of time, "What we give, we have."

So, in its requirement of devotion, as well as in its requirement of rest, "The Sabbath was made for man," wholly adapted to his needs. How should he, without this day of rest from earth's importunities, and of being drawn by the silent influences of heaven, avoid sinking from the spiritual into the animal; surrendering his kinship with God for assimilation to the beasts that perish? Against the centrifugal force of worldly influence, our Sundays are a centripetal force, which keeps us in our orbit about the Sun of righteousness. And, of the Christian Sabbaths kept throughout the globe, it may be said, as Tennyson says of prayer, that—

So the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

"A law written by the finger of God"—and whose observance is so insisted upon by God—"will require a repeal as clearly written. And, for this, Scripture will be searched in vain."

Far from this. As has already been said, the more developed and evangelistic the Scripture grows, the more the sanctification of the Sabbath is insisted upon. It is not a legal husk from which a Gospel plant develops, putting off, as it leaves the ground, the now useless sheath of the seed. It is rather as a germ which grows—first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. The germ for the Patriarchs; the blade for the Israelite; the ear for the Christian; the full corn hereafter in the entering upon the Sabbath-keeping which remaineth for the people of God.

There is much to be learnt from consideration of God's dealing with the Israelites, in which, as St. Paul teaches us (1 Cor. x. 1, etc.), lies a parable for Christians. We see, for instance, in the wandering in the wilderness, typical of our pilgrimage here on earth, how Jehovah Himself practically taught the children of Israel, week by week, during the long period of forty years, his requirement of Sabbath-rest, by the double supply of food sent on the sixth day, and the withholding it altogether on the Day of Rest.

Is there not much food for thought in the contemplation of the care with which God enforced Sabbath observance, and the laxity and carelessness with which many, professing God's service, treat the enactment of the "Kind Commandment"?

Let the earnest and the true seek more of solitude, at any rate, retire from worldly company, during the precious hours of the Sunday-talent. Let them, if they have been through the week, as Martha, waiting on the Lord (for every work may be wrought for his glory), be, for the quiet hours of this day, like Mary, at his feet. The right use of our seventh of time is an investment for Eternity.

Yes, I maintain fearlessly, that amid the reek of sin that goes from us, as a nation, up to God, one safeguard is there, as salt, in the corruption, namely, the national observance, at least outwardly, of the Day of the Lord. One of the crowning sins of Israel of old was the non-observance of the Sabbath, so that, for seventy years of exile it was declared that the land should "keep her Sabbaths."

It is probable that there are really not many of those who, with the idea of its being a kindness to the sons of toil, would actually change the English for the Continental Sunday. Yet how slight a rift in a vast reservoir may be widened by a trickling stream, until there come the catastrophe of Sheffield or of Johnstown! Suppose the rift opened with the view of merely giving refreshment by supply of the waters of a pleasant brook. And imagine the horror of the well-meaning opener of it, at the ever-encroaching rush; imagine his vain effort to stay the devastating course of the presently irresistible torrent!

This did not the Son of Man, the Friend of Man, when on earth among us. He broke not up the cistern which holds for us the recruiting draughts that we may draw at the appointed times fresh from the wells of salvation. In that mysterious charge given to his disciples, "pray ye that your flight be not—on* a Sabbath," at any rate, then, the Lord of the Day contemplated the continuation of its sanctity for some forty years after He, upon the Cross, declared the completion and fulfilment of the Anticipatory Dispensation. Where is the authority that should abrogate the Sabbath Day forty years after the Lord of the Gospel of the Kingdom had ascended to the Father; leaving to his apostles charge to go to all the nations, "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you"? The Jewish Passover was not altogether abolished by our Lord, but, rather, raised by Him into a higher thing. Even thus may we not say that He dealt with the Sabbath observed by the Jews? The mere ceremonies of the Jews were fulfilled, and passed away. The Sabbath-type was not fulfilled, nor will be, until man, ceasing from his own works, as God did from his, shall enter upon that Sabbath-rest that "remaineth for the people of God."

"Come ye yourselves apart," apart from care, and business, and turmoil, and jostling, and hustling of the crowd of week-day calls, that leave no rest for tired body and weary brain. Apart, into the sweet solitude of the society of God. Apart, to rest awhile. Where is rest in this harassed world? Where refreshment for the over-wrought being of man under the curse? "All things are full of labour, man cannot utter it; the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing."

The grass hath time to grow in meadow-lands,
And leisurely the opal murmuring sea
Breaks on her yellow sands.

But man, "he only toils, who is the first of things." Where then shall, for him, rest be found?

"The depth saith, It is not in me, and the sea saith, It is not with me.

It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof."

Destruction and Death say, "We have heard the fame thereof with our ears"—and rumours of a place—"where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

But rest here, rest now, rest from the travail of trouble, the stress of toil, where may we go apart to find it?

"Come unto Me": one voice there is that answers: "Come unto Me, ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest!" Yes, "Come apart, into the solitude, come with Me, and rest awhile!"

"Is it not a gracious invitation, a kind command? Is it not the voice of the tenderness of One that cleaveth closer than a brother—One who knoweth our needs, and "remembereth our frame," and so provides for us rest; and true rest, "rest in the Lord"? It is like Him, to bid us "come apart," not wait till the multitude cease to throng us, but to turn away from them at the appointed times, and to resort to Him and to rest awhile. Apart from the crowd, but together with the band of his disciples. And where the two or three are met, there is He in the midst.—"My Presence shall up go with you, and I will give you rest."

How dear his Sabbaths here, so regarded, how gracious their provision of rest for the fallen and toiling race of Adam! Foretastes they are of that sublime Sabbath-keeping, where "They rest not day or night, saying, Holy, Holy, Holy."—Yet "They rest from their labours," nor toil, nor strive, nor suffer any more. For them, occupation shall be rest, and service, worship. Care and turmoil, effort and labour, strife and warring, the vigil and the watch, all, all shall sink down into the rest of the Great and Eternal Sabbath-calm, which yet remaineth for the people of God. It is of his love that He vouchsafes to us hints and earnests of it here, saying, over the stormy waters, here and now, time after time, his "Peace! be still." And, at his command, the wind is hushed, and the waves subside. And there is a great calm.

* He "the work ordain'd,
Author and end of all things; and from work
Now resting, bless'd and hallow'd the seventh day,
As resting on that day from all his work,
But not in silence holy kept; the harp
Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice,
Choral or unison; of incense clouds
Fuming with golden censers hid the mount,
Creation and the six days' acts they sung."

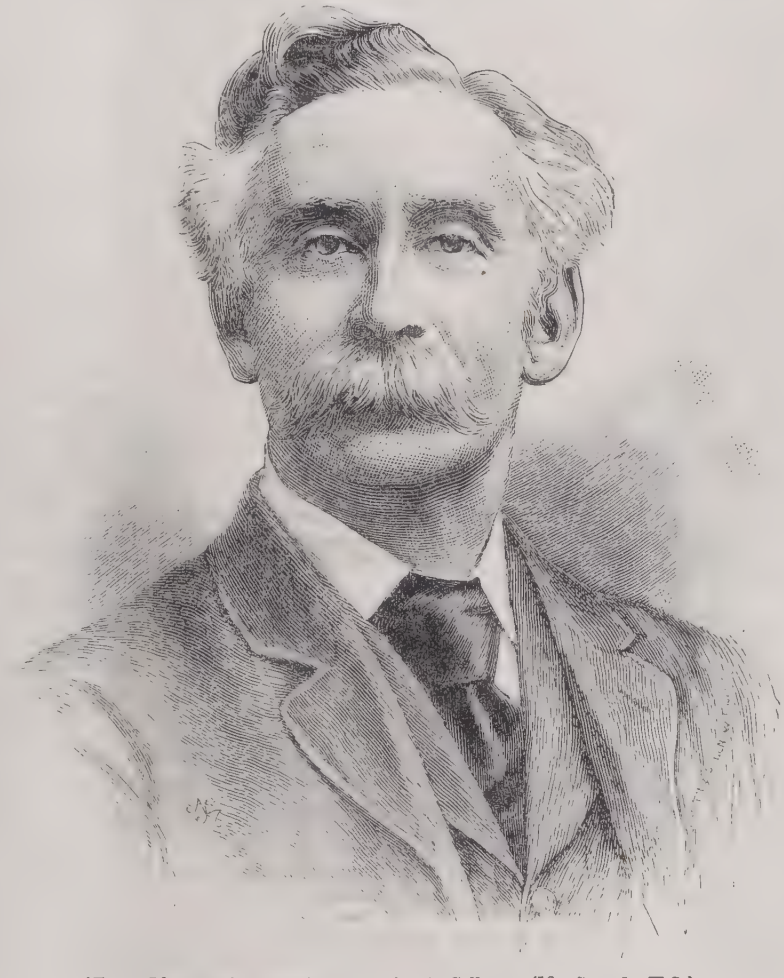
† Because there are no special rules in the New Testament as to devoting to God a fixed portion of our goods, are we to infer that Christians are exempt from the requirements of honouring God with their substance?

NEW FOREST GIPSY MISSION.—Through the kindness of Mrs. E. Westlake, a drawing-room meeting was recently held in Southampton on behalf of this mission. The large number present were deeply interested with the accounts given by R. S. W. Griffith (hon. treasurer), Mr. Bullen and his wife, of the attempts made to reach the tent and van dwellers in the New Forest, and to bring them under the sound of the Gospel.

* "A," not "The," Sabbath; thus not tying the word to the seventh day of the week

The Late Mr. BENJAMIN CLARKE

CHRISTIAN WORKER AND PHILANTHROPIST.



FOR more than thirty years Benjamin Clarke fought in the foremost ranks of Christ's army against ignorance, poverty, and sin. A braver and brighter comrade it would be difficult to find, for men of his stamp are lamentably rare. He possessed no exceptional advantages socially or intellectually. His popularity and power depended entirely upon his personal qualities, which were naturally winsome, but were ennobled by the completeness of his consecration.

Born at Devonport in 1836, and educated at Treganny, and afterwards at the Independent College, Taunton, he early acquired that love of Nature and enjoyment of all outdoor sports which was one of his strongly-marked characteristics. Nothing delighted him more than to lead a group of town-bred lads into scenes like those which had brightened his own childhood; and underlying the boyish zest, betokened by his kindling glance and elastic step, was the filial spirit which whispered of the manifold beauties he saw around him, "My Father made them all."

His life-work, however, lay almost entirely in our great metropolis. From the Taunton school, pleasant memories of which may be found in his well-known book, "Pounceford Hall," he went for a short time to a bank in Aylesbury, and then came to London, where he joined the church at Union Chapel, teaching both in the Sunday school and at Ward's-place Ragged School. Removing shortly afterwards to Haverstock Hill, he at once found work in the Sunday school belonging to Rev. J. C. Harrison's church, and at the same time conducted very successfully an interesting class of men belonging to the Horse Guards (Blue), the likenesses of some of whom still hang in his study.

But these efforts were only preparatory to what we regard as his greatest life-work. Shortly after removing to Islington, where he connected himself with the church at Offord-road under Rev. Paxton Hood, he was invited to become the honorary superintendent of a little mission school at Twyford Hall, then in a very weak condition, and in debt. Into this work he threw himself with characteristic vigour and hopefulness. By giving lectures and concerts, and exhibiting a panorama, he succeeded at last in removing the debt, and the proceeds of a lecture by Rev. Arthur Mursell, on "Joan of Arc," gave him the first clear sum of £5, which appeared alone in successive reports under the head of "The Building Fund."

This for many years was a prophecy to him, but a joke to his friends, until a site for new schools was found in Gifford-street, and the present Mission Hall was built and paid for as the result of his indomitable energy. From that day till the close of his life he devoted an immense amount of time to the work of that mission, beloved as a brother by every one of the workers, and trusted as a counsellor and friend by young and old connected with it.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Martin & Sallnow, 416, Strand, W.C.)

The scene on the day of his funeral in that district will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. In accordance with his own wish, his body was conveyed to Gifford Hall on the preceding evening, and between 1,500 and 2,000 persons passed through the building to take a final glimpse of the coffin, the silent tears of the poor he had befriended, and of the children he had served, bearing eloquent testimony to the devoted work he had done in that district for his Master.

Few missions in London can vie with this in the variety of its ministrations and the flexibility of its methods. Some of the plans now generally adopted and approved originated with our friend, who had a prolific invention, and would never suffer any sort of "red-tapeism" to prevent a fair trial being given to any new scheme which promised to relieve misery, or bring a little brightness into gloomy lives.

He was the first to start penny dinners for poor children; and the playroom, or nursery, in which many a merry hour was spent by little ones gathered in from their dreary homes, has been happily copied elsewhere. To attend one of his fresh and delightful "treats," for each one of which he invented something new and unexpected, was part of a philanthropic education; and those who went to an "elder scholars' sociable," and contrasted the well-dressed, well-behaved young people with those who had crowded the streets in that neighbourhood a few years before, saw living evidences that Christianity is not played out, but still transforms character, and raises the whole nature of those who are led by a Christly man into the paths of righteousness. Our friend had the singular felicity of seeing large numbers who entered the school as infants continuing as scholars, or working as teachers, after they themselves were married and had infants of their own.

Mr. Clarke's work in connection with the Sunday School Union is widely known and appreciated. He became connected with it when a Civil Service clerk in Somerset House, a position he resigned in order to devote himself more fully to the interests of Christian work among young people. He was a prolific writer, and some of his books have been deservedly popular. As editor of The Sunday School Chronicle, he showed much breadth of sympathy, although distinctly evangelical in his religious convictions.

All who came in contact with him appreciated his gracious tact and his unfailing humour, for often he would sweep away an ominous difficulty by his genial fun, as a dark cloud is dispersed by the sunshine. A talk with him confirmed one's belief in the old dictum, "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine." His interest in Sunday-school work generally was shown by his frequent addresses in various parts of London and the country. It was not his official position which necessitated his interest, but his interest which qualified him for his editorship. In him the official was always lost sight of in the man.

The movement known as the "Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour" had his warmest sympathy from the first. The last article he ever wrote was an appeal to Christian ministers to take interest in it, and the last occasion on which he spoke in connection with the church he attended was the formation of a branch of this society, under the presidency of his pastor, Rev. Alfred Rowland. It is an evidence of his singularly magnetic personality that, though unknown previously to most of these young people, he so won their affections that of their own accord they held a meeting for prayer on his behalf on the night before his death, and one of the most beautiful wreaths placed upon his coffin was from them.

In this brief sketch it is impossible to do more than hint at the manifold forms of Christian activity in which he took part. To the temperance cause he gave from his early days the most strenuous support. In the press, on the platform, and in private conversation, this great movement was often advocated by him. His fund of anecdotes, humorous and pathetic, was largely drawn upon in order to enforce the folly and danger of the drinking customs of English society; and many who are now in the path of sobriety owe much to his affectionate entreaties, and to his steady example, which was the more effective because no one enjoyed more heartily than he the gladness of social life.

The philanthropic work connected with the London Congregational Union was greatly aided by his enthusiasm and sagacity. His fluent pen frequently advocated its claims on the churches, and many a night he spent in the streets of our great city trying to seek and save those that were lost. Through the agency of the Self-Help Emigration Society he was able to assist upward some who had sunk into the depths of degradation, and these, now in a distant land, still cherish as one of their last and pleasantest memories of the old country his bright face and cheery good-bye.

The last few years of his life were spent in a most congenial occupation. Soon after the death of Mr. Charles he was appointed secretary of the Boys' Homes at Farningham and Swanley, a work for which he was peculiarly fitted by his sympathy with the young and his gifts of popular advocacy. He was intensely loved by all the boys, for he seemed to them to be an elder brother rather than an official. On two or three occasions he was able to secure the use of the Mansion House for a display of the boys' work, and for a public presentation of their claims. Excursions were made into the provinces, and under his genial auspices not only were the boys heartily welcomed, but the funds of these noble institutions were benefited.

This short sketch will be sufficient to indicate the multifarious activities of this winsome and Christly man, whose ruling motive in everything he attempted was that of the great Apostle himself, "The love of Christ constraineth me."

CRUMBS OF COMFORT.

Is there any one in this great groaning, travailing universe who needs not at some time or other words of comfort? How often we poor short-sighted mortals blame, when we should raise and comfort.

If there was one path which more than another received the impress of our Saviour's feet, surely it was this path of consolation. At his approach the widow's heart's sang for joy. He who Himself was a "man of sorrows" and acquainted with grief—He it was to whom the sick, and sorrowful, and downtrodden came to be comforted. And to-day the same sweet message comes to hearts oppressed, "I, even I, am He that comforteth you."

Poor lonely heart! take courage. Think not that you are forgotten. He putteth your tears into his bottle. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." You say, The night is long, and He delayeth his coming! Yes, but over the hilltop the dawn is breaking, and the night shadows fleeing away. Be comforted! the dawn is the first streak of the silver with which the cloud of thy calamities is lined. Mildred Foss.

From a Worker's Note Book.

V.—ILLUSTRATIONS FROM LIFE.

Into this old note book, which, by the way, is yellow and worn with age, often undecipherable, you and I, my reader, have been digging together to gain, if may be, some further insight into the realities of our work. Before we shut-to its clasp and replace it on the shelf, let me say that there is a certain portion of the book which hitherto we have not touched, perhaps from a curious delicacy of feeling that its reminiscences were of too personal a nature to bear dissection. True it is that the sketches which make up this part are those of real men and women, but seeing that they found a place in this note book from no unkindly spirit of criticism, but rather as illustrations of abstract principles which must form part of every worker's training, it would be a mistake to pass them entirely over without choosing out here and there a few broad outlines that may in no wise offend and yet be of service to others.

At the foot of the first sketch I find pencilled this rather odd inscription, "How much pleasanter the world would be if people would give one more room, and not want to be always touching others." The words were spoken to me one afternoon while I stood hemmed in by the crowd who were waiting to see some foreign potentate pass. The speaker was an elderly, orderly, little spinster, who, jostled and pushed by the rough street urchins, stood with skirts closely gathered up, striving in vain to keep her dress from contact with their muddy hands.

At the time her remark was jotted down in the diary rather as a jest than in any seriousness, but again and again in after years, in meeting with workers of a certain stamp, the words of this poor old lady have floated back with a far deeper meaning than she ever intended them to bear. We must all know these workers, as they go about our midst, honestly desirous of doing good, but terribly afraid of getting too near to the evil in so doing. You meet some of them in charity concerts, bazaars, drawing-room meetings, and the like, but there they draw the line. Ask them to bring the poor into their homes, to treat them not with patronage, but with consideration and as "brethren"; or ask them to step right down into the midst of the black darkness of sin, to lift Shelley's "painted veil," and to hold out hands of healing and sympathy to sisters unlovely, unromantic, sunk in an irresponsive apathy, and back they will shrink with a flat refusal. You may get such people to take a district or to teach on Sundays, provided the cottages are fairly clean and the children respectful; nay, they will even gladly take part in a few "slumming" expeditions, which, with their charm of novelty and perhaps of a noble escort, involve but little strain, and enable them to discuss glibly the state of the dwellers in the East.

But bring these same people into continual contact with poverty and dirt, let them strive with such conditions week after week, patiently, cheerfully, in company with other workers who are less educated, and who grate upon them by their homely plainness and want of intellectuality, and your friends will sadly tell you their natures are too sensitive for such work. Don't say they are not honest in their intentions. They are, up to their light, but they have not got beyond the fear of the grown-up "children with muddy hands," who might come too close and brush up against their finely-textured lives.

"I could not get down to their minds; I did not know what to say to them when I did go," said one such worker to me some time ago! How could it be otherwise, I asked, while you treated these degraded beings as some strange species, rather to be stared at with pity and amaze, than as those of your own kin, you, essentially one with them in nature, only by the grace of God, with fuller enlightenment for their succour and for your own? If we picture to ourselves the many scenes of Christ's healing power, do we not unconsciously linger over those in which the marvellous "He touched him" finds a place? Not, indeed, until we too touch them, until we too lay our warm lives close on their dead frames, as Elisha with the child of the Shunammite, shall we raise them to their real life.

A great army are these religious dilettanti, for the same spirit takes to itself many outward shapes. You have it in that minister of Christ who may be a very Demosthenes for eloquence, but who affects to despise his close brotherhood with the commonplace ordinary people of his parish, who will descend willingly enough from his serene and high atmosphere to the very gutters of humanity and slave away his life for them, but who thinks it beneath him to consider the small Christian courtesies in the trifles of daily intercourse with the humdrum, respectable, uninteresting mass of his congregation.

Again you have the same thought with rather different embodiment in that intolerable nuisance of the times, the religious worker who is for ever on the stretch, here, there, and everywhere. I find among the leaves of the diary sketch after sketch illustrative of this type, but before I pass to any of these I would spend a moment on a rough drawing, hard by, which belongs to the same class as all the others, viz., that class of workers who have no Divine passion as motive power to their energy, who, as Emerson quaintly puts it, have not hitched their wagon to a star.

There are two figures in the sketch, a tall, stern, hard-visaged woman, and a little child with the tired and worn face of an old man. Below is the single word "Duty." The story, as far as I remember, was just the rescue of a child from a home of misery, by one whose life was full of the word Duty, but who was destitute of the "milk of human kindness." "Ay," had said the woman, she would "do her duty by the boy; none should gainsay her there; but still children, with their play and laughter, were a trouble and nuisance, and she took precious good care to keep this one under." And so, by a series of petty tyrannies and constant repression, she was killing out the energy and spirit of that young life, and none could make her see that thereby the loveliness of the lovely deed of rescue had well-nigh faded away.

Which of us, I wonder, has not met Christian people with characters somewhat similar to this woman's? Well-meaning people in the main, they have spoiled the beauty of their work by the utter absence of all joyous love. They will visit week after week their district, their hospitals, read to the blind, manage clubs, be scrupulously punctual in all appointments, but they are confessedly glad when some chance throws in their way a few weeks' holiday "off duty." They take their work not as a great God-given gift, a high privilege and honour, but rather as part of the necessary machinery in the life of an ordinary Christian.

Be their work done, the manner of the doing is of little consequence. All to them are "cases." So many homes visited, so many names entered, so much reading got through, and the rest matters not, Find the lost sheep, bring to light the piece of silver, meet the prodigal son, and you have done your duty say they. Not yet have they caught the meaning of the twice-reiterated injunction, "Rejoice," "Rejoice," "Let us eat and make merry." Not yet do they see how the beauty of an initial act, a duty performed, finds its perfection and completement in the spirit of love and joy which wraps in their embraces the objects in question.

THE GOSPEL CARAVAN.—The workers hope shortly to start the Gospel caravan, which last year did good work in villages and out-of-the-way towns. The director writes:—"With the approaching return of more open weather, we hope to re-enter on a vigorous Gospel campaign amongst the outlying and neglected districts of our country; and, provided the condition of the finances will allow of it, to engage a suitable and thoroughly trustworthy evangelist to devote his whole time exclusively to this much-needed work." MISSIONARY SUCCESS.

BY REV. H. B. MACARTNEY.

On Dec. 21, 1876, we published the following abstract of an address delivered by Rev. H. B. Macartney, by way of charge to a young man about to proceed to India for mission work. It was taken from a Melbourne paper, and is now reprinted by request, in the hope that its excellent counsels may prove helpful to many new readers :—

To say all that might be said concerning a healthy condition of the heart would be to re-write the Scriptures. Of all things, however, written therein, this is the substance and the sum: Jesus, Jesus, Jesus; not his word, his work, or his possessions, but Himself. Men may reckon you a good evangelist and a clever scholar, apt to teach and wise to administer the affairs of the native church; but a day spent without Christ, without Christ in the memory and the affections, is a dark day—so is an hour, so is a minute. And life is made up of minutes as they fly.

Consider from the first how the heathen, to whom you go, are to receive a certain impression. By you, or by your Lord? Not by your Lord without you; still less by you without your Lord. Is it not by your Lord abiding in you, and you abiding in Him? I predict certain failure if you get into a groove of work and are content to drag out your life without simple unaffected fellowship with the Father and the Son. On the other hand, conscious union with the Lord in glory will not only give a finish and buoyancy to your outer and inner man, but will perfectly fit you as a winner of souls.

If your ministry is feeble and powerless, there will be a reason for it. There cannot be paralysis in one of Christ's members without a cause. Discover the secret of failure, and remove it, though it cost you your right hand. Discover it, I say, and count it sin ever to be unfilled with the Spirit, ever to cease from prayer, ever to spend a Christless hour, ever to preach a sermon or to converse with a soul in conscious heart-emptiness of God. The Bible without prayer may give light without heat; prayer without the Bible may give heat without light. Let your strength be in God. Let it be so that you are only a drop in the ocean; preserve your identity, and you preserve your power. Awake every morning as Jesus did, "anointed with fresh oil," and you will be charged with the magnetic power of the Cross of Christ; you will be fragrant with the oil of heavenly separation, and sparkling with the dews of heavenly sympathy. Sinners of the Gentiles will as eagerly draw nigh to you as now you eagerly draw nigh to them.

Love conquers, for power conquers, and God is love. You need not strain and strive to be anything; rather love to be nothing, and to be unknown. Whatever of self remains clouds God from the soul, and clouds God from the world. Let self perish. Go to your Bible and to your knees to win Christ every day; and go with that living Christ whom you have won afresh—go with Him into the dark pit of heathenism to win souls. Settle it in your minds that there are souls to be won, and then let Jesus be your wisdom to find out where these dark diamonds are, and let Him be your power to convert them, when found, into gems of the purest ray.

Beware of being merged in a multitude even of the faithful, or of trusting to the wholesale and necessary progress of a good cause. Again I say, preserve your identity as an individual monument of grace; never let yourself be lost in anything but God—God as known to your soul in Christ.

You cannot be too closely identified with Him. Lose not a moment, dear brother, for "the time is short." You go to be instructed by the Great Master of Assemblies how to find out his erring ones in the most unlikely places, at the most unlikely hours. Be always following, never going before. It were better to be sick in a tent under a burning sun, and Jesus sitting at the tent door, than to be enchanting a thousand listeners where Jesus was not. Be as a day labourer only in God's harvest-field, ready to be first among the reapers in the tall corn, or just to sit and sharpen another's sickle.

Have an eye to God's honour, and have no honour of your own to have an eye to. Lay it in the dust and leave it there. Never let your own inner life get low in your search after the lives of others. That is not God's way. Take heed to thyself, and God will take heed to them. May your bow be like the bow of Jonathan, which never turned back from the battle; your sword like the sword of Saul, which never returned empty. Get to know Christ better than you know anyone else in the world, and make Him known further than anyone."

BOSTON MONDAY LECTURES.

We recently intimated the opening of this winter's course of Monday lectures in Boston by Dr. Joseph Cook. Some notes of succeeding lectures and preludes will be read with interest. It will be seen that the Sabbath is the general topic of the lectures.

The prelude at the second lecture of the course dealt with Mormonism in Utah, and the reasons why the Territory should not immediately be admitted to statehood. Polygamy is not abolished; it is only suspended. According to the statements of the Mormons they have now and then new revelations, and polygamy is only suspended. Utah is a large country, as long as from Boston to Washington, as wide as from Boston to Baltimore, and its welfare should be securely guarded.

The remedies against Mormon rule are postponement of admission, and the influences growing out of schools and a better civilisation until Utah is fit to be a State.

Ida B. Wells, a Christian coloured lady of culture and refinement, editor and part owner of the Memphis Free Speech, was introduced, who told in classic and eloquent language the story in part of the one thousand cases of lynch law in the South in the last ten years inflicted upon coloured people. She is under the threat of death should she return to Memphis, simply because she denounced lawlessness. A resolution of sympathy was unanimously passed.

In the lecture proper, Mr. Cook discussed the question as to whether the fourth commandment of the Decalogue is binding on us. It is a part of a most admirable code, unequalled by any of the lawgivers, sages, or religious teachers of antiquity. Its principles are a part of the moral constitution of the universe, and are older than Moses or Abraham. The principles embodied in all the other commands are of perpetual and universal obligation. The fourth command contains elements which must enter into all high civilisations—such as rest, worship, etc. Only the authority which gave the command could abrogate it. The command meets the needs of our nature, and cannot be abrogated while these wants remain. The need of a rest-day has its foundation deep in the constitution of man. To do away with this provision would be to abolish human nature. Christ came not to destroy, but to fulfil, the law. The Sermon on the Mount sanctions whatever is contained in this command. The Apostles dropped out the Jewish form, but observed the principles. The Sabbath was made for man; not for the Jews only, but for all men. The Sabbath was before Moses—was among the Assyrians and the Accadians.

A brave audience greeted Mr. Cook at his 231st lecture, for it was little less than a blizzard. The subject of the prelude was "New Black Codes at the South: Murders under Mob Rule." It is high time the American negro should cease to be a nurseling of the North or a victim of the South. The frequency of political massacres were mentioned. The murderers used to go masked, but now lynching in some places is not an unusual spectacle. During President Harrison's Administration thirteen coloured people have been burned by white mobs in the South. A population must be judged not by its laws, but by the laws it executes. No better things could be expected of savages, but better things are expected of the people of the South. Negro votes are suppressed when they are in the majority. The South has from forty to fifty members of Congress more than entitled to, as the votes are suppressed. She has the executive and the legislative departments, and is grasping after the judiciary. Some of the remedies for improving the coloured people are these: National law must protect the national citizen. The cry, I am an American citizen, should be as potent as was formerly that of the Roman. There must be reorganisation to secure the results of the war. Education, evangelisation, and the social and moral forces are needed; but in the end the negro must assert his rights; he will never have justice until he is ready to shed his blood for it.

The lecture answered the question, "Shall we import the Continental Sabbath?" Europe is at our doors. Our steamships have practically annihilated the Atlantic. The better elements in the population once came: now we receive the dregs from the lands least elevated in the scale of civilisation and least free. The cruder elements will in the future predominate in our immigration. The Sabbath of those nations from which our immigrants now largely come is a holiday. Pleasure rather than worship or study is the end sought; and those who make child's play of the Sabbath will for the most part make child's play also of free institutions. The pressure for the substitution of the Continental Sabbath for the Anglo-American Sunday comes from many directions. It is the Sabbath of the Roman Catholic Church, whose members concentrate in the great cities. The railways, luxury, the saloons, scepticism, and the Sunday press, are all contributors to the evil. The new age of machinery and steam and electric power is here, with a tendency to reduce man to a machine.

Why should we not import the Continental Sabbath? The voice of history is against it. The Sunday-keeping nations are the most elevated and able to sustain free institutions. The views of Luther and the reformers on the Sabbath were crude. The tendency in Germany is strongly in favour of a more strict observance. Her scholars are now studying with interest the Anglo-American view, which bases the Sabbath on the Fourth Commandment. The working masses are now demanding in Europe relief from Sunday labour, and the ruling classes are favourable to the change. The same is true of many of the labour organisations in both the old and new worlds. Sunday is an important part of our free institutions, and its observance is indispensable to the perpetuity of the Republic. The seven laws found in the Fourth Commandment are to be held by us as of perpetual obligation.

At the fourth lecture of the season the prelude was on Satolli and the public schools. Satolli is the Pope's echo, and Satolli and the Syllabus will be found one at last. Clerical Catholic rule means disaster. America cannot be Romanised without being denationalised. Our citizens do not wish to take politics from Rome. The clerical Roman Catholics are here to stay and to multiply. There is also a Methodist nation, a Presbyterian, a Baptist. These Protestants are our bulwark; but the struggle between Protestantism and Catholicism will be severe. The remedies: Public discussion should awaken the conscience; there should be a constitutional amendment against diverting public funds to sectarian purposes; public meetings should be held to promote proper sentiment; the untrammelled press should be supported; flags should be on all schoolhouses, and they should be explained; the white denoting purity, the blue justice, the red valour. Children should see Christianity in their flag. The whole child should be sent to school.

The subject of the lecture was "What is Sunday worth to labour?" Sunday will never be the paradise of the poor while it is a playground for the rich. The value of Sunday to health, its economical value, what are the advantages of six days' work rather than the same hours in seven days, the value of change, the benefit of putting the population in clean clothes once a week, were forcibly set forth. Co-operative schemes cannot be carried on without conscience, and conscientious convictions will be lost without Sunday observance. Social Christianity is impossible without a Sunday.

BUSY IN BURMAH.

Mr. John Samuel Aaron, writing from 49, Thirty-eighth-street, Rangoon, Burmah, on February 11, says:—"After arriving in Rangoon with a desire to work among the natives of India, I started among the Tamils and Telugus, and even among the English people in Burma. My time is devoted chiefly to the people employed in the Burma State Railway, who always meet me gladly at their stations. I am continually travelling between Prome and Shevels, a distance of 600 miles; I halt at stations, distribute tracts to the people, and speak to them a few words as time permits. At the principal stations, however, I stay a day or two, and hold Sunday services and prayer meetings. Many people who are destitute of privileges of public worship come in crowds to open-air gatherings.

"God has blessed my labours. Two more Hindoo brothers are desirous of owning Christ as their Saviour by submitting to baptism. Pray for me that I may be strengthened to do God's work more enthusiastically. My pastor, Rev. A. G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, takes a lively interest in my endeavours."

A PARISIAN INFIDEL.

It is Sunday evening, and Paris is all alive.

The Boulevards are brilliantly lighted, at the theatre doors the crowds of people are waiting their turn to enter. Here is a band of young men and women in uniform, even more fully intent on arousing these crowds to a sense of their souls' danger than they are themselves intent upon earthly pleasure. Outside the Grand Opera, and at the entrance of our hall, our comrades are pushing our notices and inviting the people into the meeting. As half-past eight approaches, the hall is filled, and the side doors are opened to make more room. At the opening hymn we are aware that we have a difficult audience to deal with, but moral force and patience win the day.

Who is this tall lady who rises to speak? Every eye is fixed upon her, and she has evidently succeeded in gaining attention in a remarkable manner. One can see that it costs her a desperate effort to speak, and the deep earnestness in her voice carries conviction to her hearers...

Eight months ago we find her a perfect infidel, and worse than that, being really hostile to all religion, having seen so much glaring inconsistency and hypocrisy. She had at this time occasion to enter our little flat for a few days, but she had not been with me five minutes before she declared it was altogether useless for me to try to convert her to religion, for she said, "I have seen too much, and the professors of religion are either infidel, imbecile, or hypocrites. There was a time when I was sincere, and I sought the truth, but I was cruelly deceived. I remember once, when a great sorrow had overtaken me, for I was much disappointed in my married life, going to find a priest who was much renowned. He told me that if I was not happy I was perfectly justified in seeking happiness elsewhere, and I was stunned at the propositions he made to me. I left his presence having lost the last ray of hope in religion of any kind. If I had not had something which held me back I might have fallen very low; the last germ of faith in religion was destroyed in my soul. I gave myself up then to study medicine, and my various experiences in the hospitals with students, and also entering into the houses of the rich, where my profession has called me, all have confirmed me in my infidelity; for those who profess religion are no better for it, they are just as selfish, as vain, as worldly, as those who make no profession whatever."

I quietly listened to her as she continued some time in this strain, then I ventured to ask her one thing, "Has your infidelity brought you happiness—peace?"

She looked at me with an indescribable sadness in her eyes. "What me happy? Never! My life is not worth four sous. I have intended several times to commit suicide. I wish I were dead; I wish I had never been born..."

Then I spoke to her of the cause of all her unhappiness, sin. The Holy Spirit helped me wonderfully to convey light to that dark mind. We did not say much the three following days, but privately we prayed that God would deal with her. Mrs. T——, our servant, told me that she had said to her, "I do not know what is the matter with me, I feel so troubled. There is such an atmosphere of peace and love in this house; I never found it anywhere else."

Another day she said, "I am so happy here, I want nothing to eat but bread and water." And one night, after hearing my husband pray with me in my room, she knocked at the door and came sobbing to the bedside, asking us to teach her how to pray! Then followed a confession of one of the saddest lives I have ever heard. Jesus listened, pardoned, soothed, and comforted.

What a transformation from the very first day even in her face. No more novel-reading, no more money wasted in luxurious toilet; on the contrary, every shilling she can spare is put by to help us in saving shipwrecked souls like hers. The day she left us she wrote, "All is dark and dreary in the weather, but all is light and peace in my soul."

At the time of her conversion, there was a quarrel of eight years' standing between her and her husband. I showed her that her pride must yield, and she must forgive him. This was the hardest cross of all, as she was very proud, but Jesus' love eventually conquered, and she received him back, and lives with him now.

This is eight months ago, now she is a soldier enrolled in our Rue Auber corps, and she takes our literature and testifies, not only in public, but in the rich houses where her profession calls her, and many an opportunity she has of speaking to souls dead in sin!

Her husband, although an infidel, has been to thank us for the wonderful change. He says we have wrought in his wife! But Divine power alone can work such miracles as these!

O what stories this lady tells us of behind the scenes of fashionable Paris! What millions of money are ever forthcoming for the service of sin, and how hard it is for us in our salvation struggle to obtain the necessary aid. Our financial burden is specially great this year.

MR. VARLEY IN INDIA.

You will be glad to hear that the testimony of Christ has been maintained with a goodly measure of success in the various places visited. After leaving Bombay, where for five weeks we had the joy of preaching Christ to large numbers of the educated natives and the Europeans, we went on to Poona. In this large city of 120,000 people for three weeks we had a wide and effectual door opened for fourteen evenings from 5.30 to 6.45. I presented in the city theatre a series of lectures on the fundamental truths of Christ and the Gospel of the grace of God. The interest grew throughout, and the closing meeting was a memorable one. I cannot but believe that some have received Christ, but the costs of discipleship keep many from openly confessing Him. They seem like Nicodemus, and I ask fervent prayer for certain anxious ones now in Poona.

Amongst the Europeans and Eurasians the work has been also real and successful. Poona is a stronghold of philosophic Brahminism and cultured Hinduism, but, in my judgment, as in England so here in India sin in various forms is the chief bondage in which these peoples are held. Deceit, lying, pride, licentiousness, and intemperance stand foremost, and almost all their religion is as corrupt morally as it is grossly idolatrous. Idolatry in India behind the scenes is hateful. The veil of unbelief is indeed upon the hearts of the Hindus and Mohammedans, but their love of sin and habits of wickedness have had to do with the weaving of the thick pall "which blinds the minds." It is astonishing how this great land emphasises the truth that "this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

From Poona we went to Kolahpur, where another centre of educated student life is found. The city has about 50,000 inhabitants, and contains a large Government college, where English is taught, and Western civilisation exalted. Politically and educationally, the trend is distinctly anti-Christian. Idolatry in its various forms is not only protected and countenanced, but Christ and revealed truth is regarded as contemptible by the professors and political agents, and as of no great superiority to the idolatries which hold the people in pagan darkness. Was it for such results as these that India was entrusted to England's Imperial sway? This question may have an answer before long. The wind is being sown, the whirlwind has yet to be reaped. Kolahpur is the centre of the American Presbyterian Mission, some of whose members I met at Bombay. Here it was my joy to come in contact with about twenty American and English missionaries. Our fellowship was delightful. The early morning prayer and Bible-reading meetings were seasons of divine refreshing. The brethren came in from the various fields of labour round about, and our hearts burned within us as the Great King joined us during these hallowed days. We held a series of twelve meetings for the educated natives and students in the mission chapel situate in the bazaar in the centre of the city.

The interest was again very marked, though Kolahpur is not possessed of a fifth part of the young men students found at Poona. Deep impressions were produced in some cases, and a mass of truth was carefully sown in the hearts and minds of many. One young Hindu told me that his experience was as "that of being in a new world." Another that he gave up all his confidence to Hinduism, and believed that Christ had saved him. Many of the students pressed me with all kinds of questions. Some of these were absurd, and not a few showed that modern sceptical books have already had a wide circulation in this great heathen country.

By request I gave a lecture to men only. The Public Library was crammed. Many, I believe, were convinced of sin. In nothing is there a more marked contrast to Hinduism and Mohammedanism than in the lofty and pure principles of God's Word on this vital theme. Seldom have I seen deeper impressions, and my conviction is that the seed sown will produce an abundant harvest. Rev. J. M. Gohun, the head of the American Presbyterian Mission and Rev. J. M. Irwin, principal of the Mission High School, gave great sympathy and help, and truly we felt the time all too short in the happy and energetic mission held at Kolahpur.

Here there is a native church. The pastor is a godly man, highly esteemed, and the congregation large. I had the pleasure on the Sunday afternoon of preaching to the Mahrati-speaking people. The pastor translated my address, which appeared to be greatly enjoyed. Amid hearty expressions of mutual love and regret at necessary parting, we left for this city, where, after thirty-three hours of railway journeying, we arrived safely. Our esteemed brother, Rev. W. Gillings, from Australia, now resident at Bangalore, met me, and in the evening the Baptist Church was crowded to hear the Word of Life. Finding that I could reach Madras in time for Saturday morning's arrival, we held a second meeting on the Friday evening, which was indeed felt to be a season of power and blessing. I am glad that Mr. Wilder, whose father founded the mission at Kolahpur in 1852, will reach that city on Friday next, and will continue the meetings amongst the students. I rejoice at this, for surely there is real interest excited in many hearts. By the time this reaches you the work in Madras will be in earnest and active progress. My youngest son, Herbert, is with me, and renders valuable help. Pray for us.

AMONG THE JEWS IN TUNIS.

Too often it is the case with Christian schools abroad that a flourishing establishment is the result of allowing little to be made of religious differences, and of permitting Christianity to fall into the background. It was a pleasure to find that the schools of the London Jews' Society in Tunis by no means belong to this class, though their condition numerically is excellent. Rev. C. W. Flad, who has been in charge of them for the last year or two, makes a special point of distinctive Christian teaching, with which each day commences, school-time closing with prayer in the Name of the Messiah. The children have to provide their own Bibles, which they consequently take to their homes with them, so that there can be no deception as to what they are taught.

This is a noteworthy point, because while at the excellent schools of the Alliance Israelite everything is supplied free of cost, here the children provide themselves with books and stationery. In this way a slightly better class of children is secured, but it is really marvellous that any come under these circumstances. The arrangements and order of the schools seemed to leave nothing to be desired, so far as could be judged from my brief inspection, but others who had before me gone fully into the matter gave the highest testimony with regard to them. They are conveniently situated, together with Mr. Flad's house, in one big block of buildings, accommodating some five hundred boys and girls.

M. Mercadier, until recently of the North Africa Mission, has commenced to work among the Jews under this society, Mr. Flad's time being partially occupied as chaplain at the little English church, where visitors may therefore hear the Gospel preached for once on their way along the Mediterranean.

SLADE MISSION HALL, PLUMSTEAD.—The report for last year states: The evangelistic services on Sunday evenings have on the whole been well attended; the services have been conducted by the president (Colonel Tuck) and other friends who have kindly assisted him. Mrs. Tippinge has carried on the Mothers' Meetings on Monday afternoons for nearly the whole year; we regret very much that she has, owing to her departure, been obliged to relinquish them; a successor has not yet been found for this most necessary branch of the work. The secretary of the mission is Mr. A. W. Brodie.

REV. J. McNEILL IN DUMBARTON.

Mr. McNeill completed his Scottish mission by eight days work in Dumbarton. From the beginning the meetings were largely attended and greatly blessed. On the two Sundays while he was in the town, he preached in the morning in the Free High Church; at five to women in the Burgh Hall; and at seven to men in the Parish Church. During the week, after the first day, the evening meetings had to be doubled, the address being to women in the Burgh Hall, which holds about 1000, at six o'clock, and in the Parish Church for men only, which is seated for 1200, at eight. From the beginning the meetings were crowded.

A praise and testimony meeting, which was held in the Burgh Hall, Mr. McNeill being present, was densely crowded. That night, after the address, a very large number gave testimony to their having passed from darkness to light during the mission; and many named the night on which they were converted, and the subject which seemed to reach them. Those specially thus referred to were Mr. McNeill's address upon the Passover, and on David in the Cave of Adullam.

Several of the clergymen of the town were constant in their attendance both at the meetings and at the after-meetings, and testimony is borne on all hands both to the lasting effect of Mr. McNeill's mission a year ago, and to the evident results of blessing in connection with this mission. Mr. Burke's singing of the Gospel was a source of great help and encouragement. All through the mission Mr. McNeill's presentation of the Gospel was marked both by power and tenderness, and many every night appeared to be broken down under the powerful preaching.

Mr. McNeill and Mr. Burke are now in Ireland. Before leaving for America in May to join Mr. Moody, they are to conduct missions in Drogheda, Tullamore, Waterford, Galway, Cork, Limerick, and Sligo. As the door for such efforts seems to be opened wide at present in Ireland, it is trusted that many will be earnest in prayer that God would bless the faithful preaching of the Gospel during this mission. J. C. W.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

The zealous efforts of Rev. James Baillie and his co-workers at Bloomsbury Chapel have been supplemented by an eight-day mission by these evangelists. The church has for some time been alive with Christian activity; and in preparation for and expectation of an enlarged blessing. The mission was begun on Saturday evening, March 4, when a service of song was given, entitled "Homeward Bound," in which Mr. J. Manton Smith, with his silver cornet, was the prominent figure.

On Sunday there were three services. The morning and evening were for adults, that in the afternoon for children and young people. The crowded buildidg and the fixed and eager attention were sufficient testimony to the interest evoked; while the numerous visitors to the inquiry room and the quickened influences experienced by believers were powerful evidences that times of refreshing had come from the presence of the Lord.

On Monday afternoon there was a large gathering of "women only:" many of these were the poor mothers of the district around. Not only were the addresses effective and appropriate, but the personal influence and ministry of Christian ladies found a fitting sphere in the spiritual advice they gave to those in the humble walks of life. On Wednesday afternoon there was "an hour with the Bible," which was much enjoyed.

At the evening meetings during the week there were large audiences, and much manifest blessing on the word preached and sung. There was no meeting on Friday evening, but on Saturday Mr. Smith told his "life story," which was full of interest, and absorbed the attention of the audience that filled the building in every part. Sunday last was the closing day of the mission. In the morning the preacher urged upon all Christians to be filled with the Spirit. In the afternoon there was a meeting for "men only," when Mr. Fullerton preached powerfully. The service in the evening was the crowning one. At the close of the address the usual earnest appeals were made, and anxious souls followed each other in quick succession into the inquiry room. The rooms used for this purpose during the week were too small now, and the large schoolroom was applied to this holy service. "When we left at half-past nine," says a correspondent, "some fifty or sixty anxious souls were being advised and instructed in the ways of the Lord more perfectly." It is to be hoped that the friends at Bloomsbury will follow up this work, that they may continue to gather a rich harvest of souls for the Master's service and glory. W. H.

GROVE MISSION, SOUTHWARK.

Before the evening service last Sunday, Mr. Weston, the hon. superintendent, made a statement regarding some new departures in the work of the Mission. Last December the Grove "Sisters of the People" commenced work among the courts and alleys of Southwark, dealing with the cases of poverty and wretchedness that have to be searched out. After these have been investigated a supply of provisions is sent by a sister, who reads the Scripture and prays with each recipient, and in cases of sickness or infirmity, performs such household work as is necessary. About two thousand people have been benefited through this agency during the past winter. The funds for this special work had been fairly well supplied by friends of all denominations, and every penny given is spent on one or other of the objects for which the sisterhood was instituted. All the workers at the Grove are unpaid.

The success attending the work of "Sisters of the People" had induced them to found a brotherhood, which is intended to be more than local in its operations, and which will include visitation of the hospitals, workhouses, infirmaries, the sick and dying; also the befriending of friendless lads coming to London, the holding of bright services in lodging-houses and the courts and alleys of London, and the distribution of Gospel literature among Sunday-morning excursionists at railway-stations.

VILLAGE OPEN-AIR WORK.

"I trust this mission has been as profitable to others as pleasant to me. It is so cheering to hear the people's thanks. One says, 'It is quite a treat to get such books.' Another, 'I thank you much for these tracts. I am so glad to have them.' Then I am allowed to see the sick folks, read and pray with them. Many are aged and infirm; some deaf, others blind. The weather favoured for open-air work. There has been much influenza in the villages, which seems to lead many to more seriousness." So writes our latest itinerant: one of those who have lately been sent on preaching tours among country villages and hamlets, with the happiest results. In fourteen days this agent visited eighteen villages, walked ninety miles and rode 113, distributed 3000 tracts, and preached thirteen times.

Many villages are spiritually dark, and only an external and non-local aggressiveness can supply the need. The Open-air Mission proposes more than ever to devote itself to the important task of reaching the most scattered and thinly-populated, and therefore the most neglected, places in the land. How eagerly these rural audiences listen to the Gospel. To them it is often a strange and thrilling story.

Men are waiting to be sent forth on these joyful errands—men of God, men filled with the Spirit. Only lack of means hinders their going. The summer, with all its wealth of opportunity, is upon us. Frank Cockrem.

Christian Endeavour.

A society has been commenced at the Wesleyan Chapel, Westbury-on-Trym, with fifteen active members. The first meeting was held on March 2, and was most successful, the members taking part without the least hesitation. The friends are confident that the society will be a means of blessing to the young people.

Over 500 societies have now been registered in the Bristol section. During the past month forty-six societies have been registered, a good proof of the strong hold which the movement has now taken.

The Christian Endeavour, organ of the Bristol section, has met with much acceptance.

IRELAND.—Friday, March 17, has been fixed as a day of prayer for Ireland by the Dublin branch of the Evangelical Alliance.

GEMS FROM THE GUTTER.

All through this winter we have been squeezing into our crowded homes lads who in their last extremity have stretched out their hands to us for help. We simply could not refuse them. For instance, there was as the newspapers called the poor boy charged before the Greenwich magistrate last December with sleeping out in a tub when there were sixteen degrees of frost, who the constable in charge of the case testified had been sleeping out for two years. Another time two lads with a banjo and fancy dress, who with blackened faces have been picking up a living as "street niggers"; or one unable to get work in the coal mines of South Wales who tramped to London; or another from a thieves' kitchen who had already been in prison as a pickpocket, and was actually on a thieving expedition when he read the notices on our windows and suddenly resolved to make an attempt to lead an honest life; or two homeless brothers fighting the battle of life together who, out of work, shelterless, and in sheer starvation crave for our help and care.

In spite of all our struggles to cope with this flood of misery, we have never had a happier winter's work. The tone amongst the boys has been capital, and the improvement in their appearance and habits most marked. Many, too, we know, have been deeply convicted of sin, solemnly made to feel their need of the Saviour, and definitely accepted Christ as their Deliverer and Lord.

It is safer to speak of special cases of spiritual fruit after the lapse of some years of testing, so on this point I content myself with

AN OLD BOY'S LETTER

just received from which Canada, says:—

"My financial circumstances would not permit me to attend college this winter, so I took an appointment in a mission station until next October. I think this was the best course in every way, as it will give me an insight into the work to which I am devoting myself. I preached my first sermon on New Year's Day, and I have been preaching every Sunday since. I have two fine stations to supply in a well-settled district. The people are mostly Scotch Presbyterians, with a sprinkling of Methodists and Church of England people; but there is one good thing about them—they are not bigoted, for they all turn out to the services on Sundays. The first service is held in the morning at eleven in a school-house, which is always well filled. Then, after dinner, I have a drive of nine miles to my next station, which is a beautiful little church at the foot of a mountain. We have service there at three, and I tell you we have some grand times. I feel sometimes as if I could take them all and carry them to Jesus' feet."

This is only a specimen of letters I am continually receiving from our old boys in the Far West. We have just received another touching token of their gratitude; they have sent their fifth New Year's surprise gift out of their hard-earned savings, amounting to no less than £230. Their previous gifts were: In 1889, £108; 1890, £148; 1891, £204; 1892, £213. We have also had the pleasure of adding twelve names to the in our schoolroom i.e., boys who have repaid the £10 laid out on their emigration so as to give another poor lad the same good start in life. These facts need no comment.

We are now preparing our party to leave in a few weeks. I would like to send 120, but I fear I may not have the means. A few friends have privately contributed £475, but we need £725 at once to crown another year's labour amongst "Nobody's Boys." Many friends each year espouse the case of a particular boy, "In memoriam" of some dear one—a father, brother, son, etc., and find the best monument to the memory of their loved departed in a Robert, Charles, or John placed out in life with bright prospects in Canada. We are glad to send a photo and particulars of the boys thus benefited.

May I ask prayer for these boys, that the last few days in their native land may be an impressive time, that they may have a safe passage, and be located in homes on the other side just suited to each particular case?

CHRISTIAN POLICE ASSOCIATION.

The tenth anniversary of this Association, which is now doing such a valuable work amongst our civic guardians, was celebrated last week by a whole series of gatherings in Exeter Hall and at the Police Institute, attended by delegates from all parts of the land, and taking very largely the form of a conference for the deepening of spiritual life. Nothing was presented in the way of a report, one of the chairmen shrewdly remarking that a crowded, enthusiastic, and sympathetic audience such as he saw before him, composed of policemen and their friends, was better than any report, and the grandest possible testimony to the spiritual result of the work.

On Friday Rev. J. Hudson Taylor gave a moving missionary address dealing with consecration and service, and sounding forth the claims of the heathen for the Gospel.

Mr. A. A. Head, who presided in the afternoon, said: The Association has been making great advances during the past twelve months. There was a time when people asked, Is it possible for a policeman to be a Christian? That time has gone for ever; the C.P.A. has proved that constables can be Christians, and can do grand service for God and his kingdom. The Police Institute in Adelphi, W.C., is doing splendid service, while the Seaside Home at West Brighton is proving most valuable. The new buildings, to be opened in July, will afford opportunities for increased usefulness in this way.

Rev. J. G. Mantle gave a telling address based on the words of Ezek. xxxvi. 23, "The heathen shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes." The speaker dwelt very solemnly on separation from sin, separation unto God, and possession by God.

Rev. G. C. Grubb followed with a searching address on "We esteemed Him not." We can neither be saved nor sanctified until we have a right estimate of Christ, and much depends on the position we accord Him "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." The speaker's words were remarkable and valuable because of the high position assigned to the Lord Jesus and his work. Mr. Grubb concluded, as is his wont, with a close and clinching plea to personal decision.

In the evening the hall was again densely crowded. Captain Tottenham presided, and opened with a few solemn and earnest words to Christians and the unsaved.

Mr. E. Millard gave an exposition of Luke xii. 37, dealing with watching, readiness, and cleansing, in view of the Lord's speedy coming.

Rev. G. C. Grubb took as his text the word "Now," from Luke xiv. 17. The invitation was not to a funeral (as many seem to imagine), but to a feast; and it is "Come now." Satan believes only in future salvation, and Satan is the inventor of "future probation." We are set as present witnessess to a present salvation by the power of a present Jesus. After dwelling on the guests—the poor, maimed, halt, and blind—Mr. Grubb closed with a moving appeal for personal decision.

The report of the C.P.A. just issued gives interesting evidence of the spread of the work in Canada, the United States; and of hopeful beginnings in Australia, Africa, and India. It is hoped that work will soon be started among the native police of India, and also the native force in South Africa.

As to the home work, it is stated:—"Throughout our branches in England, Scotland, and Ireland, we have seen many evidences of the power of God. While we cannot tell of many new branches opened, we can praise God for a deepened interest in the work, and a spirit of inquiry throughout our forces, especially among the young men, such as we have not seen before."

The Bible-class work has been greatly blessed; so also the visitation from house to house, especially in times of sickness or sorrow, when real loving sympathy seldom fails to gain an opening. A secretary writes: "Hearing one day that an officer had fallen, through drink, into great difficulty, probably reduction or dismissal, I went at once to his house, and whilst dealing faithfully with him about his sin, and pointing him to the Saviour, sought to show every sympathy with his sad circumstances. The next day he called at my house. 'You came to me first,' he said, 'or I should never have come to you. But I'm a miserable man, and I want Christ to save me now.' And it was not long before, on his knees, he found the Saviour, and went away trembling, but trusting. 'It won't matter so much now,' he said, 'whether I'm reduced or not, for I'll be a happier man as constable with Christ, than I have been as an Inspector without Him.'"

The Central Police Institute has been a centre of blessing. "Few (says the report) can estimate the value of an attractive Christian home to a young man coming fresh from the country to join our Metropolitan Police Force, or to the Provincial police coming to London on business or leave. It is a boon, not only to the Metropolitan Force, but to the whole country, as men from other forces and candidates always have a welcome to it. Any policeman in trouble of mind or anxiety of soul can always find here someone ready to sympathise with his difficulties, and lovingly to point him to the great Burden Bearer. Many of our young men have come in to find peace and joy in a living Saviour, and gone out to bring in some brother comrade to share with them in the glad tidings.

"'I know you can be saved in this room,' said a detective, who had lately come to Christ, when talking in our reading-room to a young constable; 'I was saved here. There's the very chair where I knelt when I gave my heart to God.'"

Similarly interesting and encouraging accounts are given of various branches of the work. The report, which is well worth perusal, may be had of the Secretary, Christian Police Association, 1A, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

Mr. Arthur Mercer, secretary of the Cape General Mission, addressed the University Missionary Union recently, and also held a meeting in one of the colleges.

The interest of Oxford men in the work of the Children's Special Service Mission is increasing. Mr. Arrowsmith spoke at a large and crowded drawing-room meeting at Wycliffe Lodge last Friday, and his address was much valued.

The annual meeting of the Oxford Female Penitentiary and the City Refuge was held last week, when Lord Addington presided. The latter home is in the charge of two Mildmay deaconesses, and is the centre of a necessarily quiet but very real work.

The Great Western Railway Temperance Union held a most successful meeting at the Y.M.C.A. on March 8, when earnest addresses were given by Revs. Canon Fremantle and F. J. Chavasse, Mr. M. E. Sadler, steward of Christ Church, and others. The branch is in a healthy condition, and is evidently doing most useful work.

The work at open air meetings at the Martyrs' Memorial continues to be vigorously prosecuted under the leadership of Mr. Alvarez, of Jesus, and good audiences gather every Sunday evening.

The new president of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union is Mr. E. H. Elwin, of Merton, who may be relied upon to carry on the earnest and admirable work of his immediate predecessors, Messrs. Ketchlee, of Exeter, and Alvarez, of Jesus.

A meeting was held in the hall of Hertford College on Sunday evening last on work in Japan, when the Bishop of Japan gave an account of the Church missions there. Rev. J. Imai, a native ordained clergyman of Japan, also spoke.

Oxford men are looking forward with keen anticipation to the Inter-University Conference which is to be held here on Friday, March 17, and the two following days. Over 100 delegates are expected from Cambridge, Durham, Dublin, and the Scotch Universities, and there is every prospect of a most profitable gathering. The prayers of old Oxford men are earnestly asked for it, while their presence, if they can possibly come, will be heartily welcomed.

CAMBRIDGE.

On Tuesday evening, March 7, a meeting was held at the Guildhall, for the purpose of hearing an account of the Church Missionary Society's work in Uganda from Rev. R. H. Walker, who was accompanied by Mika Sematimba, a Uganda chief. The Master of Trinity presided over a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Walker graphically enforced the difficulties and the reality of the work, and the great need and importance of preparing native Christians for evangelistic labours. Mika, who met with an enthusiastic reception, specially emphasised the oneness of the Uganda and English Christians in the Lord, and the deep thirst among his fellow-countrymen for Christian instruction.

On Friday evening Dr. Monro Gibson preached a very thoughtful sermon upon 1 Cor. ii. 6 at the induction of Rev. A. Halliday Douglas at the Presbyterian Church.

The University sermon was preached at Great St. Mary's on Sunday, March 12, by Rev. W. Page Roberts, St. John's College.

The address at the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union last Sunday evening was given by Mr. H. Bidlake. After giving an account of his own conversion and spiritual experience he exhorted his hearers to lovingly accept Christ as Saviour. A prayer meeting was held at the conclusion of the address.

Rev. Thos. Bowman, at the Monday evening meeting of the Cambridge Missionary Union, gave an interesting account of the work of the Irish Church Mission. Special attention was drawn to its difficulties and needs, and to the ignorance, superstition, and hostility it had to cope with. The value of this branch of missionary enterprise was urged as an excellent apprenticeship for future work in the foreign field.

IRISH NOTES.

Special prayer was offered last Sunday in all the Presbyterian Churches on behalf of Ireland, and a collection taken up on behalf of home missions.

A series of meetings for the deepening of spiritual life has been held in Dalkey by Archdeacon Galbraith, Canon Wynne, Revs. E. S. Daunt, T. E. Hackett, and Professor Macintosh.

The Cork Methodists have commenced a series of "happy Saturday evenings" for the people in their new Central Hall, which promise to be a great blessing, and which have been most favourably noticed by the local Press.

The Association for the Employment of the Industrious Blind is doing a splendid work in Belfast. Last year it gave employment to eighty-three persons—fifty-four men and twenty-nine women—and paid in wages nearly £3000.

Special evangelistic services have been held in the Methodist Church, Skibbereen, co. Cork, by Rev. Jas. Kirkwood; in Carlow Presbyterian Church, by Rev. Jno. McIlveen, of Belfast; in the First Presbyterian Church, Markethill, by Rev. Samuel Lindsay, of Ardstraw; and in Cork Congregational Church, by Rev. W. A. Meaton, of London.

Rev. Samuel McComb, successor of Rev. Dr. Murphy in Elmwood Church, Belfast, has rendered a very important service to the truth by means of a class he has been conducting for some time for the study of "Christianity and Modern Doubt." This class has been attended by agnostics and others. Ministers, lawyers, and business men have listened with interest to the discussions that have taken place.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Glasgow United Evangelistic Association give free meals every Sabbath morning to from 1000 to 1500 of the most destitute.

A quiet but effective rescue mission is carried on in Inverness. The need of such work in the city, says a local journal, is greater than is commonly supposed.

Rev. John Robertson's overture to the assembly proposed at a recent meeting of the Glasgow Presbytery, seeking to make spirit-makers and dealers ineligible for eldership was rejected by seventy votes to fourteen.

A sacred concert given on a recent Sunday evening in Inverness by the members of an operatic company has caused much comment in the community. Protests were made by several local ministers at a meeting of Presbytery.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier has received from a friend in Glasgow, who desires to remain unknown, a cheque for £2000 to build and furnish a home in the National group at Bridge of Weir. Mr. Quarrier still requires six additional homes.

In his fourth lecture on missions, entitled "New Converts and Martyrs," Dr. Pierson said he had recently compiled a report from the most reliable sources available, and he had calculated that there were 55,000 persons employed on the different mission fields throughout the world. The remarkable thing was that of that number there were only about 8,000 white people, including missionaries' wives and female medical missionaries, showing that the remaining 47,000 persons engaged in evangelistic work were natives of the countries into which the missions were sent. The fact that these countries furnished six times as many missionaries as civilised Christian countries he regarded as one of the most remarkable proofs of the power and truth of the Gospel.

MRS. HILTON (of the Stepney Crèche), we are very glad to report, shows decided signs of improvement in health, and the doctors are now hopeful of her recovery.

Three Moral Evils.

[From "The Methodist Times."]

Even Christian people are so preoccupied with their own affairs, and so quickly forget social facts brought under their notice, that it is only too probable some sincere Christians in England cannot understand the distress and indignation which has been aroused among well-informed Christian philanthropists by the refusal of the Decennial Conference of Indian Missionaries to express any opinion upon the great moral scourges of that continent. It is therefore necessary, however painful, to give the Christian public at home at least some hint of the actual facts which the Decennial Conference has treated with so much levity. As every English citizen is now personally and directly responsible to God for the government of India, it is impossible to evade responsibility by saying that the subject is disagreeable and by laying it on one side. Every Christian will be compelled to give an account to Christ for his action or apathy on these tremendous moral issues. It is urgently important, therefore, to know something of the facts. A representative of this journal has been in communication with those who have the best and the most recent knowledge. In the light of the information which he has carefully collected, we proceed to state the nature of the three moral evils which the great gathering of Indian missionaries refused in their corporate capacity to condemn.

I.—THE INDIAN STATE REGULATION OF VICE.

The Government of India and the military authorities are under the impression that they can improve the moral law of the universe. They therefore unblushingly license sin. Let us go to Lucknow and see their method. We enter the Serai—a barracks for fallen women, containing nearly a hundred one-room dwellings, built, owned, and maintained by our representatives in India. Each room in that British barracks of shame is numbered and occupied by a registered native woman. In the open courtyard between the long rows of dwellings a military policeman is stationed to keep order. To assist him there is here and there another Government official—a Mahaldarnee, a sort of forewoman of the registered women, who receives a monthly wage of ten rupees. A part of the business of these official women is to keep the Government hell supplied with fresh victims. These are drawn principally from the large class of child widows. There is also an official tariff for sin. Such places exist in nearly every military quarter in India.

Every year 10,000 soldiers, or "mere boys," as Lord Wolseley calls them, are sent out to India for five years, and there by the English Government are drawn into vice by a system which the British nation has refused to tolerate at home, and which was utterly unknown in India until we introduced it. In most stations the public women are usually examined once a week by the European or native doctors. This is in order to provide "safe" vice for our young soldiers, although, of course, these vile medical dodges are delusive. Besides this examination each Dhai (the woman in charge) is expected to examine the women at least twice or thrice weekly. The hapless victims submit to this because the choice lies between starvation and submission. To show how this examination tends to the increase of vice, it need only be said that the soldiers' visits are more frequent after the known examination day.

When the 10,000 men who replace their fellows in India find such ample and careful provision made for lust, it is not surprising that they soon imagine vice to be necessary for men. The officers and generals who carry out the system become drilled in the same deas. We do not wonder, under these circumstances, to read in The Times of India that "more than one-half of the total number of European troops in India in 1890 were absolutely unfit to go into the field as the result of self-indulgence." Continuing, The Times of India says: "It is now 1892, and if the same rate of increase has been maintained—and there is reason to believe that it has been maintained—the condition of the army in India to-day, so far as two-thirds of its number is concerned, can be little short of rotten." The fact is, the so-called medical "protection" of our boy soldiers is as unreal as it is blasphemous.

Some may imagine that an end was put to all this by the vote in the House of Commons in June, 1888, which condemned any legislation that enjoined, authorised, or permitted the licensing or regulation of the sin of impurity in India. These instructions were carried out in the Colonies, thanks to Lord Knutsford; but in India it was otherwise. There we have been deceived and mocked in the perfor mance. It is true that the Indian Contagious Diseases Act has been repealed, but a new Cantonment Act has been put in force by the Viceroy in Council, which has revived nearly all the iniquities and infamies of the previous laws. What has been described here takes place under it. But God is not mocked. We in England now reap that which we allow to be sown in India. The soldiers from India at the end of their short service are shipped home, and let loose in England. By these regulations the virtue of thousands of English women is endangered. The European traffic is largely an effect of the markets of vice established and promoted by the Anglo-Indian system of legalised debauchery. We need not dwell upon the effect of all this deliberate and systematic devilry on the heathen, before whom our soldiers and other representations pose as "Christians." What, above all, do Indian women think of us?

II.—THE INDIAN OPIUM TRADE.

Our opium traffic is a triple infamy. It curses India, Burma, and China. Lord Kimberley says that the revenue from this traffic cannot be dispensed with "for the present." In that particular he closely follows Warren Hastings, who was impeached on this, among other points, and defended himself by saying that it had at least enriched the East India Company by half-a-million sterling. The victims generally begin by smoking opium twice a day, at morning and night, for an hour at a time. After two or three months' use they are completely in the grip of the habit. That is, they cannot leave it off for one day without great suffering. The amount smoked varies according to the means of the individual and the length of the time he has indulged. In multitudes of cases they realise the grip of the habit, and seek to be released. But they are so mastered by it, so incapable of effort, that they are rarely able to endure the physical ordeal of absolute abstention from their habit, which is essential if they are to be free. It is necessary to place the victims under restraint for about ten days before the awful craving is stayed. One point to which our attention is particularly called is this: The Roman Catholic, the German, the Swiss, the Scandinavian, the American and British Churches of China and Japan, without one exception, exclude the opium smoker, grower, and seller from church membership. For the sake of revenue we tempt men with that the ordinary use of which will debar them from becoming members of the different Christian churches. In India the churches have no such restriction. The opium traffic places untold difficulties in the way of missionary work. Opium smokers are looked upon as furthest from the kingdom of God. Archdeacon Wolfe says that it is almost impossible to make any impression of a moral or spiritual nature on the victims of opium. Hudson Taylor actually declares that opium does more harm in a week than all our Christian missionaries are doing good in a year. Not only are the natives of China debarred by the use of the drug from becoming Christians, but our conduct with respect to the traffic has alienated others who are not victims, but who are wide awake to the results of our infamous system of raising revenue. The amount of opium produced in India now is about 108,000 chests yearly, each chest being 140lb. in weight. Half of this is grown in British India, the remainder in native States directly under British control. 1,000,000 acres of land in India are devoted to its cultivation. If it be asked what India has to do with opium in China, the answer is—everything. Five-sixths of Indian-grown opium is not for Indian consumption, but for export to China and elsewhere. The Indian consumption is comparatively small; but it is growing. It is much larger now than in China at the beginning of the century. If action were taken at once it could be dealt with easily. The Chinese were compelled by force to take our opium. We constrained them to legalise its importation. The result is that about 50,000,000, or one-sixth of the population, are the victims of opium. The Chinese Government for long resisted it. But the subtle influence of gold, which has been the curse of our Indian officials, is creeping over the present Government, and the £2,000,000 revenue which is derived from Indian-grown opium, besides what is derived from China opium, is making them less eager to put the traffic down. That is why outsiders should have something to say on the opium arrangements of India, whether they concern other nations or the people of India itself. The worst feature of the opium question is that we are demoralising our own subjects in India. One-half of the crimes in the opium districts—murder and affrays—have their origin in opium eating. The Indian Board of Revenue proposed to introduce the cultivation of the poppy into Scinde. Here is the answer of the Bombay Governor and his Council: "The Government consider there are very strong objections to the introduction of an industry so demoralising in its tendency as opium cultivation and manufacture into a province where at present it is unknown. It has already been tried in Gujerat, and the result was widespread corruption and demoralisation."

The most damnable part of the whole business is that the cultivation of opium is pressed by our Government for the sake of filthy lucre. To gain an enormous profit the Government is ready to make advances to the cultivator. The price paid is the veriest trifle compared with the Government profits. It may be said that the Government, by charging the maximum price for opium that can be obtained without promoting smuggling, is trying to restrict its use in India. It is well known, however, that that does not restrict the sale. As the export trade to China is undoubtedly to obtain a big revenue, is it likely that the Government has a different code of morality for India? Why is it that all over India the opium licences are sold by auction, or to the highest bidder? Why is it that in this way a premium is put on energetic sales? Does such a system mean morality or revenue?

It may be argued that the growth of the poppy cannot be put down—that it would be against the habits and customs of the people. But a few years ago 100,000 acres were cleared off in Bengal at once, and Assam was cleared in toto, when it suited the Government revenue to do it. And such an argument from a Government which defies the religious feelings and habits of the Burmese in insisting on provision for the sale of opium in both Lower and Upper Burma, which ignores the earnest remonstrances of the Chinese Government against its importation, and the repeated protests of the English-speaking world, is a sham. The real obstacle to the putting down of the cultivation in British India is not the 8000 chests required for internal consumption, but the 90,000 chests to be sold to the Chinese to gain £4,000,000 of blood-money.

III.—THE INDIAN LIQUOR TRADE.

The evils of the liquor traffic in India, as of the opium trade, are due to frantic efforts to raise the revenue. The drink traffic in India is managed by the Government, and the root of the evil is in the Central-Distillery system. But the Government owns and runs great gin distilleries, which are managed from top to bottom by Government officials. At these distilleries a burning, fiery, poisonous liquid is made, which rapidly eats out the internal organs of the wretched victims who are entrapped into using it. It is sold at prices ranging from twopence to fourpence the bottle. English soldiers are not allowed to touch it. Notices are placed over the doors where the poison is sold to that effect, and heavy penalties are levied on the manager who should dare to supply them. On the natives, however, it is forced at every turn. This would seem to imply that though we may all be of one flesh and blood, what is bad for one need not necessarily be bad for the other!

If the Government has no wish to stimulate the sale of liquor, why does it, through its officers, allow greedy liquor dealers to open up new shops where they never existed before, and where they are not needed? Why does it compel planters to give up sufficient land for the erection of these shops, which will only destroy their coolies? Why do magistrates absolutely refuse to shut up grog shops when the majority of the people protest against them, and petition to have them closed? Why does the Government sanction the settlement of far more shops than the liquor dealers will take up? That is the case in almost every district in India. Why does the Government sell the right to manufacture liquor to the highest bidder by public auction? Why is the minimum guarantee system in vogue in Bombay and the Central Provinces, which means that the native distiller is bound down to a minimum number of gallons of liquor which he is bound to produce, whether he can sell it all or not, the object being to secure the duty from the extra gallonage produced? If the Government only wishes to supply the normal demand of the people for drink, why will it not adopt the local option principle and allow the people to say whether they wish to have grog shops or not? This has been again and again proposed and urged upon the Government, but to no practical effect. Why are successful Excise officers always commended by the Board for speedy promotion?

In the days of Mogul Government not a rupee of Excise receipts was allowed to go into the Imperial Treasury, as it was counted bad money. Even the East India Company told its Excise officers that the object which Government had in view was to restrain, and, if possible, to arrest and diminish, the consumption of spirits, being fully persuaded that any amount of revenue that may be lost by the efficiency of the system to this end will be repaid a hundred-fold by the preservation and advancement of moral feeling and industrious habits among the people. That instruction was issued more than fifty years ago. Shortly after the mutiny in 1858, the Excise revenue of the North-West provinces was only 9,000,000 rupees. In 1888-9 it was no less than 55,000,000 rupees. Such may be called financial success. Perhaps to Government it is so, but socially and morally to the people it spells ruin. Surely the people should be of greater value to the Government than the revenue.

Rev. Thomas Evans, of the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association, who has travelled from one end of India to another, says that from personal observation he finds that all classes are affected with the poison of alcohol by three influences—the example of Europeans, the eagerness of the Government to push the drink traffic for revenue purposes, and the relaxation of social habits and religious restrictions consequent upon the spread of Western secular and, in most cases, godless education. It is madness to suppose that that which is ruining the masses of the people can possibly be financially profitable. It is merely burning the candle at both ends. The drink revenue of the Indian Government is eating up to a tenfold extent the tax-paying possibilities of the Indian people in other directions. All the facts quoted here in connection with the Indian liquor traffic were laid before the Decennial Conference.

The unsophisticated Christian public at home will now be able to judge for themselves the moral significance of the fact that a decennial conference of Christian missionaries in India, face to face with the awful evils we have partially disclosed, refused to condemn them, lightly dismissing the whole subject as "a point of procedure." This is what Anglo-Indianism has brought them to. The Indian Government is a wholesale manufacturer and trader in drink, opium, and fallen women. A majority of the Indian missionaries resolved that they would not say one word in condemnation of so wealthy and powerful a servant of the devil as the Anglo-Indian Government.

Gathered Gold.

PATIENCE.

O give thy servant patience to be still,
And bear thy will;
Courage to venture wholly on the arm
That will not harm;
The wisdom that will never stray
Out of the way;
The love that now, afflicting, knoweth best
When I should rest.

—J. M. Neale.

SALVATION—A GIFT.

Salvation is no commercial transaction, in which God, like a merchant, bargains to give so much for so much; but it is a Divine gift, which, in the exercise of Almighty power and God-like bounty, He confers upon the needy and helpless.—Hon. and Rev. B. W. Noel.

THE BIBLE.

The Book of God! And is there then a book
Which on its front that awful title bears?
Who hold it, what high duty must be theirs,
And what high privilege, therein to look,
To read, mark, learn, digest! But in this nook
Of earth pent up, and blinded by earth's cares,
Its hopes and joys, if man the treasure dares
To scorn, such scorn shall the Great Author brook!

HINDRANCES IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Oftentimes the hindrances that lie in the path of duty may be compared to the toll-gates upon our turnpike roads—they are kept shut till we are just upon them; and then fly open, as it were, of themselves. And that is time enough; if they had been open a week beforehand we could but have gone through at last.—John Newton.

THE MOTIVE POWER OF CHRISTIAN WORK.

What made Andrew a missionary? The only answer is, Love—love to Christ on one side, and love to his brother on the other. He knew and loved Christ, and he wanted everybody to know and love Him too; and he determined to begin at home. If he could not save a world, he would try to save a soul, and that soul should be his own brother's. He made no excuses about his ignorance or inexperience, but set to work. Constraining love carried him through; he never rested till he had accomplished his object.—Rev. Charles Garrett.

DIVINE COMFORT.

I love all the words of God: but there are some that have an aroma of rest around them. Were you ever in such trouble that, when you read the chapter beginning with these sweet words, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me," you read it in vain? I think I never did. With the tears in my heart as well as in my eyes, I have read that blessed verse again and again, and I have been comforted. That eighth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans is a wonderful light when you are in the dark. When I read those glorious doctrines I find golden stepping stones through the slough of despond. And, as for the Psalms, the man who wrote most of them seemed to be "not one, but all mankind's epitome." He has lived out all our lives, yours and mine, and millions besides; his Psalms breathe peace around us; and as we accept the truths they reveal, we are enabled to rest upon them.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Letters to the Editor.

ROTTENNESS AT THE CORE.

Dear Sir,—Time was when, "leaving the first principles of the doctrine of Christ," an apostle could lead on his followers to "perfection." But present-day experience suggests that it would be well if many, who call themselves after the name of Christ, could be brought back from imagined perfection, well to ponder these selfsame principles.

The unrebuked dishonesty that, just now, prevails in the professing Church, with regard to money matters alone, is—the God of Malachi's day remaining unchangeable—enough, of itself, to shut heaven against all special prayer for special blessing. The widow and the orphan, to say nothing of the aged and infirm, are being shamelessly plundered by so-called religious people, with Sabbath-school teachers, church officers, ministers, and even mission preachers among them. Yet scarcely a single voice of protest is raised against this recognised iniquity. Often have I been struck with the unctuousness of some prayer, or the striking nature of some platform address, to find afterwards that others, in the same assembly, have been listening to a man who has for years owed them money without making any effort to restore them their due.

Some time ago a gentleman called on me, full of seeming desire for the salvation of his fellow-men. He had been, and was still, a public man; but, after preaching for me, he gave me to understand that he was in difficulties. I helped him to the best of my ability, and then appealed to a Christian friend on his behalf. The answer I received was this:—"He has already had a thousand out of me." I found another gentleman, who boasted, in my hearing, that he had long enjoyed the victory over sin, to be everywhere in debt, having among his many creditors a poor widow lady who was endeavouring to obtain life's necessaries by keeping a school for young children. That same man, too, was sporting a massive gold chain on his waistcoat, while giving "his experience."

Such is the latitude now granted to this kind of thing, that it is becoming daily more difficult to deal with it. A Noncomformist friend of mine preached a special sermon on the subject, and, after placing before his congregation the plain precept of the Holy Ghost, "Owe no man anything, but to love one another," he told his audience that he had been most deeply pained by hearing a tradesman say that two-thirds of the names "on his books" were those of religious people, and that a great many of these were belonging to his own church.

What was the result of his faithfulness? A church meeting was held, and he was advised to "keep to the Gospel," as if any Gospel from a holy God could be made to harmonise with allowed dishonesty. In case the advice offered was not received and acted upon, he was warned that it might be wise for him to look out for a fresh sphere of labour. Antinomianism is doing its work so rapidly and thoroughly, that in thousands of cases the blessed Saviour is being made to serve as a minister of sin. "It is under the blood," said a man very recently, when a charge of evil-doing had been established against him. "It was not I, but the sin that dwelt in me," said another, when unable to deny a similar accusation. "If God has forgiven me my debts, I don't see why I should trouble about those I owe to my fellow-man," has been the cry of a third.

But what does all this mean? Shall God be mocked? Or rather, will not these unstable souls find that to gratify their own wicked lusts, or equally wicked selfishness, they have been wresting the Scriptures to their own destruction? One thing is most certain, and it is this: If any man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, "the Lord is the avenger of all such"; and it is getting high time for some of these well-nigh forgotten Scriptures to be brought to the fore again.

THE FUTURE OF ENGLAND.

Sir,—I possess a volume, "The History of England from Julius Cæsar to 1852," penned by the Religious Tract Society. After referring to it last evening I happened to glance at the paragraph 759 on the last page. It must have been written about forty years ago, but it seems to be very worthy of serious consideration at the present time. I append a copy, thinking the writer's sentiments and contingencies may be deemed worthy of a place in your columns:—

"What shall be the future of England and the Empire? The question has often been proposed by thoughtful minds. Poetical imaginations have indulged the conception of the Thames again becoming a silent stream, with its waters spread beyond neglected banks; its ancient aspect of a shallow pool resumed: the crane and the heron feeding in the marsh; while some New Zealander is contemplating the ruins of St. Paul's Cathedral from a crumbled arch of London Bridge. History is fraught with examples of the evanescence of national prosperity and power. The fate of Babylon, Nineveh, Tyre, Athens, and Rome furnishes impressive instances of a fall from high estate. Our insular position is some security against attack, but this has been diminished by steam navigation. Of the natural agencies which have led to our commercial and manufacturing superiority we have no monopoly, while our machinery is largely exported, and our artisans are free to emigrate.

"To be outrivalled by other nations, and unable to compete with them in the markets of the world, is certainly within the limit of possibility, though as yet it remains to be shown that any part of the globe combines in such abundance and contiguity the elements of mercantile greatness. The Almighty, by a thousand means inscrutable to us, can easily humble as well as exalt; but in the possession of our facilities, we may look hopefully upon the future as long as by us, as a nation, God is acknowledged in all our ways. Should it unhappily be the case that legislation ceases to be conducted on Christian principles; that contempt is offered by the Senate to the authority and rule of the Bible; that literature becomes deeply depraved, while commerce is conducted without honour; and virtue in society bears an utterly insignificant ratio to vice; we may then tremble for the intregrity of the empire and the safety of the realm, having provoked the wrath of the Most High. But let the righteousness which exalts the nation be cultivated in the councils of the kingdom—the marts of trade and the homes of the people; and the confidence may then be humbly entertained, that, whoever may fight against us, 'around all the glory there shall be a defence.'"

Should the extract be admitted, I have no doubt it will be found that in many points we have come "perilously near" the causes of national decline.

Yours, An Aged Christian.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

I had a little daughter,
And she was given to me
To lead me gently backward
To the Heavenly Father's knee.

Satan keeps school for neglected children.

The childhood shows the man, as morning shows the day.—Milton.

He who plays with dollars in his youth will have to beg for farthings in his old age.—Hone.

We require the very highest teaching, the very highest genius and power of the Church, to teach a child.

Mothers who have really earned the love and veneration of their children are very seldom defrauded of either.—Thomas Binney.

The most solemn denunciation of One whose words were almost full of tender love was uttered against those who lead little children into sin.

A child is a sunbeam on a winter sea; a flower in a prison garden; the music of bells over the noise of a great city; a fragrant odour in a sick-room.

If you have lost a child, remember that for the one that is gone there is no more to do; for those remaining, everything. Hide your grief for their sakes.

"Is this the way to heaven?" asked a poor little girl who one day strayed into a Sunday school. The teacher said the question came to him like the voice of God.

It was at my little lad's dying bed and at his grave that I learned what a poor slave mother may feel when her child is torn away from her.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

The children are the most impressionable; what can we do with the man who is hardened in sin? Teach them while yet the clay is soft, mould it for God.—Spurgeon.

If your children learn that home is a place where faces are sour, and words harsh, and fault-finding common, do not be surprised if they spend as many hours as possible elsewhere.

The liquor traffic can no more be run without destroying boys and girls, youths and maidens, men and women, than a threshing-mill can be run without grain.—Rev. G. Gladstone.

The dumb, patient resignation with which the poor children of the slums endure their hard lot is an appeal more irresistible than the loudest proclamation of their wrongs.—William Mitchell.

The idea of home life, free, and at the same time restrained, being an utterly new idea in India, has to be carefully taught and then guarded. The true position of a Christian woman as the stay of the house and the guide of the children has to be demonstrated.—The Hon Emily Kinnaird.

Personalia.

Rev. F. E. Wigram has been ordered a few weeks' complete rest and quiet.

Rev. R. Shemeld has removed from Estcourt, Natal, to Pretoria, Transvaal, to take charge of Zulu mission work.

Mr. R. F. Horton, who is to be the Lyman Beecher lecturer at Yale College, is expected to reach America early in April.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler is preaching constantly and frequently addressing large Y.M.C.A. conventions on the spiritual life. His health is excellent.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen is telling his story of missionary experiences in the New Hebrides in Scotland. Meetings were held last week in Edinburgh and Lanark.

Rev. Handley C. G. Moule has, in The Record, an outspoken article on "The Gospel and Honesty," dealing trenchantly with tricks of trade and recent revelations as to fraud.

Rev. Henry S. B. Yates, the superintendent of the Hull Wesleyan Mission, has been appointed editor of The Sunday-School Chronicle, in succession to the late Mr. Benjamin Clarke.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson is, we are glad to hear, gradually regaining strength, and is now in London, although not yet fit for duty. He hopes shortly to leave for the South Coast to recruit.

Rev. Wm. Ross, of Cowcaddens, Glasgow, has returned to this country from New Zealand. He has been absent from his post in Glasgow since the meeting of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance last autumn in Canada.

Lord Brassey has become the president of Dr. Barnardo's Homes for 1893-94, and has fixed upon Wednesday, June 7, as the date for the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the institution, in the Royal Albert Hall.

Rev. G. W. Olver, B.A., senior secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, is now en route for England, and his report on Indian missions, which he has been carefully investigating, is likely to be of an especially interesting character.

Mr. J. E. Budgett Meakin, of Tangier, is arranging to devote himself during next week to lecturing in Great Britain upon the land and people of Morocco. Communications should be addressed to the Lecture Agency, 38, Outer Temple, London, W.C.

Mr. William Joseph Lewis, late of the Spitalfields Gospel Mission, we regret to say, has been suffering from the old complaint in the respiratory organs, and is now quite unable to leave his bed. He desires the prayers of the Lord's people in this time of weakness.

Mr. Wm. J. Taylor, who has laboured with the late Mr. E. W. Thomas and been associated with him for the last twenty-four years in work among friendless and fallen, has been appointed his successor in the secretaryship. The homes and night-reception house will be carried on as formerly.

Rev. Jonathan Seaver, vicar of St. Mary's, Peckham, has accepted the charge of St. John's, Upper Holloway, vacant by the death of Mr. Gristock. Mr. Seaver's ministry of six years in Peckham has been one of marked success. He leaves behind him a well-organised parish, a full church, and a very attached congregation.

Mr. W. Lethaby is on his way to Busheir, in the Persian Gulf, whence he intends to journey to his mission station in Moab by crossing Arabia. Mrs. Lethaby has left London for Port Said, en route for Jerusalem and Kerak. The latest news is to the effect that this ancient city enjoys peace and safety, although there are continual rumours of its being brought under Turkish rule.

Rev. Thomas Champness has made a new departure. He has founded a "Home for the Sisters of the Villages" at Rugby. In the "Rugby Home" women workers will be trained as men are trained at Rochdale. Miss Champness will take charge of the household. Mr. and Miss Champness look to the friends of women evangelists led by the Spirit of God to support them in their latest step.

Mr. Geo. C. Needham, the well-known evangelist, has been compelled, through serious illness, to lay aside all work. Physicians assure him that his heart is affected, and prescribe absolute rest for eight months. Mr. Needham was by no means prepared for such unwelcome orders as these, but in communicating the news to a friend, he writes: "Nevertheless, the Lord will provide." Communications may be addressed to our friend, 1330, Arch-street, Philadelphia, U.S.A.

Rev. J. W. Rodger, of Bournemouth, has informed his congregation that he must consider the necessity for some change. This has been understood to mean that Mr. Rodger contemplates resigning his charge, on account of the weakness of throat with which he has been troubled of late years, and the attachment of his people to him is so strong that they are not at all willing to think of his separation from them. Mr. Rodger has been for eight years at Bournemouth, to which he went from Wolverhampton, and his success has been most remarkable.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken's visit to Paris terminated a few days ago. In a highly appreciative notice of the meetings, L'Eglise Libre says:—"Mr. Aitken is not one of those English clergymen, of whom there are so many, who coldly read, in a monotonous voice, a sermon which, though faultless, is without life or originality. No; he is a warm and eloquent preacher. The discourse on Matt. xxi. 28 ('Son, go work to-day in my vineyard') was a lecture rather than a sermon. Now natural and familiar, then profound and solemn, it stimulated the zeal of all and stirred up to a new consecration."

Evangelistic Notes.

Dalston.—Mr. T. Lewes Sayer has conducted a series of services for the young people of Shrubland-road Church. Much good was done.

Ripon.—A special mission has been held at Markinton by Rev. F. Cunningham and Mr. Gill. There have been signs of power and blessing.

The Shetlands.—A stirring mission has been held in Northmavin and Delting by Mr. W. Norwell, and in North Roe by Miss Ashford; much blessing has been manifested.

Aberdare.—A delightful work is going on at Aberaman. A special mission was held, much blessing was granted, the services were continued, and many profess conversion.

Mr. John Scroggie opened, on Lord's Day evening, a fortnight's mission at Blackheath. Already much interest has been shown; the hall has been well filled; and some have been cut to the heart and compelled to seek salvation.

Mr. John H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a fortnight's mission at Payton-street Chapel, Stratford-on-Avon. It has been a time of much blessing; many have been saved, and Christians greatly helped. Sometimes the chapel has been packed. A. S.

Mr. Joseph Clarke is having good meetings at the Edinburgh Castle. The Word appears to be with much power, and there have been many anxious inquirers. A very real work seems also going on among the youths from the Labour Home, and about forty of these profess a saving change.

Shepton Mallet.—Rev. Isaac Newton has conducted a series of mission services. There have been many earnest enquiries. A good number have professed to find the Saviour, and some of the cases are of unusual interest. A quickened spiritual life and a stronger bond of sympathy have followed the meetings.

Mr. John Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a very successful sixteen days' mission at the Baptist Chapel, Burnham, Essex. The addresses to children were greatly owned of God, and at the Sunday evening services the chapel was crowded in every part. Several men and women and children from the Sunday-school professed conversion. C. D. G.

Mr. Ash, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a fourteen-days' mission in the Bible Christian Chapel, Herodsfoot, St. Keyne, Cornwall. The meetings have been well attended, and the stirring discourses of the evangelist were much appreciated. Many found peace through the precious blood of Christ. Christians here are hoping to have him for another mission ere long. J. H. G.

Hoylake.—Mr. J. Wharton has held a fortnight's mission in the Masonic Hall, where a goodly number of promising young people belonging to the Sunday-school and others have been converted. Nearly all the members of our adult Bible-class are now rejoicing in Christ as their Saviour. This has cheered the hearts of the teachers' and given them to see that their labours have not been in vain in the Lord.

Margate.—A ten-days' mission has been held at Ebenezer Baptist Chapel, Margate (pastor, Rev. B. Brigg), conducted by Rev. F. C. Spurr. Miss Ada Rose sang the Gospel with much acceptance. The afternoon meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life were much appreciated by the Christian people of all denominations, who attended in large numbers. Many testified to the help received. A considerable addition to the church is anticipated. J. L. S.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes held an eight days' mission in the central branch of the Y.W.C.A., Birmingham, from February 26 to March 7. Our hall was well filled night after night with girls from business houses to hear the Gospel preached in plain, practical, and powerful words, when this skilled missioner brought the Word home to their needs and temptations. Many were deeply impressed, and some, who, we trust, were lastingly blessed, gave in their names. B. E. Udal, Hon. Sec.

Mr. William Sampson brought last week a ten days' mission at High-street, Lincoln, to a close, by describing his evangelistic tour in the West Indies with Alexander McAulay. On Sunday night the chapel was packed to the doors. Half of the congregation lingered till nearly ten o'clock. The sluggish have been thoroughly shaken, and more than sixty passed into the inquiry room. Scores of people in the villages around have been pricked in their hearts as the result of the services.

An interesting incident occurred recently in one of the meetings being conducted by Rev. C. H. Yatman, in New York City. A letter was read by him asking prayer for a man who said that while on his way to a gambling party he had, attracted by the music, come in the preceding evening and been much impressed. After the reading of the letter, a fine-looking gentleman arose, and saying that he was the man, came forward and, with two others, gave himself to God. He was one of five gamblers converted in these meetings.

Mr. William Nobbs, who is preaching this month at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road, has been much encouraged by the tokens of the Lord's blessing. Last Sunday evening there were several deeply interesting cases of conversion. Towards the close of his address the evangelist was led to ask "How many here are under the shelter of the Rock." At least a thousand raised their arms in response, while a shout went up that seemed to shake the place, "Thank God, we are on the Rock." It was a grand testimony to the work going on at the Tower Hamlets Mission.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has held a mission in Blandford Congregational Church; his labours commenced on Sunday, Feb. 26, and it was soon clear that there was a harvest just waiting for the sickle. At the close of the afternoon service a number of the senior scholars yielded themselves to Christ, and went home rejoicing. Again after the evening services, and on the subsequent evenings of the week, there were manifest tokens of blessing. The last meeting of the mission was a memorable time, as a great number stood up and publicly testified their acceptance of Christ and their desire to serve Him. It is especially gratifying that several members of the men's Bible-class have come out boldly for Christ, and are now working most earnestly for the conversion of their fellow members. Mr. Balgarnie has concluded a seven days' mission at Highbury Chapel, Cheltenham, of which Rev. Henry Varley is pastor. The services have been well attended throughout, and the Divine blessing has been upon them.

Obituary.

REV. CUSHING EELLS, D.D.

With the death of this revered servant of Christ, a most useful and exemplary life has come to a close. It is given to few men to accomplish a work so far-reaching and beneficent, and then to live long enough to see the rich harvest of half a century spent in the service of Christ among the red men of the North-west Territories of the United States. Born at Blanford, Mass., February 16, 1810, Dr. Eells passed away at the residence of his son, the Hon. E. E. Eells, of Tacoma, Washington State, on Thursday, February 16, 1893, realising what he had often desired, that he might reach his 83rd birthday. His public funeral took place at the First Congregational Church, Tacoma, on the 19th February, and was attended by men of all creeds and parties, who had learned to honour this servant of God, who was known to the Indians as "Father Eells," and by the white man as Dr. Eells, the pioneer missionary to the Indians of the Pacific coast. He was a co-labourer with Dr. Whitman, who lost his life in the service of Christ among the Indians so long ago as 1848. He was the last link with those early days in the history of Oregon, and in many ways a very remarkable man.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—It was a good ide on the part of the teachers at the Wurtemburg-street Sunday-school to interest the senior scholars in the needs of their less fortunate brothers and sisters. It was pleasing to see the girls and boys at their weekly meeting on Thursday, the one section busily engaged in knitting and sewing garments, and the other occupied in making scrapbooks, fretwork, etc., for the benefit of the cripple and ragged children helped by the Union.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.—The quarterly meeting of the Sunday School Missionary Fund was held on March 7, in the College Lecture Hall. Mr. G. H. Judd reported that £61 had been given to various missions as the result of the past quarter's contributions. Rev. George Piercy gave an interesting account of his mission to the Chinese in London, more than 2,000 of whom reach our port annually. Mrs. Piercy gave illustrations of Chinese manners and customs in native costumes which were much appreciated.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A new association has been formed at Killin, N.B.

Cowdenbeath Y.M. and Y.W.C.A. are carrying on successful evangelistic meetings in the Co-operative Hall every Sabbath evening.

At the Vermont Convention of Y.M.C.A.'s, great interest was aroused by the addresses of Rev. J. McConnaughy and others on Bible study.

The Brooklyn Association, which has now six branches, and three more being organised, reports great progress and much blessing for the past year.

Blackford Association is in a prosperous state, both in numbers and spiritual tone. Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., presided, and gave an address at their annual meeting.

During the meetings held by Mr. Fay Mills at Des Moines over three thousand covenant cards were signed. Several of the Association members have taken a bold stand for Christ.

The Weston-super-Mare Y.M.C.A., with Mr. Harrison as secretary, is making much progress. The Bible class numbers 120 young men, with an average attendance of ninety

The Philadelphia Association has thirteen branches. During the past year there were 587,754 visits of young men, an average of 1,633 daily, while 103,668 measured the attendance at Bible classes.

The seventeenth annual report of the Walsall Association gives an encouraging account of the work. A Sunday morning adult school is carried on by the members, and has now seventy persons on the books,

Mr. James Eyres gave Bible-readings last week to large and appreciative audiences at the Y.M.C.A. and Christian Institute, West Kirby, Cheshire. He is conducting evangelistic services each evening this week at same place.

At Cedar Rapids (Iowa), Mr. Harold F. Sayles has been at work, with many professed conversions; at a boy's meeting, fifty pledged themselves to a Christian life; the same day twenty-five men professed conversion. A band of personal workers numbering forty co-operated with good results.

Tracts and illustrated Christian literature for distribution at the barracks, hospital, infirmary, workhouse, jail, cottage meetings, and through a wide area of country, will be thankfully received and carefully distributed if sent to D. Devoir, Y.M.C.A., Castle-street, Brecon.

Private letters, dated February 18, received from Mr. Robert McCann, state that he had returned to Bombay after a long tour of 2,038 miles, extending as far as Agra. He travelled through Guzerat, Rajpootana, North-West Provinces, Gwalior, Central India, Berar, and the Central Provinces.

A Bible class in which members of fellowship meetings, evangelistic workers, and young converts have an opportunity during the week of systematically studying God's Word is an essential part of the work of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A., the average attendance being eighty-eight. Temperance and social purity are strong features in the class, and nearly every member is a pledged total abstainer, while more than two-thirds are members of the White Cross Union.

Says The Association News: The success which has, so far, attended the introduction of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon movement into the work at Aldersgate-street fully justifies the new departure.—The Saturday Afternoon Bible Talks to Young Men, by Rev. F.B. Meyer, continue to be the most popular feature of our work. Week by week the Lecture Hall is filled by young men, who display the closest interest in the lessons which Mr. Meyer draws from the sacred Word.

On Thursday the Dublin Y.M.C.A. held their 43rd annual public meeting. The large Metropolitan Hall was well filled, and the report of the last years' work was very encouraging. The following gentlemen addressed the meeting:—Revs. R. McCheyne Edgar, W. J. Clarke, G. R. Wedgwood, "Father" Connellan, Messrs. Henry Armstrong, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and J. H. Putterill, London. A member of the committee kindly promised to pay the necessary fees for fifty new members, if such a number would join; already the greater number have joined.

Bishop Potter, of New York, speaking at Philadelphia on the Y.M.C.A., wished unequivocally to state that it was an auxiliary of the Church of Jesus Christ. "There was a time when our bishops had not the courage to come upon the Young Men's Christian Association platform." There had been a fear that it was antagonistic to and would weaken the Church. It was a work for young men which the Church had professed to do. It was started, perhaps, from the fact that the Church did not do for young men what it might have done.

Dundalk Y.M.C.A., right in the midst of a Roman Catholic population, writes Mr. D. A. Black, "is doing splendid service. Ballymena, one of the most flourishing of our Ulster Y.M.C.A.'s, is working with most gratifying spiritual results. The Mountpottinger (Belfast) branch now numbers over 500 young men, and is doing a vigorous spiritual work. Our Belfast Association is, thank God, enjoying a season of much spiritual blessing. Major Whittle is at present with us. Great numbers of young men are present at the services, and all hearts are gladdened by the results. There are 2600 belonging to the Association; our Sunday Gospel services have an average attendance of 2000 persons; our Bible class is the largest in Ireland, and has furnished several young men for missions during this winter."

In a communication which is to appear in the forthcoming British Year Book, Pastor Alois Adlof writes from Prague:—"An attempt made to establish a Y.M.C.A. in Pesth has been crowned with success. Eighty-six members are already enrolled. In Bohemia we have established two new associations—one in Vinhrady, a suburb of Prague, and one in Protetin, Moravia. . . . My fervent wish is to establish a branch in Husinec, the birthplace of John Huss. The town is in deep darkness; no Protestants are living there. I was able, by God's grace, to buy the barn and garden belonging to the native house of Huss. This barn I wish to adapt for a house where Christ and his salvation may be offered to sinners. A good beginning would be to gather the young men of Husinec. A furnished room and good library would be necessary. If friends would help me with £30 or £40 I could begin this summer."

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Brompton and Fulham Branch has lately enjoyed cheering tokens of an awakened interest.

A branch has been formed at East Grinstead, and General Wahab has offered his mission-room for the use of the members.

At the tenth anniversary of the Melbourne Y.W.C.A. excellent addresses were delivered by the Rev. J. F. Macrae and Dr. Bevan. The report told of much good work. Three new branches had been formed during the year.

The Ilfracombe committee has just taken a house, 122, High-street, to serve as Y.W.C.A. rooms, and as a seaside home. The sum required for furnishing, etc., is £350, and the committee appeal for help. Several members have already promised between £20 and £30.

A branch of the Y.W.C.A. was formed in Dartford, November, 1890. Up to the present time meetings have been held in a room over offices lent for that purpose. The numbers have so increased that the committee feel the necessity of having a suitable building. This will cost £500, of which £100 are already promised. The hon. secretary is Mrs. Julia Hall, Hazelhurst, Dartford, Kent.

Miss May Chapman will be grateful for letters for hospitals or convalescent homes. Lately there has been so much illness about that there is an unusual number of young women needing rest and change. Often a few weeks' care is all that is required to re-establish a girl's health and give her a fresh start in life. Gifts of clothes and boots are also needed. Parcels or letters should be addressed to the Hon. Superintendent, 16A, Old Cavendish-street, W.

The Y.W.C.A. Holiday Home, New Brighton, has for several years carried on useful work. Last year 140 were received, and it is hoped that the number may reach 200. Ten can be accommodated at one time. The terms are low, and the balance of expenditure is defrayed by one of the originators, the other giving her services and experience as lady superintendent. To governesses, mission workers, and many who are in business, the Home has been of much benefit.

A sale of work at the Finsbury Institute Y.W.C.A. was opened on Tuesday week by the Duchess of Bedford, president of the London Association. The articles were made by members of the Institute. There was a good attendance at the opening. In a short speech the Duchess spoke of the great value of the work of the Institute, and the pleasure which she felt in being present, and then declared the sale open. Messrs. W. Hicks, W. Debenham, and S. Gurney Sheppard also took part in the proceedings. Miss Baldwin, the superintendent of the Institute, recently celebrated her twenty-fifth year in connection with the London Y.W.C.A. She was among the late Lady Kinnaird's earliest workers, and is still bright and full of activity. Mr. Hicks said truly that this institute ought to receive more support from the City of London.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.—"Exceeding great and precious promises," was the text given by Miss Child at the last monthly muster of the Christian Lifeboat Crew at the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway. Several seafarers testified of the Lord's goodness during the past month. Special prayer was asked for Rye Harbour, where a branch has been opened among the coastguards and fishermen.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mrs. Amanda Smith has been made a National evangelist of the W.C.T.U.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton has organised seven new unions since the Denver Convention.

Miss De Velling has been doing a remarkable work in Oklahoma, the new Western U.S.A. territory.

Large numbers have recently signed the pledge at Donegal, as the result of a three weeks' Gospel Mission.

Mrs. Mary Crowley Bonnett, a valued member of the Coshocton W.C.T.U., passed away on January 10. She was greatly beloved.

One of the oldest temperance organisations in the United States is the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, which, in a quiet way, is doing much for the temperance cause.

In the course of a recent address, Dr. Norman Kerr gave evidence of a decided increase of female inebriety in Britain, America, France, Austria, and other continental countries.

The Nottingham Town Council have decided that intoxicating drink ought not to be sold in public parks, and have accordingly withdrawn the licence from the Arboretum refreshment rooms.

Speaking of the Local Veto Bill, the Lancet says: In its main object—"to stop tippling," as the Chancellor of the Exchequer defines it—we heartily concur. "Tippling" is only another expression for casual drinking, and casual drinking is the great source of misery and disease.

Under the heading "Bumbledom and Beer," the new metropolitan newspaper, London, gives a map showing how much each Union in London spends upon alcoholic drinks. The editor says:—"The expenditure of £12,400 on drink by our Unions is at once extravagant and mischievous."

The Germans are planning extensive displays of beer and wine for the World's Fair. Already two hundred and eighty exhibitors are registered to send one thousand six hundred samples of wine alone, while a brewery is being brought over to illustrate practically the methods of brewing.

The series of temperance meetings which Canon Leigh is arranging at the Portman Rooms, to be addressed by lady speakers only, will be held March 19, 20, 21, 23, and 24. These meetings are expected to be of exceptional interest, and will doubtless prove a means of and presenting the claims of temperance to a large and influential circle.

A Brahmin recently said to a Christian, "If you Christians were as good as your Book you would in five years conquer India for Christ." No wonder if the Chinese, when they see us forcing opium upon them, and the Africans, when they see us deluging them with rum, do not want the religion of the men who do this.—The Quiver.

In a paper read before the Philosophical Society of Liverpool, the authors, Dr. H. R. Jones and Mr. H. E. Davies, state that nine out of every thousand children born in Liverpool die by violent means, and the conclusion could not be avoided that the great source of this criminal violence is drink. They also state that more of these untimely deaths occur on Saturday night than upon every other night of the week.

A Norwegian lady residing in Aalesund writes:—"I am sorry to say that drunkenness has greatly increased during the last year or two, especially among the young people. Women have begun to work for temperance. Last week a mass meeting was held, to which no men were admitted, and a petition was drawn up and sent to the Local Board, praying that no café or brandy shops should be allowed to employ waiting-maids or bar maids, and that the brandy shops be forced by law to be shut at an early hour. Seven hundred women signed the petition."

Justly alarmed at the ravages of alcohol in the kingdom, the Government of Belgium has just ordered the display in all schoolrooms of a printed placard giving the following information:—"Of 125,000 deaths, as many as 25,000, or one fifth, are the result of alcoholism. In a period during which the population has increased by fourteen per cent., the consumption of alcohol has been augmented by thirty-seven per cent., cases of madness by forty-five per cent., crimes by seventy-four per cent., suicides by eighty per cent., and beggars and vagrants by 156 per cent."

A writer in Blackwood, describing a visit to Bonny Town, in the Niger District, says that the most remarkable feature of the place was the extraordinary number of broken square-face "hollands" gin bottles, which were to be seen strewn about its streets. Gin is so highly appreciated by the natives that they even have a few bottles buried with them when they die. Moreover, as appeared from a wooden image of a god, they have even promoted gin to the dignity of the ancient nectar—the deity in question being represented with a "square-face" bottle in each hand.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Principal Gracey, of the Pastor's College, Newington Butts.

We are pressed with correspondence on the subject of Home Rule, but we are satisfied that we shall better serve the interests of the Kingdom of God by maintaining our position outside the controversy. The one thing for the witnesses of Christ to do is to wait on God in prayer. At present it seems impossible for those who feel differently on this burning question either to speak to one another or to unite in prayer about it. Yet their interest is absolutely one—the will of God. The most direct way, the only way, to get the will of God done on earth as it is in heaven is the way of prayer. Hezekiah's method is open to us: whatever our views may be, we can spread the case before Him who sitteth on the Throne; and one breath of God can decide the question.

We need to remember that "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." Freedom from the heat of spirit engendered by controversy, in those who are the salt of the earth and the light of the world, is of greater moment than the solution of this or any other political question, whichever way it goes. Abraham won by yielding. Jesus triumphed over his and our enemies in Himself upon the cross. We must "follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth." "He that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

Through weakness and defeat
He won the meed and crown,
Trod all his foes beneath his feet
By being trodden down.

Oh let us learn this lesson of the cross,
And tread the path the saints have ever trod,
Who, counting earth and self and all things loss,
Have found in inward death the life of God.

Whatever may be the ultimate result of legislation in regard to Ireland, there cannot be any doubt that the influence of recent events in that country has been strongly in the direction of shaking the power of the priest. A leading journal, which for years past has been the blind organ of the priests, is to-day openly spoken of as "the fallen journal." A daily paper, written chiefly by Romanists and strongly opposed to Romish dictation, is taking the lead, and everywhere there are signs of a revolt against a tyranny which, in Ireland, as in every other country where Romanism has got a hold, has not been satisfied with interference in regard to spiritual things, but has endeavoured to enslave the bodies as well as the souls of men.

The meeting at Exeter Hall on Tuesday, with respect to the withdrawal of the resolution at the Decennial Missionary Conference, was marked by the expression of the deepest sympathy with, and confidence in, the missionaries in India, and its result was intended to be the strengthening of their hands in protesting against the three moral evils which they first voted against, and then allowed to pass undenounced by the withdrawal of the resolution. The practice of excluding these great questions, as though they were open and debatable, must be put down with a strong hand. It is not to the point to say that there are other social questions, such as child-marriage and native customs, which equally need to be considered. The Government cannot consistently touch these while its hands are defiled by the wicked legislation which demoralises the natives of India, and provides for the debauchery of its own soldiery.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes rebuked the false loyalty to one another which is concurrent with disloyalty to Christ. Another of the important points emphasised by him was the effect produced on the Anglo-Indian Government by the unfortunate action of our brethren in India. He also made it clear that the real hindrance in India lies with the missionaries who are in the more influential positions, and who come in contact with the Government officialism, and are leavened with its views.

Dr. Pentecost's few pungent remarks at the close were of great moment. The Decennial Missionary Conference was, he said, completely under the direction of a small company of Brahminized educationalists who have ceased to be missionaries in any real sense, or the true successors of the men whom God awakened to missionary responsibility a hundred years ago. They are not the successors of Duff, Anderson, and Wilson, who would turn in their graves to see the state of things existing to-day. They made converts to Christ; we are educating Brahmins to be our enemies. We want leaders not misleaders of our missionaries. We must cut loose from Government support, and our missionaries must be sustained by Christian money, and not be fettered for the sake of the few hundred thousand rupees received in grants from Government.

When Rothe, in his "Still Hours," said that "one of the greatest hindrances of good in the world is men's unchristian disbelief in the power" of Christianity he spoke what was true. So rooted is the disbelief, and so familiar are the minds of most Christians with the idea that evil is stronger than good, that it causes a shock of astonishment when anyone quietly says that good shall conquer evil, and Christ shall make his enemies his footstool. What conception is entertained of the opening petitions of the Lord's Prayer it would not be easy to say. We have need to enter into the exhortation, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

The Nonconformist Conference at the Mansion House on the condition of London was a striking evidence of the dissatisfaction of the Nonconformists with the moral and religious condition of the metropolis. In the comparison which was made with the work of the Church of England, there may or there may not be room for congratulation, but the far deeper and more Christian feeling was one of humiliation before God for shortcomings and sins, and an intense desire to find out what more and what better can be done. The secret spring of power and prosperity will be found to lie now as ever in Christian willinghood nourished by the love of Christ. The Nonconformist churches originated in and have been supported by willinghood, and on that they will have to depend, if they are to do their share in spreading "the gospel of the glory of the blessed God."

The Evangelical Alliance has called a special prayer meeting on behalf of the persecuted Stundists. It will be held in the Council Room at the Alliance House, 7, Adam-street, Strand, on Friday, March 24, at 11.30 a.m. The step is as wise as it is Christian. The distressing condition of our brethren can be reached and relieved by one Hand alone; "power belongeth unto God," who "can turn the hearts of men as He turns the rivers of water." Prayer availed to bring Peter out of prison, and it can avail to bring unknown succour to the helpless and oppressed in Russia. We only hope that the purpose to give the time of the meeting almost wholly to prayer will be fully carried out.

The assembled genius of the medical profession, met the other day to do honour to Professor Virchow, made the confession that life remains an unexplored mystery. "It was not yet," said Lord Kelvin, "for man to tell us what life was, to distinguish between cell growth and the growth of crystal. The subject was full of technical interest; it had been the life-long study of Harvey twenty years after he discovered the circulation of the blood, but they had been brought much nearer to the solving of that interesting problem by the researches and studies of Professor Virchow. He had seen from daily observation that life proceeded from life, and, in fact, there was nothing known to science in which life did not come from something that was living before." Spontaneous generation remains nothing more than a dream of the folly which says there is no God. To account for life on scientific grounds, except as proceeding from life, is not yet possible. The Christian position is untouched. "In Him we live, and move, and have our being."

Professor Virchow's method of rallying from the depression caused "by wearying and useless efforts in political, social, and religious matters," is to give himself to scientific work, which work he regards as a recreation. The remedy of work is great in the eyes of many, and it has its place and uses. But what can it avail when a man can work no more, when he is broken by disease, when he is at the point of death? What can we do at such times but stay our hearts on God? We need something which is uninfluenced both by our successes and failures, by our moods and tempers, by the attitude and behaviour of our fellow men; and none but the Eternal God affords us such repose. "Blessed is the man that trusteth in Him."

The Daily Chronicle has been calling attention to the desirability of appointing lady guardians throughout Great Britain. We are glad to see signs of a movement in the matter. So many of those who fill our workhouses being women and children, it is evident that it would be advantageous to have female guardians, whose visits certainly would be potent in removing many of those evils which are not so easily dealt with by men.

While public attention is mainly occupied by certain great measures before the country, several things are being quietly pushed forward in Parliament which must, one would hope, have a beneficent influence on the great mass of the people. The Welsh Local Veto Bill will not only aid temperance in Wales, but also have a guiding and encouraging influence on the course of temperance legislation for the rest of the nation. The advocates of rival systems are actively expounding and enforcing their views, and we shall be sure to hear a good deal during the Easter recess of the Gothenburg plan. Let friends be sure they see every side of a system before they pin their faith to it. The omissio veri, done quite unconsciously and without any intention to deceive, is the thing to be feared.

The laudable effort which is being made to relieve the sufferings of those who lost money in the Liberator Building Society is bringing to light some of the best and some of the worst traits of human nature. The meanness which could refuse help on the ground of political and religious differences from the men who wrought all the ruin, is not, one would hope, very common. Whatever may have been their characters or principles, no one can doubt the high character of many of the sufferers, and the claims of all on pity and help. The gratitude evinced by those who have received help by the gift of a few pounds shows as much goodness of heart as there was greatness of need. The trial has been a fiery trial of faith, and help to meet temporal needs is also an aid to faith. The daily press has rendered generous service by making public something of the real facts of the case.

A case of child-kidnapping in Dublin, which caused a good deal of excitement lately, has been very satisfactorily disposed of by the Vice-Chancellor. The child was inveigled from the Birds' Nest, and detained at the North Dublin Union Workhouse, on the plea that the deceased father, a Roman Catholic, had appointed two priests as guardians. The judge, finding that the child was illegitimate, decided that the father could not lawfully appoint guardians, and that the mother (who wished the child trained at the Birds' Nest) was a lawful guardian, unless the Court should decide otherwise. Costs were properly awarded against the master of the workhouse and the two priests, and the child was restored to the Birds' Nest. The case illustrates once more the unwisdom of mixed marriages between Protestants and Romanists.

MR. AND MRS. FENN, of Madrid, purpose to return to Spain before the middle of April. Until then their address will be, as heretofore, 45, Beresford-road, Mildmay, London, N. Their address in Madrid is Calle Leganitos, No. 1. Mr. Fenn will be glad to see or correspond with any who are led to think of the central provinces as a sphere of service Are there not servants of God who, having private means, could offer themselves to the Lord for this work without needing help from others for personal expenses?

Have You an Anchor?

BY DR. THEO. L. CUYLER.

When Martin Luther was assailed by a tempest of troubles he used to sing the forty-sixth psalm above the roar of the winds; his anchor struck its flukes under the Rock of Ages. God keeps in perfect peace the soul that is stayed on Him. In these times, when doubts are so painfully prevalent—doubts of the inspiration of the Bible, doubts about the future, or the wisdom of God's providence, or the success of his Gospel—there is nothing that will hold a man but a strong grapple to Jesus Christ. "I know whom I have believed," held Paul; it will hold you and me. We do not see what holds a vessel when the storm is smiting her; and in like manner, when a child of God is assailed by doubts or adversities or Satanic temptations, we do not see what it is that holds him so that he is not moved as other men are. But God sees an anchor sure and steadfast down in the secret depths of the soul. It fastens him to Omnipotence.

There is a danger which sometimes proves far greater than the storms of adversity or the assaults of enemies. It is from the stealthy under-currents of temptation. An unanchored vessel may be lying on a calm water as smooth as glass, and yet before the shipmaster is aware the keel may strike a hidden rock! Had a wind begun to blow, the master would have taken the alarm; the undercurrent was slowly drifting him, and he did not heed the danger. So are thousands of professed Christians carried on the rocks, not by tempests of trials, but by the strong and invisible currents of temptation. One church member drifts into neglect of prayer or into laxity in regard to Sabbath observance. Another gets into an undercurrent of social customs and fashions; it swings him slowly but surely away from a spiritual life; no sudden shock is felt; but when we look for this professed Christian where he used to be, and where he ought to be, he is not there. When the world got hold of the keel the anchor had lost hold on Christ, and so the man began to drift. Another one feels the secret power of sensual temptation, but takes no alarm until some open sin is committed, and a hideous rent is made in his Christian character. The undercurrents of this world never set toward holy living, but just in the opposite direction. What we call "backsliding" is really the drift of the heart away from Christ. The heart is not anchored.

It is not strength of brain that saves a man, or orthodoxy of creed, or connection with a church. All these have often proved to be but ropes of sand. They are not proof against the tides of temptation. There must be firm heaven-implanted principle; for no one is safe in business, or in politics, or in social life, or anywhere when conscience is unloosed from God. The parting of the cable may be unseen for awhile; it may even be unsuspected; but it is a mere question of time how soon the backslider may strike the rocks. Jesus Christ never insures anyone who unites with his church and yet has no "anchor sure and steadfast which entereth into that within the vail," and "binds fast to Christ Himself." And if you ever reach heaven, my brother, you will come in, as I often see vessels come into yonder harbour of New York, with the storm-tide anchor swinging proudly at the prow.

"There are ships," said the eloquent Melvill, "that never go down in life's tempests. They shall be in no peril when the last hurricane shall sweep earth and sea and sky; and when the fury is overpast, and the light that knows no night breaks gloriously forth, they shall be found on tranquil and crystal waters, resting beautifully upon their shadows." These are they who have been piloted by the Holy Spirit—the faithful ones whose inner soul was anchored to Jesus Christ.

SCATTER THE LABOURERS.

"How are much people to be added to the Lord?"

I have read with deep interest the two short articles on the same page of last week's Christian—the first by Mr. James E. Mathieson, and the second on "Eleventh Hour Labourers," by Rev. F. L. Chapell. In common with many more, my mind is deeply interested in Mr. Mathieson's article, but I must confine myself in this note to the article on "Eleventh Hour Labourers."

Our blessed Lord, speaking of converted girls and boys, converted young women and young men, and converted old women and old men, speaking, in short, of every truly converted human being, says, "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

In the infant days of the Church the authorities ordered them not to preach. Their response was: "Now, Lord, behold their threatenings; and grant unto thy servants that with all boldness they may speak thy word." Our venerable commentator, David Brown, on Acts iv. and xxxi. says: "The Spirit rested upon the entire community in the very way they had asked." They were all scattered abroad. "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching [literally, declaring] the glad tidings" (Acts viii. 1 and 4).

See Acts xi. 19—21, on which Dean Alford, speaking of the thousands of scattered believers, remarks, "The Lord showed it to be his pleasure that they should go on with such preaching, the word them implying the preachers to the Gentiles." If any one should be stumbled by the fact that of the thousands who were scattered abroad some might not have the ability to preach publicly, Mr. Newberry points out that the word "preaching" in Acts xi. 19, is in the Greek simply "speaking," and that the word "preaching" in the following verse is "declaring the glad tidings of Christ."

Why in these late hours of the dispensation should we rest complacently without seeing the wholesale working of the Holy Spirit, and be content with a gleaning of a few scattered ears of corn?

Nay, friends. Let us, I say it with reverence, permit God to choose "the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base [or vulgar] things of the world, and things which are despised . . . . . to bring to nought things that are: that no flesh should glory in his presence" (1 Cor. i. 27—29).

THE BIBLE IN IRELAND.—The claims of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland were strongly urged by Rev. W. D. Austin, preaching on Sunday week in St. Kelvin's, Dublin. The work of this society is quite unobtrusive, non-controversial, and intended to benefit Protestants and Roman Catholics alike; while the workers are humble, godly men—men of the Book, men of faith and prayer, and men who preach Christ. The preacher added that he knew of no society working in Ireland that better deserved liberal support; it is not, he said, one-fourth as well supported as it ought to be.

THE NEEDS OF INDIA.—Rev. R. J. Ward writes from Madras, asking if some of the ministers and students of his old county will not join him in India. He says that there will be no difficulty in any of them getting an "introduction," nor need they fear that there may be too many applicants for a vacant post. He adds: "Here is a chance for you to relieve the strain on church secretaries at home, overtaxed with correspondence, and on missionaries abroad, overburdened and overwhelmed with the vastness of the unoccupied fields and the inadequacy of the present staff."

The Book of the Kingdom.—7.

THE REVELATION.

The flower and the fruit prove the quality and tendency of the plant. The Revelation is the flower of Scripture. What was hidden in Genesis, as in the root, is revealed in the Apocalypse, as in the flower.

If the Bible is the Book of the Kingdom, then kingly rule, royal authority, sovereign power will supremely mark its closing portion. Accordingly, while the throne occurs fifteen times in all the other books of the New Testament, it occurs forty-six times in the Revelation.

I. We are greeted with grace and peace from the Eternal, and from the seven Spirits before his throne, and from Jesus Christ, the Faithful Witness, the First-born of the dead, and the Ruler of the kings of the earth.

II., III. Letters to the seven-fold Church. He that hath the sharp sword with two edges knows that his Church dwells where Satan's throne is. But Christ's crowning promise to the overcomer is, "To him will I grant to sit with Me upon my throne, even as I overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."

IV. In the Spirit the Seer beholds a throne set in heaven, and One sitting on the throne, and a rainbow round about the throne; and about the throne were four-and-twenty thrones, and upon the thrones four-and-twenty elders sitting; and out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings, and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.

And before the throne a sea of glass; and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, four living beings full of eyes, who rest not day and night, saying, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, who was, and is, and is to come." And when those living ones give glory and honour and thanks to Him that sitteth upon the throne, who liveth for ever and ever, the four-and-twenty elders fall down before Him that sitteth on the throne, and worship Him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, "Worthy art Thou, our Lord and our God, to receive the glory and the honour and the power; for Thou didst create all things; because of thy will they are, and were created."

V. In the right hand of Him that sitteth on the throne, is a seven-sealed roll. In the midst of the throne a Lamb, as it had been slain, who takes the roll out of the right hand of Him that sitteth on the throne. And many angels round about the throne and the living beings and the elders say with a loud voice, "To Him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb, blessing, honour, glory, power, for ever and ever!"

VI. The kings of the earth, the great and rich, the bond and free, hide themselves, and cry to rocks and mountains, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

VII. After the sealing of the 144,000 on earth, and after the great tribulation through which they pass, the Seer beholds a great multitude standing before the throne and before the Lamb, and they cry, "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." And all the angels stand round about the throne, and about the elders and the four living beings, and fall before the throne and worship God. And those who have come out of great tribulation and have made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb are before the throne; and He that sitteth on the throne dwells among them; and the Lamb in the midst of the throne feeds them, and leads them unto living fountains of water, and God wipes all tears from their eyes.

VIII. The Great High Priest offers much incense with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which is before the throne.

XI. The seventh angel sounds, and great voices in heaven say, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever." And the four-and-twenty elders sitting before God on their thrones fall upon their faces and give Him thanks, because He has taken his great power and has reigned.

XII. The Man-Child, the Male Son, in allusive contrast to the Pagan worship of the male (see Ezekiel xvi. 17, mar.), is caught up unto God and to his throne.

XIII. The dragon gives the beast from the sea his power, and his throne, and great authority.

XIV. The Lamb on Mount Zion, and with Him the 144,000, having his name and his Father's name written on their foreheads. They sing a new song before the throne, and before the living beings and the elders, which none could learn but the 144,000 redeemed from the earth. In their mouth was found no guile; they are without fault before the throne of God.

XVI. The seven angels pour out the bowls of God's wrath upon the earth. After the first four upon the men who had the mark of the beast, and upon the sea, and the rivers, and the sun, the fifth poured out his bowl upon the throne of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness, and they gnawed their tongues for pain, and blasphemed the God of heaven, and repented not.

And when the seventh angel had poured out his bowl into the air (remember "the prince of the power of the air"), there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven from the throne, saying, "It is done!"

XIX. The salvation and the glory and the honour and the power of our God: for true and righteous are his judgments! Alleluia! Alleluia! And the four-and-twenty elders, and the four living creatures, fall down and worship God that sitteth upon the throne, saying Amen, Alleluia! And a voice came out of the throne saying, "Praise our God all ye his servants, and ye that fear Him, both small and great."

XX. And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

XXI. And He that sitteth upon the throne said, "Behold! I make all things new. Write, for these words are true and faithful."

XXII. A pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it, and his servants shall serve Him, and they shall reign unto the ages of ages.

"Behold, I come quickly. Blessed are they who keep the sayings of the prophecy of this book."

We have confined ourselves to the throne and the glory which gathers round it. Much more might have been said, but Sir S. A. Blackwood's next paper will be, "The Book of the Throne," and will treat the subject more fully. The quotations here made, however, abundantly prove, by the consummation attained in this, its closing portion, that the Bible is the Book of the Kingdom, and that God is King.

There is a twofold need why his people now should fix their gaze upon Him that sitteth upon the throne. On the one hand, some are cast down, if not in despair, because they see the Church in her lukewarm and Laodicean stage, thinking herself rich, and increased with goods, and in need of nothing, and not knowing that she is spiritually wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. Others rejoice in this condition, and think the Church was never so wealthy and so well as now.

Let not the former be too much depressed. Every good word of promise that has been spoken from the throne has been fulfilled in its season. The woman's Seed has come according to the Scriptures, and has bruised the serpent's head. He has died, and has been buried, has been raised from the dead, and has ascended up on high and led captivity captive, according to the Scriptures. He is now at the right hand of God, ever living to make intercession for us, while expecting until his enemies be made his footstool. Every promise has been fulfilled, except his coming again, for which we wait, and every sign of the times bears witness that very soon the whole heaven will shine with the glory of his return.

On the other hand, those who think they see in human progress, in the advance of science and art, in the spread of democratic opinion, and in the growing power of the people, the tokens of a new era and the rise of a new humanity, need to be reminded that it is He that sitteth on the throne who says, "Behold I make all things new;" that this world was judged, and the prince of this world cast out and brought to nought by the death of Jesus, God manifested in flesh; that the new creation is in Christ not as He was, incarnate, the Seed of the woman, but as He is, risen and glorified; that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; and that our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change the body of our humiliation, that it may be fashioned like the body of his glory, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself.

There is no hope for the Church any more than for the world, in the old creation, which decayeth and waxeth old, and is ready to vanish away. God will not patch the old garment; the new wine of the kingdom must be put into new creatures, and both are preserved. M.

A Mission in Norfolk.

Mr. F. W. Walter, of the Evangelisation Society, conducted a united mission at Burnham Market, Norfolk, from Feb. 19 to March 5. A week of united prayer was arranged for in the early part of January by a committee representing the Congregationalists, Salvationists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. This was found to be such a great blessing that the spirit of unity was continued by one such meeting each week up to the time of the mission, and on his arrival the missioner found a people prepared of the Lord.

The services were held alternate nights in each of the four places of worship represented by the committee, and were attended by large numbers of people, many of whom yielded themselves unto the Lord at every evening service. Christians were richly blessed and drawn together in harmony. The whole neighbourhood was moved, and many found the Lord in their own homes who had not attended the services. W. T. S.

Joshua and the Land of Promise.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

TAKE HEED TO LOVE.—Joshua xxiii.

Eighteen years had probably passed since the events recorded in our last. The rest which God had given had not been broken in upon by any uprising of the Canaanites, and the people had been able to prosecute the toils of husbandry unhindered by the alarm of war. All around them, and mingled with them, were the remnants of the Canaanites, but they were becoming more accustomed to the joint occupancy of the land with the invaders, and even content to share with them a country so rich that it was easily able to sustain them all.

Meanwhile, years as they passed left evident traces on the bearing and energy of the great leader, who had become "old, and well stricken in years." In this respect of course he presents no parallel with the Prince and Captain of the Church, who is leading his people into the Heavenly Places, and sharing with them his rest. He ever liveth. His hair is black and thick with immortal youth. On Him the years as they pass leave no trace.

Knowing that his end was drawing near, Joshua called for the leaders of the people to an audience with him, in some such way as the great Apostle of the Gentiles summoned the elders of Ephesus to meet him on the shore of the Ægean. It must have been an imposing and memorable gathering, either in the vicinity of his own inheritance, or on the sacred site of Shiloh.

Probably Caleb would be there with Kenaz; Phinehas the priest; warriors who had been with him in all the great battles of the conquest, but who had latterly exchanged the sword for the ploughshare, and the spear for the pruning-hook; others also who were beardless youths at the conquest, but now came as heads of families, elders, judges, and officers, the wisdom and chivalry of Israel, convoked to hear the last words of the great chief, who bridged the gulf of time between the passage of the Red Sea, and that moment when the Land of Promise had been for twenty years in their possession.

Standing upon the vantage ground of that gathering, Joshua directed the mind of his auditors into the past, and reminded them of what God had done for them. He had brought them in and planted them in the mountain of his inheritance, in the place which He had made for Himself to dwell in; and not one thing had failed of all the good things that the Lord had spoken; all had come to pass. This episode of the old veteran testifying to the unfailing faithfulness of God has its counterpart in the experience of the matured believer, when memory speaks recalling scenes from the long past, and comparing the harvest of life's golden autumn with the promise of its spring. Be of good cheer, O troubled heart, amid the perplexities of the present; never lose hold of the Divine purpose of Love, which is certainly running through your life; dare to believe that not one good thing shall fail of all the promises of God; and that the day will come when you shall see and acknowledge this with thankful gladness.

Joshua's one anxiety appears to have been about the nations that were left. Seven times he refers to the nations of the land. What God had done to them: how they were allotted to be an inheritance; how God was prepared to thrust them out: and especially how great a temptation would be suggested by their perpetual presence, lest the people should be tempted to cleave unto them, intermarry with them, and adopt their gods. It was as though the old man realised that he was the only barrier between Israel and the inroads of worldly conformity and idolatrous rites. "I know that after my departing grievous wolves shall enter in among you, not sparing the flock, and from among your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things; wherefore watch ye."

As a preservative against these evil consequences Joshua proposed three safeguards, the first of which reminds us of the admonition given to himself at the beginning of this book, that they were to be very courageous, so as to keep and do all that was written in the law of Moses, not turning aside from it to the right hand or to the left. The second was the certainty that if they became identified with the heathen in marriage alliance or idolatrous practices, they would not be able to prevail against them in battle, but would find in them a trap, a scourge, and thorns, until they perished quickly from off the good land into which they had come.

But it is on the third that we would dwell particularly; "take good heed therefore unto yourselves that ye love the Lord your God." There is a beautiful fitness in this exhortation as coming at the close of this book. The earlier pages are full of bloodshed and strife, but here the soldier speaks as the lover, and the clash of arms is exchanged for the dulcet notes of the harp. The froth is left behind, and the stream runs clear. The storm of the morning has sunk into the gentle zephyr of the evening sunset. The armour of the armed men in the tumult, and the garments rolled in blood have been for burning and fuel of fire, whilst here is talk of the Prince of Peace and of his Kingdom which is love in the Holy Ghost.

Thus the life of Christ leads up to the discourses of the upper room, warm with the glow of love. Thus the Bible finds the maturest expression of its spirit in the Epistles of St. John. Thus the terror of the book of Apocalypse, with its earthquakes and conflicts, its martrydoms and tears and blood, issues in the erection of the Tabernacle for the marriage feast, and the perfect love of bridegroom and bride. And thus in all true life, the asperities, the fightings, the bitter sorrows, the storm and stress work themselves out, and are succeeded by days which anticipate the paradise of God. Thus do winter storms presage the approaching summer. The whole law of God, and of human life, is fulfilled in that one word, "Thou shalt love."

Take good heed to love God, and all other injunctions are comparatively needless. Love God, and you will be content with nothing less than to inherit all the land, even to that great sea of his love upon which the sun never goes down. Love God, and courage must possess you, as the timid bird will assail the dreaded depredator of her nest, her maternal love making her oblivious to all considerations of her own safety. Love God, and you will love his Book, nor wish to swerve from it. Love God, and you will not seek a love which is inconsistent with your supreme affection. Love God, and you will possess God, and be possessed by God, and things which had otherwise been snares, and traps, and scourges, will become stepping-stones to a fuller, richer life. Love God, and you will become one with all holy beings in heaven and upon earth, and throughout the universe, to whom He is the supreme Love.

The one consideration, therefore, which demands our thought is how to fulfil this command, "Take heed to love."

What are the steps by which we may enter into the heart of obedience to that great law, first enunciated by Moses, and re-affirmed by Jesus, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength"?

I.—REMEMBER THAT LOVE IS OF GOD.

The only Being that really is, is God. All other being is derived, his is inherent and essential to Himself. There is probably a deeper meaning than we have ever apprehended in his name, I AM. There is one God the Father, of whom are all things. He is over all, and through all, and in all. Therefore all love and power and wisdom not only reside in Him, but pass from Him into all other beings, according to the measure with which they are prepared to receive them. He is the central Sun, and all that is fair or noble or helpful in anyone is the far-travelled ray of his nature, caught by the soul, consciously or not, to be flashed back again to its source.

What was nature in its first creation, but the reproduction in material forms of thoughts and conceptions that otherwise had been hidden for ever in the depths of the divine nature! What are the forces in the physical world, light, heat, electricity, but manifestations of the energy of God! And what, in the moral world, are virtue, courage, patience, love, but sparks, more or less dimmed by the fallen state of man, of that light which lighteth every man coming into the world!

Let us ascend further, into the highest sphere of all, and speak of love. Love is the crown of human nature, its regal chaplet of flowers, the bond by which the sentient universe is made one, the trait in which we are likest God, for God is Love. In Love's hand lies the clue to unlock the lost secret of concord. She alone can speak the magic word by which the marring effect of sin can be undone, and all the occupants of the many mansions of the Father's house formed into one great family, bound together and to God by the cohesion of a common tie. It is by love alone that angels and redeemed spirits and holy beings everywhere shall be so harmonised as to unite in the new song, which is yet to break in waves of melody around the throne of the Most High. Love must conquer discord, subdue strife, and complete the divine purpose.

But all love, whether in the heart of the babe, that stretches out its hands towards the familiar face which over-bends it, or in the mother, enthralled to a new ecstacy, or in the faithful servant prepared to give his life for his charge; whether in the soul of man or of angel; whether on earth, or beyond it in the blessed spheres that elude our vision—must have its ultimate source, fountain, and origin in the heart of God.

It stands, therefore, to reason that those who would love purely, unselfishly, strongly, must converse deeply with God. There must be a steeping of the nature in his fellowship, as the dyer's hand in the deep colours of his craft, or sea-flowers in the warm waters of southern climes. As the moon must hold converse with the sun, that she may receive the glory which she shall transmit to our night, so our only hope of giving love is to receive it. We must get, if we would give; absorb, if we would transmit; obtain, if we would scatter. Oh! for a closer walk with God. It was from his deep intimacy with Jesus that the Apostle John learnt the Divine art of love, and became like Him in his nature, his speech, and if ancient art be true, even in his face. And they only who live near God shall rightly love.

II.—BUT LOVE IS THROUGH JESUS.

There is, of course, a broad sense in which the love of God reaches all men; but even this is only possible, because of the death and intercession of the Lord Jesus. Unless He had become the propitiation for the sins of the world, the love of God would have had no channel through which, consistently with righteousness, it could have poured forth its tides. Had it not been for Jesus, the flowers of heaven falling into the pit of sin would have been turned to flakes of fire.

But, in a deeper sense, the love of God has been stored in the manhood of Jesus. The Divine essence expresses itself in terms of human affection. And it is when we know Jesus and are united to Him by faith, and through Him are united to God, that we begin to experience the full tide of Divine love as it comes from God the Father, through the Son, to become in us a well of living water, springing up unto everlasting life. Then we begin to experience what Paul meant when he cried "The love of Christ constraineth us."

It has been much debated whether this means Christ's love to us or ours to Him. But it comes to much the same thing. Christ's love to me becomes, as I open my heart to it, his love in me; and I need no more argue which it is his to me or mine to Him than I need determine whether a shower is the product of the cloud that sheds it or of the ocean from which its particles were first derived. It is enough to know that all love is of the Father through the Son; that he who is nearest the Son is nearest the Sire; that to abide in Him is to abide in love: that by faith the love of Jesus may be drawn off into holy hearts; that we have to deal not simply with love, but with the King of Love; and that when He becomes an inmate of the obedient heart, He not only reveals his secret love, but loves through it, and pours forth by its every channel a tender, gracious affection, which sensibly raises the temperature of this arctic world.

Open your heart to Jesus, cultivate his friendship, live in his fellowship, familiarise yourself with constant consideration of what He has done for you. Love begets love; think, then, much how He loved you, when He gave Himself for you. Talk of Him to others till your soul begins to glow. "I sat under his shadow with great delight. His banner over me was love. Stay ye me with raisins, comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love."

III.—LOVE ALSO IS BY THE HOLY GHOST.

The love of God hath been shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us (Rom. v. 5). As the grapes of Eshcol were a pledge that God would give the land from which they came, and He did: so the Divine Spirit takes of the love of Christ, and communicates it to us, as an assurance of a hope that can never be ashamed. We argue from the bliss which is to that which is to be. We are sure of eternity because it is already begun in us. Already we hunger no more, neither thirst any more, and are therefore assured of the land where the Lamb leads his flock to fountains of life.

Let us lay this well to heart, that the fruit of the Spirit is love. Like fruit, it swells gradually on the bough, reddens in the cluster, and ripens, man hardly knows how. Yield to the Holy Spirit; never rest till you have claimed, reverently and humbly, your share in Pentecost; be filled with the Spirit; thus you, too, will receive a baptism of love. When we are strengthened by the Holy Spirit in the inner man, we begin to know the heights and depths, and lengths and breadths of the love of Christ.

IV.—THERE ARE ONE OR TWO FURTHER DIRECTIONS FOR LOVING GOD.

We can only enumerate them as we close.

(1) Distinguish between the emotion of love, which is variable and inconstant, and love.

(2) Remember that it is possible to love God not only with the heart, but with the mind. The will may put Him first, as the pivot around which the whole life shall revolve.

(3) The test of love is not feeling or speaking, but obeying. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me."

(4) Guard against the intrusion of sense, for where any licence is given to bodily appetite, there is instant loss inflicted on the growth of the soul in the love of God.

(5) Climb to the love of God through the love of man. Dare to treat all men as you know you would if you felt to love them, and you will come to feel tenderly and pitifully to them. This is the beginning of love. This is most like God's love. Act thus always by the power of the indwelling Spirit, and you will certainly apprehend, though never comprehend, the unsearchable love of God.

HILL ARRIANS OF TRAVANCORE.

After a furlough I have returned to Travancore, South India, to my former work among the Hill Arrians and others in the Mundakayam district. God has in the past given much blessing to the work. Ten years ago there were only five stations with about 800 converts; there are now twenty-six stations with about 3000 adherents. Native subscriptions in 1881 amounted to about Rs.123, last year about Rs.900 were raised. Sixteen schools now receive Government grants. Fourteen houses for teachers and four churches have been built by the subscriptions of the people and help from home. Land has been obtained in nearly all the stations, and two other churches and a teachers' house are in the course of erection. All this has been done without any expense to the C.M.S. Many teachers are also supported by friends. But the work grows, and we still have needs. In five stations we need teachers' houses badly. It is imperative for the good of the work that the teacher should be able to live with his family among the people, and in most cases the people unassisted cannot build them.

We also need churches in two stations, simple, inexpensive buildings that form a shelter from the heat and heavy rains where the people can meet together to worship God. £20, with what the people give in money and free labour, will suffice.

By the help of sympathising friends we hope to put up these, and thus increase the efficiency of the work by enabling the teacher to live among the people, and by giving the missionary a little room where he can shelter from the great heat in the day and sleep at night. In a recent number of The Christian it was stated that decennial statistics showed the ratio of progress in Southern India much less than in previous periods of ten years. I can testify that it is not because there are no open doors, not because the people are unwilling to become Christians. It is because at present Southern Indian missions are, comparatively speaking, starved. "The harvest is plenteous, but the labourers are few."

More evangelistic missionaries are urgently needed. But if they cannot be sent let it at least be the care of Christians in England that the few sent be not hampered for want of real necessities while many are being gathered in.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS TRANSFIGURATION.

This is perhaps the most striking and interesting incident that occurred during the life of Jesus. Three Evangelists tell the story, each with considerable detail. Of course you have thought about it, and have tried to picture the scene. Will you do so again? for it may be that you will find it will help your faith in Him. That it made a profound impression upon the three favoured Apostles is clear. John refers to it when he says (i. 14), "The Word was made flesh and tabernacled among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." Peter, when he has become an old man, recalls this incident for the strengthening of his faith, "For we have not followed cunningly-devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty" (see 2 Pet. i. 16—18). We must learn to see in this event "the glory" and the "majesty" of Jesus. He will surely become more to us as we enter more fully into the meaning of the Transfiguration.

In all three Evangelists the event stands in the same connection. Jesus had begun to tell the apostles of his approaching sufferings and death; and He had followed this with a very remarkable prediction (see Matt. xvi. 21, 28). Think of the disciples hearing these two strange statements. Their Lord was going to die, and yet some of them were to see Him in his glory before they tasted of death! It seemed impossible for both to be fulfilled. Six days afterwards this event takes place, in which they see the promised glory, and hear further about the coming sufferings and death.

Briefly recall the incident. Perhaps the account in Luke ix. 27, 36, will help us most. It is probably night when Jesus and the favoured three reach the summit of one of the peaks of Mount Hermon. The apostles are soon overcome with sleep, while their Master is at prayer, and for a while they know nothing of the glorious change that passes over Him. They see not yet the face shining as the sun, the raiment becoming white and glistening. But when the bright light awakens them they see the promised vision of "the Kingdom of God." Jesus is not alone. In the glory that radiates from Him are two others, who are recognised as Moses and Elias. The three are heard conversing; and what is their theme? What subject most interests our Lord and his glorified saints? Just that which the apostles had been so unwilling to hear; they "spake of his decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem" (31). A still greater wonder follows: a bright cloud descended and overshadowed them. It is the emblem of the Divine presence, like the Shekinah that dwelt of old in the Most Holy Place. From out the cloud the Divine voice is heard, "This is my beloved Son: hear Him." Then the vision passes away; and being raised from the ground where, through fear, they had fallen, the disciples see Jesus only.

Such is the story. Dwell upon it in thought and in reverent worship until it becomes to you a fuller revelation of what Jesus really is.

(1) Think of the change that came over Jesus. It is useless attempting to describe it in any other language than that which Scripture uses. Does it not recall to you the change that once came over the face of Moses (Exod. xxxiv. 29, 30)? But it was more remarkable than that. A mere vail upon Moses' face sufficed to conceal that glory; this shone through all the raiment of Jesus and made it bright as the light. The important difference was this, Moses reflected a glory that shone upon him; Jesus manifested a glory that dwelt within Him. Think of this a moment. As He ascended the mount Jesus seemed no more than an ordinary man. Very soon He will be in the hands of his enemies, apparently weak and helpless; but after this vision on the mount you know Him to be more than man. Here the vail of his humanity loses power to conceal the glory of his divinity, and "the God shines glorious through the man." Let your faith believe Him to be what He here appears. This is to you, as well as to John, the revealed glory of the only begotten of the Father.

(2) Think also how Jesus is the centre of all that took place on the mount. The two men appeared in glory with Jesus; the theme of their conversation was the death of Jesus; the Father's voice from the cloud bears witness to Jesus; and when the vision is over the disciples are left with Jesus, and with a Divine call to "Hear Him." How much all this suggests! Do you remember that Moses and Elijah were the two men whom the world lost, and for whom search was made in vain? Do you remember also that one of them died, and that the other was translated without seeing death (2 Kings ii.)? Both these are found in the glory with Jesus. So shall it be when Jesus comes a second time in power and great glory. Saints who have died shall be raised, and living saints will be changed, and both will be with Jesus to behold his glory (Jno. xvii. 24).

Does not the incident awe and subdue you? How much, how very much, is your Saviour in his own glorious Person; to the saints in heaven; and to the Father Himself! Let the message from the cloud be ringing in your heart—"Hear Him." Give yourself time to know what He teaches, and receive all in unquestioning and childlike faith. As you finish reading this paper take opportunity to bow in lowly reverence before such a Divine yet human Saviour.

A CRY FROM MOUNT HERMON.

A native pastor at Hasbeya, Mount Hermon, thus appeals to the Medical Mission Association:—

To the gentlemen, the honoured members of the Christian Medical Mission Association in England, greeting:—

We, the inhabitants of this district, the people of this race, dwelling in the lower portion of "the holy mount" Hermon (1 Pet. i. 18) are lacking all means of healing, in consequence of the great distance between us and Damascus, Beyrout, and Palestine, in all of which these blessings abound, because the eyes of the West are upon them. Compared with these, we live in a wilderness, a dry and barren land, as regards alleviation of bodily suffering, which stands second in importance only to healing of the soul.

On account of this lack, both of physicians and medicines, diseases prevail in these countries and illness abounds. This is true, not only of our own district, but of the surrounding neighbourhood. In Rasheya there are many springs of water, and at certain seasons of the year it is very unhealthy, and there are many deaths. The doctors who used to visit the people had no diplomas, and the Government has forbidden them to give medicines. Those who have studied, and taken diplomas in Constantinople, live in Damascus or Beyrout, or elsewhere beyond our reach. Their charges are high, and by far the greater proportion of the surrounding population are very poor. When disease attacks them they have no means of arresting it; it takes its course, and many fall a prey to its ravages. If we wish to send sick people to Beyrout we have not the money, and the poorer the people are the more they suffer.

We have heard that your country has been a mine of comfort to other lands, east and west, and in the islands of the sea. We have heard of your various branches of work. We present this letter, knocking first at the door of Divine mercy, and feeling persuaded that the Most High will enable you to do us good; for "if the clouds be full of rain they empty themselves upon the earth" (Eccl. xi. 3). Our hope is from you, should God's will permit, and you consider our request worthy of acceptance, that the result may be for God's glory and for the good of the poor people of this and the neighbouring districts. We are like birds opening their mouths for their mothers to feed them. We look for an answer, not because we deserve it, but as Queen Esther went to the king, "not according to the law." We ever remember the kindness of your country to ours in temporal and spiritual matters. We cannot repay it; we pray God to reward you for the good you have done us. You have the prayers of the people, of every creed, of every condition. May God be with you in all these matters, and make you to abound in every good work.

Miss Marriott, of the British Syrian School, Hasbeya, writes:—"May I ask you to pray that God will send a Christian doctor, and the necessary helpers—such as dispensers and nurses—to this very needy and most interesting spot. The climate is like England at this time—quite bracing. In the summer there are the cool mountain breezes, and there a village high up where one can live then.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

X.

THE NICOLAITANES—WHO WERE THEY?

"This is not an easy question to answer," says Archbishop Trench, in his Commentary on the Seven Epistles. "Was there any sect existing at the time when these words were uttered which actually bore this name? I am disposed to think there was not." "There has been much dispute who these were," writes Dean Alford. "The prevailing opinion among the Fathers was, that they were a sect founded by Nicolaos, the proselyte of Antioch, one of the seven deacons." But he admits that "we do not gain trustworthy accounts of this sect," and describes the varying explanations given by several of the earliest patristic authorities. Dr. William Smith, in his Dictionary of the Bible, adduces a number of quotations from such sources, and after mentioning those which bear the highest testimony to the moral character of Nicolaos, speaks of most of the traditions about his having been the founder of any particular sect as "worthless."

But if the attempts to identify the Nicolaitanes with any special heretical sect, and to trace their origin to a particular individual, have confessedly failed, we are, nevertheless, bound to use every means at our disposal in order to ascertain who they were, what were their "deeds," and what was their "doctrine." For concerning them the Great High Priest speaks in these mysterious utterances, to which He seven times calls the hearing ear to hearken, not once, but twice. First, He notices for special commendation the detestation with which the Church of Ephesus regarded the "deeds of the Nicolaitanes," which He Himself abhorred; and then He marks with special blame, that in the Church in Pergamos there are those "which hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes," again expressing his peculiar hatred thereof, and coupling it with the doctrine of Balaam, so seductive and disastrous to Israel in days of old. His reprobation is followed by the short, sharp call to "repent," as of a very evil thing, and the intimation that unless this doctrine is put away, He will have no alternative but to inflict chastisement with the sharp two-edged sword.

All this is surely noteworthy in the highest degree. The more enigmatical the utterance, and the more surrounded with mystery, the more are we bound to inquire into the signification of the terms used, and to ascertain if possible (and surely it must be possible, or we should not be told to pay special attention to the warning) what were the "deeds" and what was the "doctrine" so emphatically reprobated by the Faithful and True Witness.

Is the term a figurative one? "The other names of this book," says Trench, "Egypt, Babylon, Sodom —in agreement with its mystical character, are predominantly mystical and symbolical, and in all probability this is so as well; while the key to the right understanding of it is given to us at ch. ii. 14, 15, where those that 'hold the doctrine of Balaam' are evidently identical with those that hold 'the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes.' We are here set upon the right track. The name of Balaam, according to the best etymology, signifies destroyer of the people, and Nicolaos is no more than a Grecizing of this name, such alteration or duplication presenting a word now in its Greek and now in its Hebrew aspect, being altogether in the character of the book—Greek in language but Hebrew in form and spirit, and several times recurring in it (see ch. ix. 11, xii. 9)."

Now, how did Balaam act so as to be a "destroyer of the people"? He "taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication." In other words, having failed to carry out Balak's wish, so to curse the people that they might be overcome in open warfare, and eager to obtain "the wages of unrighteousness," he suggested that by means of the attractiveness of the daughters of Moab, Israel might be seduced into such a union with them as would make them no longer an enemy to be feared. Too well did he succeed. The Midianitish women invited the people to the sacrifices of their gods, "and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods. And Israel joined himself unto Baalpeor." They were "mingled among the heathen, and learned their works, and they served their idols." The "church in the wilderness" was "unequally yoked with unbelievers," and became "conformed to the world." Thus did Balaam act as "a destroyer of the people."

It is clear, then, that if the expression "Nicolaitanes" has the same meaning, we should expect to find that their deeds and doctrines tended in the same direction, and that some had arisen in the early Church to play the same part with regard to the followers of Christ that Balaam played with regard to Israel. And it would be further probable that, as in the church of Ephesus, mention is made of their deeds as something existing, but hated; while in the church in Pergamos, where there were those that held "the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes," we should find that practices which at first had the character of occasional acts, by degrees (if the epistles describe successive phases of church life) crystallised or developed into a regular doctrine or system, which was first tolerated and then adopted. And it is remarkable that in the very next epistle—that to Thyatira—the evil appears to have made further growth, insomuch that adultery, or alliance with the world, is the sole object of the Lord's denunciation, and is said to be the result of regular prophetic (but false prophetic) teaching, symbolised by "that woman Jezebel," thus denoting the prominent and prevailing characteristic of the phase of religious life manifested in that church. This spiritual adultery—or friendship with the world (Jas. iv. 4)—is again referred to as a "doctrine" and as "the depths of Satan."

Now, what are the facts? Did such deeds manifest themselves in the early Church; did they gradually develop into a regular system; was it by means of those who occupied the position of teachers that alliance with and conformity to the world were promoted? Are there other indications in the Scriptures that this was apprehended? Are there warnings that such evils were likely to arise, to grow, and gradually to permeate the whole body? Was it hinted that there would be those who would assume positions of authority over the general community of Christians, and thus, becoming overcomers of the people—or subduers of the laos, or laity—would lead them into such utter worldliness as would accomplish the object of the great enemy, and turn the professing Bride of the Lamb into the apostate harlot, Babylon the Great?

Undoubtedly such are the facts. Concerning the rise of such false teachers or prophets, Peter plainly speaks—their covetousness, their uncleanness, their autocratic pride, their abominable practices, and their wide and fatal success (2 Peter ii.). Jude declares that the evil was already at work, ungodly men having crept in, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, denying the Saviour's person and work, introducing a ritualistic religiousness (the way of Cain), following Balaam in his greed, and usurping the priesthood like Korah (ver. 11). Paul utters express predictions concerning their demoniacal doctrines, their commands with regard to celibacy and fasting, their cauterised consciences (2 Tim. iv. 1-3), culminating in the assumption of Divine authority and power (2 Th. ii. 3, 4). Peter, again, warns the pastors of Christ's flock against taking the position of "lords over God's heritage" (1 Pet. v. 3), and John asserts that even in those early days a Diotrephes had arisen "who loved to have the pre-eminence" (3 Jno. 9).

All this is strong collateral evidence. Can there be, then, a doubt that when our Lord, in figurative terms, alludes to the presence of those who, like Balaam, would seduce his people from the path of separation, and thus destroy them by mingling them with the world, and who, lording it over the general body of Christians, would arrogate to themselves power and wealth, He would speak of them as "subduers of the people,"—the mass or laity of the Church,—and give them the enigmatical title of Nicolaitanes, a title which accurately describes their character and work?

And does not history confirm such an interpretation? Very soon indeed (for the mystery of iniquity had begun to work even in Paul's day—2 Th. ii. 7) did there arise men claiming superiority in spiritual matters, forming themselves into a separate clique or caste of "clericals" (thus applying to themselves the name belonging to the whole heritage, or cleroi) calling themselves "the Church" as distinguished from the laity, and becoming, ere long—and notably when the empire became nominally Christian—the prime agents in bringing about that absorption of the world into the Church, or mixture of the Church with the world, that has made what is called Christendom for many centuries little else than baptized Paganism.

They have usurped the dignity of the priesthood appertaining solely to the Great High Priest, assuming to be mediators between God and men, and claiming to offer sacrifices for sins, to forgive sinners, and to admit to or exclude from heaven. They have lorded it over the professing Church with a diabolical tyranny, and have allured into the paths of destruction millions upon millions, by the lusts of the flesh and the false promises of liberty.

Yes. Nicolaitanism is Priestcraft, Clericalism, Sacerdotalism, seen in its full-blown form in Rome, in its blossom in Ritualism, and in its bud wherever a so-called minister of the Gospel of Christ takes a position of superiority over his fellow-Christians—otherwise than as a teacher over scholars—and in any degree assumes sacerdotal functions. Such a one becomes a subduer of the laity—a destroyer of the people, like Balaam, a gainsayer of high-priestly prerogative, like Korah.

Prophecy predicts this terrible evil; history attests its rise and progress; it is that which Christ "hates," and which has done more to debase, degrade, and unchristianise the Church of God than all other forms of error, for it has absorbed them all into itself. It has wrought havoc for nearly two millenniums. Its downfall, thank God, is sure and imminent.

Nicolaitanism is Clericalism, Priestcraft, Sacerdotalism. It is the very "depth of Satan."

Note.—For an exhaustive and overwhelmingly strong demonstration of the position here taken, I must refer to the remarkable work alluded to in the preceding paper, "The Javelin of Phinehas," which, I have learned with regret, is out of print.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

In forwarding a summary of the financial position of the Army for the past year, General Booth writes thus as to the spiritual fruits of the work:—

"The year has been one of no little burden, anxiety, and trial, but it has witnessed some of the most blessed and far-reaching spiritual results that we have been permitted to see in the whole history of the Army. Especially has this been the case in some parts of our Continental field in Australia, in India, and during the last few months in the old country.

"The vitality manifested, and recent extension of the work on the Continent of Europe recalls the fact that it is about ten years since we first commenced our operations there. At that time we had not a single worker on the other side of the Channel. The power of the Spirit of God has enabled us to raise a force of men and women who boldly confess Christ, and carry on the work of evangelisation in 458 towns; and out of their poverty largely maintain 1836 officers. If during the next two or three years we can give support with some liberality to what is already going forward in Germany, Belgium, and Northern Italy, I have no doubt that thousands will be won for God in those countries and that, as is now the case in Holland, Sweden, and Denmark, the work will become in the main a self-supporting agency.

"In India the success of the work far exceeds our own hopes. Our register of permanent converts has been increased during the year by 5000 additions, chiefly won from the heathen. Whole villages have been Christianised, idolatry abolished, and the worship of Christ set up.

"Here, at home, we are daily seeing wonders and miracles wrought in the name of Jesus. The vilest and the lowest are going into the kingdom. During the last three months especially I have been privileged to bring vast crowds under the influence of the truth with such blessed and immediate results as to impress me more powerfully than ever with the greatness of our opportunity to preach the Gospel to the poor."

The gist of the financial position is that £12,050 are needed for foreign missionary work for the remainder of this year; home work for the same period will need £5200, and £2400 will have to be spent on the necessary provision for the recovery of "sick and wounded officers."

CHICAGO EXHIBITION.—Mr. D. L. Moody has consented to receive and distribute as many tracts as we can send him. Sketches from Sicily.—1.

BY REV. O. GOLIA MAURO, GIRGENTI.

This island is a peculiar one, differing very widely from England, and also very dissimilar in many ways to Italy. Even from north to south one is struck by the great diversity of the country. In the provinces of Palermo, Messina, Catania, and those parts, the land is very fertile, rich, and well cultivated. Oranges, mandarins, lemons, grapes, figs, olives, and in fact almost all fruits, are very largely grown, as well as many vegetables. All over the island fields of corn, peas, and beans are to be found on every side.

In the south the aspect generally is more barren and dry looking. The mountains stand out ruggedly against the sky, and the deep gorges and rents in the land give it a romance which, to the traveller, must ever be full of charm and fascination. This goes on increasing, whilst the gaze is lost in the midst of the numerous surrounding heights—majestic in their nakedness—on which here and there, at great distances apart, one perceives villages mingling with the masses of chalk and clay which so much abound.

This diversity of landscape produces in the inhabitants a diversity of occupation. In the north it is agriculture which flourishes mostly; in the south it is sulphur mining which forms the speculation of the tradespeople. Indeed, whoever journeys through the provinces of Caltanisetta and Girgenti seems to see only sulphur, to breathe only sulphur, and to hear only sulphur talked of. The hillsides unfold everywhere the mouths of the mines, or the hundreds and thousands of boys, "carusi," ascending and descending from morn till night, one hundred, two hundred, three hundred, and sometimes more, almost perpendicular steps, carrying on their backs stones which contain the yellow mineral.

About the character of this population (whose origin is partly Roman, partly Greek, partly Carthaginian, and partly Moorish) there is nothing so terrible as the pens of some would have us believe. The Sicilian is southern, and as such, generous, hospitable, respectful; but also hot and very quick. What journalists call brigandage is nothing but personal and private vengeance, which unfortunately ends too often with the ransom, the dagger, the carbine, and the revolver. The foreigner is free to go and come where he will; and with him also he who knows how to live in peace with his neighbour. Then he meets with only respect and kindness—especially in the country places, where, without being known, one is continually greeted with salutations, such as "I kiss your hand," "Good dinner to you," "God bless you," etc., etc.

The people add to respect, hospitality. We must go into the house, take a seat, accept the glass of wine which they offer; then one must eat the dried figs and almonds which they place before you—in fact, there is nothing to do but to obey. Patriarchal and familiar customs prove that the intentions are good, and the hearts in general warm and well disposed.

Unfortunately, Roman Catholicism, with its priests, has known so well how to carry on the works of darkness, that here, as everywhere in Italy, and even more so, one sees the deplorable consequences of this system of corruption to the conscience. Thirty-five years ago all the employés under Government, in order to keep their situations, as well as the students at the universities to be able to pass their examinations, had to present the certificate of confession. In Girgenti, at the bishop's palace, they still show you heavy iron rings, four yards from the ground, where on Palm Sunday those who had not confessed were exposed to public view with a collar round the neck like a dog.

It is not astonishing, then, to find, after an imposition so rough in its religious practices, a great indifference and incredulity, with distrust of the priests on the one side, and gross superstition on the other. The unbelief and indifference are the reaction of Roman Catholic inventions. The students particularly confess to believe in nothing—knowing only the religion of images, purgatory, confession, infallibility, and the celibacy of the priests. Common sense persuades them that all these things cannot form true religion. So, disgusted with the errors they have been taught, they reach the negation even of God and a future life. A business man who was speaking to me violently against Catholicism, and of whom I asked what he thought of Jesus Christ and the Gospel, replied excitedly, "The Gospel and Jesus Christ! These are only things invented by the Catholic priests." Indeed, nearly all speak of them disdainfully as epicureans, usurers, and ignorant men. A young gentleman, the son of a famous doctor, said to me only the other day, "In my village there are no less than six priests who live in concubinage."

Finding myself a short time ago in a railway carriage with several people, amongst whom was a Catholic priest, I was witness of an animated discussion between my fellow travellers on the one side and the priest on the other. The Romish errors were combated especially by a lady, who, although a lady and a Catholic, did not fear, in order to prove the immorality of the confession, to relate indignantly her own experiences and those of her friends.

A workman recounted lately that at one time he found himself suddenly the loser of a good sum of money without knowing the thief. It was in reality one of his comrades, who, after having stolen it, went to confess his sin. The confessor then counselled him to spend the money in masses for the soul of the rightful owner. Some years after the thief unveiled the truth to his companion, who wished, of course, to get his money again. He went to the priest, whose only justification was the following reply: "Dear friend, it is for the good of your soul that I have had your amount given over to me. I have anticipated the masses to take your soul out of purgatory after death." Notwithstanding these scandals and deceits, the people continue in their superstitious traditions.

AMONG THE KHONDS.

In a place of this kind, with no other European, and until lately no native Christian, I find The Christian a real help. Having read it myself, I forward it to friends at Cuttack, who read and lend it among English-speaking natives. Finding it stimulating and helpful myself, I trust it is so also to those to whom I pass it on.

For myself, I am engaged in preaching the Gospel daily in Khond villages. Though all do not give the same attention, the people always readily assemble to listen. Some listen with deepest attention, as though they would receive the truth; others are careless. Drunkenness is a great hindrance. Nearly all adult men get drunk, and are able to do so the more frequently through licensed drink-shops which have been introduced, and are being spread through the Khond country; but the men have no objection to their sons being taught not to drink. Youths and boys often form a very attentive audience when men are drinking and getting drunk. I went a few days ago to a village where a feast was going on. Large numbers of people had assembled from other villages; but the men were nearly all in the houses drinking, or staggering up and down the street. So I sat down at the upper end of the street, and read and talked to a large number of boys who gathered around me.

The Khonds seem for the most part to accept what they hear of Christianity and Christ as true, and seldom question anything. But they cannot at once abandon the belief that their own gods have existence and power. The Khonds believe man differs from the beasts in having a soul which lives after the body is dead, but no idea of the future state. Consequently, they listen with great interest to the doctrine of resurrection and judgment. The story of God's love, and of Christ's suffering for man, has ever an interest for people who believe only in gods who desire only to work evil and who are objects of fear, but not of love. How precious is Christian truth and the Christian's hope when compared with a heathen system which gives no light and no hope for the present or the future. It is a joyous privilege to preach the Gospel to such a people, looking to the Holy Spirit to enlighten the darkness of their hearts.

Yours, in the Lord's service,
A. B. Wilkinson.

DEACON ABRAHAM, of Oroomiah, writing at the beginning of February, says: "For years we have not had such meetings as during the past few days. Many backsliders have returned with weeping and joy. At every gathering souls are awakened; and we shall not cease our prayers until our orphans, sixty in number, have all decided for the Lord."

A PLEA FOR MILDMAY.

Dear Sir,—On behalf of Sir Arthur Blackwood and the other trustees of the Mildmay Institutions, may I ask the favour of your insertion of the enclosed circular in your paper?

Your most obedient servant,
J. F. Morton, Colonel.

Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.

THE MILDMAY INSTITUTIONS.

Dear Friend,—The thought will have arisen in many hearts, What will be the future of the work connected with Mildmay Conference Hall and Deaconess House now that our gifted and honoured friend Mrs. Pennefather has been called up higher, and the deaconesses and nurses are bereaved of their acknowledged and beloved leader? Ere we attempt to answer that question, let us in a word express our thanks to God for the gift He lent to his Church in this saintly lady. Her natural womanly graces were enriched and intensified by his own abounding grace, and her courage and great ability showed no abatement during twenty years of widowhood, into which she concentrated a full lifetime of manifold service for Christ. The outlines of this service saw their birth in the days when her revered husband was yet alive, and they together in love and in wisdom planned the best methods of woman's work that our age has witnessed. May her stimulating example inspire those of us who knew and loved her, and many more to similar devotion for the glory of Christ!

The friends of Mildmay will believe that the trustees who act under the trust created by Rev. William Pennefather, as well as the superintendent of the Conference Hall, and each and all of the ladies at the head of various departments, are at one in desiring that the Lord's work entrusted to their oversight should be continued as efficiently, as harmoniously, and as fully in accordance with the spirit of Jesus Christ as heretofore. We contemplate no important changes in administration, and we hold as firmly as did the founders the same great principles of Evangelical Protestant truth as guiding and governing rules for all who are sharers in the work, and especially for those in responsible positions. This centre, we very earnestly trust, will remain—until the Lord returns—a home and training place for a great company of gifted and consecrated Christian women, who will find in the Missions of Mildmay a suitable and happy outlet for all their energies and devotion. From the platform of the Mildmay Conference Hall we confidently trust there will always be sounded forth the Word of Life with clearness and consistency.

Therefore do we earnestly press, for their present and future support, the claims of this beneficent and soul-saving work upon all large-hearted Christian people. Not a few friends have asked, In what manner do you propose to perpetuate the memory of the noble life which passed into the unseen on January 12 last? And we reply—the best memorial will be a loving, sympathetic, and prayerful sustenance of the works which do follow her, the works she began and so nobly fostered in these bygone years. The residue of her modest fortune she bequeathed to the Deaconess House, but the capital must be invested, and the interest thereon (probably not more than £300 a year) will alone be available. About £2000 are urgently needed for present claims; and a total of £24,000 it, is estimated, will be wanted for the whole year 1893. Donations, large and small, will be gratefully acknowledged by the superintendent, Colonel Morton, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N. (who will gladly send full printed particulars of the various branches of the work on application), or by the directress, Miss Coventry, at the Deaconess House, Mildmay Park.

Yours faithfully,

S. A. Blackwood, A. R. Pennefather,
James E. Mathieson, J. Herbert Tritton,
Harry C. Nisbet, Edward Trotter,
Trustees of the Conference Hall.

SECRETARIES' PRAYER UNION.—At the monthly meeting held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday in last week, it was decided to invite Mr. Hind Smith to be the president for the ensuing year. Mr. Gawin Kirkham was elected last year prior to his death. The position was then taken up pro tem. at request of his former colleagues, by Mr. John Kirk. Last week a resolution of condolence was agreed to respecting the departure of Mr. E. W. Thomas. A cordial invitation is given to secretaries of institutes to join by applying to the hon. sec., Mr. Frank Cockrem, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

A NEW HEBRIDES CHIEF.

In his story of mission work in the New Hebrides,* Rev. Oscar Michelsen tells us many things about several of the native chiefs. But of none does he speak so warmly, and concerning none is he able to relate such remarkable incidents, as the chief Manambalea, of a village on the north-east coast of the island. Though so brave-hearted that he may be said never to have known timidity, this man has, by the power of the Gospel, been marvellously transformed, and whereas he was brought up to lead in war he has now taken to advocating the claims of peace.

The love of peace did not come all at once to good Manambalea. In fact, it was after the missionary had done his utmost to instil into all whom he had been teaching "the peaceable fruits of righteousness" that he learned, on returning from a visit to New Zealand, that war had broken out among the various tribes on the island. The people of an interior or "bush" village had proved so troublesome that the other chiefs and their people resolved to "wipe them off!" Not only had Manambalea's men taken part in the war, but the women also. Tying around them their long aprons, they had painted their faces, and decorated themselves with plumes; then, having gathered all the spare muskets in the village, they had been helping the men in what Manambalea regarded as a holy war.

Was not this sad news for a missionary who had done all in his power to impress upon the people the blessedness of peace? Instruction proceeded among the Tongoans "line upon line, here a little and there a little"; so Mr. Michelsen was not discouraged, though much distressed by this terrible intelligence. While a true and faithful disciple of the missionary, Manambalea had yet to learn that the Kingdom of God is not extended by violence, but by "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."

Mr. Michelsen explained that the island was not to be conquered by war, but by Christianity—which is love, and not hatred; life and not death. Manambalea was soon led to see his error; and, hastening home, he imparted to his people the clearer light which he had himself received. He went further, telling his tribesmen that he intended to go straight up to the bush village, to stop the war. All begged of him to do no such wild thing, saying that the people of Pélé (the bush village) would certainly kill him. As he remained firm in his resolution, the villagers proposed to follow him in a body, well armed, so as to afford protection.

This, however, was not Manambalea's wish. He could see that this plan would assuredly mean more war. So, settled in purpose, he went without escort, only taking with him a devoted young Christian named Karisi, and another youth. He was, however, followed by his wife and her sister, who declared they would go "and die with him."

The warriors of the bush village could not understand the sight that met their view that day—Manambalea, with whose people they had fought many a battle, coming up to them with two defenceless lads! There must be some sinister purpose! The advance of the chief was but part of a plot! Every fighting-man of Pélé grasped his musket, expecting each moment to see their armed enemy in force. But Manambalea held up his hands, and called, "Stop! I am not here to fight," he said, "but to speak peace to you."

At this the men threw their guns to the ground, and stood up in a respectful attitude to hear what Manambalea had to say. In a few words he explained that he had been at the mission house, and had related to the missionary what had occurred. "The missionary," he said, "tells me it is not according to 'the Light' to fight and kill people; but that we should love one another and live at peace."

The worthy chieftain further said that he intended to stop fighting; and he hoped the people of Pélé would do the same, and become learners of the "New Doctrine!" Thus what might have been a very disastrous war was brought to an end. Returning to the mission house, Manambalea described what had happened, and suggested that the Gospel should be taken to Pélé on the following Lord's Day. Through the hostility of another chief this could not at once be done, but a short time afterwards the bush village as well as all the others on the little island received Christian teachers, and many of its people are to-day followers of Manambalea, as he is a true follower of the Lord Jesus.

Manambalea has since been a great helper of the missionary, and he has been privileged to see other chiefs follow his Christian example. He has visited distant islands on errands of love and mercy; and let us hope God will long spare his life as a light-bearer and peace-maker. Until quite recently it was an unheard-of thing for chiefs to die natural deaths in Tongoa; they were always killed, because war was constant on the island. Thank God, this terrible condition of things is now utterly swept away, and people and chiefs alike know that the mission of Christ was to promote "peace on earth and goodwill among men," as well as "glory to God in the highest."

A CRIPPLES' PARTY.

Have you ever attended a cripples' party? Probably not; and you think it would be very dull. Well, it is sorrowful to see so many little ones lame and blind and paralysed, but, then, it is delightful to give them some pleasure, to see the weary wee faces light up with gladness and interest.

I went last Friday to a party of this kind, and I want to tell you a little about it. The Ragged School Union has been working, as you know, in East London among cripples, but now it has been found there are many just like them in South London. They are hard to discover, for people do not put up a sign over their house to say "We have a little helpless cripple here." But two good men are hunting them up, and already they have found 104; and while finding these they have also got hold of a large number of very poor boys and girls who never go to Sunday or ragged school at all.

To interest these some friends of the Ragged School Union gave last Friday in Camberwell Mission a Robin dinner. A large two-horse van was hired to fetch the cripples who could not walk, but many who lived near the hall were carried by some one. Nearly 300 were in the hall, the rough children sat at the sides, and the poor wee cripples in the middle. Oh! it was sad to see their paralysed hands and arms and legs. Some had crutches, but many had no power to use a crutch even if they had it.

I heard some of their stories. Frankie, aged nine, had a sunstroke when he was only four, and since then has lost the use of his legs and of his voice. His mother has carried him every day to school, and so he has learned to read—though he cannot speak or move, and he finds reading a great treat.

Then there was Ada, who is over eleven, and paralysed. Only about a month ago, she nearly sent her poor mother into fits by suddenly saying, "Mother." It was the first time she had ever spoken in her life. Now she is beginning to say a little; but she will never be able to walk.

Such a lot of sad stories I heard, but I must not stay to tell them all now. We gave them a nice dinner. Some could not eat, but we allowed them to carry away what they could. Then several gentlemen spoke nicely, and some ladies gave the crippled ones pretty bunches of flowers, But what they enjoyed most was the singing, reciting, and musical drill of a band of little girls, whose teachers had made for them bright overalls, and who looked so nice and sang so well.

I spoke to some of the sad little guests, and they told me they did enjoy it so, and hoped the Ragged School Union would ask them again to dinner, and would let some lady or gentleman fetch them toys and pictures—as they do to other cripples—to amuse them and make them forget the pain and weariness. Perhaps you have some scrap-books, or toys, or pictures you could spare. If so, send them to Mr. Kirk, at the Ragged School Union office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, and he will take care that some poor wee cripple has them to look at in the long dull hours.

SPRING'S MESSENGERS.

O sweet, fresh wind! with gentle touch
As soft as birdling's wing,
Thou flittest o'er the uplands bare,
And tell'st the tale of spring.
Thou knowest how to coax the flower
And draw it from its nest,
To nestle like a timid child
On earth's warm mother breast.
Oh, sweep away the saddening thoughts
That fill the heart with pain,
And bid each one be glad, because
The world revives again.

O merry birds, that sit and sing
In budding copse and dell,
Send far your clear and happy notes
The joyous tale to tell.
Cry out aloud that Winter's reign
Is past, and he is fled;
We cannot follow if we would
Where he is banished.
Oh, teach the heart to sing with you,
Oh, lift it from its cares,
To see in every budding leaf
An answer to its prayers.

Oh, flitting butterflies, speed on
Across the dawning green;
Ye preach of hope to drooping souls
Who long no joy have seen.
Frail messengers! ye point to Heaven,
And mutely seem to say:
"There is no sorrow bravely borne
That will not pass away."
In many a sad, desponding heart,
The buried hopes shall rise
That gave the gladness to the earth,
The fairness to the skies.

Ye liquid streams! dash brightly on
And wash away the stain
That lies upon the wintry earth,
And make her fair again.
And as ye go, sing songs of hope
To cheer the listening ear;
For storms and winds have fled away,
And Peace shall follow Fear.
Oh, wash away the anxious doubts
That mar these Eden hours,
And lift the soul to thoughts of Heaven
And never-fading flowers.

Oh, sweet spring messengers! fleet on
O'er plain, and hill, and moor,
And whisper that the heart of God
Beats still for rich and poor.
His love, all-grasping, fills the land,
And broadly blazoned lie
His thoughts for them. We trace his care
In earth, and sea, and sky.
Then listen to the winds that blow,
To birds that sing for glee;
For butterflies and flowers and streams
Have each a word for thee.

DRESSMAKERS' HOME, LEAMINGTON.

This home, opened by Miss Taylor in 1875, continues its good work. The report for the past year shows that just one hundred inmates have been received, some as residents, for shorter or longer terms, others as visitors. During the summer, when business is always slack, many have highly appreciated a change and rest with us, and gone away refreshed. It is earnestly desired to receive young business girls and apprentices, and throw around their exposed lives the mantle of a kindly, motherly interest, and earnest Christian influence.

Many and varied are the causes that bring one and another to us from time to time. Some samples of the calls upon our sympathies may serve to illustrate the nature of the work. Late one evening a girl came in trouble, having been dismissed from her situation. She was at once taken in and cared for.

The notices at the stations in connection with the Travellers Aid have also brought several cases needing help, some peculiarly sad. One, who had "run away" from her situation, and took train to Leamington, afraid to return to her friends, found herself "forlorn" and penniless. It is easy to imagine what might be the temptation to which such would fall a prey, if a kindly hand were not extended promptly and effectively. Communications should be addressed, Miss Bagster, 7, Heath-terrace, Leamington Spa.

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.—Matt. xxviii. 1—10.

GOLDEN TEXT—1 Cor. xv. 20.

It is possible for men to believe that Christ rose from the dead without, in any proper measure, realising the importance of this fact. Let the aim of this lesson be to make the fact real, and then to show its importance. Mark and Luke mention other women. John gives a touching account of the meeting between Mary Magdalene and the Lord. But it is not necessary to go outside the account as given in this lesson.

1. Mary, called Magdalene, probably because she belonged to Magdala, on the Sea of Galilee. There is no foundation for the tradition which identifies her with the woman of the city (Luke vii. 37-48). The great deliverance which Jesus had wrought for her (Luke viii. 2) filled her with gratitude and affection. The other Mary was the mother of James and Joses (xxvii. 56). These two devoted women were last seen after the burial of Jesus (xxvii. 61) sitting near the sepulchre. They had seen Him die; had witnessed the mingled blood and water that flowed from his spear-thrust side; had beheld where He was laid. They had no doubt as to the fact of his death. Their piety appears in their resting on the Sabbath; their affection in coming so early to the sepulchre on the first day of the week; and yet they had forgotten, or had never properly understood, his word, for they came only "to see the sepulchre," and to complete the embalming of his body (Luke xxiv. 1).

2—4. They appeared to know nothing of the watch which had been set; but were troubled only about the heavy stone (Mark xvi. 3). They were not the first to visit the tomb; an angel had preceded them. Note his appearance (3); the terrible earthquake that accompanied him; and the work he accomplished. The sepulchre was cut into the rock, and a large stone was rolled to the mouth of it. "Vain the watch, the stone, the seal," when the angel came. Thus were difficulties removed from the path of those who were seeking for Jesus. The appearance of one angel terrified a company of Roman soldiers (4). How can men dwell in the presence of God who are stricken before one of his servants?

5—7. What a strange sight met the women when they reached the sepulchre! Perhaps they were as much affrighted at this as they would have been if they had seen the soldiers on guard. No thought of resurrection entered their minds; what but terror can they see in the open sepulchre and the shining one sitting upon the stone! Three things the angel says to them:—(1) A declaration. "Fear not ye"—enemies of Jesus may, but not those who seek Him. "As He said"—did the words recall any of his predictions of this event? If they had but remembered what He had said they might have been spared so much hopeless grief. (2) An invitation.—"Come see the place," &c., not to embalm the body; but to see that the tomb is empty, and the grave-clothes are all laid aside as useless (Jno. xx. 6, 7). (3) A commission.—"Go quickly," &c. They were to be the first preachers of the resurrection. The promise to meet the disciples in Galilee had been given by our Lord before his death (xxvi. 32).

8—10. How different the feelings with which they leave the sepulchre from those with which they came to it! "Great joy"—though they had not yet seen their Lord. But their joy, and their readiness to fulfil their commission, prove how fully they believed Him to be risen. Is it not significant that they should meet Him while on their way to relieve the sorrow of the other disciples? They have no difficulty in recognising Him. Worshipped refers not merely to reverence, but to religious adoration.

The fact of the resurrection is made clear by this narrative. The other witnesses are mentioned in 1 Cor. xv. 5—8. What is its significance?

(1) It establishes the claims of Jesus. See xii. 39, 40; Jno. ii. 18—22. Disprove this, and we can rely on nothing else that He has said. (2) It is the proof of his divinity (Rom. i, 4). (3) It evidences God's satisfaction with the atonement (Rom. iv. 25). It is like the receipt when the debt has been paid. (4) It therefore makes our forgiveness sure (1 Cor. xv. 17, 18), and (5), It is the pledge and pattern of our resurrection. (See Golden Text.)

Of the many illustrations of resurrection, that of the seed used by the apostle (1 Cor. xv.) is most simple. How incredible would it appear to any of us that out of the death of such a seed would spring a beautiful plant if we were not constantly familiar with it!

In the churchyard at Oberhofen, Switzerland, was one grave over which the name of the person buried below was written on paper, with the time of birth and death. This was fastened to a board, and mounted on the top of a stick. Under the little ledge of wood that protected the inscription a caterpillar had fastened itself, and here passed into its death-like chrysalis condition, and afterwards assumed its new and beautiful state, and had left the corpse-like relics behind.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, MARCH 26.—1 CHRON. III.

This chapter follows the line of David. His immediate family was a very numerous one; and how bitterly he suffered in his children! The sword never departed from his house. Partly, no doubt, this was due to polygamy, but his great sin had much to do with it. Bitter to an extreme were his last years, as crime after crime broke out in the circle of his home. And yet how wonderful to discover that a Solomon was being reared there, beloved of God, born of her who is for ever associated with David's fall. Thus does God's discriminating grace approve itself.

The entire chapter is full of these anomalies. Godly sons issuing from men so notoriously wicked as Ahaz and Manasseh, whilst Hezekiah and Josiah are fathers to children so opposite to themselves. Grace is not hereditary, and children are not doomed necessarily to a life of sin because their parents were bad. Jeconiah, the captive (17), recalls the exile. But that could not break the line of the Messiah. Through good and bad, through prosperity and adversity, that golden thread runs through the fabric of human history. The most diverse men and women are found in the tale of his ancestry, as though to show that He is indeed the representative man, not of sin, but of the entire range of temperaments and character. Oh, my soul, repose thou on the assurance that, by a quick sympathy and fellow-feeling He can understand and explain thee.

MONDAY, MARCH 27.—1 CHRON. IV.

Two links of gold arrest us as the chain of unknown men runs out before us—Jabez and Caleb.

Jabez for a moment stays the pen of the Chronicler. We know nothing more of him than is recorded here, not even the time or locality of his birth. His mother associated with his name the special sorrow that attended his birth; but how often the children of sorrow become the children of our right hand. There is no discipline like that of pain. And those that sow in tears reap in joy. The very refinement of this character amid the rough and lawless men amid which it was reared, as a rose among thorn bushes, was probably due to the chastening of pain. This fourfold prayer is worthy of our daily repetition. We, too, need the daily blessing, the enlarged coast for service and ministry, the consciousness that the hand of the Almighty is on us and with us, and our eyes ever toward the Lord looking for deliverance. There is not one of us that may not appropriate such entreaties, and they are such as must be in the line of the purpose of God to grant.

TUESDAY, MARCH 28.—1 CHRON. V.

The tribes across the Jordan, Reuben (1-10), Gad (11-17), and Manasseh (23) next claim our attention.

The sin of Reuben deposed his children from the chieftainship, so that the Prince came of Judah. How far one sin may reach! Reuben abode by his sheepcotes, joined in no great fight for independence, provided no great warrior, and soon ceased to play any part in the life of Israel. His exclusive thought seems to have been of his much cattle, from the day when for this cause he chose the rich land of Bashan, and he was among the first to be carried away into captivity by the King of Assyria. He is a warning to those who will be rich, and who fall into those hurtful snares that drown men.

What a helpful thought is given in the brief record of the war with the Hagarites. In the midst of the battle, which appears to have been going against them, they appeal to the God of their fathers; and He delivered them because they put their trust in Him. Valiant and skilful though they were, these qualities did not avail them apart from God. By strength can no man prevail. So let us look away from the smoke of battle, and claim his deliverance, who is waiting to succour those that are tempted.

As long as the religious life was healthy, Israel retained its national integrity, but as soon as that decayed, the gates were thrown wide open to the invader, and the people wasted from their land. A parable this of Christian experience. The wholehearted life is the delivered life. Let there be the least thing held back from God, captivity and desolation will immediately ensue.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29.—1 CHRON. VI.

The sons of Levi are especially the type of Christian service. We are priests of the house of Aaron, and we are also called upon to serve as Levites in various offices, both for our brethren, and in the service of God.

The service of song is an important one, and what a host of sweet singers have stood in their office, according to their order. Heman, the singer, has had many successors. Watts, Keble, Havergal, and many more whose works fill our hymn books, have followed the procession of choristers for God's temple.

A close examination of this chapter will show that these singers did not come from one branch of Levi only. Heman, who stood in the centre, was descended from Kohath; whilst Asaph, descended from Gershom, stood on his right hand, and Ethan (called Jeduthun, ix. 16) descended from Merari, stood on the left. Thus we learn that God's gifts of song are strewn promiscuously throughout all the families of his people, so that every home may be a temple with its service of song.

THURSDAY, MARCH 30.—1 CHRON. VII.

Twice in the genealogy of Issachar, we meet the statement, "mighty men of valour." May we not ask to be that in the war against sin. Mighty, because so conscious that we are nothing. Mighty, because the Mighty One Himself dwells within us. Oh for the might of the Holy Ghost, the might of Pentecost! "By might shall no man prevail." "I am full of might by the Spirit of the Lord."

Of the sons of Benjamin also (6—12) similar statements are made. But only three of his sons are named. What became of the others? As we reach middle life we look round in vain for the companions of our early years, who seemed likely to be as successful as ourselves. But we look in vain. Let us magnify the sovereign grace of God.

Among the sons of Manasseh (14—19) we meet with Bedan, who is mentioned in 1 Sam. xii. 11, as one of the deliverers of Israel, but we know nothing more. It is like walking over the flat graves of a cemetery: each name covers a life. Once so active for good or ill, now unknown. But God remembers. Each of these shall stand before his bar, and receive and award according to his works.

Ephraim's lot (20—29) began in sorrow. The episode referred to probably lies on the other side of the coming to Egypt to buy corn. But it was only a temporary reverse. This tribe became one of the mightiest, and it produced a Joshua. Wait for God. You cannot understand his plan, but it will work out in a fulness of blessedness and joy which the heart of man cannot conceive.

FRIDAY, MARCH 31.—1 CHRON. VIII.

We are led back to Benjamin. The tribe had a great and blessed inheritance, so far as spiritual blessings were concerned. The dying patriarch had described him as a ravening wolf dividing spoil. But Moses spoke of him as the beloved of the Lord, who dwelt in safety by him, covered all the day long, and dwelling between his shoulders. Yet as we review this list of names, we wonder how far any of these knew the deep blessedness within his reach.

There is much about wives, and cities, and war, but of little else. The holy city of Jerusalem, with its temple, feasts, priests, and services was within reach. But mere proximity to the means of grace is not enough. We must claim and possess for ourselves. There must be a daily receiving of the abundance of God's grace, if we would reign. Let us ask ourselves whether we are availing ourselves of all those spiritual blessings which are ours in Christ.

Special attention is given to the ill-fated house of Saul. Like his great namesake in after days, he was a Benjamite. But what a contrast between them. The one refusing obedience to the known will of God and forsaken of Him. The other, daring to say continually, "What wilt Thou have me to do," and exercising himself to have always a conscience void of offence, led into all the fulness of the indwelling of the Spirit of Pentecost. My soul, cultivate the habit of instantaneous and exact obedience.

SATURDAY, APRIL 1.—1 CHRON. IX.

These genealogies are carried over the exile into the return, and we learn something of the first settlers in the desolated city and land. The hand of Ezra or of Nehemiah must have been busy here. There are a few interesting notes.

"Very able men for the work of the service of the house of God." This is a designation we may well covet. To win it we must be clean, whole-hearted, and willing to be used as and when the great Master pleases. We can do nothing, but He is able and willing to make all grace abound.

The priests and porters are classed together (10 and 17). It is not what we do, but the spirit in which we do it, that is dear to God. You may do the porter's work in a priestly spirit. It is pleasant to wait in the king's gate eastward; we may expect to see Him come, and to get the first glint of the dawn.

Those who are set to rule should be very careful to see that God is with them, as with Eleazar (20).

TRACTS.—The committee of the Evangelical Tract Society will be glad to supply Gospel tracts and text-cards to Christian workers abroad upon application. They have in stock tracts in some thirty languages, including Indian in ten varieties. No charge is made; but when possible, a free-will offering to cover postages, etc., is acceptable. Applications should be addressed to Mr. Samuel E. Roberts, No. 26, Paternoster-row, E.C.

A Wilderness Song.

A BIBLE READING ON PSALM LXIII.

BY DR. NEATBY.

We often overlook the little things—or what seem the little things—of the Word of God, and miss their meaning. The word "Jehovah" is not mentioned in this Psalm; it is "God," not "Lord." Some Psalms are characterised by the word "Lord;" others by "God." It makes an immense difference. The word Jehovah indicates God's relationship with Israel; He was thus known to his people. The word "Father" has taken the place of "Jehovah" in the New Dispensation; we know our God now as One who has revealed Himself, in his relationship to his people, as Father.

In this Psalm we have set forth most beautifully the delight and satisfaction of the soul in God Himself; and that in circumstances which are calculated to depress. The faith of the Psalmist surely takes hold of God, and rises above the influences that tend to depress. It has always been so. In the wilderness of Judah there was nothing to nourish or refresh; all help must come from the outside. Just as, later on, the Lord Jesus Christ taught his people a lesson when they were in a desert place. They were slow to learn that the fact of their being in the desert did not matter to Christ. The disciples would have sent the multitude away to buy bread; and of course those who had no money would get no bread so far as the disciples were concerned.

Unbelief can count, but it can do no more. Jesus says "they need not depart." What a volume of meaning there is in those words, "Give ye them to eat." They should have known who was there—that Jehovah "satisfies the poor with bread." They should have taught the people to sit down and should have begun to break, and see whether the five loaves would not have gone over the 5000—perhaps the 15,000 with women and children. So faith always counts.

As connected with the thought here we may note that most remarkable passage in Habbakuk iii. 17, "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." The soul that can truly say, as David says in this Psalm, "O God, thou art my God,"

IS READY FOR ANY MIRACLE.

Oh to say from the heart every moment without hesitation, confident in the Word of God and in the blessed Person of the One in whom He has reconciled his people to Himself, "Thou art my God;" the unchangeable One, untouched by the wilderness of Judah; the One who made the waste places and the desert; who made everything; the satisfying portion of faith, always and in everything.

The more the soul loves God the more it loves the place where his honour dwelleth. But the Psalmist was cut off from the sanctuary. He longed for it. He had seen God's power and glory as it is seen there, but he was removed from all its privileges. Although he longs for it, he turns and says: "Because thy lovingkindness is better than life." The devil, who knows human nature pretty well, said "Skin for skin: all that a man hath will he give for his life." Here is David's answer to it, "Because thy loving kindness is better than life, my lips will praise Thee." He will praise God even in the wilderness of Judah. There is an inward enjoyment of the blessed Lord—not a doctrine, or a set of principles, but an inward enjoyment of God—that says calmly, confidently, in the wilderness of Judah, "Because thy lovingkindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee." Don't you think that if this were the practical experience of our souls every day there would be more testimony in the world to the power of Christ to lift us above circumstances? It would be every day, as well as for the wash-tub—"Thy lovingkindness is better than life." If there is that mighty faith that brings God into all the circumstances through which we pass, and at the right moment, and keeps high feast with Him, there will be songs in the night. There will be a satisfied heart looking through the eyes and speaking through the lips.

"Thus will I bless Thee while I live." What is it to bless? It is worth while to inquire. Is not God the source of blessing? Is it not He who is to bless us? Yes, all blessing comes from God. What, then, does it mean—"Thus will I bless Thee"? We often say very thoughtlessly, "Bless God for a good dinner." That is, we are thankful to God, who gives the good dinner. But Scripture never uses "bless" instead of "thank." Search from Genesis to Revelation, and you will not find it. The soul blesses God for what He is, not for what He gives. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." The benefits are not to be forgotten, but "bless the Lord." He is to be blessed for what He is and to be thanked for what He gives. The blessing comes from God; it falls into the heart; it fills the heart with joy and thankfulness, and goes back in blessing through the lips to the source whence it came.

"I will lift up my hands in Thy name." A blessed symbol of worship—doubtless including prayer, but most certainly expressive of worship. You must remember that there is nothing to excite to worship here in the wilderness of Judah. But the Psalmist is almost beside himself with the joy and satisfaction that he finds in God; and he is using words, one after another, that express the perfect satisfaction of the heart, apart from circumstances, in God Himself.

And what is worship? Well, as a matter of etymology I suppose it is the ascription of worth to God. Worship is the soul which has received from God what fills the heart, knowing God in all that He has revealed of Himself and that He communicates to the soul, turning back to say that the God who has given so much is only to be known in what He is Himself. It is the delight of the soul in God Himself; it is the pouring out of the heart to God as a satisfied heart.

Prayer is perfectly consistent with worship, but it is not worship. I go to God in prayer when I want something; I go to God in worship when I have got enough—when I want to tell Him how He has filled my heart. In prayer I receive that I may pour out in blessing. Of course, I need not say there is no contradiction. But there is too little worship in our selfish hearts. I am speaking to myself, from a very cold heart that I carry in me every day. But I know and I feel that there would be more worship, if there were more knowledge of God. If I knew Him better I would say, "Thus will I bless Thee while I live."

Still further, "My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness." I often want to translate "satisfied," and to say "enoughified." When a soul is satisfied it does not want. The soul that wants

IS NOT A SATISFIED SOUL.

You remember the poor woman who came with her waterpot and referred everything the Lord said to her waterpot—kept her eye close on it. Christ said to her, "He that drinketh of this water (from the well) shall thirst again." She knew that, because she had been there the day before to draw water, and here she was back for it again. "But he that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." Now tell me, does not that mean that the soul shall be satisfied? When you and I thirst as believers, it is a contradiction; because Christ says, "He shall never thirst." The soul that is enjoying Christ cannot want for any good thing; it is a satisfied soul.

"Satisfied as with marrow and fatness." That is a figure of satisfaction, no doubt; but I think it is another thing besides. I think "the fatness of God's house" (Ps. xxxvi. 8), is a little different. The words used in that Psalm, "abundantly satisfied," I think have a distinct reference to the sacrifices in which the fat was entirely burnt to God. The fatness was burnt on the altar; it all went up, because the inward perfections of the Lord Jesus satisfied the fear of Divine judgment. All rose as in perfect delight to God in the sanctuary. So I think there is more than a mere figure here.

"My mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips." When? "When I remember Thee upon my bed, and meditate on Thee in the night watches." That is, when most people would simply give their ears to be asleep. My soul shall be satisfied in the stillness of the night, when there is no excitement, when, on the contrary, it is natural to us all to very much wish we could be asleep if we happen to be awake for a few minutes. God Himself comes down from his blest abode to keep company with the soul as it lies still on its bed.

"Because Thou hast been my help." This is the first reference we have in the Psalm to mercies at all. It has been Himself, not his blessings. Now there is a reference to the blessings, but in what way? "Because Thou hast been my help." It is not so much that I have been helped, but it is "because Thou hast been my help." There is a great difference. The soul is thankful; it has had help; but it traces it all to the heart of God. "Therefore, in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice."

Does not all this remind us of that wonderful passage in Rom. v., "Not only so, but we joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ." No doubt you have all noticed that three times in the first eleven verses of this chapter a word is used which in the Greek is one word, but in English three. It is translated in verse two, "we rejoice in hope"; in verse three, "we glory in tribulations"; in verse eleven, "we joy in God." It is the same word "joy" in all three. We joy in God—in the God revealed to us in the face of Jesus Christ; in the God who has brought us to Himself at the immense cost of his only begotten Son's precious blood. We have been brought so near to Him that we delight in his very being.

You did not always delight in Him. I did not. I know there was a day when, if I had dragged God from his throne

I WOULD HAVE THOUGHT MYSELF HAPPY.

Now He knows that I do delight in my God – that all blessings are concentrated in Him.

Thy gifts, alas, can ne'er suffice,
Unless Thyself be given;
Thy presence makes a paradise;
Where'er Thou art is heaven.

One word more:—"My soul followeth hard after Thee." The purpose of the heart is to go on. "Thy right hand upholdeth me." What peace, what confidence, has the soul that knows God, that delights in God, that is satisfied in Him. The Lord help us all to know Him better; to read more of Him on our knees, in humble dependence upon Him. May He give us grace to learn Himself better, and to delight in Himself entirely!

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The monthly réunions of workers at Miss Macpherson's beehive in the busy Bethnal Green-road are always occasions of hearty and genuine interest. Last week there was an extra element of attraction in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Merry, of the Stratford Canadian Home, who are now on a short visit to the old country for the first time since their wedding, four years ago. During these years they have been overseeing the placing out of the successive bands of little emigrants, sent across the sea from the institution in the East-end after their period of training and testing. In addition to that they play the part of foster-parents to those children who from varied causes have to sojourn for a while at Stratford. Many friends were present on Wednesday evening to welcome them back to the scene of their former labours, and to wish them God-speed in their special department of service in the Dominion. The presence with them of a comely little daughter did not lessen the flow of congratulation.

It was a most cheering story that Mr. Wm. Merry had to tell, during the second half of the meeting, of progress at the Stratford home; of constant tokens of encouragement in the work of visiting the scattered members of the large family placed out; of spiritual blessing given to those who revisit Stratford occasionally; and of fruit appearing after many days or years of patient toil and trustful hope. It was especially interesting to hear of decisions for Christ on the part of a number of the boys gathered from surrounding parts under the Stratford roof-tree during the week of prayer last January. Some delightful letters were read by Mr. Merry, received lately from those who had been for a period beyond the fostering care of the institution, but who now wrote to acknowledge past benefits received, and to tell of life devoted to the Lord of whom they had been taught. These things encourage the workers on both sides of the sea, and also the many friends who contribute to the sustenance of this Christ-like work.

The Bible-reading given in the early part of the evening by Dr. Neatby was so full of rich and experimental teaching that we furnish full notes on this page.

THE LATE MISS PEACOCK,

OF PAVENHAM, BEDS.

"AS unknown, and yet well known"! Of few could these words of St. Paul have been more appropriately used than of the subject of this sketch. Her secluded life, and the unostentatiousness of its mission, left her comparatively unknown to the world at large; and yet, so had the savour of her saintly life and patience spread itself abroad, that her name had become more or less familiar to many of the choicest spirits in the Church of Christ.

Born in 1809, Miss Peacock was an invalid from her very childhood, and it was this fact that made her life such a striking illustration of God's faithfulness in the cheering promise, "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." Giving both her active and practical sympathy to many of the chief religious and philanthropic societies, it was probably with her that the idea of working for poor fishermen, which afterwards found fuller development in "The Mission to Deep-sea Fishermen," originated.

(From Photograph by Mr. Percy Graham, St. Mary's Studio, Bedford.)

On her first visit to Lowestoft, about the year 1860, she set herself to make "muffatees" for fisherfolk, and continued this work till the winter of 1875, when she had a most serious and painful illness. A notice of what she had been doing was put into Woman's Work, she being a member of the A.F.W.; and, in response to the help asked, above a hundred ladies came forward, some of them sending the cuffs, mittens, etc., they made to her, some of them forwarding their work direct to their seafaring acquaintances.

On her recovery, it gave her the greatest joy to realise that increased suffering had been over-ruled by God to mean increased usefulness; and it was often noticed by those around her, when the cruel pains to which she was periodically subjected were coming on, that she met them with the expectancy that God would make them work, among the "all things," for both his own glory and her good. She was a member of "The Invalids' Prayer Union," almost from its foundation. She took a deep interest in "The Mildmay Work," especially that among God's ancient people Israel. "The Sailors' Home" at Lowestoft had in her one of its oldest and truest friends.

Among the local efforts, was the distribution of Gospel literature to postmen, signalmen, and railway men in general, while nearly every villager in Pavenham had an interest in her prayers—the poor and needy in her purse too. In spite of her prolonged suffering she had a keen sense of humour, and would often astonish those around her with the brightest of repartee, when it was well known that she was enduring the most terrible of pains. At one time of her life she was much perplexed and tried by the removal, from various causes, of the valued attendants God gave her. By-and-by, however, she was comforted with the thought that as one was taken from her, another was brought to learn the blessed lessons of the sick chamber.

Remarkable as was Miss Peacock's activity, in spite of weakness, weariness, and pain, still more so was her patience under the many afflictions which, for some mysterious purpose of his own, God allowed to alight upon her. When exhaustion has only permitted her words to come in whispers, the writer of this sketch had often bent over her to hear her tell of the increased preciousness of Christ, discovered during the trial she has just passed through. The only semblance of a murmur that has escaped her lips has been the expression of disappointment that, after going so near to the rest of Paradise, she had been brought back again to earth.

Miss Peacock's funeral last month was attended by numbers who had known and loved her; and, awaiting the first resurrection, her body was laid in the north-west corner of Pavenham churchyard, beneath the trees that also shade the graves of her loved relatives, the late Mr. Joseph Tucker and Rev. W. Burton-Alexander.

Miss Jennie Casseday.

Feb. 7, 1893, closed the career on earth of one of the most remarkable instances of triumph over suffering in work for others that America has known.

Miss Jennie Casseday, of Louisville, Ky., was for more than thirty years prostrate with spinal trouble; yet let us note what she accomplished. She has been the central figure of Louisville charities for more than twenty years. From the dainty white drapery of her couch, her pale face welcomed every visitor with a cheerful smile; few entered there without the impression—this is the very gate of heaven to at least one waiting soul.

Her life-long affliction arose from an accident to her carriage, resulting in severe injury of the spine. Hope of recovery brightened after many weeks, when a second accident to her invalid chair renewed the injury in an incurable form.

Her mind was ever active in devising means for some new charity or the alleviation of individual suffering. She was the president of several organisations; the inspiration in each enterprise of the corps of workers who soon became enthusiastic in carrying out her plans. Her hopes were the brightest, her faith the strongest, her hand the first to draw from her moderate income the means to ensure success. Ministers of the Gospel have visited her and taken from her bedside higher, broader, deeper views of Christianity and its possibilities.

The Flower Mission of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the King's Daughters, the Shut-in Band, and the organised effort in prisons of the Bands of Royal Brotherhood, acknowledged her their presiding genius. The Training School for Nurses in Louisville also had its first impetus from her sympathetic heart. One of her last efforts, and the crowning work of her life, was the erection three years ago of Rest Cottage. This project was conceived and planned by Miss Casseday, and carried out by the King's Daughters under her guidance. In this work she interested many of the wealthy young girls of the city, whose hearts and lives have bloomed into fragrance and beauty in furthering the work. The object of Rest Cottage is to provide a place, easy of access from the city, where working girls can spend a part of their vacation in rest and recreation. The cottage has been used for three summers with great success. Thirty-five guests have been accommodated at one time. The house was furnished by the churches of Louisville.

The Shut-in Band, an organisation perhaps not very well known, was one of her enthusiasms. This society is composed of invalids, blind, and helpless people. They correspond with each other, and the letters are sent around the circle. They have also a circulating library, and thus many a weary hour is beguiled of its tedium. Miss Casseday wrote and spoke well. She had talents and literary accomplishments which made her letters to this society specially helpful and improving.

The state penitentiary has felt the beneficent influence of the Bands of Royal Brotherhood. The convicts sign a pledge of reformation. Miss Casseday received many letters of gratitude for her good influence, and many visits from liberated convicts seeking her counsel in starting life anew.

A member of the Presbyterian Church, devout and earnest, her joy was great when the president of the telephone company proposed placing an instrument at her side, by means of which she could virtually attend divine service every Sunday. It was her custom to be made ready for this service with scrupulous exactness every Sabbath morning. Her attendant placed Bible and hymn-book by her side, and with a quiet "I'm going to church now, I must not be disturbed," she dismissed the nurse from the room, and consecrated that hour to perfect communion with her Saviour.

Long before the hour set for her funeral services, the largest church in the city was filled to overflowing, and still the people crowded in, so that even standing space was occupied. Five sturdy young working men, who had felt the influence of this noble woman, and who, when Miss Casseday was going to Rest Cottage last summer, volunteered to carry her couch to the station, asked the privilege of being her pallbearers. The honorary pallbearers were chosen from different denominations, and the prominent ministers of the churches conducted the services. Thus she who had worked for humanity's sake called forth the grateful, loving appreciation of a Christian community, without regard to class or denominational prejudice.—New York Observer.

MISSION AT FORFAR, N.B.

During the last three weeks Mr. Oscar Owers, of London, has conducted a mission here under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. Owing to the stormy weather and other causes, the attendances were not always so large as we could have wished to see. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the meetings steadily deepened in interest and power. The Sabbath services were specially well attended.

Mr. Owers' Bible talks on the Sabbath mornings and week-day afternoons were much appreciated by all who were privileged to attend them. His lucid expositions were most helpful and suggestive, and on every hand one heard testimonies of blessings received. The Christians have been greatly quickened and refreshed, and we hope to reap the benefit of his earnest and devoted labours in days to come. G. L.

MR. J. J. SCROGGIE has had an encouraging season of sowing and reaping in Gospel work at Basingstoke in connection with the Brethren. This is the third year in succession in which Mr. Scroggie has visited Basingstoke, and on each occasion there have been decided tokens of blessing.

The Needs of London.

About a month ago members of the Church of England assembled in large numbers at the Mansion House, and heard addresses by several Bishops on the spiritual needs of London. Urging the importance of more churches being erected in Greater London, the speakers paid but slight attention to the work which Nonconformists of various denominations are doing. To some this feature of the proceedings was the cause of pain and regret; others took a more charitable view, and credited the Bishops with such zeal for their own enterprises as left them no time to enlarge upon the labours of others.

The sanction of the Lord Mayor for a conference of Nonconformists on the same subject in the same historic building, was promptly secured by Dr. Parker, of the City Temple. This was held on Wednesday last, the Egyptian Hall being crowded. Dr. Parker commenced with a criticism of the Church of England; others took higher ground, and urged to more united and earnest endeavour to advance the Kingdom of God among the people. The chair was occupied by Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., president of the Congregational Union of England and Wales.

Dr. Parker, who was the first speaker, deprecated a narrow, self-seeking sectarianism; and maintained that this had done more harm than infidelity to the Christian cause, for the reason that while infidelity makes blind attacks from without, sectarianism affects the very heart and soul of the Church. Asking "What is London?" he said: We speak of a Christian London and have a right to speak so; but there is also a devil's London. He had recently put himself into communication with the young men of his congregation on the subject of city life, asking them very direct questions. The description he had received in reply spoke of a moral atmosphere and moral putrescence which he thought could hardly have survived the ashes of Sodom and Gomorrah. In Greater London they had an annual consumption of more than forty-five million gallons of malt liquor, more than eight million gallons of wine, and four and a-half million gallons of ardent spirits. "What forces," asked the Doctor, "can stand before that Niagara of damning drink?" In the side streets and the alleys and the dens of London they would find a state of things that nowhere under the sun more nearly approached any imagined hell.

The Doctor continued:—What is Greater London? It stands on 700 square miles. It has a population of more than 5,600,000 souls. A thousand ships and 9,000 sailors are in its port every day. More than one-third of the crime in England is committed in Greater London. It has more than sixty miles of public-house frontage. Its brothels may be counted up to a thousand. Eighty thousand paupers are in its workhouses. One million of its inhabitants are habitual church neglecters. Having given figures showing the extent of the operations of the Wesleyans, the Congregationalists, and the Baptists, the speaker called for a consolidation of strength for the work which presses upon the Church of Christ.

Dr. Clifford gave the utmost praise to all the various instruments that are making the Kingdom of God a more living reality in the daily lives of the people; but there was not one of the many useful and beneficent instruments and agencies that could for a single moment compare with the blessed and far-reaching influence of a spiritual society grouping itself about the Lord Jesus Christ, and deriving its life from Him, day by day, hour by hour, and constantly obedient to his authority. The speaker pointed to the faith of the fathers as worthy of emulation, and held that no organisation has greater promise of blessing in the work of the regeneration of London than that which is fashioned on the type of the New Testament, and is upheld by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers did not want Nonconformity to be a political force, but rather a religious force. All jealousies and misstatements must be put aside, if the churches are to supply the necessities of London. Let us retain our Gospel and our faith, and we shall have strong churches, which will in the nineteenth century do work equal to those of the first century—turn the world upside down.

Dr. Newman Hall gave the young men present some from the lessons of his ample experience. He commended social gatherings, open-air preaching, and total abstinence work. Rev. B. Senior told how the masses had been reached from Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars Bridge-road, and emphasised the need for effort among the youth of the Metropolis.

Mr. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, said that, with London as it is, the great mass of the people not caring a bit for the name of the blessed Lord, he was for sinking differences, and simply asking—Who is trying to reach London with Jesus Christ? And if he saw anyone doing it, he would hold out the hand and thank him. A worthy outcome of the gathering would be the union of all denominations in efforts to understand the problem of London, to map out all districts where there is destitution of spiritual supply, and then to go to work without any spirit of denominational rivalry, but with a whole-souled agreement that those districts should be won for Christ.

Rev. C. Sylvester Horne advocated a larger ministry, whereby the strong churches should help the weak in every possible way. Brief addresses were also delivered by Drs. Jenkins and Monro Gibson, Revs W. Cuff and E. White.

OUR COUNTRY VILLAGES.

Dear Sir,—Much attention of late has been drawn to the state of our country villages. It is, indeed, sad to notice how neglected the spiritual needs of the inhabitants in many places are. I have been staying lately in a village which is a happy exception. Service at the church is only held once a fortnight, but God cares for the villagers. He has placed in that little spot an earnest Christian farmer, who has held for years, and is still holding, a service in his large kitchen every Sunday evening. Men, women, boys, and girls attend, and weekly the Gospel of Jesus Christ is preached, not, of course, without good results.

The Sunday-school work must not be overlooked. Five classes are held during the Sunday by the members of the household. In addition to this the lady of the house holds a women's meeting every Friday night, to which poor women will come, after a hard day's thrashing, dressed so neatly in their simple country fashion. They bring their own work, or if they require anything in that particular way, a sewing machine is kindly used for them. An interesting book is read or a little social talk permitted. Before separating a hymn is sung, followed by Bible reading and prayer. The women look forward to this meeting as a bright spot in their quiet lives.

Then comes the Band of Hope, which is doing a splendid work among the younger members. The influence is spreading, as children from the neighbouring villages have joined. Neither are bodily needs neglected, the sick are visited and cared for, the dying ones tended, in short, the villagers always know they will find a friend in their beloved Leader, whether they want his counsel or advice as lawyer, guide, or help in any way.

I am sending this account hoping others may see it and be encouraged to "go and do likewise." If some Christian man or woman, living in an out-of-the-way village, will attempt the same thing in "the strength of the Lord," surely he, or she, will be helped and guided by our Heavenly Father, and success will crown the effort.

Yours faithfully,

M. S.

Boys' Refuge Emigration Party.

The largest party of boys ever sent from the Strangeways Homes will sail for Canada at the end of this month. Sir Charles Tupper, the High Commissioner of Canada, has consented to come from London to address the annual meeting of the refuges on Tuesday, March 28, when he will be the guest of the Mayor of Manchester. This gathering will also be the farewell meeting to the party of about seventy boy emigrants; the girls' party will sail later.

The expenses of twenty-six out of the seventy are provided. The average cost is £10 to £12, and the committee of the Strangeways work are anxious to cover the cost of one or more boys.

Revival in Ireland.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND STEBBINS IN BELFAST.

These honoured brethren have been labouring in our northern metropolis for the last three weeks with a vigour which makes one wonder how they hold out. They have come to us on the invitation, and under the auspices, of the Y.M.C.A., of which Mr. D. A. Black is the general secretary.

Major Whittle, who has on two previous occasions—in 1881 and 1888—conducted missions in our midst, has the ready ear of large numbers of the people. His name to them is synonymous with full, faithful, and fervent Gospel teaching. God brought back his servant amongst us with the old message of mercy, and this message he has been simply, clearly and lovingly proclaiming all through these busy weeks.

The evangelists have visited Belfast at a time of exceptional difficulty for carrying on a mission. The public mind is seriously disturbed; a feeling of uneasiness and unsettledness is abroad, and, while a spirit of prayer is manifested among Christian people, there is at the same time a condition of things—a pre-occupancy of mind—not favourable to such special efforts. Notwithstanding this, God has blessed the visit of his servants.

The work began in Duncairn Church, whose pastor is the Rev. W. J. Jackson, M.A. The building was crowded nightly, and numbers of the neighbouring ministers were present, as they had opportunity.

Inquiry meetings were held for different sections of the audience, the young men being especially invited to adjourn to the Lecture Hall. Here testimonies were given, and inquirers pointed to the Lord Jesus.

The second week was spent in Rev. John McIlveen's church, on the south side of the city. Here similar arrangements were made to those carried out in Duncairn. The young men met in the Moravian Church close by and the young women in the Lecture Hall of the church in which the meetings were held. The third week found the evangelists moving eastward and locating themselves in a large church, whose pastor is Rev. W. Witherow. In the East-end a large united committee of ministers and laymen were interested in the mission, and with Rev. W. J. McCaughan as their hon. sec., gave hearty help to the work. A choir 100 strong took charge of the musical part of the meeting. Work was done for eternity here as in the other parts of the city. Appeal in speech and song was addressed to the crowded congregations in both telling and tender tones, and a goodly number, it is believed, yielded to the Lord.

Mr. Stebbins proved himself a true yoke-fellow with Major Whittle. In company with Miss Whittle he delivered the Gospel in song. Never have these highly gifted friends been heard to better advantage than in the Belfast Mission. Mr. Stebbins touches the organ with the deft hand of a master, and leads the congregational praise so as to make it hearty and united.

Miss Whittle has conducted a series of meetings for young ladies, which have been much appreciated and which we trust will be greatly blessed. Many bright and promising young lives were, it is believed, influenced for good at these gatherings. Miss Gibbons and Miss Boardman also took part in this good work.

Major Whittle found time to hold a series of children's services in the different sections of the city, which were very popular. His illustrated talks to children will long be remembered.

Lord Bennet joined the mission party at the end of the first week, and took an active interest in all the meetings, delivering testimony, dealing with inquirers, and helping in every way possible to press the battle to the gate.

Mr. A. W. Vance and his Fellowship Choir gave their valuable aid to the service of praise, and in the Sunday mass meetings in Ulster Hall, and as often as possible during the week, led in the service of praise.

The mission will conclude this week. The closing services are being held in May-street Church, Rev. Dr. Lynd's. It is expected that the interest will deepen still further, and that the closing meetings may be very fruitful. We give God all the glory for the way He has led and used his servant in our distracted land. Major Whittle has been favoured beyond most men in gaining a friendly and sympathetic hearing for the Gospel message from Galway to Dublin, and from Coleraine to Bandon. He has not only preached the simple Gospel over the land, but he has circulated the word of life. Many of our warm-hearted countrymen will remember his name with feelings of respect and gratitude because God made use of his servant to lead them into the light; and as he crosses the sea many of us will follow him with our prayers that God may bless him and his as they seek to sow beside all waters the good seed of the kingdom.

MESSRS. SMITH AND BELL.

These brethren began a series of evangelistic services in Strabane First Presbyterian Church (Rev. E. Clarke's), on Sabbath, March 12th. The morning service was well attended. Mr. Smith spoke with great power and earnestness, and immediately won the attention and sympathy of his audience. The large attendance at the evening meeting gave evidence that the services were to be conducted by a speaker endued with a large measure of the Spirit of God. It seemed to be the universal impression that a good time was in store for Strabane during the week.

The expectation has been abundantly fulfilled. The attendance at the services during the week, which were held in the lecture-hall, increased from the beginning, and on Friday evening the hall was filled to overflowing. A special feature was the eight o'clock morning meeting for special prayer, held in the Methodist Church, which was kindly placed at the disposal of the evangelists by the popular Christian pastor, Mr. Robinson. It has, indeed, been a soul-inspiring sight to see so many Christian people, ministers, business men, women and children gathering round the mercy-seat each day at early morning to invoke the Divine blessing on the work. This is the secret of the success which has hitherto attended the seryices. God has mightily stirred the people of Strabane, and that the work will be permanent in its results is the earnest expectation of all who have taken an interest in these services. The work has gone on steadily.

Mr. Ritchie Bell has a highly cultivated voice and uses it with great effect in bringing the Gospel message home to the heart. His singing in Strabane during the past week has proved that much may be done for the promotion of Christ's kingdom by one who chooses to give the voice of song to the service of the Master. Mr. Bell has been ably assisted in the musical part of the services by Mrs. Ross, of Woodend.

It was originally intended that the services should last for a week, but so great has been their success that it has been decided to continue them through another week. The decision has been justified by the crowds who came out to the second Sabbath Day services. Mr. Smith seems equal to any amount of work. Six services were conducted by him on Sabbath, at each of which Mr. Bell sang, and it can truly be said that the power of the Lord was present. The second week's services will be held in the church, as the Lecture Hall will not be sufficient to hold the increasing audiences.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

A correspondent who has visited Tullamore, where these brethren have been evangelising, says:—

From the start the meetings were well attended, with Roman Catholics coming in. Before Thursday (I left that afternoon) we believed there were from 200 to 250 or more R.C.'s present at the evening meetings. They sat and listened very quietly and came again each night, many remaining on for the after meetings. It was interesting to watch the wondering up-turned faces of many a hungry soul, evidently drinking in the message of life.

The evening meetings were crowded. Some had to go away more than once for want of room, even though the court-house held 600 or 700. The noon meetings were also well attended, many coming from miles round and going back not disappointed. Many a Christian as well as many a careless one will praise God for the mission in Tullamore.

Mr. McNeill spoke with great power, and many a time his eyes were filled while pleading with his hearers to accept a full and free salvation through Christ Jesus. On the Tuesday night a good many stood up to be prayed for, and on Wednesday night many more, while several testified to having found peace.

Mr. Burke's singing has been very fully appreciated. Some said they knew it brought in the Roman Catholics. All the Protestant clergy were united except the rector and his son (who is his curate), who would have nothing to do with the mission. Many from their congregations came regularly to all the meetings, and theirs has been the blessing.

FOREIGN EVANGELISATION.

An interested company met on Thursday afternoon at the residence of Lord and Lady Kinnaird to hear something of evangelisation in France and Belgium from the lips of Professor Bertrand and Rev. C. Merle-d'Aubigné.

These friends are on a visit to this country in the hope of eliciting the sympathy of English Christians in the needy fields in which they are here to respectively represent.

The first named speaker described special work amongst Romish priests carried on in association with the Mission Intérieure. His companion, on the other hand, described the progress of the Gospel in Belgium, especially in the mining districts, resulting from the efforts of the Belgian Missionary Church. We hope in our next issue to publish some very interesting details of these important spheres of Christian work.

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN BIRMINGHAM.

Remarkable success has in this city attended the labours of this lady evangelist. She has concluded a fifteen days' mission in the Baptist Tabernacle, Longmore-street, and though there has not been that thronging and overflow in the attendances which in other places have characterised her missions, the results have been great. At her first and last meetings as many as one in twelve of those present were apparently led to decision, while over 300 in the fortnight have given in their names as having received Christ. Many of these are joining the church at the Tabernacle, and others will be recommended to the care of the churches they have previously attended.

Mrs. Baeyertz's addresses have been simple, clear, and pointed expositions of the way of salvation, and in their delivery she has indeed been endued with "Power from on High." The afternoon Bible readings, notably those on the "Clean Heart," the "Perfect Heart," and the "Secret of Victory," have been greatly helpful to Christians.

She begins a mission in Edinburgh on April 9, where the prayers of God's people will follow her.

Charles S. P. Wood, Pastor.

A GIRLS' GUILD.

A really splendid ministry of help is being fulfilled by Mrs. J. T. Rae and her co-workers through the "Girls' Guild of Good Life" at Hoxton Hall. Only infinite patience and courage, inspired by love to Christ and those for whom He died, could enable these ladies to persevere in a work that presents so many difficulties and discouragements. This thought has impressed us much on reading Mrs. Rae's recently-published little book "On Life's Quicksands" (3d. Hoxton Hall, E.). The story is admirably told, and illustrates at once the need of such ministry as the Guild affords, and the effective way in which it works for the redemption and refinement of our toiling young sisters in the East End. Ladies whose time hangs heavy on their hands should read it, and try to discover some way of sharing in this truly Christ-like mission.

The manifold work sustained by the Guild is well described, and the value of the little book is further enhanced by Mr. Walter Besant's sympathetic introduction; by an in memoriam sketch of the late Wm. I. Palmer; by portraits of Mr. Palmer and the late Mr. Montagu Williams; and by sketchy illustrations from the nimble pen of Mr. Wm. Mark Noble.

THE BIBLE FLOWER MISSION is an evangelistic agency. Its friends in London visit the hospitals and infirmaries, and present the inmates with bouquets, to which Scripture texts are attached. The number of bouquets, lavender bags, and ornamental cards distributed last year was not so large as in 1891. This was owing to a regrettable diminution in the size and number of the hampers and baskets received. This interesting enterprise is one which some of our country readers would be glad to assist, and we advise such to write for particulars to the hon. superintendent, Miss Anne Dove, at the offices of the Mission, 110, Cannon-street, E.C.

NEW YORK CITY MISSION.

The sixty-sixth annual report of the New York City Mission and Tract Society is a book of 250 pages. One characteristic of the work is its many-sidedness—young and old, Americans and foreigners, are sought in their homes and haunts, and instructed in mission houses and churches. We make a brief extract from the report:—

"We have recently made an experiment which any church can make, which even individuals can make, and which will more effectually reach the masses in lower New York than any special effort ever before made. We have turned a tenement house into a church, and this is why we did it.

"A large number of people no more think of entering a church than a good pious old lady would think of going to a walking match, or a sparring contest. The attitude of the vast majority of working people in lower New York is one of absolute indifference to the church, and this indifference arises out of ignorance. The people will not come to church; the thought came to us: 'Can we not bring the church and out-of-the-way places where some of these people live?'

"With this object in view, we rented two small rooms in a court where forty-six families live. We made no announcement of our coming. We did absolutely no advertising. We simply sent a wagon-load of chairs to the court, but this was advertisement enough. A load of chairs, without a bed, a cooking stove, or table, no pots and pans, no old clothes, nothing but chairs! The people wondered what was coming into the court, To carry on this work an extra man was needed. I went to Mount Hermon and laid my plans before the students, and urged them to send one of their members to engage in this work. They generously responded and raised three hundred dollars to defray the expenses. One of the young men pledged twenty dollars, although he had no means. He worked on the school farm during the summer, and in the fall paid his contribution. Mr. Martin F. Luther was selected. He is doing a good work, and is a credit to the young men whom he represents and the institution which educated him.

"On our opening day we sent every family in the court a beautiful card, decorated with a white rose, with the word 'You are invited to attend the this afternoon, at two o'clock.' To distinguish our rooms from the rest of the rooms in court, we hung a little red sign, ornamented with a white rose, over the door. We called the mission 'The White Rose,' simply because it was sufficiently indefinite to suit our purpose. We provided a good supply of delicious steaming coffee and cake for everybody; not because we wanted to buy the people, but because no saloon is ever opened without refreshments. The afternoon meeting was designed for women, and eighteen mothers and several little children were present at the services."

To shorten the story, which is from the pen of Rev. W. T. Elsing, pastor of De Witt Memorial Church, the women were delighted with the service. During the months that have since elapsed there have been many impressive scenes in the house. There have also been proceedings of another character; for the door has been kicked off its hinges, and the panels smashed in, while missiles of various kinds have been thrown into the room. But the workers have gained the victory over the disturbers without calling in the police; and many of the most unruly have since expressed a desire to lead a better life. To continue:—

"Our rooms have been too small to admit both children and young men at the same service. We have, therefore, refused admission to children, except to the afternoon services. I have often been touched by the pleading of little boys to be admitted. The order at the children's services is as good as in any Sunday-school in the city. From our experience during the past two months we are convinced that there ought to be one hundred tenement house missions started."

Through the generosity of Mr. John S. Kennedy, the Society shares with three other organisations the United Charities Building, Twenty-second-street and Fourth-avenue.

THE "LIBERATOR" RELIEF FUND now amounts to over £13,000.

THE LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

For twenty-two years this mission has carried on in the poorest corners of St. Giles's its blessed double ministry—"as well for the body as the soul." The annual report, which has just reached us, begins by describing graphically a day's work:—"Requests such as, 'Would the doctor come immediately and see a sick husband, wife, or child?' are received, and noted in our visiting book, and we are thus brought at once in contact with the people in their own habitations, and witness scenes of misery or hear tales of sorrow which often cause us to shudder. The first case is in the neighbouring court where a poor Roman Catholic is suffering from pneumonia and heart disease. Neither he nor his many friends have the least hope of his recovery; they are told not to despair, as God is able to do all things, and following up the treatment with prayer to Him who alone can heal, we leave the case. In a few days the man begins to recover. His wife and daughters are filled with gratitude, and listen with readiness to all we have to say about the Great Physician of souls; and when the man later on attends at the mission to give thanks, his face beams with heartfelt joy. The next case is that of a poor sweep suffering from bronchitis, who tells us the chief points of a Gospel address he heard at the mission a year ago, when the preacher illustrated the state of a sinner by three pieces of paper with 'black spots on them.'"

Many similar cases are noted and the mid-day services for poor patients are also described. The Sunday and week evening Gospel services have also, it appears, proved most encouraging; while the Sunday-school has gone on well.

"The Invalid Kitchen is now three years old, and we are more than ever convinced of the need of it. We dare not preach the Gospel and leave the sick without creature comforts. It would be un-Christ-like, for the Master fed the hungry, healed the sick, and preached the good news. The new building has provided us with more convenient kitchen requisites. Necessary funds to supply the food is all we need. Through the support of our friends we are able to do a good deal in the way of giving nourishment to the sick, but we could comfort and cheer many more if our funds were larger. We are deeply grateful for supplies of fruit, vegetables, and other country produce, as well as for groceries. The doctors order what they deem best for the patients, and the messengers who bring the medicine-bottles carry home with them the prescribed food."

"The Clothing Department is a valuable adjunct, and we have to thank our helpers for again remembering the poor, shivering bodies of our men, women, and children."

Netley Cottage, the Convalescent Home at Folkestone, has had during the past year 153 inmates. "Of these weak and weary sufferers from St. Giles and other localities, some had been discharged from hospital after operations, others had suffered from neuralgia, dyspepsia, anæmia, and various other ills, consequent upon attacks of influenza. Others again had been admitted in a state of general debility, but were rapidly restored by the fine air of Folkestone, good diet and rest, and went back to their homes with thankful hearts.

"This ministry of loving care is a very delightful one to those who have the immediate superintendence of the home, for they are often permitted to see results in so many lives being brightened and sad hearts cheered; but we would remind our generous subscribers and donors that we are only the almoners of their bounty, and they really share with us in helping those whose homes are scenes of care and suffering, and in some instances whose lives are almost loveless."

The Holiday Home at Brasted Chart has been the happy resort of 254 children who have been privileged to spend a happy health-giving fortnight at this delightful spot.

We venture to think the report, from which we thus quote, affords ample evidence of the value and blessedness of the Medical Mission Service in St. Giles. It speaks for itself, and ought to be read by all. Copies may be had of the Secretary, London Medical Mission, Short's Gardens, Endell-street, W.C.

LIVERPOOL.—A special meeting of the Liverpool Town Missionaries was held in Hackins Hey on Wednesday, March 15, to bid farewell to Mr. W. J. M'Carthy, one of the staff, who is leaving to labour in the South of Spain.

LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.

Exeter Hall was crowded on Monday evening, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the London Wesleyan Mission. Alderman Agar, of York, presided, and was supported by several prominent ministers and friends of the work.

A brief statement by Rev. W. D. Walters, general secretary, put the assembly in possession of some encouraging facts. The last conference appointed fifteen ministers to work in the mission; there are in addition twenty lay agents, and about eighty sisters and "sisters of the people." Last year it was reported that some 5000 were meeting in class; an increase upon these figures of some hundreds will be shown at the close of the current year. About £3000 has been raised towards meeting the expenditure, leaving nearly £2000 yet to be found.

Rev. Dr. Rigg, president of the Conference, rejoiced at the progress of the work. The ancient purpose of Methodism, in its primitive spirit, was to-day being carried out by means of new methods. All denominations are waking up to the necessity of grappling with the social, religious, and moral needs of London.

Some words of cordial sympathy were spoken by Rev. Dr. Newman Hall. He was glad to notice the splendid work which women are doing in connection with the Mission. The Church was very blind not to utilise the marvellous gifts of woman at an earlier period. On the day of Pentecost the Holy Ghost came down upon women as well as men. Some people object to novelties, but everything that is good was at one time a novelty. There is no variation in the Gospel, though the methods of propagating it may vary; and varied circumstances require variation in methods. The population is going forward with enormous strides, and Christian workers must keep pace with it; the devil is going forward, and we must go forward to counteract the devil; the wealth of London is going forward, and it must advance in making contributions to God's work. The kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and we are to go forward and take possession. Danger haunts every path but that of duty, while heaven is at the end of the path of duty and forwardness.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., having urged combination on the part of Christians to combat the forces of evil, Rev. J. H. Hopkins spoke hopefully of the work of the Mission in Southwark; and Rev. J. E. Wakerley described efforts in Central London, where there are 1250 persons in full membership and on trial.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes rejoiced in the present contest with the drink traffic. He was strongly convinced that the moral section of the community had not done its duty. They had allowed the liquor-sellers, in the interests of foul greed, to fill public places, and sign petitions; and chicken-hearted members of Parliament were beginning to be afraid. In the windows of public-houses the Direct Veto Bill was described as "a rich man's protection Bill." He maintained that the present law was the rich man's protection Bill. The wealthy classes and the magistrates could and did protect themselves. It is now demanded that the poor should have the same power of protection, and he asked that the English on this subject might have as much sense as the Welsh. Why should England grovel before the power of the beer-barrel? Nothing hinders the progress of Christianity so much as the liquor traffic.

After the announcement that the collection had yielded £300, Rev. Peter Thompson delivered a short address, echoing Mr. Hughes's remarks on the local veto question.

MURSHIDABAD, N. INDIA.—The report of work done last year in this district, in connection with the L.M.S., is in many respects encouraging. There is greater willingness on the part of the converts to engage in Christian work." At the Hindu festivals, and at other holiday times almost all the Christian men have been gathered together for a preaching service, usually at Khagra, and thus we have stood a united body to set forth the truths of Christ." Rev. W. G. Brockway and his fellow labourers write: "Many things seem to point to a near crisis in our missionary work. For seventy years the Gospel has been preached in this district; the name of Christ is well known, and respected everywhere. Our work is extending; many are inquiring. Let us then redouble our prayers, and even this century may see such a victory as shall be a new Christian evidence." Mr. Brockway's address is: L.M.S., Khagra, Murshidabad, N. India.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

The report for last year of the Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain contains some striking letters from those who are spreading the light in the peninsula. Mr. Armstrong writes from Barcelona :—

As to matters generally in Spain, the state of the country is grave. I have known Spain since 1862, and can never remember noting such poverty, misery, and such lack of hope of better days as is now prevalent. This is not favourable to Gospel work. Moreover, Rome is very powerful now, far more so than during past years. All over the land new monasteries and convents have been built, and the Jesuits are everywhere, while from their educational institutions trained young labourers, male and female, have been sent forth to do Rome's bidding. This means more opposition to all Gospel work, more persecution for Gospel converts.

So much for man's work. Meantime, God's work has gone on. It is in Spain by his will; and so, spite of all possible difficulties from many parts of the land, "a people are being gathered out for his name." The simple preaching of the old Gospel is owned of God to the conversion of souls, and there are ever coming to light clear cases of souls being turned from darkness to light through the reading of God's Word, placed in their hands by some Godly colporteur.

From my correspondent of many years past in Asturias, a colporteur himself, I learn that, scattered over that large province, some hold fast to the faith. But it is from the Argentine Republic that comes a confirmation of how steadfast some Asturian converts are. Four years ago a whole family emigrated there. They were from the group of Norena, which Mr. Southall once visited. They settled in Santa Fé, a most fanatical province, but have lately settled in Rosario. The father held firm all the time to the faith, and finding in Rosario public evangelistic preaching, great was his joy. The Episcopal Methodists have a chapel there, and the Salvation Army a station. "There are certain things," the Asturian brother writes me, "that I do not find in the Book, but the important matter is that the Gospel be preached in its purity."

In the province of Jaen, the mission work carried on for so many years through the efforts of the Neuchatel Committee, is continued. From Iznatoraf as its centre, a very Godly Spanish evangelist goes forth, at times accompanied by a colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, to visit the scattered Christians, and to carry the Gospel to new villages. Open doors are found in many of these, and the sales of the colporteur, considering the misery of the people, are remarkable, proving clearly a desire on the part of the people to have God's word in their possession. In Chiclana, where Mr. Evans worked for some time, and with blessing, the work continues. The evangelist from Iznatoraf has lately visited the place, and says—"A nice little group (it is better not to give figures in Spain) prove their conversion by their life." In Aguilas, province of Murcia, a few hold together. Poor people! their trials are many. "Send us a pastor, or at least a schoolmaster for the children," they write me. If I can so arrange, some Godly man shall visit them, but Spanish converts must learn to cease from man, and to rest on God as teacher.

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. J. B. Hunter (J. Rew and Co.), Brown's Buildings, Liverpool.

Freedmen's Missions' Aid Society.

A meeting of this Society was held in Trinity Presbyterian Church Lecture Hall, Clapham, on the 14th inst., when a very interesting as well as earnest address was given by Bishop Kephart, of America, on the work which the Society is aiding on the West Coast of Africa, viz.: in the Sherbro, Mendi, and Imperch districts of Sierra Leone; from which the Bishop has just returned after his second tour of inspection. Addresses were also given by Dr. MacEwan, Rev. George Saunderson, Mr. Percy M. Thornton, M.P., and others.

A similar meeting was recently held at Forest Hill Presbyterian Church. On both occasions the Zulu Christian Choir sang several of their native as well as jubilee and other songs with much acceptance.

THE GOVERNOR OF TASMANIA has assented to an Act to provide for the establishment of Hospitals for Inebriates.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

This Mission goes on steadily in its numerous departments of service. The evangelistic and other efforts at the Central Mission Chapel in Little Wild-street are well sustained, and a special mission, attended with much interest, was concluded on Sunday by Mr. George Hefford. The various mission branches are also in full and active operation amongst the poor and pitiful children and adults of St. Giles.

The well-known Prisoners' Branch is also going on vigorously. Morning by morning the workers are busy at the prison gates, getting hold of those discharged from gaol, and endeavouring to persuade them to abandon their evil courses. The secretary's office in Brooke-street, W.C., sees daily numbers of men and boys who have done wrong seeking a way of escape, and many of them, being practically helped in their time of need, bid fair to do well, and even now very many erstwhile criminals are leading honest and sober lives, owing their all, under God, to the efforts of this valuable mission.

From the many interesting cases passing day by day under Mr. Wheatley's observation we take the following by way of illustration :—

SICKNESS, POVERTY, AND SIN.

Less than a month ago, an elderly man was remanded to Holloway prison, on a charge of stealing a pair of reins and kneecaps. He was seen by Mr. Wheatley in the course of one of his visits to the prison, and then it was that the following tale of struggle against poverty and sickness was brought to light.

The man's age was fifty. His wife was dead, but he had five children for whom he had no home, as it had been sold up while he had been in the hospital very ill. Everything had seemed to go against the poor fellow. Sickness had left him very weak, but still he did his utmost to fight against it. He got work, but until he could get his first week's wages he had no money with which to buy food. He tried to borrow a shilling or two, but no one would lend him even such a trifle. Under these circumstances he committed the offence mentioned so that he might get some small amount of food. The goods he took he meant to pledge, and then redeem them when he took his first week's wages.

Mr. Wheatley made inquiries into the statement, and finding it correct, communicated with the magistrate, giving him the particulars, and offering to help the man if he was discharged. This was done, and the poor fellow being brought to Mr. Wheatley received the practical help and sympathy he so much needed, and now is in a fair way to continue working honestly as he had done for so many years past. It would be difficult to find anyone more grateful for help given.

But for such aid at a critical moment, this man would, in all human probability, have come out of prison merely to sink deeper into crime. As a convicted thief he would have found the door to honest employment closed in his face. Many similar instances come under notice, and again and again the question has to be faced, Must such be left unhelped to sink or swim? But helping demands funds, and these unhappily come in slowly. Few surely realise the genuine results of this mission service. Full information may be had of the superintendent, Mr. William Wheatley, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn.

WORK IN ITALY.

Writing from 4, Corso Intra, Lago Maggiore, Miss Jane Cox, who is assisting Signor Bossi, says :—"Though this winter has been an unusually severe one, and there has been sorrow and death around, God has graciously preserved our orphans, so that there has not been even serious illness among them. Our girls make very pretty pillow-lace, and if any of your readers would send for patterns we should be very pleased. They make edgings, dress trimmings, scarves, collars, etc., in white, black, or colours.

"The men at Mont Orfano have been undergoing much trial on account of their faith. By much underhand dealing our certificated mistress has been replaced by an uncertificated R. C. teacher, so Signor Bossi has been compelled to open an Evangelical school. Only three of the village children attend the R. C. school, and six others from a neighbouring district are on the books. The priest has been trying various means to get the keys of the church, but our men say they will only give them up with their lives."

THE NORTH AFRICA MISSION.

WORK AMONGST SPANIARDS IN MOROCCO.

Mr. Patrick, of the Pastor's College, who was sent out by the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, writes from Tangier recently :—

"No words can tell how fierce is the persecution we are enduring. The Spanish Consul declares that a woman shall be expelled by force to-morrow from Tangier for no other reason than attending our meetings. Men are being turned out of their houses, and have the greatest difficulty in getting others, as the Spanish friars speak against our people to all the landlords in Tangier. One man has been turned out of four houses in less than a year. The falsest of charges have been made against Mr. Barnard, Miss Brown, and myself by a friar, through the Spanish consulate to the English Consul. Mr. Barnard and a Hebrew convert have been stoned and beaten by priests. Some of the Spaniards have wavered, but nearly all stand firm. February was the best month for meetings we have ever had. We held seventeen, with an average attendance of seventy. At our new out-station we had also an average of forty-six each day."

Some may remember that Mr. Patrick's landlord, a Spaniard, has not only obliged him to give up his residence, but also the premises which he had taken for the Spanish meetings, dispensary, etc. Since then Mr. Patrick has been able to secure a suitable building, but only on condition of his paying for the repairs £10, and £48 for the first year's rent before the 1st of April; of this he has £10 in hand. Probably some steward of the Master would like to pay the first year's rent for this well-persecuted, therefore highly-honoured, work. The house contains eight rooms, one which would seat 150; three suitable for the dispensary carried on by Dr. Terry and other N.A.M. workers; and a kitchen, two bedrooms, and a sitting-room, wherein the resident missionary would live. Further particulars can be obtained from the Secretary of the North Africa Mission, 21, Linton-road, Barking. Details of the persecution will probably appear in the May issue of North Africa. W. E.

Mr. J. E. Budgett-Meakin, for many years resident in Tangier, writes :—"During the past few months, as the results of Gospel work among the Spanish-speaking population of Tangier have become more apparent, the counter activity of the Romish priests has grown. Pacific means having failed to shake the faith of many, or greatly to reduce the attendance at the meetings or schools, which continues very good, terrorism has been employed through officials, who are completely in the hands of the priests. Repeated threats of expulsion from the country have been made by the Spanish Consul, as well as of imprisonment, and the converts are very hard put to, even though it is doubtful if these threats could be carried into execution. Many have, however, been turned out of home and employment, at a time when work is very scarce and bread unusually dear. The landlord of the meeting-room, a Spanish official, has been compelled, by fear of losing his post, to give notice to the mission to leave. With great difficulty a suitable place has been secured on the condition of paying rent in advance. As an outsider who can testify from ample experience as to the urgent need of this sum for the glory of God, and as to the excellence of the work He is accomplishing through the workers here, I would bring it prominently before the notice of Christians at home, that immediate action may be taken."

ZANZIBAR STRANGERS' REST.—In the second annual report of this enterprise, Miss Granger says: "On Sundays and Thursdays we have our largest meetings. It is most encouraging to hear with what appreciation some of the men speak of the Rest Most of our men belong to the navy, as one or two of their vessels are always here, and we have a few merchant seamen. The trading vessels usually carry foreign crews, and some of the captains will not allow their men to come on shore, knowing how many bad drinkin-ghouses there are on this island. We use every opportunity of visiting these ships, and leave bags of books and Testaments, which as a rule, are gratefully received; when possible we hold services on board. We have had great joy in seeing precious souls won for Jesus, and our hearts have been gladdened by seeing these young converts bring their shipmates to hear the glad news." Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, hon. sec. Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E.

MRS. MEREDITH'S PRISON MISSION.

The annual meeting of this mission was held at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, on Monday afternoon. Lord Rookwood, who occupied the chair, said he believed great good had been done in enabling women who had become criminals to regain their position in society, and to earn an honest livelihood. The Princess Mary Village Homes, Addlestone, were of great value in taking the children of criminals and training them for future usefulness.

The report, read by Mr. E. E. Waterfield, showed the extent of the work and the number of instances in which aid had been afforded during the past year. Connected with Mrs. Meredith's institutions there are now 703 volunteer lady workers, and 72 paid agents. During the past year 3200 women and children have been benefited, and since the foundation of the work, 61,970 have been helped. The expenses of last year were more than £13,000, and since the commencement of the work the sum of £160,358 had been spent. Christmas letters to prisoners were sent out to the number of 19,000 last year, making a total of 180,000 which have been written and sent. Many are the cases of gratitude expressed for these letters, and of cases of blessing accompanying the effort.

Addresses followed by Rev. T. H. Sparshott, Rev. M. A. Begbie, Rev. J. Campbell Colquhoun, and Mr. R. C. Morgan. A resolution was passed to the effect that steps should be taken to render the mission a permanent institution for the country by procuring funds to endow it. A number of children from the Princess Mary Village Homes, Addlestone, sang hymns at intervals, and a number of women who had been engaged in the laundry for periods varying from twenty-four to five years were presented by Lady Rookwood with medals for good conduct. A number of friends afterwards visited the laundry, which employs from seventy to eighty women daily.

MR. JOHN CURRIE IN GLASGOW.

Rev. J. J. MacKay, Pastor Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, writing in his monthly Church Record, says:—

"February has been for some of us a very busy month in the blessed Lord's work, and also a very blessed one. We have just closed two weeks of special services, conducted by Mr. John Currie. The meetings were well attended, all things considered—the average attendance being about 300 on week nights and 600 on Sabbath nights.

"In a very unexpected way we were led to Mr. Currie, and we thank God for the leading. His addresses were full of Bible teaching, his whole soul seems steeped in the Word, and God's children were much helped by his addresses. The graphic illustrations drawn from his own past life were singularly telling, and at times they came crashing down like very thunderbolts, smashing to pieces all the sinner's defences. Unmistakably the Master used him amongst us, and every night there was manifest fruit in souls awakened, and seeking and finding the Saviour. Many will praise God in time and eternity that He sent and used his servant among us; and God's people were much stirred up by the bright, joyful presentation of the Christian life which he gave. His own life, too, is a standing and happy illustration of the saving, keeping, filling, and using power of God."

PERSEVERANCE is a gift never divorced from faith. Though sometimes it may be disturbed by fits, yet at length it shall set the crown on the head of true piety.—Thomas Taylor.

JAPAN.—Funds are needed towards defraying the expenses of two Bible colporteurs in the provinces of Awa and Sanuki (joint population 1,320,000) in the island of Shikoku. The Christians in this district total 300. Until recently the British and Foreign Bible Society supported these two men, but the Bible Society are no longer able to guarantee the salaries; in lieu thereof they grant to each colporteur ten dollars' worth of Bibles, Testaments, and portions per month, free. If the Bible-selling be given up, one of the strongest pioneering agencies (especially in the remote country districts) will be done away with. About £15 per annum is needed to carry on existing work. Mr. H. G. Malaher, 20, Compton-terrace, Islington, London, N., will answer communications.

A PASTOR TO HIS FLOCK.

In his second pastoral letter to the congregation of Brunswick Chapel, Upper Berkeley-street, W., Rev. Dr. Bullinger says:—

We have had evident tokens of real spiritual blessing, and we have seen such indications of God's presence with us that we are enabled to go forward with our faith and hope increased, and with the knowledge that our labour has "not been in vain in the Lord." We count all labour to be "in vain" that is not for eternity. This brings us face to face with the very essence of Christian work. It takes us to the secret springs of that which can alone be called "the work of the Lord," i.e., the work which He has prepared for us, and that He would have us to do for Himself and for his glory. Our object is not the popular one of the day—to "raise the masses," but it is to raise that banner which He has given us to display because of the truth. The one aim of work may be expressed by the words:—"Glory to God in the highest," the other by the words, "Good will towards men." Both are right and true, but only in this Divine order and proportion. The vast majority of Christians put the latter first; while the world, and its philanthropy, advocates the latter only to ignore the former.

Our desire is not merely to put "glory to God" in the first and highest place, but our belief is that it is only when we do this that we secure that which is really "good will towards men," inasmuch as the greater includes the less. All forms of false religion, and all false forms of religious work, proceed upon the assumption that there is some good in human nature which can be utilised and improved. While true religion, and true Christian service based upon it, recognises man as being utterly ruined, guilty, and undone. It knows that God originally "created man in his own image" (Gen. i. 27), but that after the fall, and when driven out of Paradise, Adam "begat a son in his own likeness, after his image" (Gen. v. 2). All Adam's posterity, therefore, are begotten in the likeness and image of a fallen man, and as it is impossible to "bring a clean thing out of an unclean" (Job xiv. 4), they are all conceived in sin, "shapen in iniquity" (Ps. li. 5)...

As the old man is totally ruined, there must be the creation of a "new man." There must be "a new creation," and the new man must be "born of the Spirit." The Holy Spirit of God is the only agency for effecting, by the Word of God, this wondrous work of the new creation... It is not "the flesh with its corruptions and lusts" trimmed and trained. But it is the Divine nature imparted with all its spiritual blessings and powers. It is "Christ in us." It is not the old heart made clean, pure, temperate or religious, but it is "a new heart," altogether new, the "new creation in Christ Jesus," "who was delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification." This is the "banner" which the Lord has given to us that fear Him, "that it may be displayed because of the truth." (Ps. lx. 4.) This is the foundation on which we desire to build at Brunswick Chapel. This is the great principle on which we wish all our work to be based.

BLIND IN JAPAN.

Mrs. Gideon Draper, of Yokohama, in writing to a friend in this country, with respect to an affection of the eyes from which her daughter is suffering, adds the following interesting facts:—

"Her affliction has led my mother to desire to do something for the blind of Yokohama, and she with her Japanese helper has started a little school. We have ten scholars now, and two more promised, which we think is encouraging, as the school has only been established three months, and it is hard to get them to come. Some of them are quite advanced in years, but are so anxious to learn. The Japanese syllabary has been reduced to a system for the blind, consisting of the arrangement of six dots in different combinations to represent different characters, and we have a couple of machines by which they can learn to write these different combinations. We teach them to knit, to sing, and they learn music by note.

"The work is encouraging in our Yokohama churches. Extra meetings were held this fall, under an evangelist from America, with good success."

GIBRALTAR SOUTH SPANISH MISSION.

The tenth annual report of Mission Work to Mediterranean Garrisons is accompanied by a pathetic letter from Mr. A. Bell, whose wife was drowned, with other missionaries, through the wreck of the Trinacria about six weeks ago. Though broken in heart, Mr. Bell is firm in evangelistic purpose, and he hopes to see continued blessing on the work in which he is engaged at Algeciras.

Mrs. Todd Osborne, hon. sec. of the mission, writes:—

"The need of the 19,000 civil population and the 3500 floating population of Gibraltar has been pressed upon us by some of the oldest inhabitants. The young men who have been educated by Christian Scotchmen, and who are only nominally Roman Catholic, are wholly uncared for, no effort having been made to reach them. Only a few hundreds of the civil population are Protestant, while there are thousands of Jews, Spaniards, and Moors, who might be reached had we a missionary who could speak Spanish and a large undenominational hall.

"The Soldiers' Institute has lost a valued helper in the death of Mr. Marshall. God has blessed his faithful testimony. Miss Squires, Young Women's Christian Association, is doing all she can for the poor Spanish women. Her little hall is overcrowded. With deep longing we cry to the Master to thrust out labourers into his harvest. There are towns and villages in South Spain where no missionary has ever been, and lonely hamlets and houses away up in the mountains where no priest ever goes, and where Christian workers would be gladly welcomed. One town, we have been told, has thrown off the yoke which has bound them. They are as 'sheep without a shepherd.'

"In Gibraltar public-houses of the vilest description abound. Young girls are brought from England and used as decoys to tempt the men to drink. We cannot write what we know of the results of all this, but we ask those who sigh and cry for these abominations to help us to turn the battle to the gate, to rescue the perishing in Gibraltar, and to carry the Gospel into Spain. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh; but we long that this people who dwell so near our shore, in what was to the ancients 'the uttermost parts of the earth,' should hear and live."

Mrs. Todd Osborne's address is Rysland, Newton Mearns, N.B.

COLONISTS FOR CANADA.

On Tuesday afternoon last week a meeting was held in Exeter Hall for the purpose of bidding farewell to a party of 336 young people from Dr. Barnardo's homes, who on the following day left London en route for Canada. Colonel C. E. Howard Vincent, M.P., presided, and, in the course of some remarks, expressed hearty sympathy with Dr. Barnardo's work—a work attended by many difficulties, but which has resulted in great good. In view of the overcrowded condition of the labour markets of this country, he regarded emigration such as this as one of the best remedies. The work had been going on for many years, and this contingent brought the total sent out to upwards of 6000 lads.

Dr. Barnardo stated that of the 336, 118 came from Middlesex, two from the United States, and the remainder from various parts of the kingdom. The average age was fourteen years and two months, and the average length of residence fifteen months, the older lads bringing down the average in the latter matter; 129 were entirely orphans, 117 had mothers only, and forty-two fathers only.

The Earl of Aberdeen, who was enthusiastically received, congratulated the lads, not because they were leaving the old country, but because, as they were leaving, Canada was the place to which they should go. There were three C's which they must remember—the old Country, the new Country, and Christianity, which included both.

NOTTINGHAM.—Much expectation and prayer preceded the visit of Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver to the lace town, where they commenced an eight days' mission on Sabbath last. The large Albert Hall had a good gathering assembled to welcome them on Sunday morning. At night many sought and found their Saviour.

MISSIONS AND MORALS.

The protest, clear, firm, and unmistakeable, raised by the remarkable breakfast meeting held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday morning, was sufficient to show that many Christians are by no means half-hearted in regard to national wrong-doing. The attendance was large, and fairly representative of the various evangelical churches and missionary societies. Moreover, the acting secretary, Mr. James E. Mathieson, read a number of weighty letters from leading men unable to be present, all deploring the evils against which the protest was to be raised; noteworthy among these letters was one from Rev. John Dymock, of the Free Church of Scotland Foreign Missions Committee, who demonstrated clearly the disastrous effects of neutrality with respect to such evils.

Rev. W. F. Moulton, D.D., who presided, gave the keynote of the whole in a few well-weighed and judicious opening words. I speak, he said, under a deep sense of responsibility. Our meeting has been regarded as a protest against Indian missionaries. I do not think so, else I should not be here. It is true that no full and sufficient explanation of the action of the recent Conference, in rescinding the resolution already passed, is yet forthcoming; but at all events missionaries are not lukewarm in this matter, as the protests raised by and the resolutions passed by missionary conferences in Bengal and in the North and South of India amply prove. It is sadly true this action of the Decennial Conference has been mischievously misinterpreted, but none the less are the missionaries, I believe, sound on these great questions, and thoroughly with us in opposing these intolerable evils.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe moved the following resolution:—

This meeting, embracing representatives of the various denominations of the Christian Church in this country, and gathered together to consider the attitude befitting the Church of Christ in view of certain great evils which affect the progress of the Gospel in heathen lands, which evils are especially supported and fostered by the action of the Anglo-Indian Government, resolves as follows:—

That, in face of the fact that the Christian Church in China is perfectly unanimous in regarding the moral level of the opium smoker to be below the standard required as the minimum for a Christian profession in that country; and further, that the Indian Government especially prepares for Chinese consumption a drug, any use of which, for the purposes for which it has been prepared, necessarily excludes from the Christian Church; it is the duty of all British Christians not only to testify against such a traffic as in deadly opposition to the progress of the Gospel, but to press through every available means for its suppression.

That the encouragement which, for the sake of revenue, the Indian Government is now giving to the sale and consumption of intoxicating liquors among its people, is inconsistent alike with native desires and habits, and with that regard to the moral interests and social welfare of the people which should characterise any Government representing this country; that it brings our national profession of Christianity into contempt among the heathen, and, inasmuch as it is under the immediate control of Government, sets an example which can only lower and degrade the moral tone of the Indian Empire; and that every opportunity should be taken by the Church of Christ to oppose its continuance.

That the arrangements under the Cantonments Act, whereby the Indian Government continues to do its utmost to provide what is called "clean sin" for the British soldiery in India, is entirely opposed to the spirit of the decision of the House of Commons which condemned the Contagious Diseases Acts, is an offence to Christianity, degrading to our soldiery, and associated with shameful temptation to Indian women; that any argument from necessity is an argument which strikes at the very existence of an army in these days; and that it is incumbent on every Christian man and woman to do his or her best to bring the whole system to an end.

Further, that this meeting, regarding these three evils as greatly intensified by their association with Government patronage and prestige, earnestly deprecates any such silence in missionary conferences either in this country or in India as would for a moment seem to imply either a division of opinion among Christian missionaries on these vices, or a failure to speak boldly against all that upholds them.

He said: This resolution embraces three great branches: (1) the opium trade; (2) the encouragement given by the Government for the sake of revenue to the sale of strong liquor; and (3) the provision made for licentiousness. It is sometimes said the Christian Church is like a house divided against itself, and that until we present a united testimony we cannot expect our protest to carry weight. I maintain that when on such subjects as these now before us, Christian men and women forget all distinctions and differences, and come together with one purpose and determination, demanding that the will of the Lord Jesus should be done, then there is no government in the world which can resist the demand. So it was in the conflict which ended in the abolition of slavery, and so it shall be now. The struggle may be, and often is, long, but the end is sure.

Now as to these three evils mentioned in the resolution, suppose we were suddenly to bring from far-distant orbs into this world an angel who had heard the terms of our Gospel, who was informed that we professed to accept it, that we claimed to be the witnesses and representatives of Christ; and let that one know also that as a people we had rule in all quarters of the globe. Now tell him also that for the sake of a small gain, a few millions in the year, we had compelled a weaker race to admit what they knew to be ruinous, and implored to be delivered from; further that, for the sake of internal revenue, we prepared and forced on our own people a drink so vile that we forbade its sale to our own soldiers; and yet further, that we have come to such a point that British officers provide for the indulgence of sin, even discussing prices, fixing the very tariff, and this, although what were called sanitary precautions resulted in 503·5 in every thousand of our troops in India (over one-half) suffering from consequent disease. Let such a being learn the effects of arrack, or drink manufactured from hemp in India, and the results of opium in China. Let him be told that we force and foster these things, and then that we still profess to love the Gospel, to witness for God, and long for the coming of Christ—what could he do but cover his face and exclaim "My God, what a lie!"

Now, we may be a feeble folk, but with Christ we are in the majority, and in God's name the righteousness and holiness we seek to advance must prevail. We are resolved that the Christian conscience shall be so aroused that men shall be unable to support and defend officially what they would be ashamed of personally.

We have come to a full determination on these great evils, and we are firmly resolved that those who represent us—whether in the mission-field or in the House of Commons—shall represent us aright in a matter touching so closely the interest and well-being of our nation.

Dr. James L. Maxwell based his argument on the fact that for over fifty years the voice of the Christian Church in China—natives as well as missionaries—has been unanimous and unfaltering in its condemnation of opium. No one who uses opium in any form can be a member of the Church. This testimony has been borne by all branches of the Church, by every class and kind of missionary, and is confirmed and endorsed by all Chinamen. What, then, is to be said of our Government encouraging and fostering a traffic in a drug so unanimously and emphatically condemned?

Mr. George Gillett devoted himself to the last clause of the resolution, maintaining that the C.D. Acts, presumably repealed, were even now virtually in force in India. He deplored utterly the miserable way in which in India the fair name of England is disgraced and dishonoured.

Rev. H. Price Hughes said: I believe that loyalty to Christ demands clear speech at this moment. There are times when to keep silence is the basest treachery against our Lord; times when moral courage is the need of the hour. Paul at Antioch had the moral courage to rebuke Peter; the Pope wanted above all things that Luther should be silent; the Church in the Southern States wanted the Christians of the North silenced on the question of slavery; but in all such epochs God has had his witnesses, who refused to be silent, and I believe we are at such a point this day. Even the House of Commons has admitted that "the opium trade is morally indefensible," and surely the Legislature is not in advance of the Church of Christ.

Some excuse the drink system of India by pointing out that we permit the drink trade at home. But, observe, in this country we interfere, professedly at least, to minimise and control; in India to foster the trade and increase the consumption of a liquor so diabolical that we use every possible means to secure that our own soldiers may not be poisoned by drinking it.

After an appalling description of the working of the Cantonment Acts, Mr. Hugh Price Hughes demanded: Are these disputable questions? Are these points on which Christians may differ, and on which silence is possible? They are not. Our reserve has been misinterpreted. Now we must speak out, and that with no uncertain sound. We may be—though I do not believe we are—a feeble folk, but through God we are mighty, and we shall be heard. We demand that these three deadly evils shall curse our Indian Empire no more.

The resolution given above being put to the meeting, was enthusiastically passed.

Lord Kinnaird and Mr. George Williams, briefly moved and seconded a resolution that means should be taken to ensure the voice of this meeting reaching Members of Parliament, editors, and the Press generally.

Rev. G. F. Pentecost, D.D., concluded with a few vigorous and telling words, the burden of which will be found in our editorial notes.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

A conversazione of friends and subscribers to the City and Central Poor Districts Auxiliary of the London City Mission was held on Friday night at the Mansion House. Mr. Alderman Dimsdale presided, and outlined the story of the mission. There are at present 490 missionaries devoting their time and talents to the work, each of whom in a single month pays visits to 600 families, or 2900 individuals. He attributed the expansion of the mission to the fact of its being entirely non-sectarian.

Mr. F. A. Bevan held that there was never a greater need for this work than at the present time. Notwithstanding all the efforts of the churches, there yet remains an enormous population in the metropolis, which need such work as the City missionaries are able to accomplish. There are hundreds of thousands of the really poor in London, only a very small proportion of whom ever go to places of worship, and there is consequently an ever-increasing population whom the churches with all their efforts cannot reach. A great many more missionaries are wanted, but to have them they must have a great deal more money.

Addresses were also delivered by Canon Scott, Rev. T. Evans (Bethnal Green), and Sir T. F. Buxton.

THE WIMBLEDON CONVENTION.

These gatherings for the promotion of practical holiness were held last week in the Drill Hall, Wimbledon. At the preparatory meeting on Monday evening Rev. F. Paynter opened with an address on Bethel. The other speakers were Revs. W. Darlow Sarjeant and A. Wilkes.

Mr. Robert Wilson, of Carlisle, presided on Tuesday morning, and, having read Rev. ii. 1—7, spoke briefly on the Master's loving message therein conveyed.

On Tuesday evening Revs. Evan Hopkins and H. W. Webb-Peploe were the speakers.

Mr. Webb-Peploe (says The Record) opened by maintaining that there is no doubt that what we require is not so much an enlargement of doctrine as a strict and simple enforcement of duty. The sinner accepted through the blood of Christ might claim perfect provision for every need which might arise in the daily life, and yet he had seen an advertisement as, "Wanted, in a Christian household, a companion. Must be cheerful." It was necessary to put that, and pay threepence a word for it, too! In that graphic manner which Mr. Webb-Peploe knows so well, he gave a word-picture of the life of Abraham when he had entered the land of faith; and from the stumblings and final triumph of the father of the faithful, he pictured the life of the believer who boldly steps out upon the promises of God, the warnings standing out in bold relief. "No compromise with worldliness" was the note which vibrated through all with no uncertain sound, and the picture of Lot, the possible "Mayor of Sodom," unable to influence either neighbours or children in the day of public danger, because though he had "talked religion" he had yet dwelt among the ungodly for worldly gain, was thrown into bright relief by the question, "Would you like to be like Lot?"

Rev. Evan Hopkins spoke on the paralysis and the emancipation of faith, and on Wednesday morning, dwelling upon 2 Chron. xvi. 9, he carefully defined the three aspects of peace, as peace with God through justification in Christ, the peace of God garrisoning the thoughts, and the peace with one another which results from the two former.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Sunday-afternoon Bible studies at Camden-road Association have lately been deeply interesting.

Birmingham Y.M.C.A. held its annual gymnastic display on the 15th. The occasion created great interest.

The recent special mission at Exeter Hall was fruitful in good, and fresh tokens of result appear from time to time.

The Bury Y.M.C.A. Sunday Evening Evangelistic Meeting has been carried on with continued success during the past year.

The members of the Abergavenny Y.M.C.A. are about to build new premises for carrying on the work of the association on a larger scale. Ground has been selected, and plans are in course of preparation.

The Mayor of Madeley (Salop) presided last week over the annual meeting of the local Y.M.C.A. Though the association is small, a weekly prayer meeting with an average attendance of thirty is sustained.

The Grand Rapids district Conference of the Y.M.C.A. was held in Grand Haven, Mich., February 25 to 27. Interesting papers were read, followed by discussions of the subjects presented. The report showed great progress in the work all over the district.

The will of Miss Mary P. Nutt, of Nashua, U.S.A., bequeaths £10,000 for a building for the Young Men's Christian Association of Nashua, £1,000 for the Amherst High School, £1,000 for the First Congregational Society of Nashua, besides other charitable legacies.

The Foreign Missionary Parliament in the Cork Y.M.C.A., established to deepen the interest of the members in work among the heathen, has lately been discussing Uganda and Japan, finding both among the savage and civilised people a great and pressing lack of the Gospel and of the Gospel messengers.

The "Empire State" Convention just held in Saratoga reports 150 live and vigorous associations, 18 college associations, 27 railway branches, and 60 boys branches—all of which have greatly been blessed. For example, 79 associations report 1232 conversions. Dr. Cuyler, Mr. L. D. Wishard, and other well-known speakers addressed the convention.

Mr. L. D. Wishard, the world's secretary of the International Committee, who has just returned to America from a four years' trip among students in Europe, Asia, and Africa, is giving accounts of the young men of the world, which seem like a page from the Book of Acts. His appeals for more men seem irresistible. Urgent help is needed for pioneer Y.M.C.A. secretaries in India, Japan, Brazil and Mexico.

A successful sub-district conference and delegates' meeting was held at York on Wednesday last week, Mr. C. S. Wilson (Sunderland), Mr. H. Steward, and Mr. John Glaisyer (York) presiding at the different meetings. The travelling secretary, Mr. John C. Moor, reports considerable increase in the interest taken in the York Association. The previous week an interesting conference was held at Workington, Cumberland.

At the annual meeting of the Bury Y.M.C.A., Mr. G. Durrans, general secretary, presented the report, which stated that the membership roll stood at 157, and associates 131. Good work was being done by the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Bible Class, the Sunday Evening Gospel Meetings, Praise and Bible Readings, the Model Lodging-house Mission, the Open-air Mission, the Early Sunday Morning Prayer Meetings, etc., and other departments of the institution were also proving successful.

The Bombay Y.M.C.A. held lately its annual meeting. The report stated that the work had been well sustained, and great improvements had been effected. Gospel services had been maintained regularly, and the sailors' services on board ship in the docks have regularly taken place throughout the year. The harbour service has been renewed, and for some weeks also special meetings for sailors were held on Sunday nights at the Apollo Bunder Rooms. The work at the various branches was also reviewed, the Home for young men at the Grant-road Rooms being specially mentioned.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler, addressing lately a great Y.M.C.A. gathering, said: "After forty years of service in this good work, I like it more whenever I see it." He emphasised the need of the pre-eminence the Christian life should have over the mental, the power of personality. "Fight your besetting sins. I imagined I had buried mine more than once and attended their funeral, but they were on their legs the next morning. Keep the heart in close contact with Jesus Christ. Live full of Christ, full of soul-winning, then by-and-by go up home and meet the smile and the Master's 'well done' and everlasting crown."

THE Y.W.C.A.

The report of the Leamington Y.W.C.A. shows good work and genuine advance for the past year.

The Brooklyn Woman's Club recently held its first meeting in its new quarters in the Y.W.C.A. building.

The Y.W.C A. work in San Francisco is reported as vigorously carried on, and valuable in result among the working girls of the city.

The annual meeting of the Waltham Abbey, Essex, Branch was held on Friday, March 17. Hon. Emily Kinnaird gave an inspiriting address, and much interest was evinced. Great things are hoped for from this fresh impetus given, and several plans for the future were laid.

We are surrounded (says an American secretary) by a Roman Catholic community, and we make a rule that any girl who wishes to attend the evening classes must remain for the quarter-hour's closing exercises of praise and prayer. We find that the Catholic girls enjoy the hymns very much.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

OXFORD.

Rev. J. Ossian Davies, of Bournemouth, preached at George-street Congregational Church on Sunday last.

Special sermons were preached last Sunday at New-road Baptist Chapel in aid of the Baptist Missionary Society by Rev. F. Harmon, a missionary from China.

The University sermon on Sunday afternoon was preached by Archdeacon Farrar, the subject being "Messianic Prophecies." Dr. Farrar also addressed in the evening, at the Town Hall, a meeting of the University Total Abstinence Society.

Three well-attended meetings were held last week on behalf of the London City Mission, when Mr. James Caulton, missionary to the East and West India Docks, gave most interesting accounts of his work among the "dockers." There are now nearly 300 dockers who are members of Christian Churches, most of whom were formerly among the worst of characters.

The annual Inter-University Conference of Christian Unions was held here last Saturday and Sunday, when delegates were present from Cambridge and from the Scottish Universities. Reports of Christian work in the Universities were given, and proved very encouraging, but perhaps the most valuable item was the meeting with a discussion on the subject of the Christian's relation to the world in separation and intercourse. Short speeches were delivered by a number of the delegates and the Chairman (Rev. F. J. Chavasse) summed up the discussion in a very telling address. The tone of the whole meeting was high and spiritual, and was full of proof of real work done and promise of still more. The conference closed with a missionary meeting, and the delegates separated with great thankfulness for the conference and with added incentives for future work.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

General Booth is this week visiting Dundee, Glasgow, and other Scotch centres.

A party of 130 boys have left Glasgow for Canada in connection with Mr. Quarrier's Homes.

A good mission work is going on among the 400 navvies employed in making the Forfar and Brechin railway.

Rev. Mr. Ingram, F.C., pastor at Rothiemay, will attain his jubilee next August; all the fifty years have been spent in Rothiemay.

Dr. Black, of Wellington-road Church, Glasgow, has received from his congregation £1,625 on the occasion of the church centenary and the pastor's semi-jubilee.

Dr. Stewart, of Lovedale, in a lecture at Aberdeen, on the partitioning of Africa, said that slavery, though not yet extinct, was doomed. The most likely colonists for Africa, he said, were neither English nor Scotch, but natives of Southern Europe.

A correspondent of the Daily Mail is of opinion that the Free Church, judging by the recent vote in Glasgow Presbytery rejecting Rev. John Robertson's motion that publicans should not be allowed to be elders, is far behind the other Churches on the question of temperance.

Mr. George Robertson, whose death took place at Stonehaven on Monday week, has been a Sunday school teacher since 1836. At the Disruption he threw in his lot with the Free Church, being one of the original elders of Stonehaven congregation. He had been fifty years an elder.

Dr. Pierson's fifth lecture on missions had for its title "The New Signs and Wonders." The lecturer claimed that the miraculous had been as patent in the history of modern missions as at any period of the Church's history. He cited many marked instances of the working of the Divine hands.

Rev. Thomas Stothert, senior F.C. pastor at Lumphanan, died last week. He was the second son of Mr. Stothert, of Cargen, Dumfriesshire, who, on his eldest son going into the Church of Rome, sold his estate, fearing it might fall into the hands of the priests. In 1889 the deceased pastor received a colleague and successor in Mr. Bishop.

The jubilee meetings of the Free Church of Scotland, which are to commence in Edinburgh on May 22, will (says the London correspondent of The Birmingham Daily Post) have as its representatives from the Congregational Union of England and Wales Mr. Spicer, M.P.; Rev. Dr. John Kennedy, Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, and Rev. Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield College, Oxford. These gentlemen will convey to the sister denomination the expression of congratulations and goodwill from the Congregational body. It is interesting to note that Dr. Kennedy, one of the English delegates, was present at the historic Disruption scene in 1843.

IRISH NOTES.

The Saturday happy evenings for the people in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin, are proving a great success.

The late Mrs. Catherine Hughes, of Belfast, has bequeathed the sum of £700 to religious and benevolent objects, for the most part connected with the Presbyterian Church.

Last Monday was observed as a day of humiliation and prayer by the various Methodist congregations throughout Ireland, and Friday was generally observed by all denominations as a day of united prayer for the same object.

The annual meeting of the Jungle Tribes Mission which has been only about two years in operation, was held in Belfast last week. There are already two missionaries and one native helper at work at Dohad, and the prospects of successful labour are most cheering.

Special Gospel services have been held in Maze Presbyterian Church by Rev. W. H. Warnock, of Drumbo, and others; in Mallow Methodist Church, by Rev. Wm. Crawford, of Cork, and others; in Bantry Methodist Church, by Rev. James Kirkwood, Conference Evangelist; at Gortigal Mission Hall, by Miss Morton; at Killarney and Killorglen by Rev. J. O. Park; at Derryheen, by Rev. H. K. Atkinson; and at Ferns Cathedral by Rev. Canon Robinson of Delgany.

On St. Patrick's Day, three prayer-meetings, under the control of the Evangelical Alliance, were held at twelve, four, and eight, in the Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin. The meetings were especially for Ireland, in connection with the present crisis. At the four o'clock meeting the chair was occupied by Mr. J. R. Fowler, in the unavoidable absence of the Archbishop of Dublin. Rev. W. McMullen presided at the night meeting, and amongst those who took part in the prayers were the Moderator of the General Assembly, Rev. W. J. Clarke, D.D., Rev. Dr. Nicholas, Revs. George Hanson, G. R. Wedgewood, Thos. Good, B.D., W. Proctor, J. S. Fletcher, D.D., and J. C. Johnston.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.

The cubicles and dormitories at present provided in the two floors of the large institute of the Theatrical Mission are fully occupied, and it is now proposed to provide twenty further beds. "Oh, it is a love!" said a young actress the other day when when she was shown into her pretty blue bedroom, with texts, Bible, and pictures complete.

The twenty cubicles will involve an initial cost of £10 apiece to fit up and furnish. Those who care for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the young people who constantly wander over the country for the gratification of the pleasure-seeking public, and who are themselves willing to pay a small rent each week, are asked to contribute the sum mentioned, and to give the room such name as they desire.

The committee have arranged for their deputation secretary, Mdlle. Victoire Bertrand, who was formerly on the stage, but has been an earnest Christian for several years, to go to America and in the principal cities between New York and Chicago to advocate the claims of the work, and look after the best interests of young theatricals. She will leave London April 11 (D.V.), and any friends who can grant the meetings should communicate with Macready House, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

On the first Sunday of each month the Goodwood Baptist Endeavour Society has a sunrise prayer meeting at 6.30.

Already there are twenty societies in Japan, most of them being formed within three weeks of Mr. Clarke's visit, while others are about to be formed.

Miss Minnie Sorenson, the first Christian Endeavour missionary sent out from a Victorian Society, wrote: "Tell them everywhere you go that Minnie Sorenson never ceases to thank God that she belonged to an Endeavour Society, and never forgets the consecration night."

The first convention of the Liverpool and District Union of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour was held on Tuesday in the Myrtle-street Baptist Chapel, Liverpool. A feature of the afternoon session was a "free parliament," at which each speaker was allowed only three minutes.

On Wednesday, Jan. 25, the societies in Kapunda and district held a convention. At 6 a.m. a sunrise prayer meeting was held. Over twenty were present, and a very enjoyable time was spent in communion with God. The convention proper lasted throughout the day, and proved profitable and enjoyable.

Christian Endeavour (said Dr. Clark the other day) does not ask young people to come to church and sit still, but to do something for their Saviour. Christ appealed to the heroism of his disciples: Christian Endeavour, in Christ's name, appealed to the heroic in young Christians. The young people thus made several discoveries, one of which was that they were willing to make sacrifices for Christ, and second, that there was joy in doing it. Through the movement of Christian Endeavour, the churches were discovering more fully what a great power existed in their midst in the willing energies of their young people.

The Christian Endeavour Conference at the South London Tabernacle on Thursday last was a success. Dr. Tully, from America, spoke well. There were about 400 at the afternoon meeting, and about 700 in the evening. Many of the friends had never seen each other before, but were soon on the happiest terms. The gatherings were composed of friends from all parts of London. Twenty-seven Christian Endeavour Societies were represented, as also fourteen schools not having a Christian Endeavour Society. The meetings were full of interest to Christian Endeavourers, and were the largest of the kind yet held in London.

MISSION WORK IN WALWORTH.

At Richmond-street, Walworth, is presented a capital illustration of that live and vigorous mission service now going on in many parts of South London amongst the dense masses living without God and without hope. The workers begin with the children, and through them reach the adults. The Sunday evening schools show 450 children in attendance, the morning and afternoon over 500. Throughout the year there have been unmistakable signs that the Word is being blessed by our Heavenly Father, and much of the seed sown has sprung up and brought forth fruit to his honour and glory. The special services which were held in October were particularly blessed to the salvation of souls; and besides many who were then led to confess Christ as their Saviour, many others were influenced for good, as has been proved by their subsequent behaviour. The children's services, Band of Hope, Young Christian Association, Bible reading, pure literature, and other branches go on well and usefully.

The Evangelists' Association, a band of faithful workers, devotes itself to aggressive Gospel and Missionary service. During the summer months the open-air work was well sustained; seventy-eight services were held in the courts and streets surrounding the mission, and a quantity of tracts were also distributed to the passers-by. The lodging-houses of the Borough were also visited. The reports of the work amongst this wandering and destitute class of people are very encouraging. The association is in great need of more young helpers. There is a great work to do in the neighbourhood, and needs a good staff of earnest workers to carry it on. A hearty invitation is extended to young men who are at present not engaged in evangelistic work to help to extend Christ's kingdom in this benighted part of South London. Besides all this, a vigorous branch mission school is carried on in Townsend-street, a poor and needy corner.

An urgent plea is made for enlargement of the mission buildings, as the operations are much cramped by lack of space. It is also stated that any child of God desiring to work in his vineyard would find an opportunity and a warm welcome at Richmond-street Mission. The secretary is Mr. C. G. Barr, 67, Aytoun-road, Brixton, S.W.

The Book World.

Messrs. Newmann & Co., 84, Newman-street, W., have issued a series of Pictorial Bible Illustrations, for educational use, to which Rev. W. Houghton, M.A., has written a volume of Explanatory Notes. The plates, twelve in number, cost £1 8s.; the handbook, which has an independent utility, 2s. 6d.

The First Book of Algebra, for young beginners, with numerous easy examples and answers, is a well-designed and carefully prepared school-book, by Rev. J. G. Easton, M.A. (3s. O. Newmann & Co.) The author has endeavoured to make his work suitable for private students who cannot avail themselves of the assistance of a tutor.

The Time is at Hand; or things which must shortly come to pass. By E. Wardell-Potts. (Elliot Stock.) A cheaper edition has been issued of this book, which is an arrangement of the principal prophecies of Holy Scripture, with introductory and other explanations. The book will prove of special value to such as are beginning the study of prophecy.

Memorial Sermons: Rev. Charles Graham. The friends at Avenue-road have been well advised in publishing the sermons preached in connection with the death of their late beloved and honoured pastor. We feel sure that the testimony borne on such an occasion by Pastors W. Fuller Gooch and James Douglas will be prized by many. Copies (3d.) may be had of C. R. Hicks, 9, Macfarlane-road, Shepherd's Bush, W.

Christ Mystical; or, the Blessed Union of Christ and his Members, by Joseph Hall, D.D., Bishop of Norwich, A.D. 1654, is a valuable addition to the "Devotional Library." (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The publication has a peculiar interest as well as a theological worth, for it has been reprinted from a copy which General Gordon marked, and then presented to Rev. H. Carruthers Wilson, M.A., who contributes a brief introduction.

Bible Readings on the Gospel of John. By Henry Thorne. A useful aid to the study of the "Golden" Gospel. The lesson notes are suggestive and helpful, while the list of authorities will guide many who are anxious to dig deeper in order to unearth the rich treasures of the fourth Gospel. Bible-class teachers cannot fail to find this a serviceable companion in their preparation. (2s. and 2s. 6d. Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

The Key Words of the Bible. By A. T. Pierson, D.D. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) We welcome a new edition of this little book, which is calculated not only to afford much instruction to students, but to stimulate them to independent research in the mine of Holy Scripture. Though there may be diversity of opinion as to the "key words" of some books of the Bible, there can be no doubt about the sound judgment of Dr. Pierson in discriminating different views on Biblical subjects.

Means and Ways; or Practical Methods in Christian Work. By T. D. Roberts, Superintendent of the Boston Industrial Home. (Boston: J. H. Earle, 178, Washington-street.) This little book details practical and proved methods, which started in Boston, and are now spreading in an organised form all over the American Continent. The earlier pages of the book tell how Mr. Roberts, after a wild and reckless youth, part of the time as a jockey, was brought into the liberty of the Gospel, and became engaged in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Churchman's Household Prayers. By the Bishop of Ripon. (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) The underlying idea of this useful and handsome book is that family prayer should be Scriptural, liturgical, varied, and not too lengthy. The daily prayers for one month consist of two or four versicles, a short psalm, and selected collects. Where desired, the daily lesson can be found in the calendar prefixed. There are prayers for special occasions, such as births, deaths, marriages, and journeys. Though specially intended for adherents of the Church of England, the book may be appreciated by heads of families in other churches who find a difficulty in framing their own petitions.

Night and Day. Volume 16 of the organ of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" contains many records of the progress made in the work of rescue among orphan and waif children, besides numerous articles and notes which appeal to the general reader as well as to such as are interested in Dr. Barnardo's special work. The year 1892 has seen expansion and development of the Homes in many directions. A union of boys and girls of eighteen years and under has been established for the benefit of sick and crippled waifs and strays, under the title of the "Young Helpers' League." The League numbers now some 13,000 members or "companions," gathered from all over the civilised world. The profusely illustrated rescue cases appearing under the editor's "Personal Notes" are among the most interesting contents of the volume. (Shaw & Co.)

The Divine Programme of the World's History, by Dr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, is described by the authors in the following brief sentences: "It embraces, though but in outline, the story of the world. And it treats exclusively of fulfilled prophecy. Its object is evidential. The Scriptures contain the Divine programme of the world's history. Programme and history correspond." Many have laboured in this field, but we know of no modern work so comprehensive and reliable as this. Dr. Grattan Guinness and his talented wife desire that the book, which is now in its fourth edition, shall have the largest possible number of readers, and be instrumental in making known their missionary endeavours as well as bearing testimony for the truth of God, so they have arranged to supply it direct from Harley House, Bow, E., for 2s. 6d. (postage 6d. extra), which is less than half the published price. We trust many of our readers will avail themselves of this opportunity of securing a work of substantial value.

Mr. G. Stoneman has in the press a tale of domestic life in China, entitled Aluteh, by Miss Eleanor Streddor. It describes the horrors of the opium traffic, and will be published at one shilling.

In view of the forthcoming International Exhibition at Chicago, Messrs. Cassell & Company have made arrangements for the issue of a popular edition, in monthly parts, of Picturesque America, illustrated with several hundred engravings on wood, and numerous steel plates.

Messrs. Hazell, Watson, & Viney have reprinted in booklet form an article entitled, Bad Lads: A "Brief" for Them, by Alex. Devine, which recently appeared in The Manchester Guardian. The author knows his subject, and makes some excellent suggestions as to dealing with juvenile offenders.

Messrs. Cassell & Company are about to issue in serial form a new work entitled, The Sunday-school Teacher's Bible Manual, which has been prepared by Rev. Robert Hunter, LL.D., F.G.S., and will be illustrated with woodcuts and coloured maps. The first part will be published on the 27th inst.

Rev. Karl Gottlieb Pfander, D.D., C.M.S. missionary from 1841 to 1865, is the latest "Brief Sketch" of C.M.S. workers by Emily Headland. (2d. Nisbet.) It is a deeply interesting story, forming one of a series which should not be overlooked by such as are studying the progress of Gospel work in foreign lands.

Elton Hazelwood. By Frederick George Scott. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) A tragic story, cleverly told, of a life in which great gifts through malign influence were for a time wasted and misused. At the last the hero of the tale died in the act of saving his bitterest enemy. Incidentally we may note a decided leaning on the part of the author to sacramentalism.

Messrs. Virtue & Co., the well-known art publishers, have sent us a beautifully printed Goupil gravure of the three principal figures in H. Schmalz's picture "The Return from Calvary"; it will appear as a full-page illustration, with an article by the artist, in the April number of The Art Journal (price 1s. 6d.). The subject has a special interest at this season, and the execution is most impressive.

Spindles and Oars, by Annie E. Holdsworth (C. H. Kelly) is a diverting chronicle of humble life on the North-east Coast of Scotland. It is written in the "guid braid Scottish tongue," and tells impartially of joy and sorrow, of life and death, and the hundred-and-one humdrum things that are woven into the web of a primitive society. The "totum Kirkie," as the Methodist Chapel is called, because of its frequent change of pastors, figures prominently in the story.

Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons issue a very simple yet vivid record of the history of the Free Church of Scotland, by Professor W. G. Blaikie, entitled, After Fifty Years. Beginning with Pre-Reformation times, Dr. Blaikie traces the religious movements that led up to the famous Disruption, the jubilee of which is soon to be observed. The little work is a model of clear and conscientious church history, and will form a worthy memorial of the author's year of office as Moderator.

Owen Rees: A Story of Welsh Life and Thought. By Eleazer Roberts. (Elliot Stock.) In this artless but well-told tale we have an inside view of social and religious life among the Welsh. It can only be fully appreciated by one who can literally interpret the many Welsh phrases, though in most cases there is a free translation for the benefit of the ignorant Englishman. On the whole, we find that our Cambrian neighbours are wonderfully like other religious communities, very fond of metaphysical and doctrinal discussions, but not always adorning the doctrine discussed.

Theology, an Inductive and a Progressive Science. By Joseph Angus, D.D. (4d. Religious Tract Society.) This is the latest "Present-day Tract," and it is worthy of its sixty-seven excellent predecessors. Avoiding speculation, the author treads safe ground, and is specially careful to urge more attention to Scripture teaching. He says: "If Christians will study the Bible, and resolve to hold what it teaches, neither more nor less, we shall have at once an increase of intelligence and holiness and love." Also, a growth of harmony in the churches, the promotion of which is, in fact, the purpose of the tract.

Indian Wigwams and Northern Camp Fires. By Rev. Egerton R. Young. (C. H. Kelly.) All who have read Mr. Young's fascinating book "By Canoe and Dog Train," will welcome this most entertaining companion volume. Missionary service in the far North West a few years since took the workers into very romantic and adventurous surroundings, so that Mr. Young has found ample material of a deeply instructive sort. We imagine that the railway and the telegraph are rapidly changing the conditions of life and work among the American Indians; all the more valuable will be these veritable photographs of a bygone time. The work is profusely illustrated, and is altogether a unique product of missionary observation and experience.

Friends for Life. By Blanche A. L. Garvack. (Glen and Hall, 329, Strand.) Two young ladies have a habit of freely and unreservedly writing down the outstanding experiences of life, and these experiences, intermingled according to the necessities of the story, make up a singularly attractive and readable book. Other young ladies will envy them the literary gifts that enable them to chronicle commonplaces so charmingly; at the same time the readers of whichever sex will find much to enchain their interest and yield profitable matter for reflection. The prevailing flavour of the book may be deemed extra "Churchy" by those who are not wedded to ecclesiasticism. Military life, too, is invested with a halo of glamour that gives a one-sided view of the profession.

Letters to the Editor.

"BISHOPS, PRIESTS, AND DEACONS."

Sir,—Will you allow me to reply briefly to the letter of Mr. J. E. Mathieson in your issue of March 16? He asks for the authority for assuming that from the Apostles' time there have been three orders of ministers in Christ's Church—bishops, priests, and deacons.

1. I would refer first to Acts vi. 1—6. The men then appointed by the Apostles were called deacons.

2. Next, to Acts xiv. 23, where we are told that Paul and Barnabas ordained elders by the imposition of hands in every city. The word "elder" is the same as "presbyter," which has been shortened to "priest," but has no idea of a sacrificing person, so far, connected with it.

These two classes of the ministry are named together in Phil. i. 1 as "bishops and deacons"; as also in 1 Tim. iii. 1—8.

3. Thirdly, to 1 Tim. 3; v. 1, 19, 22, and Tit. i. 5. Evidently these two men, Timothy and Titus, were placed in a position of authority over other presbyters. In Rev. i. 20 they are called "angels." We call them "bishops," i.e., overseers of presbyters. It is unfortunate that the word "priest" is connected in so many minds with "sacrificing." But this arises from its being also used as the translation of a word (hierens) totally different from "presbyter," and which describes the sacrificing of Christ, and of the ministers of the Levitical law. Of this circumstance some are apt to take advantage.

Yours truly,
Edward Maxwell.

THE LORD'S SUPPER AND SACRAMENTALISM.

Sir,—All our churches, episcopal and non-episcopal, are greatly indebted to you for opening your columns to a discussion of the above subject. The right use of the two sacraments ordained by our blessed Lord and Master, and which are monumental witnesses down the centuries to the truths set forth in the Gospels, is one thing. Their abuse by sacerdotalists and others is quite another matter. The letters by Mr. R. Scott Moncrieff and Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, in your issues of March 2 and 9, are especially valuable, as faithfully witnessing against the sacerdotal usurpations of the Church of Rome and of certain High Anglicans, and also as helping to draw attention to the very important distinction between the inherent power of lay-people, and their exercise of that power; between their Scriptural right to do anything that an ordained minister may do—a right acknowledged by early Christian antiquity—and, on the other hand, their abstinence, out of Christian humility and modesty, and for the sake of order, from interfering with the administaation of the two sacraments, and with other functions for which ministers are especially ordained.

Mr. Holland's expression, "an ecclesiastical phrase"—'consecrate the elements,'" has a very significant and a very wide bearing on the subjects before us. The supposed necessity for the services of a "priest" (or of any other ordained minister) to "consecrate" the bread in the Lord's Supper, is not taught in Holy Scripture, but is an "ecclesiastical" invention. As Mr. Scott Moncrieff truly says:—We "do not find in the New Testament a single passage in support of it."

In the days of early Christian antiquity, laymen baptized and administered the Lord's Supper.

Mr. Holland is not "revolutionary" but a reformer, in supposing that, under certain circumstances and in her own house, a woman might ask a blessing on the memorial supper, and preside over it. Certainly, "orthodox" ecclesiastics, on their own principles, ought not to object to it. "Ritualists" in particular should, as I think, sanction it. For, the Church of Rome allows the validity of lay baptism. She sanctions, in cases of necessity, baptism of dying infants by midwives.

Now, sacerdotalists hold that baptism is the means by which spiritual life is conveyed into the soul. But, the Lord's Supper (or Eucharist) is the means of sustaining or increasing the grace received in baptism. This latter rite then ought not to be regarded by them as of less importance than the other sacrament. If so, the validity of both sacraments by long administration would seem ecclesiastically to follow. In fact, the admissions of ancient writers sanction such acts by laymen as a matter of right and of fitness, whilst urging that, in point of order and of ecclesiastical custom, laymen (cases of necessity excepted) should leave the administration of the sacraments to be performed by the appointed officers of the churches.

As for the koinonia (a partaking in common) at the supper, requiring the "consecration" of the bread and wine by a "priest," or by any minister, neither Holy Scripture nor the Church of England's Prayer Book teach any such necessity. On the contrary, they teach that, we rightly feed on Christ, not by eating and drinking consecrated bread and wine, which is a material act, but that we feed on Him as spirits alone can feed on our absent Lord, who "is in heaven and not here," namely, "in our hearts by faith with thanksgiving." So, feeding on Christ by faith through the free gift and power of the Holy Spirit in each individual, believers partake in common. Such feeding on Christ is needed in every right act of devotion, in private, in the family, and in public worship.

Where is there a single text of Scripture promising any special grace in the use of the Lord's Supper which is not promised in the use of other means of grace, such as the preached Gospel, believing prayer, reading the Holy Bible, and sanctified affliction?

Yours truly,
H. A.

Obituary.

MR. GEORGE C. BARLOW.

The death is announced of Mr. George C. Barlow, a Bolton philanthropist, in his sixty-second year. He was founder of a charitable institution at Bolton known as the Queen-street Mission, which is conducted on lines similar to those of Dr. Barnardo and Dr. Stephenson, many poor children being cared for.

MRS. GIBSON.

We have learned with sorrow of the death of Mrs. Gibson, wife of the late Major Gibson, remembered by many in connection with earnest Gospel work at Holybourne, Hants. Mrs. Gibson was herself a very earnest worker for Christ and her fellows. A daughter is the wife of Dr. H. M. Williamson, Belfast. We hope next week to give some further details.

MRS. SAMUEL SMITH.

Many will sympathise with that well-known Christian philanthropist, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., in the bereavement he has suffered through the death of his dear wife, who passed away on Thursday morning after a long and sore illness. Mrs. Smith, who was the daughter of Rev. John Christie, of Lanarkshire, was married in 1864, and since then has taken a very active part in Christian, temperance, and mission effort, proving herself a willing worker and wise counsellor.

BARON DE BUSSIÈRE.

By the death of Baron Léon de Bussière, a very useful member has been lost to the Protestant community of France. A native of Strasburg, he suffered much by the political misfortunes of France, especially those of his loved Alsace. He was a Christian of humble manner, and full of good works. Since 1873 he had been president of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions, and with a praiseworthy solicitude he attended to the smallest details of the work, and took a personal interest in the labourers in foreign lands.

REV. ROBERT STEPHENSON, B.A.

From Melbourne we hear of the death by drowning of Rev. Robert Stephenson, who commenced his ministry at Durham, and for fifteen years was associated with missionary work in India. Returning to England, he laboured in Buxton, South Shields, and Bradford. In 1876 he accepted the chairmanship of the Madras district. Later he was stationed at Aldershot, Cross Hills, Manchester, and Darlington. Owing to temporary failure of health he resigned the chairmanship of the Whitby and Darlington district, and went out some twelve months ago to Australia. He was a cousin of Rev. Dr. Stephenson, and was held in high esteem in the districts in which he had laboured.

REV. E. M. F. STACK, OF LUDDENDEN FOOT.

We regret to observe the death of this earnest and devoted servant of Christ, which took place on Friday, 3rd inst., at Mona House, Peel, Isle of Man, whither he had gone to recruit his health. A correspondent writes:—"Although he took no prominent part in the affairs of the Church, but laboured in a secluded village in Yorkshire, it will only be known in the Great Day what his loving, gentle example and sweet, sympathising spirit have done in the glorious work of winning souls to Christ. He was the second son of a C.M.S. New Zealand missionary, whose zeal in evangelistic labour was well known. He was also brother of the Rev. Maurice Stack, whose work in the East-end and premature death are still fresh in many memories."

REV. W. J. BAIN, KESWICK.

It is with the deepest regret that we record the sudden call "home" on Monday morning, March 20th, of this most useful and honoured servant of Christ, after a brief illness of five days. Mr. Bain was greatly beloved and appreciated by all who knew him, especially by the Congregational church over which he was pastor. He preached with his usual vigour and clearness on Sunday, March 12, and was energetically arranging for the Congregational Union meetings, to be held at Keswick on the 21st and 22nd, when the Master laid his hand upon him and called him to a higher work. A funeral service was to be held in the Lake-road Congregational church on Wednesday afternoon, presided over by Rev. W. F. Clarkson, after which the remains were conveyed to Wellingborough, the scene of a former pastorate, to be interred to-morrow (Friday).

MRS. JAMES NICHOLSON, OF CEYLON.

We hear with sorrow of the passing away at Brighton on Thursday week, in the fifty-ninth year of her age, of the wife of Rev. J. Nicholson, missionary in South Ceylon. Her end was very sudden. On the preceding Monday she was well, and by Thursday an attack of pneumonia had carried her off. Twenty-three years of her married life were spent with her husband in work in South Ceylon. Her loving character had endeared her to a wide circle of friends. Her life was consecrated to the welfare of the perishing ones in Ceylon. A friend writes of her: "I am overwhelmed with grief at the distressing intelligence. I have always loved her most truly from my early years. The worth of her piety was always evident in her bright, cheerful disposition, and in her life-long devotion to the cause of the Saviour she loved. We were both looking forward to spending many happy hours in each other's society, but God, the allwise Father, knew what was best for her, and has crowned her with the blessed Crown of Life promised to all who are faithful unto death."

MRS. TOMORY.

The wife of Rev. Alexander Tomory, of the Free Church of Scotland Mission to the Jews, recently fell asleep at Constantinople. She was a native of Aberdeen, and joined the mission in 1856, having been appointed teacher of the Female Spanish School at Hasskeui, then under the direction of Rev. Alexander Thomson, M.A. (now Dr. Thomson, agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society) and his colleagues. To that work she consecrated herself with characteristic devotion. In 1859 she was married to Rev. Alexander Tomory, of the German Branch of the Mission in Galata, Constantinople. Into all departments of the work Mrs. Tomory entered with cordial sympathy and zeal, and was soon led, by the necessities of the case to establish a "Home" for the Christian education of destitute Jewish girls, which by the help of friends she had been enabled to carry on until now. She also took an active part in the Ladies' Christian Association originated by the late Rev. Dr. Somerville, and of which "Somerville House," for the special benefit of English governesses, is the best known method of usefulness.

REV. JOHN HARRIS, OF FLOWTON.

This devoted and honoured pastor has been called to his rest. For nearly sixteen years he faithfully discharged his pastoral duties. Thoroughly Evangelical in his principles, he endeavoured to set before his congregation the truths of the Gospel in their entirety, commending also these truths to their attention by a consistent and godly life. He was seldom seen beyond the limits of his parish. Born at Stourbridge in 1813, he was ordained in 1850. For some years he worked in Stepney Causeway, where, through his incessant labours, he almost sacrificed his own life, so that he was compelled to relinquish the charge. He then removed to Buildwas, Shropshire, where he regularly each week visited the navvies then employed in the construction of the Severn Valley Railway. Leaving Buildwas he went to Madeley, in Shropshire, once the rectory of the "saintly Fletcher," where he continued about twelve years. At the end of that period he went to Flowton, where he finished his course as a faithful servant and preacher of the Gospel. He had been in a declining state of health for two years, but until the last few weeks was seen in the pulpit of Flowton Church, as long as his failing strength permitted, and he has gone to his grave amidst the affectionate remembrances of his people.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Whitebrook, near Monmouth, to commence March 21st. For blessing on eight days' mission at Oldfield-road, Rotherhithe, from Sunday, March 26th, to April 2nd, by Mr. F. H. Dawe. For blessing on a week's mission early in April, among the English community, at Neuchâtel, Switzerland. For blessing on the work among the sailors, soldiers, and marines in Cork Harbour. For blessing on the work of the Stratford Mizpah Band in the open-air from Good Friday onwards. That blessing already granted on a mission among young women in Edinburgh may continue and deepen.—PRAISE.—For great outpouring of the Holy Spirit on a special mission to the women of Edinburgh, and for all the souls who have been led from darkness into light.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Miss Elsa Borg, of Stockholm.

A correspondent makes the valuable suggestion that all young people's societies, before breaking up their winter gatherings, should make a contribution towards giving a short summer holiday to the poorer children in their locality.

We continue to receive pathetic appeals from our readers and our personal friends in Ireland. We have already said that we cannot open our columns to the discussion of the Bill at present before Parliament; but, withholding our opinion concerning it, we are justified in expressing our conviction that to hurry into law any measure, on any subject whatsoever, against which a feeling intensely antagonistic and widely spread is daily increasing, would be unwise, impolitic, and unsafe. If this Bill is righteous and necessary it can afford to wait until its merits have been made manifest. It is wise to make haste slowly; a year would be well spent in expounding its nature, and allaying the panic which, in its present form, it has excited.

The salutation with which Philip Henry, father of Matthew Henry, used to greet his family on Sunday morning was: "The Lord is risen indeed." The return of Easter gives emphasis to the truth which is the foundation of our hope. No resurrection, no Gospel. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that are asleep." The reason for confidence toward God is that He who died has been raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, and is alive again for evermore. The Sin-Bearer is the accepted Elder Brother, who is not shamed to call us brethren. In the might of his life his people live, and his truth advances from age to age.

In an admirable letter to The Times, Lord Radstock deals with a statement by the Bishop of Salisbury, in the House of Lords, that "there are as many sects as days in the year." He points out that under the multiplicity of designations that Christians have chosen for themselves there is a remarkable unity of faith, and that many believers are getting to care less and less for denominational names. With a little more grace and patience all sections of the one Church might harmoniously co-operate in the common cause.

Respecting the recent visit of the Princess of Wales to the Pope, The Times, March 24, 1893, reports as follows:—

Rome, March 23rd.—The Princess of Wales had an audience of the Pope this morning. Her Royal Highness was accompanied by the Duke of York and the two Princesses, and attended by Sir Charles Cust, General Ellis (Equerry to the Prince of Wales), Captain Milne, of the Osborne, and Miss Knollys. The Royal party drove in two closed landaus to the Vatican, arriving there at a quarter past ten. The ladies wore black dresses with long veils; and the gentlemen were also attired in black. The Pope received their Royal Highnesses with the ceremonial known as that of Private Audiences.

The interview was of a very cordial character. The Pope presented each of his visitors with a portrait of himself, the photographs varying in size according to the rank of the recipient. That presented to the Princess of Wales bore the Pope's autograph. His Holiness made inquiries as to the health of the British and Danish Royal Families, and begged the Princess to convey his welcome to Queen Victoria on the occasion of Her Majesty's visit to Florence, and to thank her for her telegram of congratulation on his episcopal jubilee.

The Princess and her suite left the Vatican at a quarter past eleven, after having paid a visit to Cardinal Rampolla, the Pontifical Secretary of State.

The Daily News of the same date further reports that, on leaving, the Royal ladies, as well as the ladies and gentlemen in attendance, kissed the hand of his Holiness.

Is not this an infringement of the spirit of the Act declaring the rights and liberties of the subject, and settling the succession of the Crown (1689, 1 W. & M., Sess. 2, cap. 2, sec. 9 and 8, commonly called the Bill of Rights), which runs as follows:—

And whereas it hath been found by experience that it is inconsistent with the safety and welfare of this Protestant kingdom to be governed by a Popish prince, or by any king or queen marrying a Papist, the said Lords spiritual and temporal and Commons do further pray that it may be enacted that all and every person or persons that is, are, or shall be reconciled to, or shall hold communion with the See or Church of Rome, or shall profess the Popish religion, or shall marry a Papist, shall be excluded, and be for ever incapable to inherit, possess, or enjoy the Crown and Government of this realm and Ireland and the dominions thereunto belonging, or any part of the same, or to have, use, or exercise any royal power, authority, or jurisdiction within the same; and in all and every such case or cases the people of these realms shall be and are hereby absolved of their allegiance, and the said Crown and Government shall from time to time descend to and be enjoyed by such person or persons, being Protestants, as should have inherited and enjoyed the same in case the person or persons so reconciled, holding communion, or professing, or marrying as aforesaid, were naturally dead.

And do not acts of this nature directly encourage the efforts of the Romish party in the House of Commons in their attempts to obtain the repeal of these statutes?

It may be that Rome must really get her cruel teeth into this generation before the conviction is forced home that our fathers who, as faithful witnesses of Christ, died at the stake, and "left unstained what there they found, freedom to worship God," were anything more than fanatics and fools.

There is matter for serious reflection in the view of the situation presented by The Spectator, and given a far wider circulation by its quotation in The Westminster Gazette, which says:—

The Spectator has an article on "Some Causes of Nonconformist Decline," and one of these is, it seems, the effect of criticism in dissolving away the old idea of Biblical authority. "We are taught to read the Book with other, if not with larger, eyes; we are shown that, while its spirit is as divine as ever, its letter is no more exempt from errors and contradictions than other ancient literature. As this teaching filters down to the lower levels of the religious public; it becomes a painfully searching problem for multitudes of Evangelicals, what new basis or buttress they can find for their trembling faith. Common men and women demand some plain, practical certainty to rest on. The infallible Book was the dogma with which the Reformers could oppose the infallible Church. The Puritan fathers built their house on the literary inerrancy of the sacred volume, and now that rock is crumbling into sand. There are many signs already that, as modern Evangelicals wake up to find that they can no longer rely on their Bibles with the old familiar security, they will gradually, half-unconsciously, gravitate towards some form of Christianity which claims historic descent and rests on visible institutions. When people generally mistrust their own watches, they begin to find a new value in the town clock—that is, unless they give up trying to be punctual, in sheer despair. And it becomes plainer every day that out of these critical discussions, while the organised churches stand to gain, the unorganised churches stand to lose more certainly still."

The article, as a whole, does not exhibit that absorbing regard for Reformation principles which readers of the extract might expect; nor does the writer by any means set forth the only ground on which churches, Evangelical by tradition and profession, stand to lose. While Popish Paganism is multiplying, the Evangelical portion of the Church of England have an excellent opportunity of putting Christ above Churchism, and recognising all those who are true to Him, though not "Churchmen," as members of the one body, and nearer and dearer than those who are only united to them by churchly bonds. But they make little movement in this direction.

Depreciation of Scripture, which The Spectator regards as a cause of the decline of a Nonconformity with which it has no sympathy, we look upon as the cause of decay and death in any Evangelical community that it may affect. The so-called Free Churches, if true to Christ, might feed hungering souls who are being filled with husks; but some are much engaged in producing a new society out of old Adam—a kind of spiritual shoddy; others, like Jehoiakim, in cutting out and burning the leaves of the Book, and at the same time cutting the ground from under their own feet. The "Brethren" who have been entrusted with many precious things, might have won multitudes to the faith that worketh by love, but they have been too busy in disputing with one another and criticising everybody else.

In the last issue of The Review of the Churches, Archdeacon Farrar refers to the tyranny of High-Churchism in the following terms:—

By a sort of vaunting convention, which has already deceived the ignorant, no one is supposed to do any work but Ritualists. The work of others, though it may be ten times wider and sounder, is ignored, and every merit they possess is either derided or passed over in a conspiracy of silence. The whole cause of the Reformation is going by default, and if the alienated laity who have been driven into indifference by the Romish innovations and Romish doctrines forced upon them without any voice of theirs in the matter, do not awake in time and assert their rights as sharers in the common and sole priesthood of all Christians, they will awake too late and find themselves nominal members of a Church which has become widely Popish in all but name—a Church in which catholicity is every day being made more and more synonymous with stark Romanism, and in which the once honoured name of Protestant is overwhelmed with calumny and insult.

Who that has watched recent events will not acknowledge the truth of these weighty words? Ritualism is obviously having its day. The latest indication of its progress is the appointment of Rev. John Sheepshanks, of Liverpool, a pronounced High Churchman, to succeed Dr. Pelham, who is a well-known Evangelical, as Bishop of Norwich.

Some sweeping statements having been made as to the shipment to Canada by philanthropists of "cockney sneaks, thieves, and pickpockets," a report has been sent to the Ontario Government by Mr. Massie, Warden of the Central Prison of Toronto, declaring that "of 25,000 children brought to Canada by Miss Macpherson, Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Quarrier, and others, from Great Britain, only three per cent. had lapsed into crime." This is a remarkable record, and speaks volumes for the care bestowed in the training and supervision of these young emigrants.

The final thanksgiving meetings in connection with the Baptist Missionary Centenary took place last week at Northampton. We trust they will prove influential beyond appearance, by inspiring new workers to enter the great harvest field. Mr. A. H. Baynes was able to report satisfactorily of the special Centenary Fund, the cash and promises amounting to £110,800. Dr. Swanson spoke with enthusiasm of native church progress in China; and Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson showed that a hundred years' experience has taught us the world's needs, and made known the conditions of work. Rev. J. Bailey, of Sheffield, who visited the West Indies as a deputation from the society, told a wonderful story. In the course of his address, he said;—

Just as the writer of the Apocalypse saw the names of the Apostles written on the foundations of the heavenly Jerusalem—so, I believe, could we look to-day with the insight of a seer into the condition and future prospects of the people of Jamaica, we should see inscribed upon the foundations of all their material and religious prosperity such names as Burchell, Knibb, Dendy, and Philippo! What is true of Jamaica is equally true of our mission in the Bahamas and Turks Islands. We landed on some small out-of-the-way places where there are no white people to be found, where the soil is miserably sparse, and the lot of the inhabitants seemed as hard and bare as the rocks that cropped up everywhere ... They know nothing of what is going on in the broad busy world beyond the sea, but they do know that Christ has come to be their Saviour, and that the Baptist Missionary Society has sent them the truest, dearest friends they have ever had.

We are glad to know that the directors of the London Missionary Society have passed a resolution expressing their deep regret at the action of the Bombay Decennial Conference with reference to the three great moral evils which British rule has inflicted on the East. A copy of the resolution will be received at all the stations of the society. Thus good again is coming out of evil; for the present agitation will serve to strengthen and keep in active operation the moral sentiment of all the home churches on sins which have their safest retreat in silence, their surest defence in ignorance.

The Behring Sea Arbitral Tribunal has been received in Paris by President Carnot with a distinction worthy of the Government which it represents, of the important work it has to do, and of the country in which its sittings are to be held. All lovers of peace must earnestly desire that its decisions may remove all causes of misunderstanding between Great Britain and the United States, and may afford one more example to the world of the wisdom of appealing to justice and reason rather than to the sword.

Vigilance work is very thankless, but very important, service rendered to society. Mr. W. A. Coote, the fearless secretary of the National Vigilance Association, recently appeared before a licensing bench, and showed cause against the granting of a licence to a noted, not to say notorious, West End restaurant. Impartial judges, we think, would have thought that Mr. Coote had sufficiently proved the nature of the establishment in harbouring objectionable characters, but the bench decided otherwise, and renewed the license, with a word of caution to the proprietor. The Vigilance Association is persevering splendidly in its efforts to lessen the temptations to vice in public places, and it deserves unstinted support.

Prayer for Ireland.

Christians see differently on the great question of the day for Great Britain and Ireland; and, therefore, all cannot unite in prayer that a certain measure may or may not become law. Still, can we not raise the subject to a higher level than personal opinion?

In former days kings and all that are in high place were in general idolaters, yet the Apostle Paul enjoined that prayers, intercessions, and thanksgivings should be made for them. God raises up men of a ruling character, and entrusts them with a measure of his authority, and this in the State and in the Church. Their position is that of God's ministers. If in the former, they are his servants in civil affairs; and if in the latter, they are his servants in religious affairs. They ought to realise such position, to exercise their functions for his glory and in his fear. The relationship of Master and servant, and of Lord and subordinate lordship, involves this—that the former will supply the latter with what is needful. In the exercise of such delegated authority, just as God acts, so should they—they are not to be a terror to the good, but to the evil. The good ought indeed to receive praise of the same—some consideration and honour. God designs that rulers should be his ministers for good to the good. On the other hand, but on the same principles, rulers are bound to be a terror to evil-doers.

Can there, then, be union in prayer in the existing complexity? Yes, certainly, if our minds are impregnated with the Scriptural doctrines on the subject. All Christians can unite in prayer that the rulers of the nation may, in the power of the Holy Spirit, realise, or realise more powerfully, that they are in the position of God's servants; that they may have a continual supply of the needed wisdom which cometh down from above for the fulfilment of their divinely-appointed duties; that they may be kept from misconceiving their functions; that they may perceive any laws that are unrighteous; and that such change therein, or such further laws, may be made as shall be in accordance with the will of the King of kings and Lord of lords. In such prayer as this all Christians may surely be of one accord; and to such prayer your readers are respectfully and affectionately invited.

A "Friend."

We understand that the suggestion has been made by some of the ministers of Belfast, that Thursday, April 6, the day of the second-reading debate on the Home Rule Bill, should be observed as a day of prayer; business to be suspended, mills closed, and the people to assemble in the various churches. It is hoped that their suggestions may not only be adopted in Belfast, but followed in other places throughout the Kingdom.

The Book of the Kingdom.—8.

DISPENSATIONS NOT ETERNAL.—I.

It was a great gain to restore the Jew to his place in prophecy, and to cease awarding all the curses to the scattered nation, and appropriating all the blessings to the Church. But there is a danger of overstating every case, and of exaggerating the position of the elect nation, as previously it had been depreciated,

For Adam is more than Abraham. The race is wider than the nation. Man is broader than Israel. As the less is included in the greater, so Jewish story is included in human history. The scaffolding is temporary, but the building is permanent. Schooltime ceases, but learning remains. Students occupy the first form or the sixth, but when they have left school these distinctions cease. Dispensations teach their lessons, and vanish in the dispensation of the fulness of times, when God gathers together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, IN HIM.

The gifts and calling of God are without repentance. He called Abram out of Ur of the Chaldees, and promised that in him and in his seed should all the families of the earth be blessed. But the separation of the family of Abraham, and of the nation which descended from it, was not an end, but a means to an end. Not that they might be blessed and all the rest of mankind be rejected, but that through them all other nations might be gathered under the wings of God.

The Jews, however, thought that they were the elect race, not to be the servants of all but to be the lords of all. The principle of true royalty—

Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be great among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many—

was quite foreign to their thoughts. John the Baptist had concluded his testimony by declaring Jesus to be the Lamb of God that beareth away the sin of the world. Jesus had taught Nathanael that his relation to the race as Son of Man was a greater thing than his relation to the nation as King of Israel. He had taught Nicodemus that while the typical serpent in the wilderness was lifted up for bitten Israelites, the Antitype, the Son of Man, must be lifted up on behalf of the whole race, for God so loved the World that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever of all mankind believes in Him should have eternal life. Yet after his death and resurrection and ascension, it needed a special revelation to teach Peter, the leading Apostle, that the Gentiles were not without the pale of God's salvation. When Paul told the Jews at Jerusalem that Jesus had commissioned him to the Gentiles, they cast dust into the air and cried, "Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that he should live."

The purpose of these papers has been to show that the main subject of the Bible is the restoration to God, by man in Christ Jesus, of the Kingdom which man in Adam had delivered to Satan, when he believed and obeyed the liar and disbelieved and rejected God. For, strange to say, many of those who have paid most attention to dispensational aspects of Divine truth have regarded the Kingdom as restricted to the Jew, and have thought that the Gospel of the Kingdom—the good tidings of the reign of God—is not the present testimony; is something altogether different from the Gospel of the grace of God; and that both are different from the Everlasting Gospel.

It has been our endeavour to show that these and all other definitions are various aspects of the same Gospel, just as in one chapter (Acts viii.) the testimony is described under seven different terms. The scattered Church went everywhere (1) preaching the Word. Philip went down to Samaria and (2) preached Christ unto them. They believed Philip (3) preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. The apostles at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received (4) the word of God, and sent Peter and John, who, when they had testified and (5) preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and (6) preached the Gospel to many villages of the Samaritans. But Philip was sent south, and, joining himself to the eunuch, (7) preached unto him Jesus. Then Philip, being caught away (8, same as 6), preached the Gospel to all the cities, till he came to Cesarea. We all know that these various expressions describe one and the self-same Gospel, and we all perceive the wisdom which, as in a seven-coloured rainbow, thus reveals the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of the Christ.

But the one inclusive definition which comprehends all the rest is the Gospel of the Kingdom. For "the word" is the word of the Kingdom (Matt. xiii. 19); "Christ" is the anointed King; "the word of God" is the word of the Kingdom of God; "the word of the Lord" is the word of Jesus, the Christ, as Lord of all, i.e., as King; "Jesus" is the Son of God and King of Israel, and because Jesus is the Son of man, and Israel is the kingly race, therefore Jesus is the Ruler of the kings of the earth; though the Kingdom is not yet made manifest, as it will be when He takes his great power and reigns.

If the seven terms of Acts viii. all describe one Gospel, certainly this is also true of the seven terms of Acts xx. 17—27: (1) Everything that was profitable; (2) repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ; (3) the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus; (4) the Gospel of the grace of God; (5) the Kingdom of God; (6) all the counsel of God; (7) the word of his grace. Each is a special aspect of the good tidings of the reign of God; the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God. And this is the eternal Gospel of eternal life to everyone whosoever believeth in the Son of man, God's only begotten Son, lifted up by men upon the cross, lifted up by the exceeding greatness of God's power to the right hand of the Majesty on high. M.

THE SAINTS, THE CHERUBIM.

In the Holy of Holies was placed a mercy-seat all of beaten gold, the throne of grace, the throne of love. Out of this throne, of one piece with it, rose up two cherubim of beaten gold. They stretched forth their wings, they set their faces one to the other. They together looked down to the mercy-seat. This is the heavenly figure of your Christ, and you, O ye children of love, in your love-union, and spiritual communion. God in Christ, Christ in the glory of the Father, is the golden mercy-seat, the throne of love. The saints are the cherubim, the children of love rising up from the throne of love, of one piece of gold, of one love-spirit with it. With their faces, their divine part, they look one to another, and maintain a mutual society. They spread their hearts, their spiritual understandings, their spiritual affections, to each other, and so meet, so embrace. With united spirits they look down to the throne of love in the midst of them, out of which they grow up together.

O saints, O holy souls, be rooted in love, grow up out of this throne of love, shine forth with faces of love, spread forth wings of love. For God is love.—Peter Sterry: The Rise, Race, and Royalty of the Kingdom of God in the Soul of Man.

Practical Praying.

By Rev. A. C. DIXON, Brooklyn.

Elijah was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit (James v. 17).

Some think prayer is a mere channel for thanksgiving and praise. Others regard it as a good soul exercise by which we receive a reflex benefit. Many count it a virtuous performance by which we commend ourselves to God and lay up a store of goodness. Others, still, look upon prayer as a means of getting something from God, and prayer that does not consist altogether in begging they count for nothing. Put the first two and the last of these misconceptions into one, and we have perfect practical praying. Prayer is a good channel for thanksgiving; it is a good soul exercise by which we are profited, and it certainly is a means of getting from God what we need. The model prayer Jesus taught his disciples begins with adoration and ends with praise, while the six sentences which lie between are petitions. And thus all our petitions should be sent before God enclosed in the beautiful framework of adoration and praise. Such prayers are truly "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

We learn from the experience of Elijah three things about prayer:

1. God answers definite praying. Elijah prayed for drought and it rained not for three years and a-half. Then he prayed for rain, and the rain came. His purpose was to reform Israel; his motive was the glory of God. Drought and rain were both means to these ends. When Moses besought God to remove the frogs, we are told that God "did according to the word of Moses." God gladly obeys those who are willing to obey Him. Only such can He afford to trust with power. Christ delighted in granting definite requests. The blind man who cried for mercy was required to define more precisely his want before his prayer was answered. The woman of Syro-Phœnicia did not deal in glittering generalities. What she wanted was the healing of her daughter, and she got just that thing.

Much of our praying is like Christmas guns: shot into the air to hear their noise, aiming at nothing. We generalise in our requests and God generalises his answers. We receive blessings in general and nothing in particular, because we pray for things in general and nothing in particular.

2. God answers definite praying for things that human agencies cannot bring about. Elijah had no power to make it rain, or even to assist in making it. All the universities of Egypt and Babylon would have laughed at his praying. They would have informed him that only cause could produce effect, while they refused to count the Almighty among the causes. To them rain in answer to prayer was unscientific, and hence could not be. Elijah, and those who like him trust the great First Cause, are not anxious to see the links between Him and the result desired. God can make the rain. Just how he does not stop to inquire. Joseph said it was not in him to interpret the king's dream, and yet he did it. Daniel knew no natural law by which he could learn the dream the king had forgotten, but he trusted God for it, and it came.

Paul and Silas with their feet in the stocks were helpless, and yet God in answer to their prayer and praise shook open the iron doors and let them out. Elijah liked difficulties. See him on Mount Carmel! To pray the fire out of heaven is hard enough, to be sure. We should doubtless have been very careful to keep the wood dry, and, if possible, would have put dried flesh on the wood that the fire might easily consume it. But not he. "Pour the barrels of water upon it." "Pour other barrels." "Pour others still." The wood and sacrifice are soaking wet and the trenches about the altar are full of water; and now that the difficulties in the way are as great as possible, he looks up to God and expects the impossible. "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" Is He not with us to-day? Then why should we be appalled by difficulties? "Trust in Him, and He shall bring it to pass."

There are times when instruments and agents are useless. We can only stand still, and see the salvation of God. Such extremities are God's opportunities. In this bustling age we seek opportunities for work. We would like to do all, and then thank God for the honour conferred. And our little activities may push God aside. Verily we have our reward. The results are just what our activities left to themselves will produce. But they are paltry and mean compared with what God would do, if we would only by our faith let him.

In Rubens' painting of the Triumph of Christianity the chariot is drawn by two angelic forms and pushed by two children, followed by Motherhood, Manhood, and Civilisation, in their highest forms. We are weak, because we too often put the natural in the front. It is only the supernatural that can do the impossible. The two children in the picture seem to be as strong as the angels, for at the touch of their little hands the chariot is moving forward. And the men of childlike faith are the men of real power. Our strength, at its best, is but the child's touch. But if we have the child's faith the chariot will move on, for God leads, and, in leading, He draws.

3. God answers definite prayer by a lonely, obscure, and imperfect man. Elijah stood alone. There is power in united prayer, but let us never forget that the promise is also to be individual. Elijah was an obscure man. His home was in a little village, and his family were not prominent enough to deserve mention. And he was intensely human. He could be melancholy and wish to die, like any other tired toiler. "A man subject to like passions as we are." We are under the illusion that the miracle-workers of the Bible were extraordinary men. Not so. They were common men who believed in an extraordinary God. The wonders they did were miracles of grace. Then may I dare to be an Elijah? No. Be yourself and trust Elijah's God. Dare to stand before any Ahab and speak God's truth. Fear not all the plotting Jezebels of earth. Don't sigh for death under some juniper tree. God has something better in store for you. When the time comes, He will send his chariot. It is kind of Him not to answer our prayers of despondency. It is just like Him to answer our prayers of faith. Then let us "have faith in God."

THE SABBATH AND LIBERTY.—Rev. Joseph Cook's 233rd Boston lecture was on "What is Sunday worth to liberty?" He spoke earnestly on the value of Sunday-keeping by the masses. They can become conservators of liberty only by Sunday-keeping training; only in keeping Sunday can conscientiousness be cultivated. A sense of religion can be maintained if once a week holy convocations are held. The lecturer finally enforced the need of a Sunday to protect the poor.

Joshua and the Land of Promise.

By REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road.

EVENSONG.—Joshua xxiv.

Once more the veteran leader, who was soldier, judge, statesman, and prophet combined, desired to see his people face to face. His meeting with their representatives was therefore followed, almost immediately, by a gathering of all the tribes of Israel to Shechem, where years before they had stood together in solemn convocation, whilst from the heights of Ebal and Gerizim had rolled the Amens of the people in answer to the blessing and the curse.

The stones on which the law had been written were still clearly in evidence, and the whole scene must have come vividly back to the memory of the majority of those assembled. But from that moment the valley would be associated specially with this touching farewell scene, in which Joshua uttered his last exhortations and appeals.

JOSHUA'S NARRATIVE.

He told again the wonderful story of Israel's past, beginning where God began first with their fathers, in their native land beyond the Euphrates, in the dim dawn of history. What a far-down look was that to Terah, the father of Abraham and the father of Nachor! The reference was possibly intended to give him the opportunity of emphasising the fact that there the family was as much addicted to idolatry as any of the peoples around. This sin was, so to speak, indigenous to the soil of Israel, a weed which would crop up unless the utmost care was exercised against it. Look, O Israel, to the hole of the pit whence ye were hewn; ye were not originally one whit better than others. God did not choose you for any distinguishing trait of monotheistic fervour, but because of his sovereign grace. This alone has made you to differ. Ye were dead in trespasses and sins, but in his mercy, for his great love wherewith He loved you, He chose you for his own.

Isaac, Jacob, Esau — words which made the deepest chords vibrate in his hearers' hearts—were successively recalled in the deep hush that had fallen on the vast assembly. Then the speaker, acting as the spokesman of Jehovah, reached more familiar ground, as he recalled names and events which had played a part in his own wonderful career—the mission of the two brethren, the plagues of Egypt, the cry and deliverance of the Red Sea, the wilderness, Balak son of Zippor, and Balaam son of Beor, the passage of the Jordan, the fall of Jericho, the overthrow of the seven nations of Canaan, the possession of their land.

But throughout the story, the entire stress is laid on the grace of God. I took; I gave; I sent; I brought; I destroyed; I gave; I delivered. Not a mention is made of Israel's mighty men. All is attributed to the ultimate source of nature, history, and grace, the supreme will of God. We cannot get beyond that. However many links we interpose between ourselves and the causes of things, ultimately we are shut up to acknowledge the determining counsel and foreknowledge of God. The Christian cannot improve on the creed once formulated by the great heathen monarch: "He doeth according to his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand, or say unto Him, What doest Thou?"

There is nothing more salutary than to stand on the eminence of the years in life's golden evening and review the way by which our God has led us. The far-away home, where faces glimmer out in the daybreak of life's morning, on which we shall not look again till the veil of eternity rends; the hard bondage of early life; the many straits and deliverances; the guiding cloud of the pilgrimage; the daily provision for incessant needs; the human love; the goodness and mercy which have followed all our days. Ah me! what a romance lies behind the meanest life, of sin and forgiveness, of provocation and pity, of grace and gift! Not one of us that shall not hold his own history to be the most wonderful of all, as we exchange experiences in that land which we shall not get by our own sword or bow, dwelling in mansions we did not build, eating of vineyards and oliveyards we did not plant.

JOSHUA'S APPEAL.

It would appear that the people largely maintained the worship of household gods, like those which Rachel stole from Laban. This practice was probably resorted to by stealth. But the germs of evil were only awaiting favourable conditions to manifest themselves, and Joshua had every reason to dread the further development of the insidious evil. The human heart is always so willing to substitute the material for the spiritual, and where the idol takes the place of God there is no longer an antagonistic force left in our nature strong enough to counteract the workings of human passion. Thus in every nation under heaven idolatry has sooner or later led to impurity.

Therefore, with marked emphasis, Joshua appealed to the people to put away the gods which Terah and others of their ancestors had served beyond the river, and those which they had vainly invoked in the slave-huts of Egypt. He did this first at the close of his address (14), and again just before the memorable interview closed (23).

The work of idol-renunciation runs parallel with our deepest experiences in the blessed life. Even St. John at the close of his first Epistle bids his disciples keep themselves from idols. In fact, it is only as the clearer light of heaven falls upon us, that we come to see the true nature of many things, which we had counted innocent, and hugged as dearer than life. We may choose death once for all in some solemn hour of consecration, but we only gradually come to learn all that it involves. Self is our greatest idol, and it is so ubiquitous, so insidious, so protean. Scotched in one place, it breaks out in another. It clings and twines about things which are innocent enough in themselves, but which it transforms into idols, and then they have to be put away. Our Isaacs! our Rachels! our right hands!

Our only hope is to be strong in our choice of God. The negative destruction of self is unsatisfactory. We must deliberately set ourselves towards God. Our will must crown Him. Our soul must make Him first. Our life must be subdued to the least syllable of his command. If thou wouldst do this, peace would come to thee. Anything is better than half-heartedness. Better go back to the vanities of the world, to the idolatries of wealth or pleasure or human pride, than hover doubtfully and hesitatingly on the brink of a great life. Probably less harm is done to a man's moral nature by a reckless course of sin, to which his whole nature is yielded, than by playing with God's claims upon his entire devotion. "I would thou wert cold or hot." It was a magnificent peroration: "If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were beyond the river, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell; but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

THE PEOPLE'S FIRST REPLY.

They professed that they had no desire to forsake Jehovah and serve other gods. They freely acknowledged that they owed everything to Him from the exodus to the possession of Canaan. They also expressed their determination to serve the Lord.

JOSHUA'S ANSWER.

Whether they uttered all these vows in thunderous unison, or by the mouth of chosen representatives, or whether the historian gathered up thus the consensus of their feeling, as it passed from lip to lip, we cannot tell. But surely Joshua detected some traces of insincerity in their voice. Perhaps he felt the unreality of their professions because they gave no sign of abandoning their strange gods. Had he hoped for a repetition of the scene that had taken place on that very spot so many years before, when, at the challenge of Jacob, his household gave unto him all the strange gods which were in their hands, and the rings which were in their ears, and Jacob hid them beneath the oak which was by Shechem? Did he expect that the leaders of the people would first bring out their contributions to a pile similar to that which, in Christian centuries, rose in the great square of Florence, at the summons of Savonarola?

But there was no such response. The people contented themselves with their affirmations, but made no sacrifices. There was no holocaust, and Joshua was deeply conscious of the unreality of profession that went no deeper than words. This, said he in effect, is no way to serve the Lord. He is a holy God; He is a jealous God. He will search out these secret sins of yours, He will not be content with the service of the lip, He will not pass over transgression and sin, even though they be hidden in the recesses of your tents and the depths of your hearts. Notwithstanding all the good that He has done to you, He will not pass over the declensions and backslidings of his people.

THE PEOPLE'S SECOND REPLY.

They were full of self-confidence, and vowed, come what might, that they would serve the Lord. There was the energy of their own self-will, the strength of their own resolve, the persistent insistance on their choice of Jehovah. Standing there with Joshua they forgot the many failures of the past, mocked at his fears, derided his suggestions of possible declension, and cried, "Nay, but we will serve the Lord."

What a commentary on those proud words is given by the Book of Judges! Serve the Lord! The very first sentence which follows the record of Joshua's death in that book, tells us that "the children of Israel did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, and served the Baalim, and they forsook Jehovah, the God of their fathers." And this record recurs with melancholy monotony on nearly every page. We are reminded of that other scene when beneath Sinai, burning with fire, the people pledged themselves to do all that the Lord had spoken, and within six weeks were worshipping Him under the form of a calf, with lascivious dance.

In point of fact, resolution, however good and however strongly expressed, is not sufficient to carry us forward into a life of obedience. Our moral nature has become so weakened by repeated failure that it is not able to resist the appeals of sense. To will is present with us, but how to perform that which is good we find not. No one can look thoughtfully into the workings of his own nature without realising the terrible paralysis which has befallen it. The will sits amid the vassals of the inner realm, issuing commands which it is not able to enforce, like a puppet-king in the midst of mighty chiefs who dispute his authority.

Thus it is that so often young hearts are embittered with disappointment, because in some high moment of resolve they determine that all life shall be new, inspired by constant resolve, and climbing with undeviating purpose the steeps of purity and devotion; but when they descend to the plain of commonplace, to the routine of daily life, they discover that the impetus has died away, and that the power to execute the high purpose of the soul is gone. No; consecration is only possible when it is conceived, prosecuted, and consummated in power not our own, and in the energy of the Holy Spirit.

JOSHUA'S SECOND ANSWER.

"Ye are witnesses," he said, "against yourselves, that ye have chosen the Lord to serve Him." In other words, he appealed to them on the ground of their own asseverations, and sought to bind them to the vows they had made. Did he not intend to probe them deeper, to make them realise the solemnity of the occasion, to compel them to face the greatness of the responsibility they had assumed? By the magnitude of the interests involved, by the mercies and deliverances of God, by the memory of their ancestors, by the great days of Abraham and Isaac, by their own solemn protestations, he urged them to be true.

THE PEOPLE'S THIRD REPLY.

"We are witnesses," they cried, as in after days they met Pilate's repeated challenge by the imprecation upon themselves of the blood of Jesus. Alas, for their self-confident boast, for their headstrong pride of purpose! "By strength can no man prevail." Oh my soul, be warned, that when thou art challenged as to thy resolves, thou makest thy boast in God, setting up thy banners in his name, entrenching thyself within the circle of his environing Almightiness. Only by thy God canst thou leap over a wall, or run through a troop.

JOSHUA'S RESPONSE.

Further words were fruitless, and so he set up a memorial of the pledges by which the people had bound themselves. He wrote their words in the book of the law of God, and he took a great stone, and set it up there under the slab. "Behold," said he, "this stone shall be a witness against us, for it hath heard all the words of the Lord which he spake unto us; it shall be therefore a witness against you, lest ye deny your God." Then he dismissed the people to their homes.

THERE IS COMFORT SUGGESTED TO US BY CONTRAST WITH THIS SOLEMN SCENE.

Even in the Land of Promise, the people introduced the old Sinaitic spirit of duty and obedience as the condition of their tenure. They had said at Sinai, "All that the Lord says, we will do." And they said it again in Canaan. And we are all apt to make the same mistake; we once sought to justify ourselves by our own efforts, and now we seek to sanctify ourselves. Once we made resolutions to earn Heaven by good works, now we make them to maintain our vows of consecration intact. And directly we essay to tread the difficult path of sanctification in our own energy, and by our own might, we expose ourselves to endless misery and chagrin. There is no thoroughfare by this route. We cannot perfect in the flesh that which we began in the Spirit.

Joshua did not give the people rest. Had he done so, David would not have spoken of another day. Canaan was only the type of the Sabbath keeping of the people of God, but did not exhaust it. At the best it was only a material and unsatisfying type. It afforded rest from the fatigues of the march, but not to the infinite capacities of the soul. The produce of cornfields, and vineyards, and olive-yards, could not appease the appetite for the infinite that must have made itself felt even in the heart of Israel, as the nation settled in its God-given land. Therefore, as the Holy Ghost tells us, there remained over and above a rest which is open by faith to the people of God of every age.

There is a deep spiritual truth here. Israel could not enter on the real rest of God, because the people persisted in introducing this talk about what they would or would not do. God's rest cannot be entered thus. Though it was the leadership of Joshua, it was the spirit of Moses. And the law can in no shape or form give rest. Is not this why so many Christians miss it still? They profess to be under the captaincy of the true Joshua, but they are all the while counting on their own resolves and boasting their own strength.

It is only when we apprehend the provisions of the New Covenant, which does not mention man, but is full of the I wills of God, that we come into the true blessedness of rest and peace. Not what you do, but what God will do; not your bow and spear, but his right hand and his holy arm; not the energy of your good self, but the freeness of his grace. When you confess yourself powerless to maintain the attitude of consecration, and cast yourself helplessly on Him to perform all things in and through you, realising his ideals, and fulfilling his purposes, and when the entire burden is relinquished, and you are content to work out in the strength of his Spirit what He works in, will you experience the fulness of that rest which is deep as God's, like the azure sky that slumbers behind bars of gold, incasing the glory of sunset.

His task ended, Joshua retired to his inheritance, but the influence of his character and life was felt as long as he lived and after. At last he died, one hundred and ten years old, and they buried him. All Israel probably gathered to pay homage to his memory. He richly merited all the honour that he received. He had none of the gifts of Moses. He may be compared to the man of two talents, whilst his great master was dowered with five. But he was strong and wise and true to the great trust committed to his care by the people and by God, and amid the stars that shine in the firmament of heaven not the least bright or clear is the lustre of Joshua, the son of Nun, whose noblest epitaph is written by a subsequent hand—Joshua, the son of Nun, the servant of Jehovah.

SPRING.

The earth is planted in the life of Spring;
All effortless come forth the bud and flower;
With clearest throat the feathery minstrels sing
Among the pearls behind the April shower:
To harpings of soft winds on wood and plain
Dances new life in every heart again.

The soul is planted in the Saviour's death,
And, as the spring breeze quickens bud and flower,
It lives and opens in the Spirit's breath,
And blooms in all his resurrection power;
While seraph songs and harpings from the throne,
Before unheard in sin and death's domain,
Ring now so clear, that the ecstatic tone
Of heaven is caught and echoed thence again.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME?

HIS AGONY.

Good Friday has brought this event to our remembrance. Let us think of it with deep reverence. It was, perhaps, the most mysterious and awful experience through which our Lord had to pass. Read the account in Matt. xxvi., with the few additional particulars in Luke xxii. It is from Luke we learn that the disciples slept "for sorrow," and that our Lord wrestled in agony until his sweat fell in drops of blood to the ground. Recall the whole story. Every detail of it is full of teaching.

It took place in a garden. Is it not strange to put together the two words, "agony" and "garden"? At the beginning of our Lord's public life we read of the wilderness temptation. That seems natural, for we always associate trial and difficulty with a wilderness, but other ideas are suggested by a garden. That is a place of beauty, of rest, of delight, yet our Lord's severest conflict was not in the wilderness, but in a garden. Should we not learn the lesson that the most dangerous experiences to us are not those which are difficult and trying, but rather the opposite? Our most pleasant paths may prove most perilous.

Do you remember another garden at the beginning of the history of man? Contrast Paradise and Gethsemane. A similar contest is being decided in both. In Paradise everything was lost by man saying, "Not God's will, but my will be done." In Gethsemane, everything was won by the Second Man saying, "Not my will, but the Father's be done." We were lost through self-will in Paradise; we are saved through surrender to God's will in Gethsemane.

How shall we form any conception of what the agony was? Think of it: He took three friends with Him, as though longing for human sympathy. But they slept while He agonised. The prophet had foretold his awful loneliness as one element in the suffering of Christ. "I have trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with Me" (Isa. lxiii. 3). That He felt this loneliness was clear. Luke says He "was withdrawn from them," as though He would have retained their company if He could.

When separated from them his deep unutterable agony is manifested in his posture. At first He "knelt" (Luke); then He "fell on the ground" (Mark); and afterwards He "fell on his face" (Matt.). And when the struggle reaches its climax the body bears witness to the inward agony by the great drops of bloody sweat that fall to the ground. All these particulars are furnished us by Scripture. They are too solemnly important to be overlooked. Think of them prayerfully, until God makes you to realise in some measure what Jesus suffered.

And what is all this to you? Did He thus agonise because He dreaded the thought of dying, and of the physical suffering connected with it? Was it in view of what the Jews and the Roman soldiers were going to do to Him that He suffered so terribly? Was the bitter cup from which He shrank that which his enemies put into his hand? Ah! no. It was more than that. He was to be "made sin"; to endure what it deserved as though He were personally guilty of all. Jehovah's sword was to awake against Him (Zech. xiii. 7). He felt it deeply that men to whom He had given nothing but blessing should give Him only a cross in return; He felt it deeply that the apostles, who had been with Him so intimately, should all forsake Him; but that which He dreaded most was the awful darkness from which issued the cry, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" And the sin that occasioned his distress was yours and mine. "Is it nothing to you?" He asks. What does your heart reply?

Begin by thanking Him for the love that endured this for you. If such agony was the desert of sin, how hopeless you had been but for his work. But how confident you may be now that the work is done!

Then learn what sin really is. Every sin, however trifling it may appear, should be looked at in the light of the Gethsemane agony. Should we not hate and shun that which occasioned Him such anguish?

IN THE VILLAGES.

The weather was in a May mood, the birds were singing, and all nature was gladsome as we started on our long spring tour, 1892, it being the eighteenth time. In a twelve-days' tour it is impossible to give details of 1500 persons daily visited or spoken to, only gleanings here and there.

On the second day we were gladdened to find a large increase of believers in one village. An old man told us a great impression was made by an address of one of our friends years ago. The third day was a very happy one. Soon after starting we met one, then another, then a third, who had been blessed in our work in former years. During the day our route changed, and in that change we found happy guidance. In one village we met with a marked case of blessing, and were told that in the next a young man was buried that day, killed instantly on the railway.

The place was not in our route, but one friend specially wished to go. On the way there are three cottages. In one lives the sister of a man converted in one of Mr. Moody's meetings in Darlington about 1874. He wrote home the news. Soon after we visited their native village, and I believe the message was blessed to the whole family. We had seen this sister but twice since. On calling, with tears she told us it was her son they had just buried. At her request we went in and had a memorable meeting, the house being full of mourners.

Passing near on our return journey, some friends told us she thought it so kind of us to visit her in her trouble. We thought the kindness was with Him who, against our plans, sent us there. Our tour took us to Banbury, and into parts of Warwickshire and Worcestershire.

One day we hunted up an old friend, who years ago had left Christian associations in great sorrow. She was still trusting the Lord. The same evening we came to a village, where on a previous visit one Lord's day evening we found a Catholic fête. The place was full of sightseers, nuns being conspicuous too. With the fine Catholic church and the lord of the manor's influence, we expected to find many perverts. To our surprise we were heartily received. We could not find a Catholic, except at the priest's. We held a meeting just opposite his house. The words, "The precious blood of Christ" brought such a hearty "Yes" from a poor paralysed woman.

In one village we could not buy bread; "To such as you we give it for Christ's sake," was the answer. One morning we came to a large village, where a long time was spent in visiting, etc. After that we found ourselves in an open country almost houseless. After three miles we drove on to a small village green, and one began speaking. I soon found myself at the inn stable door, where four young men were talking. We soon learned that a little earlier in the day they had helped carry the mangled corpse of a poor man into the adjoining shed crushed beneath the wheels of a traction engine. The whole village was moved, and much concern was shown. As we passed along we announced the sad news, and urged the people to flee from the wrath to come. The news naturally spread, and our visit so soon after was linked with it. Miles away on the following day we were asked if we were the party who almost literally preached over the mangled form of poor Gardner.

We cannot linger to tell of the breezy day Saturday was, of our journey over the Cage Hill range, nor to tell of the happy hours we spent "preaching peace by Jesus Christ." It was Whitsuntide, and early on Monday our party grew less, and by two p.m. I was alone.

That morning, as we were between two villages, two vehicles came along. The first party greeted us heartily, but the second stopped. "Jesus only, Jesus only," was the greeting. At first we were rather bewildered, but soon learned they were at an open-air meeting some three years ago, when "Jesus only" was our text. One warm-hearted woman said "I began the day with it. We are going to Merton Mission Hall, and my one theme throughout the village and day shall be 'Jesus only.'"

THE FRESH AIR FUND.—Mr. C. A. Pearson, whose fund in connection with his well-known Weekly, was the means last year of giving a day in the country to over 20,000 poor children, has renewed his appeal to his readers, and hopes, in co-operation with the Ragged School Union, to give delight to a much larger number of little East-enders.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XI.

THE BOOK OF THE THRONE.

The Apocalypse is, above all things, the Book of the Throne. Therein is asserted, exhibited, and seen, as finally established, the Kingdom, the Supremacy, the Rule of the Almighty God. Above all the din and confusion of earth's conflicts sounds the ancient Psalm of praise: "The Lord reigneth, the Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters." As an undertone to the plaintive cries of suffering saints, or as the echoing chord in the grand anthems of triumphant warriors, is heard, now in subdued harmony, now in swelling chorus, the keynote of the music of eternity, "Hallelujah! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

The Apocalypse is the Book of the Throne. "I am set down with my Father in his throne," is the final word to the seven churches from "the Amen," whose first word testified of his dignity as "the Prince of the kings of the earth." The opening vision is that of the "throne set in heaven" (twelve times repeated in the eleven verses of the fourth chapter). The first series of predictions—that of the seven seals and seven trumpets, concludes, at the blast of the last trump, with the "great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever," to which the four-and-twenty enthroned ones (the Church in "heavenly places") jubilantly respond, "We give Thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, because Thou hast taken to Thee thy great power and hast reigned." The second series—that of the seven signs and seven seals—in which is exhibited the marvellous career of the wild beast from the sea, the fourth great world empire of Daniel, to which Satan, "the prince of this world," gives his "throne" (ch. xiii. 2), tells all along of an overruling authority behind the scenes, and introduces the closing judgments of the dispensation with the ascription of praise to the Lord God Almighty, as King of nations (ch. xv. 3. marg.). It is as "King of kings" that the Lamb overcomes all Anti-Christian rebellion (ch. xvii. 14). As "KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS" He comes forth from the opened heaven with all the armies of the redeemed to the closing conflict (ch. xix. 16). Then there is the millennial reign of Christ with the partakers of the first resurrection; and then the "Great White Throne" in all its dazzling purity.

Once more is the curtain lifted, and amid the beauties, the glories, the blessedness of the city of jewelled foundations, of pearly gates, of jasper walls, of golden streets, of the river and tree of life, we see the supreme government of the Most High established, and thereby the permanence to all eternity of the home and happiness of the redeemed; for we hear the words, "There shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it." The Crucified One is enthroned for ever as "the brightness of the Father's glory." The Apocalypse is the Book of the Throne.

It is as the prelude to the prophetic visions that the most striking revelation of the glorious truth that "the heavens do rule," and that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men," occurs. No sooner is the sevenfold message to the churches uttered than the seer's gaze is attracted by the burst of glory that streams through the "door opened in heaven," and in ready obedience to the trumpet-toned command to rise and behold "the things which must be hereafter," he is rapt in spirit into the Divine presence-chamber, and

> Behold, a throne was set in heaven,
> And One sat on the throne.

He can only compare the effulgent glory of Him that sat to the dazzling brightness of the jasper (probably the diamond) and the sardine stone; but, as if to tone and soften that all-piercing light of infinite holiness, round the throne are the gentler prismatic hues of the rainbow, sweet token of covenant grace and mercy, no longer seen, as we see it here, half obscured by the world—but in all its full-orbed perfection encircling the throne.

As he more intently gazes, he becomes aware of other thrones "round about the throne," no less than twenty-four. They who sit thereon appear to be kings and priests—for they are apparelled in white raiment, and they have crowns of gold on their heads. As a "royal priesthood," they are "seated together in heavenly places in Christ," far "above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world but also in that which is to come." They reign with Him. And from their lips bursts forth the new song, "Thou art worthy—for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."

What, then, is the truth presented thus in vision to the prophet's view? It is two-fold. First and foremost, it is the revelation to him of the unspeakably blessed fact that the government of God is unalterably established. In the words of the 45th Psalm, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." And to one to whom were to be disclosed the risings and fallings of earthly thrones, the shakings of the kingdoms of this world, before whose eyes were to pass

> "The giant germs of empires on their way

it was doubtless of unspeakable comfort to be assured that "though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, though the water thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swellings thereof," calm and serene above all were the controlling hand, the all-seeing eye, the overruling omnipotence of Him that sat upon the throne. As the very foundations of all things seemed to be destroyed, his heart could quietly echo the words of old, "The Lord is in his holy temple; the Lord's throne is in heaven; his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men."

Thus to prepare his servants, first to behold, and then to communicate the dread events which were to come to pass, by the encouraging assurance of his supreme control, had been God's way in other days. Before Ezekiel is ordained for his ministry of "lamentation and mourning and woe," before he is called to view the awful abominations of his people, and to announce the impending judgments upon them and upon the nations around them, the heavens are opened to him, and he sees "Visions of God." There he beholds the tokens of Divine wrath—the whirlwind, the cloud, and the fire; there the cherubic forms winged for heavenly activity—there the wheels within wheels "upon the earth—" "so high that they were dreadful" (the movements of God in providence) appear before him. And then, as "the noise of the wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host," vibrates through his whole being, in its awe-inspiring tones of thunder, there rises in marvellous brilliancy "the likeness of a throne, and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a Man above upon it—'as the colour of amber'—'as the appearance of fire'—'as the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness; and this was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of Jehovah.'" Thus was he prepared. The majesty of the throne, the paramount government of the Lord, was so revealed that he was fitted to enter upon the path of service and of sorrow, which must otherwise have overwhelmed him.

So, too, with Daniel, the greatly beloved. To him are revealed views of the future of transcendent importance—stretching over millenniums—and only terminating in the far-off vista of resurrection and judgment. They fill him with awe. "I was grieved in my spirit," he writes, "and the visions of my head troubled me." "My cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me." "I fainted, and was sick." "There remaineth no strength in me, neither is there breath left in me." But simultaneously with these overwhelming revelations of things to come, his gracious Master favours him with manifestations of the ultimate triumph of the Kingdom of God. "It shall never be destroyed—it shall stand for ever." "His dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation." "He doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and none can stay his hand." "His dominion shall be even unto the end." "All dominions shall serve and obey Him." Thus was the seer "strengthened." And without a similar manifestation of the throne, and of Him that sat thereon, even the beloved Apostle would have been unable to bear the sights he was called to see, or to unfold the mysteries of the things that were shortly to come to pass.

But was there not another truth presented to him, and that one of the most cheering and consoling character! He was about to view the earthly course of the Church of God, of his brethren and companions in the tribulation and kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. The oppressions and persecutions under which that Church—the beloved Bride of the Lamb—was to pass; the Satanic enmity and wiles which were to harass and tempt her; the corruptions which would arise within her pale, and sully her likeness to her Lord; the obliteration, almost, of her very existence, and the usurpation of her place and privileges by the foul harlot of the Apostasy, Babylon the Great; her woes and wails for centuries of sufferings; all this was to pass in vision before his astonished gaze. Would he not be overwhelmed, would not his faith fail? How could he bear such a soul-appalling sight? For, be it remembered, they who were called to the high privilege of entering into the counsels of the Most High, and on whom prophetic fire was to fall, were not mere unconcerned spectators of the unrolled map of futurity. They who saw the vision of the Almighty, and heard the words of God, had these visions and these words wrought into their inmost souls. The roll of lamentation and mourning and woe became part of their being; they "took and ate it." The little book open made their belly bitter. They were, in the very deepest sense, "moved of the Holy Ghost."

All that they beheld, therefore, agitated them most profoundly. Daniel's comeliness is turned into corruption. Astonishment takes hold of Jeremiah; for the hurt of the daughter of his people he is hurt. He is "filled with bitterness," "drunken with wormwood"; his "eye runneth down with rivers of water for the destruction of the daughter of his people." There is no sorrow like unto his sorrow. Ezekiel bears the sorrows of Israel in an intensely real way. He acts out in his own person the troubles that were to fall on them. He eats his bread with quaking, and drinks his water with carefulness.

And so with the seer of the Apocalypse. He falls "as dead" at the feet of the Great Revealer of Mysteries. He is in an agony of tears at learning that no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, is able to open the book, neither to look therein. And now earthquakes, and tempest storms from the abyss, and lightnings from heaven, wars and pestilences, falling stars and melting skies, were to pass in dread array before his eyes. "Mighty thunderings" were to shake his whole soul, and all the terrific imagery of the final scenes of earth's history were to be disclosed to his view. The very Church herself was to be lost to sight, and apparently to be overwhelmed. How could he bear it, but that his Saviour takes him first of all into the serene presence of the all-controlling throne of God, and shows him there, securely enthroned, at that very moment, the Church mystical, the white-vestured, gold-crowned royal priesthood, seated in the heavenlies, co-partner of the throne of the Lamb Himself.

Thus is his heart stayed on God. Thus is he enabled to sustain the sight of all that he was to prophesy and to write.

The book of the Apocalypse is the Book of the Throne.

TO PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

O'er wayward childhood would'st thou hold firm rule
And sun thee in the light of happy faces?
Faith, Hope, and Patience, these must be thy graces,
And in thine own heart let them first keep school.

Mother, do you think your sphere a narrow one? Know that the greatest harvest is to be sown beside the cradle and by the fireside.

Study the characters of your children separately, cultivate them one by one, and not as if you were turning them out by machinery.

The Sunday-school teacher holds a key that opens the door into the largest sphere of work, where no effort can be too great, or service too carefully rendered.

Do not undervalue the advantages of play. It gives physical strength; it teaches courage, discipline, obedience, self-sacrifice, and the value of co-operation.

Study your children, strive for a deeper insight into child nature. You will thus quicken your sympathy, your patience will abound more and more, and unconsciously, on every side, your nature will develop.

THE CITY IN A TEMPLE.

BY THOMAS NEWBERRY, Editor of "The Englishman's Bible."

Rev. xxi. 22, 23.

"And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light [lamp] thereof."

In Revelation xxi. 9 to xxii. 5, we have a vision of the Bride, the Lamb's wife, under the symbol of a city. This is not a vision of heaven, for in both cases where the city is mentioned it is seen coming down out of heaven from God (vv. 2, 10). It is not the habitation of the Bride, but the Bride herself. The language of the angel who showed the vision was, "Come hither, I will show thee the Bride." As in ch. v., the Bridegroom is shown under the emblem of a Lamb as it had been slain, so here the Bride is seen under the similitude of a city. What is a city? An assemblage of habitations with their inhabitants. What is the Bride here seen? The Church in resurrection glory, comprised of all the members of the body, perfect and complete, each individual member having exchanged the earthly house of their tabernacle, as pilgrims in the wilderness, for their house that is from heaven; this corruptible having put on incorruption and this mortal immortality—the Church for which Christ died, the purchase of his blood, the workmanship of his Spirit, a glorious Church, without a blemish and without a spot.

When the Son of Man, the Root and the Offspring of David as the heir of David's throne, takes His Millennial Kingdom, He will be accompanied by the Church, his Bride, who will be manifested with Him in glory. The second Adam, all things having been put under his feet, will have associated with Him the glorified Church (Eph. v. 25-32). She will also be his companion in his dominion over the new earth, thus not only in his millennial, but in his eternal reign (Rev. xxi. 1, 2).

The apostle wrote by Divine direction, "I saw no Temple therein." A Temple in that city would have implied that there was one part more sacred than another, one spot more the centre of the Divine presence than the rest.

The poet has thus expressed it:—

"There no Temple rose before me,
There no glory shone above,
All was Temple, all was glory,
All in all was God, and love."

What then? Was there no worship, no sense of reverence? It was, in fact, not a Temple in a city, but a city in a Temple, and that Temple was God, the omnipresent, ever-present God, who inhabits eternity and fills immensity, whom heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain; they lived, moved, and had their being in God. In his realised presence they worshipped, served, and rejoiced.

"The Lord God Almighty." This, according to the Hebrew, would be read, Jehovah El Shadday, the everlasting, almighty, all-sufficient, three in one. Strengthened with all might by the Spirit, Christ dwelling in the affections, those who constitute the city are filled into all the fulness of God, as in an ocean of boundless love, an atmosphere of perfect purity, and in the sunshine of unclouded truth.

"The city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it."

Not that they were excluded from the light of nature, although they were independent of it, even as the holy place of the Temple was furnished with windows, for they bask in a light divine. What the glory of God was in the Tabernacle when first erected, what the glory of God was when it filled the Temple of Solomon, what the Shekinah was in the holiest of all, such will be the realised glory of God to them.

"And the Lamb." Had they been angels in unfallen purity and holiness the Divine glory might have been sufficient, but this Church of the first-born, this Bride of the Lamb, is composed of sinners saved by grace; they had been born in sin and shapen in iniquity, but have been redeemed to God by the blood of the Lamb. Hence we read, "and the Lamb is the light [or lamp] thereof." What the ark was in the holiest of all in the Tabernacle and Temple, with the cherubim of glory overshadowing it, and the Shekinah glory above it, even such is the Lamb in this Temple of God. What the sprinkled blood was on the doorposts in Egypt, on the horns of the altar, and on the posts of the Temple, and sprinkled once in the year by the finger of the high priest on the golden propitiatory, and seven times before it, such is the blood of the Lamb carried in by the High Priest of our profession, and pleaded before the throne of God. Or, what is best of all, as being the substance of the shadows, and fulfilment of the type, the Lamb as it had been slain Himself in the midst of the throne of God.

"And the Lamb is the light [or lamp] thereof." The word here translated light is not the ordinary word used for light, but "luknos," a lamp. What the one lampstand with its seven lamps was in the Tabernacle, and what the ten lampstands of gold were in the Temple with their sevenfold radiance, such is the Lamb in this Temple of God, the centre and source of spiritual light in all its sevenfold fulness of perfection. And as the lamp is dependent for its light-giving on the oil, even so it will ever be in Heaven what to us it is now, the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, made known, revealed, communicated by the Divine, eternal Spirit. He will still continue throughout the ages of eternity, to take of the things of Jesus in all the glory of the Father, and make them fully known to the saints in resurrection glory.

The glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ is now reflected on the page of the inspired word, and whilst we with unveiled face behold as in a glass that glory, we are transformed or transfigured into the same image by the Lord the Spirit from glory to glory. The oftener we gaze, the steadier we look, this transformation goes forward, but when we see Jesus as He is it will be completed. We may realise a foretaste of heavenly blessedness even now by dwelling in the presence of God, for He is not far from every one of us. We may worship in spirit in the heavenly sanctuary, for we have boldness through the blood to enter the holiest; the veil is rent, the door thrown open, our Forerunner is entered, and the Comforter has come forth to lead us into it.

Even into the secret place of the Most High under the shadow of the Almighty.

PAINSWICKE HOMES.

A correspondent writes:—"I was greatly interested lately, in visiting the quiet, picturesque village of Painswicke, situated among the Cotswold hills of Gloucestershire, to find three different efforts of practical Christian work.

"The first is a convalescent home, where two classes are received: lady boarders, who have every comfort provided at a moderate charge, and young women recovering from illness, and needing the benefit complete change of air and rest gives. There are many able in this way, by paying for a fortnight's or three weeks' board, to restore, under God's blessing, health to some weary worker.

"A short distance down the village street we come to a cottage home for orphan and needy children. Here they are gathered in and mothered by kind friends and an excellent matron, and in due time every summer the little ones are chaperoned across the Atlantic and find homes in our Canadian Colony, being received and cared for there by Mr. and Mrs. Wallace, of the Marchmont Home, Belleville.

"A third institution much needed but seldom found is one for the 'feeble-minded.' A number of girls and women, mentally unable to cope with the world and its temptations, are received and given such work as they are capable of doing—knitting, crocheting, sewing, and especially washing, under an experienced laundress. This it is hoped will make it nearly self-supporting. Every Christian worker knows the difficulty of providing for this very dependent and needy class.

Miss Wemyss, who takes an active part in the management of all three homes, would be glad to answer any inquiries with regard to them.

DRURY LANE.—I superintend the City Missionary in Drury Lane, and he has a meeting every Monday. Sometimes I address the people. After one of my addresses some roughs who were gathered about outside said they would like to kill us. So I sent out invitations to them to come to a tea, and some 120 came—men, only, and we had a good time. This evening (Friday, 24) I am repeating the tea, and hope much good will be done.—C. F. Dowsett.

THE FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

The following is an extract from a letter recently received from a lady, Miss Agneff, in a famine-stricken district in Russia, and reveals a state of suffering and distress which appeals loudly for relief. Miss Agneff is well known to Countess Bobrinsky, Villa St. Georges, Cannes, who will be glad to give further information. Many other large provinces are in a similar condition. In one of them, Taula, Count Vladimir Bobrinsky, who is at the head of the Red Cross Society there, has been superintending the relief measures for two years, and is at present responsible for the maintenance of 150,000 persons, though the means at his disposal are wholly insufficient:—

"Last autumn a very few were able to sow, and more than half of the crop has been eaten by blight. I have now about 300 orphans on my hands, perfectly destitute, without clothes or friends, and these have to be fed till the next harvest. In the province of Perm last year, before relief arrived, 500 people died of starvation in one district alone, which had contained about 5,000 people. Whole families died out, not from typhus, scurvy, or cholera, but literally of hunger, and numbers of orphans have been left uncared for. The misery was something appalling! The cattle had all died, except a few which were in the hands of the village usurers.

"Whilst on our rounds (myself and friends), we collected the orphans, and though we could not provide for all, we felt compelled to take 300. Every day more applied to be taken into the orphanage, and naturally we feel that our last crust must be shared with them. It was difficult to find accommodation for so many, so we had to board them out, and in this way a large hole was made in our funds. We, therefore, hired a property, with three unoccupied houses on it, of about 400 acres, for about £30 per annum. I hope that in time, by God's blessing, this may prove a source of maintenance for them. I have an honest schoolmaster in view, who is a good farmer, and who guarantees that after two years the land will sustain them, provided that they can be fed meanwhile. This I could do, and I would gladly give my last farthing, were it not for the pressing needs of others. In the spring we can sow, and thus enable ourselves to prolong the time that we are able to keep the children together. I can still hold on for a little while by keeping the children on half rations; but I tremble for every kopeck.

"The children go to school and learn boot-making, and this has succeeded so well that they have been able to make their own shoes. The girls meanwhile spin. We have already sown seven acres of corn. In spring all the elder children will work in the fields, or be hired out to the richer peasants in return for their food. When one looks at these orphans, one's heart bleeds. Among them there are some quite small babies of a year old. The children look so starved, and seem unable to pick up their strength, for their organs are altogether so impaired that many of them have died. They get a disease called 'norma,' which is a sort of water-cancer resulting from blood-poisoning, produced by bad and insufficient food. Generally it begins in the face, as a sort of gangrene, either in the cheek or the nose, which turns black, and the child ultimately dies in dreadful agony. In spite of the good nourishing food that we have given them, some of them have succumbed to this terrible disease, in consequence of their previous long-continued privations.

"The house is surrounded by birch copses, and in a very good situation on the banks of the river Tistch, which is the southernmost part of the province adjoining Orenburg. The land is very fertile, as it is black soil. Having so many helping hands, it would be very easy to sow flax, which would bring in about fifty roubles (£5) an acre; besides which we could use it for clothing purposes. Here they spin, weave, and dye it, and it serves for all kind of clothing. I am hoping that, without any propaganda, this undertaking will bring about a Christian spirit, by fusing the two races, Russians and Bashkirs (a Mohammedan nomad tribe), and so dispelling the fierce fanaticism of the Mohammedans. They, in their turn, may become bearers of the Christian faith among their own tribes, and also a means of civilisation, by inducing them to become tillers of the ground, instead of lazy and improvident."

For the Young.

"THE MAN THAT DIED FOR ME."

A Story of Good Friday.

BY MRS. J. E. PARNEY.

Many years ago I wanted to go as a foreign missionary, but my way seemed hedged about, and after a few years I went to live on the Pacific coast. Life was rough in the mining country where I lived, and this was my chance for missionary work.

I heard of a man over the hills who was dying of consumption. "He is so vile," they said, "no one can stand it to stay with him; so the boys place some food by him, and leave him for twenty-four hours. They'll find him dead some time, and the quicker the better. Never had a soul, I guess."

The pity of it all haunted me as I went about my work, and I tried for three days to get someone to go and see him, and find out if he was in need of better care. As I turned from the last man, vexed with his indifference, the thought came to me, "Why don't you go yourself? Here's missionary work if you want it." It had not occurred to me before that I could go.

I'll not tell how I weighed the probable uselessness of my going, or how I shrank from one so vile as he. It wasn't the kind of work I wanted.

At last, one day, I went over the hills to the little far-away cabin. It was just one room. The door stood open, and up in one corner on some straw and coloured blankets I found the dying man. Sin had left awful marks on his face, and if I had not heard that he could not move I should have retreated hastily.

As my shadow fell over the floor he looked up and greeted me with a dreadful oath. I stepped forward, and there came another oath.

"Don't speak so, my friend," I said.

"I ain't your friend. I ain't got any friends," he said.

"Well, I am yours, and"—but the oaths came thickly, as he said, "You ain't my friend. I never had any friends, and I don't want any now."

I reached out, at arm's length, the fruit I had brought him, and, stepping back to the doorway, I asked him, hoping to find a tender place in his heart, if he remembered his mother, but he cursed her. I asked him if he ever had a wife, and he cursed her. I spoke of God, and he cursed Him. I tried to speak of Jesus and his death for us, but he stopped me with his oaths, and said, "That's all a lie. Nobody ever died for us."

I went away discouraged. I said to myself, "I knew it was no use."

The next day I went back again, and I went every day for two weeks, but he did not show the gratitude a dog would have shown.

At the end of that time, I said, "I'm not going anymore." That night, when I was putting my little boys to bed, I did not pray for the miner as I had been accustomed to do. My little Charlie noticed it and said, "Mamma, you did not pray for the bad man."

"No," I answered with a sigh.

"Have you given him up, mamma?"

"Yes, I guess so."

"Has God given him up, mamma? Ought you to give him up, mamma, before God does?"

That night I could not sleep. The man dying, and so vile, with no one to care.

I got up and went away by myself to pray, but the moment I touched my knees I was overpowered by the sense of how little meaning there had been in my prayers. I had had no faith, and I had not really cared, beyond a kind of half-hearted sentiment. Oh, the shame, the sham of my missionary zeal! I fell on my face literally, as I cried, "Oh, Christ, give me a little glimpse of the worth of a human soul." Did you ever ask that and mean it? Don't do it unless you are willing to give up ease and selfish pleasure, for life will be a different thing to you after that revelation.

I stayed on my knees until Calvary became a reality to me. I cannot describe those hours. They came and went unheeded, but I learned that night what I had never known before, what it was to travail for a human soul. I saw my Lord as I had never seen Him before. I stayed there until the answer came.

As I went back to my room my husband said, "How about your miner?"

"He is going to be saved."

"How are you going to do it?" he asked.

"The Lord is going to save him, and I don't know that I shall do anything about it," I replied.

The next morning brought a lesson in Christian work I had never learned before. I had waited on other days until the afternoon, when, my work being all over, I could change my dress, put on my gloves, and take a walk while the shadows were on the hill-sides. That day, the moment my little boys went off to school, I left my work and, without waiting for gloves or shadows, hurried over the hills, not to see "that vile wretch," but to win a soul. I thought the man might die. There was a human soul in the balance, and I wanted to get there quickly.

As I passed on, a neighbour came out of her cabin, and said, "I'll go over the hills with you, I guess."

I did not want her, but it was another lesson for me. God could plan better than I could. She had her little girl with her, and as we reached the cabin she said, "I'll wait out here, and you hurry, won't you?"

I do not know what I expected, but the man greeted me with an awful oath. It did not hurt as it did before, for I was behind Christ, and I stayed there. I could bear what struck Him first.

While I was changing the basin of water and towel for him, things which I had done every day, and which he had used but never thanked me for, the clear laugh of the little girl rang out upon the air like a bird's note.

"What's that?" said the man eagerly.

"It's a little girl outside, who is waiting for me."

"Would you mind letting her come in?" said he, in a different tone from any I had heard before.

Stepping to the door I beckoned to her, and then, taking her by the hand, said, "Come in and see the sick man, Mamie."

She shrank back as she saw his face and said, "I'm 'fraid." But I assured her with, "Poor sick man! he can't get up, and he wants to see you."

She looked like an angel, with her faced framed in golden curls, her eyes tender and pitiful, and in her hand the flowers she had picked off the purple sage brush. Bending toward him, she said, "I sorry for 'ou, sick man. Will 'ou have a posy?"

He laid his great bony hand beyond the flowers on the plump hand of the child, and the great tears came to his eyes as he said: "I had a little girl once, and she died. Her name was Mamie. She cared for me. Nobody else did. Guess I'd been different if she'd lived. I've hated everybody since she died."

I knew I had the key to the man's heart, and the thought came quickly, born of that midnight prayer service. "When I spoke of your mother and your wife, you cursed them, and I know now that they were not good women, or you could not have done it, for I never knew a man who could curse a good mother."

"Good women! Oh, you don't know nothin' 'bout that kind of women. You can't think what they was."

"Well, if your little girl had lived and grown up with them, wouldn't she have been just like them? You would not have liked to have her live for that, would you?"

He evidently had never thought of it, and his great eyes looked off for a full minute. As they came back to mine he cried, "O God, no! I'd have killed her first. I'm glad she died."

Reaching out and taking the poor hand, I said: "The dear Lord didn't want her to be like them. He loved her even better than you did. So He took her away where she could be cared for by the angels. He is keeping her for you. To-day she is waiting for you. Don't you want to see her again?"

"Oh, I'd be willing to be burnt alive a thousand times over if I could just see my little gal once more, my little Mamie."

Oh, friends, you know what a blessed story I had to tell that hour, and I had been so close to Calvary that night that I could tell it in earnest.

The poor face grew ashy pale as I talked, and the man threw up his arms as though his agony was mastering him. Two or three times he gasped as though losing breath. Then, clutching me, he said, "What's that, woman, you said t'other day bout talkin' to somebody out o' sight?"

"Its praying. I tell Him what I want."

"Pray now, pray quick. Tell Him I want my little gal agin. Tell Him anything you want to."

I took the hands of the child, and placed them on the trembling hands of the man. Then dropping on my knees, with the child in front of me, I bade her pray for the man who had lost his little Mamie and wanted to see her again. As nearly as I remember this was Mamie's prayer:

"Dear Jesus, this man is sick. He has lost his 'ittle girl, and he feels bad about it. I's so sorry for him, and he's so sorry too. Won't you help him and show him where to find his 'ittle girl? Do, please. Amen."

Heaven seemed to open before us. There stood One with the prints of the nails in his hands and the wound in his side.

Mamie slipped away soon, but the man kept saying, "Tell Him more 'bout it, tell Him everything; but, oh! you don't know."

Then he poured out such a torrent of confession that I could not have borne it but for One that was close to us that hour. Oh, how the Lord Jesus reached out after that lost soul!

By and by the poor man grasped the Strong Hands. It was the third day when the poor tired soul turned from everything to Him, the Mighty to save, "The Man that died for me."

He lived on for weeks, as if God would show how real was the change. I had been telling him one day about a meeting, and he said, "I'd like to go to a meetin' once. I never went to one of them things."

So we planned a meeting, and the boys came from the mills and the mines and filled the room,

"Now, boys," said he, "get down on your knees while she tells 'bout that Man that died for me."

I had been brought up to believe that a woman shouldn't speak in meeting, but I found myself talking, and I tried to tell the simple story of the Cross.

After awhile he said, "Oh, boys, you don't half believe it or you'd cry; you couldn't help it. Boys, raise me up. I'd like to tell it once."

So they raised him up, and between his short breathing and coughing, he told the story. He had to use the language he knew, and this, as well as I can recall it (and, of course, this is true of all the conversations I have quoted) was what he said.

"Boys," he said, "you know how the water runs down the sluice boxes, and carries off all the dirt and leaves the gold behind. Well! the blood of that Man she tells about went right over me, just like that; it carried off 'bout everything. But it left enough for me to see Mamie, and to see the Man that died for me. Oh, boys, can't you love Him?"

Some days after there came a look into his face that told the end had come. I had to leave him and I said, "What shall I say to-night, Jack?"

"Just, Good night," he said.

"What will you say to me when we meet again?"

"I'll say, 'Good morning,' up there."

The next morning the door was closed, and I found two of the boys sitting silently by a board stretched across two stools. They turned back the sheet from the dead, and I looked on the face, which seemed to have come back nearer to the "image of God."

"I wish you could seen him when he went," they said.

"Tell me about it."

"Well, all at once he brightened up 'bout midnight an' smilin' said, 'I'm goin' boys. Tell her I am going to see Mamie. Tell her I'm going to see the Man that died for me,' an' he was gone."

Kneeling there with my hands over those poor cold ones, that had been stained with human blood, I asked to come to understand more and more the worth of a human soul, and to be drawn into deeper sympathy with Christ's yearning compassion, "Not willing that any should perish."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 2.—1 CHRON. X.

This chapter in its closing verses gives the epitaph on Saul's life. It is very remarkable to notice the contrast in the statements, the one by the historian, the other by the Spirit of God. The first tells us simply how Saul died as a suicide, the second lifts the veil, and tell us that the Lord slew him. All through the Bible we meet with this perpetually recurring thought, that God's purpose is effected even through the sins of men. We are told of Saul's threefold crime: first, that he did not keep the word of the Lord, second, that he asked counsel of a familiar spirit, and thirdly, that he inquired not of the Lord. Let us beware of each of these three sins. They tempt us as they tempted him. Disobedience to the distinct law of God opens the door to even darker crimes which ultimately overwhelm men's souls. Let it never be ours to lift the curtain of the unseen. Our duty is to inquire of the Lord in all times of perplexity, turning to Him only, and waiting until He indicates his will.

The men of Jabesh Gilead teach us a lesson of gratitude. They were more thoughtful of the master who had delivered them from physical death, than we are of Christ, who by his blood has emancipated us from the thraldom of Satan. In the days of the crusades they fought for the sepulchre; in these, let us fight for the crown rights of the living Saviour. Gratitude should constrain us to live for Him.

MONDAY, APRIL 3.—1 CHRON. XI.

Through the condescension and love of Jesus we may address Him, as Israel did David. Since the children were partakers of flesh and blood, He also took part in the same. The King is akin to us. And therefore, by the ties of a common brotherhood, He has a claim on us. It is by Him also that the sheep are led out and brought in. Oh that this was always true of us; that the issues and return-tides of our life were in Him. But, yet again, Jesus is king by prescriptive right. God has made Him king, and shepherd, and prince. "Him hath God exalted by his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour."

The word king is said to be allied to can. David showed prowess as well as statesmanship in taking immediate steps to capture Jerusalem from the Canaanites, and constituting it his chief city. So Jesus stormed the citadel of death when He descended into the grave, and on the third day rose again, more than a conqueror.

It is very stimulating to read the names of these mighty men, and consider their exploits. But what a list is that which is being made yonder of the mighty men of our Lord's army, who have shown themselves strong with Him, to make Him king! Stress is laid on deeds of individual heroism. Let us not trust too much in committees or organisations, but be on the alert for any isolated and single occasions of playing a noble part for our unseen Lord.

TUESDAY, APRIL 4.—1 CHRON. XII.

It is thus that recruits are being gathered for the army of Jesus. He is yet keeping Himself close, and the supreme power seems to lie with his great foe. But ere long He will be manifested, and come to be recognised as the rightful king of the world. Meanwhile his kingdom is in mystery, and individual souls are joining it by ones, and twos, by little bands.

There are Gadites who separate themselves unto Him, equally fit for attack or defence, and swift to do his bidding. Nothing in themselves, but their weakness is their strength, so that, by the power of the Holy Ghost the least is equal to a hundred, and the greatest to a thousand.

There are Benjamites who know something of the peace which is the portion of the Lord's beloved, and who profess entire consecration, crying, "Thine are we, Jesus; and thine, oh blessed Son of God."

There are men of Manasseh who help in the war, and swell the hosts, like the hosts of God.

And what more shall we say of those who come to make Jesus King? Those who have not a double heart, or who can set the battle in array, or who offer an undivided allegiance, or who can keep rank, these are they who eat and drink with the king, and share his joy. Is your name expressed among the names of the heroes who are gathering around the true David, from out the kingdom of Saul?

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5.—1 CHRON. XIII.

What a great convocation was this! As soon as David came to the throne, the spirit of unity commenced to work among his people. Put Jesus in his right place, and there is a nucleus for a united Church. We become one, not at the bidding of a Church or a creed, but in union with the living King. The more men make of Christ, the less they will make of sectarian differences. He unifies his flock.

It is worthy also of notice that with the recognition of the King and the recovery of the Ark, there came an outburst of holy song. A revived people is always a singing people. So far from consecration silencing the gladness of man there is nothing which is so provocative of the heart's minstrelsy. Put Jesus in his right place, and there will be a new song.

The distinct commands of God could not be put aside with impunity. It was prescribed that the Ark should be borne on the shoulders of living men. This was set aside, and an act of disobedience inaugurated which might have led to others more flagrant and disastrous. It was right and wise, therefore, that this first should be immediately and terribly arrested. However pure our motives may be, we cannot please God if we set aside his distinct commands.

But see, that Ark which was a curse to the disobedient, was fraught with blessing to Obed-edom. The Gospel is a savour of life unto life and of death unto death, but which is entirely determined by the way in which we act towards it.

THURSDAY, APRIL 6.—1 CHRON. XIV.

David perceived! The intelligence only gradually broke on his soul. Such a discovery still breaks on men. As life advances they suddenly learn that they are endowed with specific powers. Happy are they if, simultaneously, there arises the determination to use them only for the sake of others. In David's case the consciousness of his powers seems to have led him into selfish indulgence. And in the gathering around him of many wives he not only injured his own character but sowed the seeds of harvests of bitter suffering in later years.

Twice over the Philistines came. In each case David inquired of the Lord to know his duty. He might have been tempted to suppose that once asking would have sufficed, and that on the second occasion he might act on the guidance given for the first. Well was it for him, however, that he did not, but inquired again. For there was a different lesson to be learnt on each occasion: a different method of deliverance; a different way of escape. Let us ponder the lesson well. Our past experiences will not avail us in new contingencies. Sometimes God says, "Go up"; at other times, "Thou shalt not go up." Not unfrequently we have to wait till we hear the sound of going, as though the hosts of heaven were hurrying past in their battalions. We know so little of the conditions of the heavenly world that we are wise to wait on God to know his way and to act on his bidding. In all cases He fights for his own.

FRIDAY, APRIL 7.—1 CHRON. XV.

The Ark of God could be carried only by sanctified men. Be ye clean, ye that bear the vessels of the Lord. Let all those who are engaged in proclaiming the precious Gospel see to it that they are free from the pollution around them in the world.

Let us always respect the rules and regulations that God has laid down for his service and worship. We cannot expect his blessing unless we act according to the ordinance.

Much attention was given to the minstrelsy; not only as to singers, but as to instruments, cymbals, psalteries, and harps. But the humbler office of doorkeeper is mentioned almost in the same breath, because in God's sight the spirit in which the humblest worker fills his office may lift it and him to the level of the loftiest. It is not what we do, but how we do, that endears us to God.

Psalms lxviii. and cxxxii. were probably, amongst others, composed for this occasion; and it must have been an impressive spectacle to see the solemn pomp with which the Ark was borne to its resting-place. What a searching inquiry is suggested here! Have you put the Lord Jesus in his right place? If not, what wonder that your life is out of sorts? But so surely as He is borne to the prepared place in the heart the song of the Lord will follow, and there will be shoutings and soundings aloud of music, together with assured victory over every foe.

SATURDAY, APRIL 8.—1 CHRON. XVI.

As the act of Mary stirred up the hate of Judas, so did the enthusiasm of David arouse the sarcastic taunts of Michal. It is a sad sign of a lack of holy devotion and enthusiasm when life is destitute of a Michal. But no Michal should stay us in our blessing men or praising God. In each of these David excelled, as this chapter shows. On the one hand he blessed the people, and dealt out to them bread; on the other he made it his chief work to give thanks unto the Lord by his bands of singers.

This Psalm became the basis of several Psalms, into which it was afterwards broken up. It is full of gems of thought and expression. The Psalmist brims over with pions ecstasy. He sings of God's doings and strength; his covenant and promise, his works and name, his mercy and salvation. And his strains rise till they ignite the physical world with sparks of holy joy, and all nature responds.

The minstrels were set apart, like the priests, for daily service, so that no sacrifices were offered unaccompanied with psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs. There was perpetual mention made of the mercy that endureth for ever. So should it always be. Our sacrifices should not be lugubrious and melancholy, but mingled with the song which faith can sing, though her feet are fast in the stocks.

APRIL 9.

AFFLICTIONS SANCTIFIED.—Job v. 17—27.

GOLDEN TEXT: Heb. xii. 6.

Of the many theories about the book of Job, the most probable is that which regards it as an actual history told in poetic form. That Job was an actual person is clear from Ezek. xiv. 20 and James v. 11. "The land of Uz" (Job i. 1), though not identical with Edom, was an extensive region, in which Edom was included (Lam. iv. 21). Of one of three friends of Job, Zophar, nothing else can be known. An Eliphaz appears in Gen. xxxvi. 10, 11, as one of the sons of Esau, and as the father of Teman. Teman, as the name of a place, is the same as Edom (Jer. xlix. 7). Bildad the Shuhite recalls Gen. xxv. 2, where Shuah appears as one of the sons of Abraham by Keturah. These references make it probable that the events of this book occurred in the region of Edom, and about the time of Jacob and his sons. There is much uncertainty about the authorship of the book, which, however, does not in the least affect its truthfulness or instructiveness.

Before dealing with the verses that form this lesson it will be wise to give the scholars a brief summary of the whole course of this book, from the time when Job, a righteous and prosperous man, is suddenly deprived of everything, and afflicted with a painful and loathsome disease; through the course of the dialogue with his three friends, the address of Elihu, and afterwards the interposition of God; and on to the time when, the affliction having served its purpose, Job is restored to greater prosperity than he enjoyed before. Without some such summary the few lessons from this book will not be understood.

Then seek to realise the scene: Job sitting among the ashes, loathsome to himself and to others; his three friends so affected with the sight that for seven days they sit silent before him (Job ii. 8, 11—13). Then the first to speak is Job, whose deep anguish had been gathering strength day by day, as he "opened his mouth and cursed his day" (iii.).

Eliphaz, probably the eldest of the three friends, is the first to reply. Underlying all he says is the one deep conviction shared by his friends, that all specially severe affliction is the result of some special sin. Is this correct? (See Jno. ix. 2; Luke xiii. 1.) It was a surprise to Eliphaz that Job had not made confession of sin. This theory of Eliphaz, certainly incapable of general application, renders it impossible for us to accept as true all that he has to say. But some of his utterances are adopted in other parts of Scripture as the Word of God. This is true of the verses that form this lesson (comp. Psa. xciv. 12; Prov. iii. 11, 12; Heb. xii. 5). We must interpret them according to God's meaning, not in the sense which Eliphaz attached to them.

"Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth" (17), is the text of all that follows. The meaning which Eliphaz attaches to this is manifestly that affliction is the direct result of sin, that therefore it should not be despised, and that when the sin is removed, God will cease to afflict, and will restore prosperity and long life to the afflicted one. This appeals to the very spirit which Satan declared to be the secret of Job's piety. To fear God because it pays in a temporal sense, is a poor sort of piety.

To read it in the light of the New Testament enables us to see that God afflicts us as our Father; the subjects of affliction as often trustful and obedient children; the benefits of the affliction as not temporal advancement, but the peaceable fruits of righteousness (Heb. xii. 5-11). Only in a spiritual sense is the deliverance promised by Eliphaz true. The lessons suggested by these verses are:—

(1) That God is the source of affliction (17). See the part that Satan had in Job's trial, and the different agencies employed. Yet Job recognises God behind all (i. 21, ii. 10). Eliphaz was right in calling it the Lord's correction. All the forces that surround us, and even Satan himself, are under God's over-ruling power.

(2) That affliction has always a purpose of blessing (18). Not always, as Eliphaz supposed, to discover and to punish special sin. There are certain graces of the Christian character that are only exercised in trial. Affliction to the Christian is like pruning to the vine branch, like the fierce fire to the gold.

(3) That affliction should therefore be patiently received. We "despise" it when we harden ourselves against it; refuse to inquire the reason for it; and reject the lesson it is intended to teach. A boy who, receiving deserved chastisement from his parents, refuses to show that he feels it, is despising what is for his good (Heb. xii. 9).

Do not make the mistake of applying the term affliction to only big troubles like Job's. Young disciples have them—their disappointments, their being misjudged and slandered, their loss of friends, their little persecutions for Christ's sake—these are the chastening of the Lord.

Easter Poems.

In the lovely April morning
Let us early rise and sing
Sweet and loyal Alleluias
To our glorious risen King.
With faith's eagle eye adoring,
Let us gaze upon the Sun,
In the splendour of his dawning
And his onward march begun.

Dark the night and very dreary,
Stained with tears of bitter woe,
For the prophets thus foretold it
In the ages long ago;
But the life, not death, hath conquered,
And He lives for evermore,
And the Father hath by Him for us
Set wide the sin-closed door.

By the precious blood of purchase,
Shed for "whosoever will,"
By the life yet "more abundant"
Each ransomed heart to fill,
Be our aim henceforth to live alone
To Him who freely gave
"His own self," a willing sacrifice,
The sinner lost to save.

All the glory of his calling,
Day by day unfolded still;
Always, spite of seeming failure,
Good triumphant over ill.
So for ever onward, upward,
Into "greater things than these,"
Life's perpetual Easter glory,
Seeking only Him to please.

Set the joy-bells ever ringing,
In the tone, and look, and smile,
Shedding gladness on life's pathway,
All along the "little while,"
Till He comes again in glory,
"This same Jesus," ever ours,
To bring home his own redeemed ones
To the everlasting bowers.

A. A. M.

And when the weeping ones draw near,
Behold the tomb is open wide,
Kind angels bid them not to fear,
Who know they seek the Crucified;
But He for aye hath left the shade,
"Come see the place where He was laid."

Celestial radiance sheds it o'er,
And there they see with wond'ring eye,
The spotless linen clothes He wore,
With careful love are folded by;
He thought of those who loved Him best,
And sadly robed Him for his rest.

The Magdalene bemoaned her "choice,"
And lifted not her anguished eyes;
He speaks, and well she knows the voice
That bade her soul from death arise;
And now He bids her, in his name,
His resurrection to proclaim.

And in the lonely upper room,
All joy, and hope, and aim have fled;
His chosen sit in deepest gloom,
With Jesus, every heart is dead;
When shining through the darkness dim,
They see his face and rise with Him.

But Easter dawn is breaking,
And angel wings do spread,
And heart to heart is whisp'ring,
"The Lord is risen indeed."

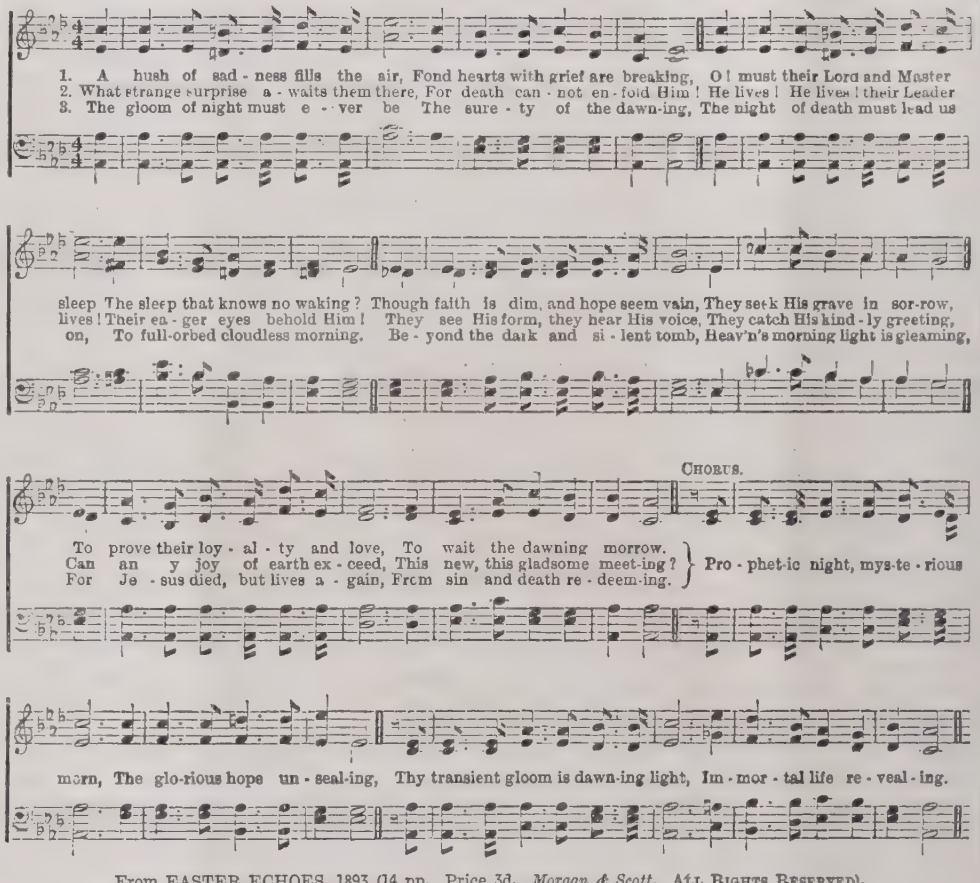
O cross with thy sad story,
Our souls would dreary be,
But for the holy radiance
Which Easter sheds on Thee.
With awe we view the nail-prints,
And mark the wounded side;
Lo! He, Himself, is with us,
And we are justified!

Wrentham.

Far away, o'er mead and glade,
In the chequered sun and shade,
Rise the Easter flowers fair
From earth's gloomy sepulchre.

Tender winds are breathing balm,
Birds pour forth their Easter psalm,
Robed in beauty's sweet perfection
Nature wakes to resurrection.

Golden sunbeams, birds, and flowers,
Gladness of these Easter hours,
God's own emblematic preachers,
Say, shall they not be our teachers?



As the flowers, so are we,
Bound by earth's mortality,
Yet, like them, we, too, may rise
To the sunlight of God's skies.

May we chase earth's transient gloom,
With his light its path illume,
Till its shadows pass away
In the light of heavenly day.

LICHFIELD SOLDIERS' HOME.

The third annual report of the Lichfield Soldiers' Home shows that in addition to spiritual fruit there has been good progress in temperance work. Soldiers' wives are gathered in mothers' meetings, and the children are not overlooked. As in all such enterprises there has been disappointment as well as encouragement.

One old soldier who has left the army for civil life writes:—"I have devoted myself to God's work in fighting against the drink. Almost every night I have an hour in the mission hall, and go to visit those who have fallen back from us."

Another soldier, who has been removed elsewhere, writes: "Leaving Lichfield was like leaving home, and I felt it very much. I shall never take to another place like it. Especially during the last eighteen months of my stay there, it was the happiest time that I have experienced in my life, and I look on it as being the birthplace of my Christianity. It was there where I was converted. How I miss the many blessed meetings, which I used to enjoy so very much! The blessings that I have received to my soul at the Soldiers' Home will ever be remembered by me as long as I live, and what it has done for me it has done for many more." Such testimonies, which could easily be multiplied, are very encouraging to the workers.

The refreshment room, which was originally started with the object of providing wholesome food and non-intoxicating drinks to the men, has not only accomplished its original object, but has come in as a most timely ally by providing funds in aid of the home, which assuredly deserves well of those who sympathise with soldiers in their privations and temptations. The hon. superintendent is Major Seton Churchill, White Hall, Lichfield.

"Go, tell that He is risen from the dead."

Hail, glorious morn, hail, hour of strength;
O saints of God, awake, arise.
Our day of triumph dawns at length;
The powers of darkness fall; death dies;
Of victory, victory be our song,
For Christ is stronger than the strong.

In all his might, with willing power,
His life for us He freely gave,
He laid it down, in that dread hour,
From sin and death our souls to save;
But now "He liveth unto God"—
Go tell the tidings all abroad.

At earliest dawn, with earthquake dread,
The mighty Michael earthward flew.
The keepers fell around as dead,
As his bright presence nearer drew,
Then like a monarch taking throne.
He rolled, and sat upon the stone.

But lo, with sudden reverence bow'd,
He wraps his face in veiling wing,
For, rising from his winding shroud,
Behold there treadeth forth his King,
In living majesty his Lord,
Hath woke, and risen, and walks abroad.

Oh, radiant and resplendent Lord,
With reverent joy, and worship sweet,
To Thee our highest love is poured,
And though we may not clasp Thy feet,
Yet all may forth with gladness speed,
To tell that Thou art "risen indeed."

And they that hear, and they that tell,
Must gird the shining garments on
Of life and truth, and strive to dwell
In that bright place where Thou art gone,
Yea, all who feel thy power and love
Must "seek those things that are above."

The pure, the sanctified are there,
And they with us and we with them
Would each become a jewel rare,
To form a glorious diadem,
A halo brighter than the sun,
To crown our King, our Risen One.

THE LATE PRINCIPAL DAVID GRACEY,

OF THE PASTORS' COLLEGE.

SOME lives are remarkable for the area they cover; others for the degree of their penetrative power; only a few combine both excellencies in one, and are distinguished alike by range and intensity. The late Principal David Gracey, who so recently has passed from us, belonged to the second class enumerated. He will not be so much widely as deeply remembered; nor will his sudden, and, as it seems to us, early decease, affect so much the unthinking multitude, as the serious few. No higher praise, however, can well be associated with any career than is recorded in this fact. The influence of penetrative power may not be one easy to register; but, like the hidden and silent forces of nature, it is all the more potent because the eye may not follow it, nor the ear adjudge its value.

Mr. Gracey has exercised a formative influence on many minds; in his brief career he has done not a little to mould the habits of thought, and views of truth, of a whole generation of ministers; and now, though his tongue is stilled on earth, the fruits of his work survive in hundreds of teachers at home, in the colonies, and on the mission field, who certainly will not care less for the truths he has taught, and the impress he has made, because the night has come when he can work no more.

Born in 1841, Mr. Gracey had not completed his fifty-second year when on Thursday, February 9, towards midnight, he entered into rest. He was one of Ulster's many capable sons, and was brought up in the Presbyterian faith, which seems now indigenous to that soil. Differing, while yet a youth, from the Presbyterians on the subject of baptism, he joined the Baptists, in whose ranks he henceforth continued. We next find him, after a brief pursuit of commerce, an Art student in Glasgow University, whither his desire for the ministry and strong studious bent had drawn him. It was here, in the middle of his Arts course, that the great event took place which was destined to colour and determine his whole subsequent history.

We refer to his meeting with Mr. Spurgeon on the occasion of his visit to Glasgow in 1861. No sooner had young Gracey heard "the Prince of Preachers" than the desire seized him to enter the Tabernacle College, and be forthwith associated with the great personality that rested now upon him as a spell. To this end he sought an interview with Mr. Spurgeon, the result being that he entered the Pastors' College as a student in the theological classes, and as assistant-tutor in other departments. Very soon, upon the illness of Mr. Cubitt, he became classical tutor, a post which he retained until the resignation of Mr. Rogers in 1881, when he was appointed as Principal of the College. Mr. Gracey's period of service, therefore, in the Pastors' College extends over thirty years, and ranks as the longest official record.

It is not, however, the length but the depth of the service rendered upon which the note of emphasis mainly rests. The students all felt the charm of his personality. As a tutor he won their respect and confidence. Unquestionably he had gifts of a high order, qualifying him for his office. A teacher of students must himself be a student. The ardour of first love for the various studies, theological and classical, must remain; nay, what is more, this ardour must grow. There is no possible means of holding students well in hand, if the themes discussed are anatomically dissected, and if the tongue be but the cold scribe of a lifeless heart. Mr. Gracey remained to the end of his days a student, and was among students but as one of larger growth. He had a felt interest in the knowledge he communicated, and awoke in others the charm which only the sense of it can beget.

Mr. Gracey's order of mind was largely causal. He reasoned more than he compared. He could touch nothing with a light hand. His was a brain of capacity, and no treatment that was one-sided or superficial could be endured. He must be thorough and, if possible, exhaustive in research. Hence his theological lectures were systematic and elaborate, while in classics and Hebrew he showed a scholarship marked by minuteness and care. The grounds of his popularity were solidly laid, and if his convictions on all points were not always quickly formed, they were usually tenaciously adhered to. Mr. Gracey was ever ready, as the debates showed, with many forceful, if not infallible arguments in support of every position he took up.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.)

As might be expected, Mr. Gracey's scheme of theology coincided with that of the late beloved founder of the college, that is to say, it was a scheme of moderate Calvinism. He adhered to the doctrines of grace and stood clear of the "down-grade" tendencies of the times. Howbeit, he did not see, what many perceive, the darkening shadows of the latter days. He was post-millennial in his convictions. Bad as the world was, and ominous as many of the signs of the times were, Mr. Gracey believed, and strenuously taught, that improvement was the law at work in Christendom and throughout the nations. The latter-day glory was gilding the mountain-tops, the Gospel was being diffused, and if events moved slowly, yet they moved surely, to the goal of Christ's eventual triumph. Such sentiments were among Mr. Gracey's latest college utterances.

His personal qualities rendered him much beloved. The basis was strength, but the strength was not rugged, for there was blended with it kindliness and consideration. A rich vein of humour served in lieu of sarcasm, and relieved the necessary duty of plainspokenness.

Exactly seven years ago, dating from the day of his death, Mr. Gracey suffered in a railway accident at Finsbury Park, and was for about a year incapacitated for active work. We are unable to say whether the shock then sustained precipitated the end. This we know, "Our times are in God's hands." Mr. Gracey has fallen on sleep at an unlooked-for hour. Even those watching round his bedside did not suspect, till the afternoon of the day on which he died, that the sun of his mortal life had touched the horizon. Mr. Gracey leaves a wife and a grown-up family of four sons and one daughter to mourn, not his, but their loss, and a gap to fill which is all the greater by reason of his long period of capable service, and the traditions that must needs now cluster around his memory.

Y.M.C.A EXTENSION.—II.

The work done by the missionary secretary, Mr. George Holmes, who has been sent out by the National Council at Gibraltar and Malta, was reviewed in our previous article. Leaving Malta, he proceeded to a seemingly unlikely sphere in which to form a Y.M.C.A. However, many opportunities for usefulness were presented here; and several excellent meetings were held. Among other workers on the spot, Mr. Holmes found a young Egyptian Christian, who was doing a good work amongst the natives, and it was in the mission hall of this friend—nothing better than a low-pitched Arab shanty—that he delivered his first address, which was interpreted into Arabic. A member of the Newcastle Y.M.C.A. was found residing here, in charge of the electric lighting of the Suez Canal; a Mr. Locke also, who superintends the work at the Sailors' Rest, is rendering the best possible service among the sailors and others passing through the canal. The last-named gentleman undertook to be secretary of the Port Said Y.M.C.A. if a branch could be formed, and set apart a good room for Association purposes. It was not then difficult to commence the work, and the names of about a dozen young men who were determined to gather others about them were forthwith enrolled as members. Several of them, Mr. Holmes subsequently learned, left the place shortly afterwards; but sufficient remain to be carrying on what will doubtless prove in time a very useful auxiliary. Any such rallying place for young men is a boon in Port Said, where iniquity and vice of all sorts prevail to a deplorable extent. The quarters of the Association adjoin the Bible Society's House, and, being close to the landing place, will be constantly recognised by passengers to and from the East.

CAIRO.

A variety of interest crowded into the journey of Mr. Holmes from Port Said to Cairo. The land portion of the journey, as far as Tel-el-Kebir, was rendered exceedingly difficult and uncomfortable through the terrible clouds of dust encountered; but from Tel-el-Kebir onward the scenery was greatly enjoyed. Arriving at Cairo, Mr. Holmes was met at the station by a Christian gentleman, who entertained him at his house. He found Cairo full of visitors, English, American, and Syrian, many of whom were more or less interested in Christian work. Several Y.M.C.A. men again crossed his path—notably some from Beyrout. The American missionaries here greatly helped by providing accommodation for meetings; and as the result of several held an association was formed, thirty young men being enrolled as members. A Sunday afternoon Bible-class, a Thursday evening prayer-meeting, and a Tuesday evening literary class were decided upon. All the printing in connection with the preliminary arrangements was gratuitously done by a young Syrian Christian. Great difficulty was found in the matter of acquiring suitable premises for the newly-formed association, rents being exceedingly high. The missionaries referred to have generously placed a room at disposal pending more suitable accommodation being obtained. At least £60 a year will be required for this purpose.

The urgency of the need felt for help from England, in the form of financial support towards the acquisition of premises, and in the provision of a worker who should visit Cairo at regular intervals to help sustain the work, has found expression in an appeal forwarded direct to the National Council, signed by a number of the influential Christian residents in the city. The need for a Y.M.C.A. here is very great indeed. Large numbers of young men of various nationalities reside in or visit the place, and are exposed to temptations and dangers of an appalling character.

The kind initiative and generosity of Mr. Richard Cory, of Cardiff, who, possessing intimate acquaintance with the needs of the city, placed £100 at the disposal of the National Council for the purpose, led to the sending out of Mr. Holmes. Other friends have helped, but the fund suffices only to meet the requirements connected with Mr. Holmes's missionary tour. The council are most anxious to help forward work for young men at Cairo and other centres. Communications should be addressed to Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton, hon. treasurer of the Colonial and Foreign Department of Y.M.C.A.'s, Exeter Hall.

ALEXANDRIA.

Reaching Alexandria, Mr. Holmes met Admiral Grant, who accompanied him on visits to the different ministers. A meeting was convened, at which upwards of fifty persons were present, comprising some of the principal residents, also a number of English young men from business houses, with a few Syrians, Egyptians, Germans, etc. Admiral Grant presided, and was supported on the platform by representatives of the different missionary societies, three of whom spoke in favour of a branch being formed. Four ministers present stated that they had been members of the Association at home. A preliminary committee was formed, which met at once. Again, the acquiring of suitable rooms for the work presented a difficulty, a rent of £50 being asked. Mr. Adeney, of the British and Foreign Bible Society (formerly a member at Aldersgate-street), provided temporary accommodation, and was appointed honorary secretary, with a young German Christian, a Mr. Gouldner, for his assistant.

Upwards of fifty young men have already joined the Association—English, Copts, Mahommedans, etc. Of the English members, seven are employés of the Eastern Telegraphic Company. A Sunday Bible class, a week evening devotional meeting, and literary and educational classes have been inaugurated.

Mr. Holmes writes:—"All here agree that the need for a Y.M.C.A. in Alexandria is exceptionally great. One gentleman informed me that he knew of many young fellows who had come to ruin after being out here a short time only; and I myself have seen enough to convince me that the road to ruin is a very easy one in Alexandria. Compared with Malta, I think Alexandria has greater temptations to young men, and perhaps of a worse kind; and many have already expressed to me their great pleasure at the prospect before them in connection with the new Association."

Mr. Holmes appeals for Christian papers, including missionary and Y.M.C.A. magazines, to be sent regularly to the new Associations formed during his tour. They are as follows:—

GIBRALTAR.—Mr. F. Coupland, Soldiers' Institute; care of Captain Armstrong, Soldiers' Home.
ALGECIRAS (South Spain).—Mr. H. Watson, care of Captain Armstrong, as above.
MALTA.—Mr. C. Boyle, Sailors' Home, San Lorenzo; Mr. Chas. Dent, care of Messrs. Crockford, Drapers.
PORT SAID.—Mr. A. Locke, "Strangers' Welcome."
CAIRO.—Mr. Fred Phillips, American Mission.
ALEXANDRIA.—Mr. A. J. Adeney, British and Foreign Bible Society.

All the barracks in Alexandria were visited by Mr. Holmes, and a large number of tracts, etc., delivered by him to young men and others. Our next article will deal with his work in Palestine, at Jaffa, Jerusalem, etc.

SEAMEN'S BETHEL, GLASGOW.

A large and interesting gathering of seamen and their friends was held in the Seamen's Chapel, Glasgow, last week, presided over by Mr. George Smith, of the s.s. City Line. A statement of the year's work was given, which showed much good done, many sailors are witnessing to God's saving and keeping power in various parts of the world.

An interesting feature of the meeting was bidding farewell to Miss Jessie Gibson, of Hillhead, who sails on April 8 for work in connection with the Cape General Mission. Miss Gibson has been a worker among Glasgow sailors for ten years and has much owned of God. It was a touching sight to see a number of sailors and friends linger at the close of the meeting to say good-bye to one who had been the means of blessing to their souls.

SIGNOR CAPELLINI'S WORK.

March 14, the birthday of the King of Italy, is always a golden day in the annals of the Military Church; recording as it does the breaking of the bonds of Romanism, the patriotic fête may well be celebrated by Evangelical Christians. This year the hall was beautifully decorated with flowers, trophies, and flags, and under the Star of Italy, brightly lighted up, was placed the bust of his Majesty Umberto I. The large church adjoining was filled at the appointed hour, not only by many hundreds of soldiers of all grades, and of all arms of the service, from sailors to bersaglieri, but also with over a hundred foreigners belonging to every civilised nation. And all had come to testify to the greatness and importance of this work in Italy, and to listen to the discourses of my fellow soldiers, which treated from various points of view the one subject, "Religion and Country."

Dr. Gordon Gray, of the Scotch Church, presided, and showed, in an opening address, that the progress of the Military Church is notably due, under God, to the constant activity of the pastor, Cav. Capellini, who spares himself no fatigue—witness his journey to Sicily last summer—so as to gather up the members of his congregation. Dr. Gray concluded with the fervent wish that by the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Military Church there may be found money enough to erect a proper edifice in Rome. He then called on the various speakers, all of whom were listened to with the greatest attention, and frequently interrupted with bursts of applause.

Quartermaster Amati spoke more specially on the history of the House of Savoy. The theme of Quartermaster Orlando was "The 14th March and the Church." He showed the great advantages which we possess in our freedom of worship, and how, in a short time, the Gospel will be spread throughout all Italy. Quartermaster Cugini took "Country and Religion," maintaining that the love of country cannot be true and enduring if it is not refined and sanctified by true religion. "Rome, as the capital of the Kingdom of Italy, is an accomplished fact; whilst Rome, as Evangelical, is a fact which has to be carried out, but which progresses, and which the new generation, educated in sentiments of truth, will certainly see fulfilled."

After the singing of a hymn, and prayer by a deacon of the Eleventh Regiment, Sergeant Russo, the president, called on Quartermasters Paglino, Cecconi, and Naddeo to speak. Paglino read a splendid discourse, entitled "To-day." Cecconi held that the Papacy has forgotten the words of St. Augustine, who said that "The Popes, for fear of losing the temporal power, neglected the spiritual, and thus lost the one and the other." He closed exclaiming, "Alleluia is our cry! Christ reigneth! Alleluia!" Naddeo, speaking on "Liberty and the Gospel," closed with the appeal: "Oh, companions in arms, let us all embrace the Gospel, and thus the Papacy will be overturned. The Gospel alone can dissolve the discords which divide Italy into factions and parties: with the Gospel alone the life of the citizens can flourish."

Rev. H. J. Piggott made a résumé of all the speeches, in the spirit of a true patriotic Italian. Then followed a thanksgiving hymn, and after a prayer by Quartermaster Gazzera (deacon), the president closed with the Benediction.

Nearly a quarter of a century has passed since this mission was begun; it has already brought forth much fruit, and progresses every day. We soldiers are proud of our church, and of our festival on March 14, which seems to say, "This work exists for the protection of that King whose birthday we celebrate. The church has overcome all the designs laid against it; and thus we can say that even in Rome, with the Papacy, it is possible to preach the Gospel. And whilst the Vatican celebrates its fêtes with closed doors, we, the Military Church, with wide open doors, hold our Evangelical rejoicings."

Rome, March 15. Nicolo Piccoli (Elder).

CHILDREN'S FRIENDS.—The East Dorset and West Hants Aid Committee of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children shows good work for the year, not only in co-operating with and aiding the central society, but also acting locally on behalf of little ones cruelly treated. During the past year seventy-four cases have been dealt with in one way or another. The local secretary is Mr. Cridland, Observer Chambers, Bournemouth.

AMONG FRENCH PRIESTS.

"I see clearly that the teachings of the Gospels and St. Paul's Epistles are in several points diametrically opposed to the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church. That sacrilegious perversion of the Gospel, and the sad consequences which it involves, make me groan night and day. I see nothing before me but to leave the false course upon which I blindly entered, but I am dismayed by the disgrace and persecution into which this will plunge me. The conflict wears me out. Do help me!" It is in such terms as these that French Roman Catholic priests, whose eyes have been opened to see the errors of the Papacy, write to M. Eug. Réveillaud and others who are known to be in sympathy with efforts for their spiritual emancipation.

Professor L. J. Bertrand, of Paris, of Huguenot descent and high standing in the French Protestant community, is at present visiting England to advocate the claims of the Œuvre des Prêtres. At home and abroad the professor has done much for the enlightenment of his people; he has engaged in home mission work, and ably pleaded on its behalf in America and elsewhere. With others he has, of late, been led to feel deeply for the many priests of France who are seeking and sighing for GOSPEL LIGHT AND LIBERTY.

And verily their condition is grievous in the extreme, for their seminary training has gone far to render them, to use the language of one, "incapable of doing anything beyond saying mass." In France the University degree is compulsory in many walks of life. Protestant pastors must graduate; but Napoleon I. gave permission to the Roman Catholic bishops to ordain priests without degrees. Hence, when a Papist comes to the light, and wishes to serve God and his compatriots in the Gospel ministry, he has, in effect, to go to school again! Out of the Church of Rome is a severe struggle; but afterwards new difficulties are encountered, for on the one hand there is a lack of commercial aptitude, and on the other hand inadequate education to qualify for professional life.

That there are many unhappy priests in France is evident from the action of the brave few who assert their liberty. It was recently found that with a very small outlay (about £80 per annum) the Œuvre des Prêtres had enabled some thirty priests to act up to their convictions. Of these, fifteen are now faithful pastors, evangelists, or missionaries; one is a schoolmaster; and the others are engaged in business. These men had to endure many hardships. Their education had been little beyond a and white is black; coming to realise the folly of this, they had to learn a new form of religious speech—even Scripture language has been perverted to false significance by Rome. Then such as chose the pastoral sphere had to go through a course of theological study. As for such as were most fitted for commercial life, they had to be befriended at the outset. Quite early in the work it was found that no sooner were unfrocked priests settled in situations than some "friend" or "well-wisher" wrote to their employers casting suspicion upon them, or, indeed, boldly traducing their characters. This is Rome's way of punishing her rebellious sons! Hence, the mission has been compelled to provide sums of money for ex-priests to deposit by way of guaranteeing their honesty. All the guarantees that have so far been advanced have been honoured in a most gratifying manner—the sums have been paid back without a penny being lost.

One after another, ex-priests inform the friends of the work that hundreds of their confrères are in the same cruel situation as they were, and know not which way to turn for relief. On one occasion, hearing a coachman scold his restive steed in a forcible classical quotation, Professor Bertrand inquired as to the meaning of such a circumstance. The man then told his painful story. He had been a priest, but could do nothing in the world but attend to horses; so he got work as a coachman. He declared that there are no fewer than earning their living by coach-driving in Paris. It must be real conviction that sustains men to make such a revolt and incur such privation. By smothering their consciences, they might remain in the Papal system; but this they refuse to do.

One man—first vicar of a cathedral, the next in dignity to the bishop—told Professor Bertrand that he was dedicated to the priesthood for the eternal salvation of his mother. He no longer believed in the Church; but to leave her would kill his mother. What was he to do? He knew nothing of the world—he could do nothing, and was ashamed to beg. "Do you know," he said, "there are hundreds and hundreds of priests in my position? We have more than two thousand vacant churches in France, because our young priests leave as soon as they have opportunity. The rich no longer give their sons to the Church, so we have to recruit the priesthood among the poorest of the people."

The fifth report of the Mission states that those priests who, after training, have have done very useful work. Three are labouring in England or in French-speaking islands under the British crown. One of them, writing recently from Mahé, one of the Seychelles, rehearsed the encouragements and joys of his new ministry, describing the places of worship he had been privileged to build, for those whom he serves and nurtures in the Word of the Gospel. And so on, of workers in various parts of France, as evangelists and pastors, colporteurs and missionaries. Much more might be done were the Society in a position to assist in the many worthy cases which present themselves. As a Papist interviewer of M. Bertrand remarked: "You Protestants do not see your opportunity. If we in the Church of Rome had the chance of converting Holland, England, or the United States, we would find millions of francs. Is it true that the Protestants of Holland, England, and the United States can do nothing to provoke a religious movement in France—nothing more than glean individual souls, as they do to-day?"

Communications for Professor Bertrand may be addressed to 21, Upper Woburn-place, W.C.

UNION HALL MISSION.

The thirty-third annual gathering of the Workers, Friends, and Young Believers connected with this mission took place on Tuesday, 21st inst., at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road. The afternoon meeting for praise and addresses was specially characterised by spiritual power and blessing. The large room, as usual, was well filled with friends from different parts, and it was very cheering to meet so many who sympathise in this good work.

The address given by Mr. Edmund Ives on "Liberty" was very instructive and helpful. Dr. Thos. Neatby followed with a deeply spiritual and powerful address on the words, "Christ Jesus My Lord." All felt that it was good to be there, and that his servant was dwelling in the King's presence for this service.

Nearly 250 persons sat down to tea at six o'clock, and at seven o'clock the hall was occupied by a large and interested audience. Mr. Jas. E. Mathieson occupied the chair, and in his address spoke of the blessing the mission had been made during the past thirty-three years, and of his being the first chairman of the work in 1860. He also spoke of the wonderful blessing God had made this, and many other such like missions since the great revival of 1859 and 1860.

Mr. Robert Bilke read several extracts from the report, which spoke of the cheering work carried on during the past year, and showing that a regular organised mission work is being carried on in several poor localities of this city. The services in the halls, the open-air preaching, the house-to-house visitation, the work among the children and young people, and the Gospel work in the tents all go to show that a great aggressive work is being carried forward by these friends. Mr. Bilke deeply regretted that they had to close the year a little over £30 in debt, and said that throughout the year they had had the greatest difficulty in sustaining the mission.

Impressive addresses then followed by Mr. Thos. B. Miller, Mr. John E. Taylor, Mr. Wm. R. Lane, Mr. Chas. S. Thorpe, and Mr. John McAuliffe.

Mr. Bilke will be grateful for any help sent to enable him to pay off the balance due and to carry forward this important work. His address is Abergeldie, Greenhill-road, Harlesden, N.W.

ORCHARD MISSION, PECKHAM, S.E., commenced a new chapter in its history on Monday, March 5, when the largest house in Blue Anchor-lane was occupied for its work. The secretary is Mr. R. Frank Smith. This mission is situated in the midst of a colony of costermongers and labourers.

ON THE LABRADOR COAST.

The Mission Hospital ship Albert worked some time ago on the coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland. Leaving St. John's for Labrador, intending to sail north, and work south with the Polar current, we had to contend with dense fogs, numerous icebergs, and a very imperfectly surveyed coast, which has neither buoy nor lighthouse to guide the stranger. We ran on August 8th into a little natural inlet, where we found a number of mud huts belonging to the fishermen, and one with a few stores in it belonging to one of the merchants. Briefly, there are visiting this inhospitable coast every year a crowd of men, women, and children numbering some 30,000. These fish for cod, which is split, dried, salted, and shipped chiefly to Mediterranean markets. There are also about 5000 people called "livères," who eke out a miserable existence on the Labrador, battling with misery, poverty, and starvation. These are of English descent, are English-speaking, and are British subjects. The coast is 1100 miles long, and for eight months of the year at least it is cut off from the inside world by the frozen sea. . . . . .

To crown the whole and crush what spirit remains in the fisherfolk is the terrible curse of the truck system. A fisherman is seldom or never solvent. He and his belongings are the property of the merchant. Besides, the means for surveying the vessels before they leave for Labrador are wretchedly inadequate, and many a rotten vessel leaves Newfoundland that never would dare to sail from an English port. Overcrowded, and with usually no provision for the separation of the sexes, the small craft leave annually for that barren coast, and as no accurate statistics are kept as to how many leave and how many return, it is possible they may never return.

Then there is no provision for medical assistance. Exposed to all kinds of accident and disease, these poor people have to lie and die. We found places where recently epidemics of diphtheria and influenza had found many victims. In seventy-eight days we treated 900 patients, our cases including gun accidents, boat accidents, consumption, and almost every ailment flesh is heir to.

But, most important of all, there is no provision made for their spiritual welfare. There is one Wesleyan minister up the Straits of Belle Isle, and one up Gross Water Bay, and there is one teacher of the Church of England at the mouth of the Straits of Belle Isle. But what are these on 1100 miles of coast? We found the people very willing to listen to the Gospel. The knowledge that at any moment death's threatening hand may fall on any one helps to remove that expectancy of years of life which so often leads men to postpone the acceptance of Christ.

On returning to St. John's we laid a detailed report before the Governor and principal people, with the result that all recognised the immediate necessity of doing something, and a committee was formed to further the work. The estimated cost for two medical missionaries, two qualified nurses, outfit, keep, and steam launch, will involve an outlay of £2000. The existing condition of the general fund for North Sea work does not justify our council to call on it for the Labrador work.

Rev. W. Hay M. H. Aitken's Work.

Prayer was made for a mission at Great Glenn Church, conducted by Rev. W. Hay Aitken. May we now offer praise that the prayer has been literally fulfilled. Truly he has come with the Lord's message, and the hearts of many have been stirred, as in the days of Haggai. The word was with power, and as night after night large and attentive audience listened to the Gospel, many weary hearts came to Jesus and found rest. Many who were captives to sin have found Christ still mighty to save, and have obtained deliverance from their bondage. The afternoon meetings for the deepening of spiritual life have been especially helpful. On some occasions we have said at the close to those who have never been to a Keswick Convention, "What we have had to-day is the cream of Keswick teaching." Will the Lord's remembrancers pray that the blessing inaugurated on this country district may go on increasing. A. E. Walker.

JEWISH MISSION TOUR.

Mr. C. T. Lipshytz, superintendent of the Barbican Mission to the Jews, has been enabled by the generosity of a friend to make an evangelistic tour in France and Spain. Leaving London on February 4, he went to Paris, where he addressed several meetings, and visited many Jews. Among others whom he met was a Swiss rabbi, who, on perceiving that he was a Christian, deplored having held any conversation with such a one. Subsequently the same man was induced to visit the missionary at his hotel, and was so greatly impressed by what he heard that he said, "If the things you tell me are true, we Jews are in the wrong." Isaiah's prophecy regarding the Servant of the Lord (chap. liii.) had never appeared to him in the light presented by Mr. Lipshytz; he not only accepted a Hebrew New Testament, but on taking leave of the missionary, thanked God for having been permitted to meet him!

Following the missionary's diary, we learn that he was kindly received in many families. In one he found that a New Testament had done its work of enlightenment, and the grateful people expressed sorrow for the rudeness they showed last year, and previously, in turning him out of their house. At Bordeaux he met with many insults, and found no disposition to hear of the Messiah. From Bayonne, where he spoke to a few Jews after the synagogue service, and distributed New Testaments, he passed into Spain, in which country, as is well known, the history of the Jews is written in characters of blood. During recent years a more liberal Government has, in some measure, reversed the order whereby, four centuries ago, Jews were expelled from the land; and some thousands of the scattered nation are now settled there.

Mr. Lipshytz was accompanied by Mr. Millne, a gentleman who has laboured for some years in Spain. He writes:—"After preaching in the American Protestant Church at San Sebastian, I left with the cordial 'farewells' of many, who expressed a desire that I would go again. At Burgos I visited four Jewish families, who, having got over their first suspicions as to my motives, listened attentively to my message that, having raised the crucified Jesus from the dead, God hath made him both Lord and Christ. At Madrid, in the absence of Pastor Fliedner, who was in the South of Spain, Mrs. Fliedner gave me all the information in her power. I learned that there are about a thousand Jews in the city, but my cautious informant added:—'We are not known as Jews, and have no desire to be so known in this wretched country, where our fathers suffered so much.' There is no synagogue in Madrid, but once a year, on the Day of Atonement, the Hebrews assemble for service at the house of a banker.

"In some families I was received with much heartiness, but the people could not understand why I should have taken such a long journey to speak to them about the Messiah. I distributed many Gospels and tracts among the Roman Catholics; and was privileged to preach twice at Chamberi, and to visit the schools in connection with Mr. Fenn's excellent work. In company with Dr. Robert Fenn and Rev. J. W. Lord, Wesleyan minister, I visited Toledo, where, centuries ago, the Jews had two splendid synagogues. These have since been converted into Roman Catholic churches, and, in fact, been used for many other purposes.

"The condition of the Jews in Spain is sad in the extreme. They have more or less given up their religious observances, and no effort seems to be made to bring them under the influence of the Gospel. Some of the descendants of those who, in 1492 (the year of the expulsion), under pressure of fire and sword, pretended to embrace the Romish faith, for the sake of permission to remain in the country, are in their hearts Jews, and assemble as such on the Day of Atonement. Having visited Barcelona, where the Jews asked me to go again, I returned home by way of France. At Marseilles I addressed a meeting at the Sailors' Rest, and preached in the French and German Protestant churches. The tour extended over five weeks, and was fruitful and encouraging in a high degree."

With regard to the work at the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C., Mr. Lipshytz writes:—"The number of attendants at the services during the past year has been over 20,000. Thirty-five have passed through the Home for converts and inquirers. Some of these have been baptized; others are still under instruction."

VISITING IN SHANGHAI.

Dear Sir,—It is now over a year since I returned from England to resume work among Chinese women. A short account of work done may be interesting to friends who knew of my changed circumstances, and who have been helping me by their prayers.

It has been asked what kind of work we do among heathen women, and it may be well to say a little on the subject. We visit women in their homes, preach the Gospel as one would do to little children, with the help of such books as "Peep of Day" and "Talks with Women," specially prepared in the colloquial style, and which are most helpful. They are the last works of two able missionary ladies now resting from their labours.

As a rule, we are well received. My Bible-woman politely tells them at once that we come to tell them of Jesus and his doctrine. We sing a simple hymn, which brings in the neighbours, and also keeps up the interest. We read from one of our books a short chapter, which takes their attention. Then there is a little talk by the Bible-women, after which we read a portion from one of the Gospels, and explain.

We follow this plan in every house, and usually visit three homes in an afternoon. In this way during a year great numbers of women and children, as well as men, who stand outside, hear something of the Gospel story. We invite the children to attend the mission schools, the women to attend the nearest church, where they will hear good doctrine.

It may be asked: What is the result of all this work? The Chinese are a slow people; the women are very dense and ignorant, so it takes a long time to get a simple truth into their minds. Surely it is cause for praise that they are willing to hear. We are glad indeed to be among the number of those who are called to tell the glad tidings among the heathen.

The Lord is with us, and it is his work, therefore his Word will not return to Him void. There are a few who are interested in the doctrine, so far as we can judge. A shopkeeper's wife, whom we met last July after a hot day's work, on our way home, invited us in to preach the doctrine. She had heard a little before, and wanted her husband to hear, so we sat down and read from the Book as she desired; then she led us to some of her relations some little distance off. On entering she introduced us as the "Jesus doctrine people," she had heard it and thought it good; she liked it, and invited them to hear. The next Sunday she came to church. She was dressed up so that I did not know her till she came and requested me to return to her home and read the Book. I think she has taken us to visit all her relations in order that they might hear the doctrine. I think this woman would teach us a lesson in regard to our unconverted relations.

We have visited several higher class families who are willing to have us come and read to them; and we have reason to believe our visits are not in vain. The other day we were in the home of very respectable people whose mother was aged and in bed. She was very pleased to have us come and read the book, telling us that she and her daughters had gone to church, but did not understand. She invited us to return often. It was somewhat strange: the three ladies were all widows. May the Lord give them to know Him, who is the God of all comfort.

We often meet little children who have been at Christian schools, who, by leading us to their homes, are quite helpful in our work. We were visiting in the French concession one day, when none of the women in one court invited us in. We could not understand the reason. We were speaking a few words at their doors, when a little boy came up, saying, "Teacher, I know the doctrine; come to my house and tell mother." We found the street; they were all Roman Catholics, but the boy's mother invited us in, and our singing soon brought in those who refused to receive us. The influence of Christian day-schools is an immense help in getting the good will of the people.

There is a matter for praise and thanksgiving to God in the aggressive work now going on here. All our missionaries are uniting to work this city and settlements, and afterwards the country round about. To enable me to carry on this work, I need £50 a year. A few small sums from the readers of The Christian would soon supply this need,

Sincerely yours,

Margaret Dalziel.

Shanghai, China.

[We commend the foregoing simple but gladdening record to our readers. Our widowed sister who writes, and who is pleasantly remembered by many London friends, is giving all her time and strength to this work of carrying the light of the Gospel into Chinese homes. Christian friends in this country ought to count it a privilege to supply her very modest needs.—Ed.]

MRS. HILTON AND THE CRECHE.

Dear Sir,—May I through your columns express my grateful appreciation, and that of my family, for the widespread sympathy manifested during my dear wife's serious illness? Many letters expressing affectionate interest in her and her work have been accompanied by the comforting assurance that earnest prayer was being continually offered up for her restoration to health and usefulness. For some time the case was considered quite hopeless, but I am thankful to say that there now appears to be satisfactory, though slow, progress towards recovery.

As to her institutions, our youngest son's wife (Mrs. Arthur Hilton), who is well acquainted with my wife's plans and arrangements, has ably and devotedly carried them out. There is, however, one point of considerable anxiety. After twenty-one years of successful work, during which all her needs have been supplied, she has lately found herself deficient in funds. The last year closed with a balance of £300 on the wrong side. Although many subscribers generously sent special donations, they have not nearly made up the amount. During her illness I fear things have not improved. May He to whom the silver and gold belong put it into the hearts of some of his people to send prompt and special help, so that when my wife resumes her labours it may be free from the embarrassment of pecuniary anxieties.

The announced intention to get up a sale of goods must be abandoned.—Yours faithfully,

John Hilton.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The teachers of the Borough-road School met in Conference on Thursday evening, when a paper was read by a lady teacher on the best way of winning the affections of the children. Mr. Johnson presided, and a profitable conversation ensued.

The Bermondsey Ragged School held its annual meeting on Monday, with Mr. John McDougall, L.C.C., in the chair. Mr. Oxford was able to present an encouraging report showing that all the branches of effort had been well maintained and that spiritual blessing had been manifest. Madame Annie Ryall sang solos between the speeches which followed the report.

Rev. W. Cuff met the workers of his mission centres at an annual meeting on Monday evening, when the various secretaries read reports of the work done. Mr. W. C. Parkinson, L.C.C., attended the meeting on behalf of the Ragged School Union.

The Duchess of Sutherland graciously opened a new Home for Working Boys at Bow on Wednesday. Mr. W. H. Dalton, the hon. director, referred to his work at the George-yard Ragged School, and described the home as a sort of offshoot of it, although on an independent footing. Mr. George Holland, the Hon. Granville Waldegrave, and others spoke in commendation of the work.

STROOD.—A good work is carried on in Strood by working-men, watermen and members of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," who, three years ago, were led to start this little mission, which has been so blessed that now the Auction Rooms in the centre of the town are crowded. The other Sunday afternoon was devoted to testimonies, and one after another told of changed hearts, changed tongues, changed homes, and changed lives. As the hall can only be had on Sundays, the week services are held in cottages, and the open air, until a suitable building can be obtained. A site has been all but fixed upon, where the work could develop; but the friends are waiting upon God to know his will in the matter. The workers are earnestly devoted and spiritual, and the work itself is well known to Miss Child, of the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, London.

THE RUSSIAN STUNDISTS.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the paragraph in your last issue calling attention to a special prayer meeting on behalf of the Stundists, allow me to say that the meeting was well attended, and especially by men (including several ministers). There was no address given, but the hour was spent in prayer interspersed with singing and reading of Scripture.

My object, however, in writing is to ask you to allow me to urge your readers everywhere to be much in prayer just now on behalf of the persecuted Stundists in Russia. While it is imprudent to give details, I may mention that at this moment an appeal of a private and confidential nature is being made to some of those in authority in Russia; we may plead earnestly for a blessing on this effort; but our hope is in God. If his believing people unite in general and earnest prayer at this time, we may see great changes on the part of the persecutors, and an alleviation, if not a cessation, of the persecutions.

At the meeting last Friday, other cases of persecution were also mentioned, the Christians in Armenia, a convert in Persia (Mirza Ibrahim), the threatened expulsion of missionaries in North Africa, etc. We have, therefore, much need for earnest pleading with God.—Yours faithfully,

A. J. Arnold,
Genl. Secretary Evangelical Alliance.

PASTOR CHINIQUY.

In a recent letter with respect to the fire by which his home at St. Anne's, Kankakee, Ill., was destroyed, the pastor writes:—

My first thought was that this fire was accidental; but there is no doubt now in my mind that it is the merciless hand of Rome which has for the fifth time brought that terrible ruin upon me! In 1870 that implacable enemy of the Gospel, after having vainly tried to take away my life, set fire to my chapel and burned it into ashes. Twelve days later she put the incendiary torch to my female college, and I lost 12,000 dollars in those two fires. In the years 1884 and 1885 twice Rome destroyed my press, my stereotyped plates, and almost all the volumes of the second and third editions of my works. But through you and The Christian and some other friends I was saved from a complete ruin, and I was enabled to publish new editions.

Very few people understand the terrible difficulties and daily dangers which surround those who consider that it is the duty of every disciple of the Gospel to fight Rome. But let those who want to know the truth on that subject, come and see the wounds I have received—let them look at the terrible ruins by which I have been surrounded so many times—let them consider the irreparable losses of my house, my library and of everything I possessed in this world. They will understand that Rome is still the "scarlet woman, drunk with the blood of the saints."

However, as my merciful God has kept my health and my vigour, I am more than ever determined to fight as long as the great Captain of our Salvation will keep me among his soldiers. Surrounded by the 45,000 precious souls, already wrenched from the feet of the idols of Rome, and washed in the blood of the Lamb, I will spend my last days on this glorious battle-field.

A CORRECT CARICATURE.

The Truth-Seeker is an infidel paper, which is engaged weekly in giving caricatures of Scripture subjects in not too artistic half-page pictures. A recent issue carries on the first page a representation of a stream of desperate characters—liars, thieves, perjurers, murderers—entering "the fold of Christ." It is called "The Sinner's Hope and last Refuge of the Vile." The picture is not a caricature. It truthfully represents a great Christian doctrine. There is salvation for thieves and liars and murderers. This is a great and glorious truth. It is indeed the "sinner's hope," the "last refuge of the vile." It is in this that the divinity of the Christian scheme of salvation appears. The vilest may enter the fold of Christ, leaving their vileness at the gate. Unbelief is fatalistic. It holds that the vile can never be anything but vile. The Christian doctrine is a nobler and truer doctrine. It has hope and the power of reformation in it. For once the Truth-Seeker has drawn better than it knew.—N. Y. Independent.

MOVEMENT IN AMOY.

Dear Sir,—Following on the week of prayer held here at the beginning of the year, one consultation and prayer meeting after another has been held by the five churches in Amoy proper, to seek the Holy Spirit, and to consider how the "first love" of many Christians may be revived, and how multitudes may be gathered in from the multitudes perishing around.

One proposition was to build a huge tabernacle that might be a rallying point and centre for all good works, somewhat on the old cathedral system; but there is no immediate intention of proceeding with this plan; the salvation of souls from sin is felt to be the need most pressing.

It is curious how the thoughts of the native Christians have turned back to happy experiences in the past. Pathetic references have been made to a sainted missionary who was such a representative of Christ that in the servant the Master might be known; references to early communion services, when if there were no baptisms, this was considered a solemn call to self-humiliation and prayer; references to the earnest way the Sabbath was once kept, all worldly matters being put away and the day observed even with the marvellous attention common to Chinese New Year's Day; references to the plan once in force of native cottage prayer-meetings; references to the love and care early Christians here used to show to one another.

Great searchings of heart have been gone through as to how best to face the facts and check the evils of the use of morphia, said by some to be a cure for opium-smoking. There is a frightful peril from the subtle tendency of the native mind to conceal the real state of heart and home. Then, the want of fully-developed moral stamina makes both pastors and people cautious in exercising discipline, and, where there is strict supervision, the spirit of love is sometimes lacking. Multitudes of workers have gone away to the surrounding countries, thus weakening the mother churches. The immoralities of foreigners exert a marked influence.

It must not be supposed there has been no progress. In education and self-support there have been great strides. One brother stands up to urge the grounds there are for thankfulness. Still, these united revival services are a good sign of coming blessing. The latest special service held was remarkable for the numbers of Christians who assembled, the deep, fixed earnest attention, the fervour and prompt readiness of many to take part, the urgent pleading with one another for newness of life and for putting away the "old leaven," and the solemn determination to co-operate in all good work, according to a system agreed on.

Those of our friends who daily seek the coming of God's kingdom in China may be encouraged by the consideration of these facts.

I am seeking guidance as to translating Law's "Serious Call." The "Offices of the Holy Spirit," translated last year, is well received.

Yours faithfully, J. Sadler.

THE GOSPEL ON THE CONTINENT.

Some earnest Christians on the Continent have taken to heart the fact that millions of people in Central Europe have never had a clear Gospel message. Most of them cannot be reached by the living voice; many of them have never seen a Gospel tract. Some time ago two friends began to insert passages of Scripture and clear Gospel messages, as advertisements in Roman Catholic, secular, and socialistic newspapers.

This plan of making known God's love and man's need is capable of considerable development. Those who have so far been engaged in it have been much encouraged.

While some editors have refused the advertisements with scorn, others have readily received them, and in some cases written articles on the verses thus displayed. A circular on this "Message for Every Home" enterprise, signed, among others, by Revs. J. D. Kilburn and A. Frank, of Hamburg, says:—There is hardly a place on the Continent which cannot thus be reached. Every shilling given will send a message into nearly 5000 homes. Contributions may be sent to Mr. A. J. Arnold, Evangelical Alliance; 7, Adam-street, London.

SACRAMENTAL WINE.—It has been ascertained that at all the Nonconformist places of worship in the city of York, unfermented wine is used in the Communion Service.

THE DRINK DEMON IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I am about to finish my winter tour in temperance work in India, and when I arrive home at Mussoorie I hope to give the readers of The Christian some notes on this movement in India. For the present I will give but one dark drink picture.

In the neighbourhood of Agra, in the north-west of India, is a native state called Ulwar, of considerable dimensions. The King, or Rajah, had taken to drinking habits, so much so that he was subject to the curse of delirium tremens, and was several times on the point of death. One of his Ministers of State, by name Koonj Behary Lall, ventured to remonstrate with His Highness on the evil of drunkenness, and strongly counselled the Rajah to give up the indulgence, or at least to reduce the dose. This so enraged the Rajah that he issued a private order to have Koonj Behary Lall killed.

Some time was taken to find a fair chance to execute the horrible deed. At last it was done by two of the other Ministers of State, named Ram Chunder and Akhay Sing. The Rajah died in a drunken fit the day after his faithful Minister was murdered by the sword of Akhay Sing, Ram Chunder being an accomplice in the dreadful deed.

The foul deed was kept quiet for a while, but at last it came to the ears of the Indian Government, and the Paramount Power put the course of the Indian penal law into action. After a long trial, in which the murderers had both native and English lawyers to plead their cause, it was resolved that one should be transported for life and the other hanged.

One remark made by the murderers is worthy of note. They said to the Court:—"Gentlemen, you try us according to English law in a country where there is but one law—the will of the King. Had we not obeyed the orders of the Rajah he would have had our heads cut off." This, however, did not avail. The murderers were punished, and the Ministers of native States taught the lesson that if they commit murder by the order of their King they will be held guilty by a higher power.

Here we have a treble tragedy through the demon drink. The King killed before he was thirty-five years of age; his faithful Minister murdered by his orders; and one man hung and another transported for life—while the native State has lost its power to govern its own affairs, which result the natives deeply deplore.

It may be asked, How comes it to pass that Indian princes have so taken to the use of liquor? One cause of it is this: while they are minors and wards to the British Government they have often an English tutor to teach them, and they learn indulgence in liquor from their teachers. Whether this was so in the present case I do not know, but I do hear that it often is so, and I think the Imperial Government should see that the tutors given to instruct young native princes should not be given to drinking habits.

FOR THE PROMOTION OF TRAVEL.

In times not beyond the memory of living men, travel was the privilege of the few, and the grand tour, even of Europe, was a luxury only within the reach of the very wealthy. In our days, however, it has been brought within the range of even moderate incomes. To the various schemes already existing to organise, simplify, and economise the movements of the great wandering public, is added the Association for the Promotion of Home and Foreign Travel of which Mr. Percy C. Webb is the managing director (41, Eastcheap, London, E.C.). There are no "coupons," but the mere presentation of a card of membership secures a fixed discount from bills contracted at the 600 hotels already affiliated to the Association an arrangement which will shortly be extended to many more, thus securing for the traveller the maximum of advantage with the minimum of trouble. The annual subscription is 10s. 6d. for a single person, or £1 1s. for a family party. Through tickets are issued to all parts of the world, as well as for cheap circular tours.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—A Finsbury Park auxiliary of this mission has been formed, with the special object of uniting the various groups of open-air workers who preach the Gospel on Sundays in Finsbury Park. Communications are invited from any interested by Mr. Frank Cockrem, Open-air Mission Office, 11, Adam-street. Strand, W.C.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

ARKLOW.

The preaching of the Gospel in the streets of Arklow not only continues, but was made remarkable owing to the fact that on the fair day, in February, there stood on the footpath outside the Parish Church, preaching the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, a young man who, a little over two years ago, was a Roman Catholic. Though not in any way connected with the town of Arklow, this young man, when we first went out into the streets, was loud in his denunciation of the heretic Protestant clergyman who dared to stand up in the streets and preach from the Word of God. Having come to know as never before the love of God in the face of Jesus Christ, he gladly availed himself of the opportunity of publicly preaching the Gospel in the open streets of our town.

Our readers will rejoice with us that God has not only by his Holy Spirit made him alive from the dead, but has thrust him out into his vineyard. From the methods and manner of his preaching we feel certain that God has called him to serve Him in this way, and that his testimony for Jesus will be blessed. We have been very much encouraged, we need hardly say, by such a circumstance as this, as also by the way in which this young man approved of our not having yielded to the opposition, but of our persisting in preaching of the simple Gospel. What chance have the many thousands of our fellow-countrymen who are illiterate of ever hearing the pure and simple Word of God read or preached if those who have it and can read for themselves refuse to come out and witness like this young man ? Thank God that so many young men have had their hearts touched by God the Holy Ghost and are being led by Him to give their lives up to God for this service.—Arklow Parish Magazine.

MAJOR WHITTLE IN BELFAST.

On Thursday night the concluding meeting of this mission was held in May-street Presbyterian Church. The scene was most impressive, and at times affecting. Dr. Lynd spoke of the sorrow with which all viewed the prospect of Major Whittle's departure from amongst them. He referred to the visit of the evangelist twelve years ago, and again five years ago, in the most favourable terms. Major Whittle, he said, had faithfully warned them, lovingly besought them, and clearly taught them. There was no presumption or assumption about him; his was the simplicity of Christ. Hundreds in Belfast would never forget him, and from many an Irish heart would go up a prayer that God might bless him and use him. The mission, of which that was the closing meeting, had been one of singular unanimity, and their brethren of the Methodist churches had taken a warm interest in its progress. In conclusion, Dr. Lynd regretted that Ireland was to lose the devoted services of one who had been so eminently used in the Gospel.

At the close of Dr. Lynd's remarks, Major Whittle spoke most feelingly of the friendly reception he had received from the ministry and laity of the city. He could never forget that closing meeting, and across the seas would often remember his Irish friends at the throne of grace. The Major afterwards gave an impressive address fron 2 Corin. xiii. 14. At the request of the Major, Miss Whittle sang "Christ is all." A prolonged after-meeting was held, at which, in addition to Major Whittle, Revs. Dr. Lynd, Dr. Williamson, H. Montgomery, and C. Davey took part, and thus closed a mission which many in Belfast and throughout the North of Ireland will have cause to remember with much gratitude.—Belfast Witness.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

These brethren began a series of evangelistic services in Galway on Sabbath, March 19. All the Protestant churches joined in the invitation, and met in a united prayer-meeting seeking blessing on the coming mission.

The services were held in what is known as the Assembly Room, and the building, the largest available in the town, was tasked to its utmost capacity. The owner of it stated that he never saw such an audience for any purpose as was assembled on Friday night. Those who know what the West of Ireland has been (and know the great need of this land) will join with us in thanking God that the preaching of the Gospel has become such a power and such an attraction. The audiences embraced all churches and all classes, and it would be difficult to say which was the most interested.

One feature was especially interesting, the presence of a large body of students; and no preacher need ask for more whole-hearted listeners than they were.

There was not a meeting during the whole series, noon or evening, at which all creeds were not represented, and some of the most regular and most interested auditors were members of the Roman Catholic Church. People came from Athenry, Ballinasloe, Athlone, Ardrahan, etc., and the one ground of regret was that the evangelists could not stay longer.

Mr. Burke sang with great sweetness and power. Mr. McNeill's course as an evangelist has been a series of successes, but taking into account all the circumstances, he has had no more astonishing results than in the "City of the Tribes." We do not attempt to describe the after-meetings, or to count those who were blessed; this only we say—the falling tear and broken accents as "Good-bye" was spoken, testified that hearts had been touched to their very depths. Would readers pray for this work and these workers, and try to find out how they may otherwise help the spread of the Kingdom in the West of Ireland?

J. C. C.

A correspondent, writing with reference to the Tullamore Mission, briefly reported in our last issue, says:—

On the last night more than 800 people were present; they came from a district twenty miles in radius, and there was universal sorrow and regret that Mr. McNeill could not be kept for another week. Much good has been done and an unusual interest awakened in spiritual things. What a pity it is that Mr. McNeill could not be retained in our beloved green isle for a year or two! It is the simple Gospel of the Son of God that Ireland wants most to-day; it is the rule of Christ in the hearts and lives of men and women that is the crying want of our age. Our religion is cursed and blighted by the form of godliness without the power. Men and women in vast numbers are building their hopes for heaven upon church-going, upon forms and ceremonies, and this is what they call religion; but it never exercises the slightest influence upon their everyday life and conduct. We know of no living evangelist who is so well fitted to dispel this terrible delusion, that men can serve God and Mammon, as Mr. McNeill.

Messrs. McNeill and Burke's further engagements in Ireland are: Cork, April 2 to 14; Limerick, April 16 to 21; and Waterford, April 23 to 28.

THE IRISH OUTLOOK.

Never before perhaps has there been such general and persistent prayer offered up for the spiritual welfare of the Irish people, and there is abundant evidence that God is hearing and answering our prayer. The reports from all outlying districts are most encouraging. Missionaries labouring in the south and west invariably bear testimony to the fact that there is a growing spirit of inquiry abroad amongst Roman Catholics, and an increasing desire to purchase the Douay Testament, and books of a similar kind. In many cases Roman Catholics have purchased both Testaments—the Douay and Authorised versions—for purposes of comparison. This is quite a new departure.

In Dublin, in particular, this spirit of inquiry is very manifest. Many, of course, refuse to accept any but the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church. But the numbers who are willing to investigate the respective merits of Protestanism and Roman Catholicism are pretty considerable, and are on the increase. The writer is speaking from experience, and has the very great privilege of talking to and dealing with Roman Catholics every week. He has more opportunities of doing so than he can well attend to. The results are, as a rule, satisfactory. The intelligent, fairly-educated Roman Catholic, once he is got to inquire, invariably leaves his Church, if scripturally dealt with, and becomes, not merely intellectually converted, but yields his whole heart to his Saviour, and rejoicing in his new-found-liberty and peace works with a will for the conversion of others. There is no more zealous missionary among his brethren than the converted Roman Catholic. I know of one, and there are many such; he is but recently converted, and though but poorly educated he has been instrumental in the conversion of more than half-a-dozen others since the Moody and McNeill Mission.

The Catholic (edited by Rev. T. Connellan) is doing good work in this direction also. There is a great desire among Roman Catholics to read it, and its teaching month by month is certainly calculated to shake faith in the Roman Communion. From a letter in this magazine I cull the following:—"I have resided thirty years in this city, and have come in contact with more Roman Catholics who have been led to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour within the last six months than in the previous thirty years."

In Dublin, just now, we are in the throes of a struggle that will have an important bearing on the religious future of Ireland. The directorate of the once powerful Freeman's Journal are at sixes and sevens, and the Roman Catholic Archbishop, Dr. Walsh, is in the thick of the mêlée. A short time ago the Freeman gave itself over to the control of the priests. The latter have never been able to run a journal here. They did what they could for the Freeman, with the result that the directors quarrelled among themselves, financial difficulties arose, and Dr. Walsh was called in to arbitrate. When prepared to do so, one half the directorate—all Roman Catholics—refused to be bound by the Archbishop's decision, and appealed to the public. At the present time we find curates, up and down the country, taking sides against Dr. Walsh, and it looks as if a split in the clerical camp were imminent. One thing is certain, however, the Freeman's Journal is in a bad way, and the voice of the one great clerical organ in Ireland will in all probability be soon dumb. Dr. Walsh's reputation is likely to suffer somewhat in the quarrel.

STRANGERS' REST, LIVERPOOL.

The sixteenth anniversary meetings were held on the premises, 24, Park-lane, on Friday, the 24th inst. At the afternoon gathering Mr. S. Breeze presided. The Venerable Archdeacon Taylor, D.D., said he considered the work done there was the best of the kind in Liverpool. He was astonished at the number of meetings that had been held, and was glad to find so much was being done for God's ancient people the Jews. Rev. Robert Lewis, of Prince's-gate Baptist Chapel, said the work done amongst the emigrants and foreign sailors was foreign mission work done at home. Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe read a letter from her husband, the founder of the Rest, who was unable to be present, wishing God-speed to the workers.

Mr. T. A. Leigh read the annual report, which stated that, with the exception of the keepers, all the workers were volunteers. The Strangers' Rest is open from 10 a.m. to 9.30 p.m. every day. The large reading room on the ground floor is occupied all day by emigrants and sailors of all nationalities, especially Spaniards, to whom magazines and Christian books are supplied for reading, and letter paper and envelopes for the purpose of writing home to their friends. The Rest had proved a refuge to many. During the cold weather in November some ten Spaniards were found shelterless, and through the timely help afforded were saved much suffering. Seven were shipped back to Corunna, and the others assisted until room was found in the boarding houses.

During the year 403 meetings were held in the English language, 328 Scandinavian, 182 Jews' meetings, 100 Spanish, seventy-four German, fifty French, seventeen Polish, seven Japanese, two Greek, and two Finnish, making a total of 1165 meetings, being 116 more than the previous year. No less than 20,000 Scandinavian tracts were distributed, 800 New Testaments and 1000 Gospels in the vernacular were distributed amongst the Jews, twenty of whom had professed conversion and twelve were baptized.

The balance-sheet showed a deficit of over £90, and an urgent appeal was made for increased support, or the sub-keeper, Max Markovitz, who had done excellent work, would have to be discharged.

In the evening a prayer-meeting was held at the Rest, conducted by the Rev. Dr. Harrison, rector of St. Mary's Church, Wavertree. Any help towards this work will be thankfully received by the hon. treasurer, Mr. T. A. Leigh, 19, James-street, Liverpool.

MR. C. INGLIS AT YEOVIL.

The hearts of God's people are filled with overflowing thankfulness to Him for all He has been doing in our town during the past fortnight. The great blessing which God was pleased to give on a former visit led the committees of the Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian Associations to invite Mr. Charles Inglis to Yeovil again. We do not remember such a widespread interest in the things of God. The largest building has been filled at eight o'clock on Sunday mornings, and in the evenings so great has been the crush that it has been found necessary to hold service one hour before the advertised time, and even on week-nights hundreds have been unable to gain admission.

The addresses given by Mr. Charles Inglis have been of a most solemn, searching, and soul-stirring character. To watch the waves of emotion pourtrayed on the faces of the vast assemblies, and the deep interest evinced in the telling remarks of the evangelist, was a sight which can never be forgotten by the hundreds of people who had seats on the platform. The result is that large numbers have been brought under deep conviction of sin, and are now rejoicing in the Lord as their Saviour. The Lord has gone far beyond our faith in giving us some remarkable cases of conversion, which we never expected. The afternoon Bible lectures held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall have been filled with Christians from all the churches in the town, and many a worker who has been privileged to attend will be able to use in the Master's service the spiritual lessons received from God's Word.

As an association we are pleased to be able to render this service to the town and neighbourhood, and, indeed, we find it a great honour to have been the means of doing so much to promote the kingdom of Christ among men.

Mr. Charles Inglis is now holding meetings twice every day at Bridgwater, and the prayers of hundreds of God's people in this town follow him.

MILDMAY MEN'S NIGHT SCHOOL.

The twenty-third anniversary of this institution was celebrated on Friday evening, March 24. Two hundred and sixty men were admitted to the annual tea. The number of guests were limited to those who had been present during the session at least twenty evenings. The tables were beautifully decorated with flowers and abundantly supplied with tempting viands.

After the tea a large number gathered in the Conference Hall for the closing exercises. Colonel Morton, as chairman, called on Rev. J. Wilkinson for the opening prayer, after which was read the report of the winter's work. This was most satisfactory, special credit being given to the Scripture examination, which showed accuracy and spiritual understanding.

Mr. Badenoch then read the statistics of the school, from which we give a few items. The school had been open sixty-seven nights. Number of scholars enrolled, seven hundred and fifty; average attendance, two hundred and sixty-three; number of classes, thirty-five; occupations represented, one hundred and thirty-eight; certificates of merit gained, one hundred and eighty-five; sixteen men studied Pitman's shorthand, and obtained certificates, and sixty-five prizes were given for attendance. Mrs. Sholto Douglas distributed the prizes.

Dr. Barnardo gave the address, which was very stirring and solemn; and made a marked impression on the men. Altogether the evening was pronounced by the guests to be the very best they had ever had.

MOROCCO.—Mr. J. J. Edwards, of the North Africa Mission, has just returned to England after four years and a-half of work in Morocco. He has travelled over a considerable portion of the country, visiting all the chief towns with the Gospel message. During his stay in England Mr. Edwards is desirous of making known what has been done, and what might be done, in that dark empire, and friends who can assist him by arranging meetings, etc., may address him at "Glenelg," Atherton-road, Forest Gate, E. Mr. Edwards brings with him lantern slides illustrative of the people among whom he has laboured, and a selection of their costumes, utensils, etc.

THE GOSPEL IN BELGIUM.

Pastecr C. Merle-d'Aubigne has been addressing meetings among friends interested in the progress of the Gospel, to describe the unenlightened condition of many districts in Belgium. In one, where he had worked for five years amongst a mining population, he found the people illiterate and ignorant, with morals at a very low ebb; the number of illegal marriages exceeding legal ones. The drink evil is also very widespread, there being in some parts a thousand public-houses to a population of 10,000; and in Belgium generally 140,000 public-houses, representing one to every forty of the population, including children.

The religion of the people is purely nominal, they having broken away from definite religious belief, which has been supplanted by infidelity and socialism of the worst kind. Unlike France, where there exist remains of the old Protestant churches of the sixteenth century, Belgium has no native Protestant population. It is under such circumstances as these that the Belgian Missionary Church endeavours to make headway for the Gospel in villages and towns by getting the people themselves to be missionaries to their fellows. There are twenty-six pastors, who, having drawn a congregation together, impress upon the converts their duty towards those around them. One of the most useful methods of spreading the truth is by the distribution of tracts, which reach many who would not read the Bible; but an interest is thus aroused, which often finds outlet in subsequent reading of the Scriptures. Very encouraging results have been noted. The people, though ignorant, seem to reading it for hours at a time. Colportage, pastoral, and temperance work, as well as house-to-house visiting, play also an important part, though sometimes considerable opposition is experienced, the colporteurs having occasionally been stoned at the instigation of the priests, who have also gone round demanding to have the Bibles delivered up to them that have been placed in the hands of the people.

Meetings are established in the houses of converts during the winter months, and in the summer open-air meetings are held. At these the singing proves a great attraction, the people being quite unaccustomed to musical harmony in the religious services to which as Roman Catholics they have been accustomed. In one town five public-houses were closed by their owners, who had been converted. The landlord of one invited the pastor to preach from behind the bar. The next time he went he found the counter replaced by a table with a Bible upon it, the partitions taken down, and a staircase temporarily removed, so that without passing through the bar and hearing the Gospel!

There are now in Belgium twenty-eight congregations with 7000 members, all of which have been brought out of Romanism or infidelity, and year by year an increase of about 500 is registered.

One encouraging feature is that employers of labour are beginning to appreciate these Christian brethren as thoroughly reliable and trustworthy, and acknowledge the elevating effect wrought upon their characters by the power of the Gospel of God.

As regards finances, the members, though all poor work-a-day folk, give well of their little means, contributing not less than 600,000 francs per annum, which often involves no little self-denial. The sympathy of English Christians will, therefore, be well bestowed in helping this encouraging and important work.

A VICTORY FOR SABBATH OBSERVANCE has been gained in Washington. A committee was preparing for Sunday concerts. A protest was sent by Christian and temperance workers to Messrs. Noble and Tracy, who refused the use of the Pension building and the services of the band.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—Rev. W. R. Mowll presided at the last monthly prayer meeting of this society and gave a helpful expositi n of Philippians iv. "—7. Prayer was offered on behalf of the society's missionaries and the candidates who are now being trained as missionaries under Rev. R. Hobson at Liverpool. A sum of £10 has recently been paid by the society towards the annuity fund for Miss Cusack, the "Nun of Kenmare."

BRITISH SYRIAN MISSION.

Dear Sir,—It may interest your readers to know that the work so long associated with the name of Mrs. Mentor Mott continues to prosper. After the death of Mrs. Mott, a general meeting of subscribers was called to elect a committee to undertake the control of the mission. During the first year the committee felt considerable anxiety lest the work in Syria should suffer without a directress, and lest the support in England should fall off. We have now to record with deep thankfulness that the work has gone on steadily with an attendance of 2710 pupils in the twenty-nine schools in Beyrout, Damascus, the Lebanon, and Tyre; 790 women have frequented Bible classes, and thirty-one Bible-women and Scripture readers have worked in the secluded harems, in hospitals, prisons, market places, in the military camp, and among the wild Bedouin.

Two medical ladies have brought healing and comfort to suffering women and children, ministering not only to their bodies but also to their souls. The training institution for native female teachers is very full with nearly seventy boarders, and spiritual blessing vouchsafed there flows forth to the day schools, where these trained girls become teachers, over eighty being now employed. Sixteen English ladies superintend the various mission stations, and while careful to give good secular education their first aim is to lead the children to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour.

At the end of 1892 the committee offered the post of honorary directress in Syria to Miss James, who most kindly accepted the invitation, and has been warmly welcomed by the other ladies, who were feeling the need of a leader on the spot to give counsel and advice which could not be so well supplied by a committee at a distance.

Mr. Mentor Mott, who deeply felt his great loss, left Syria last summer to travel in Germany and France. He entirely supports two of the mountain schools, and friends in England and Australia have definitely adopted three other schools, while our lady superintendent in Damascus generously contributes the £500 needed annually for the four schools and five Bible women in that city. The whole mission is so economically conducted, that £5500 a year will carry it on efficiently. The regular income is £4500, which leaves us to collect with some difficulty an extra thousand each year; and we want new subscribers for that amount to keep the present agencies at work. But there are openings on every side in Syria for extension; villages appealing for "schools for our daughters," women who have once been visited in outlying villages near our stations, who say with pleading accents to the ladies, "Why did you never come before? When will you come again?"

In our quarterly record, Daughters of Syria, will be found deeply interesting details of the work.

Yours faithfully,

Annie Poulton, Sec., B.S.M.

PARIS MISSION TO THE JEWS.

A deeply interesting work among the Jews of Paris is being carried on by means of the mission which Misses Law and Palmer founded six years ago. The missionary, Mr. Solomon Ben-David Feingold, throws his whole heart into the work, which is varied in order definitely to meet the needs of residents on the one hand, and refugees on the other. The Gospel is regularly preached in the Mission Hall, 21, Quai aux Fleurs; there is a medical dispensary, and the poor and destitute are provided with free breakfasts.

The contact of Jews with other inquiring and believing people is promoted by the use of the hall for more general Christian work. Once a week the building is used in connection with the McAll Mission, and twice it is at the service of M. Saillens. Efforts are put forth to influence the young—Jewish and Gentile—and special work, including the distribution of the Scriptures, is carried on among postmen and others. Mr. Feingold is making good use of the printing press, and we rejoice to learn that his monthly paper, Ha-Emeth (The Truth), in Hebrew, Yiddish, English, French, German, Polish, and Russian, is proving of service to others who are engaged in evangelistic work among Israelites. Specimen copies may be had from 33, Rue de la Verrerie, Paris.

Letters to the Editor.

THE BOOK OF THE KINGDOM.

Dear Sir,—Rev. C. S. Bird, in his letter in The Christian of March 16, quotes some words of mine "from memory only," and hence not quite accurately. He doubtless refers to a little volume containing four sermons preached before the University of Oxford in 1858, the subjects of which are, "The Manifestation of Christ—In the Gospels, In the Acts of the Apostles, In the Epistles, In the Revelation of St. John."

The concluding words of the last sermon, which Mr. Bird probably had in mind, are as follows:—"And thus is Jesus the Son of God—the Divine Mediator between God and men—manifested throughout the New Testament in all the fulness and variety of his grace and power. (a) In the Gospels we see Him personally engaged in the work of man's salvation, and we hear his gracious words. (b) In the Acts we hear Him proclaimed to the whole family of man as the one only remedy for lost and suffering humanity. (c) In the Epistles He appears as the source of life, and strength, and hope, and holiness, in his union with his believing people. (d) And here in the Book of the Revelation of Christ we behold Him exalted on high—walking in the midst of the churches—directing and overruling the course of time—subduing all things unto his power—supporting and preserving his faithful ones—and bringing them at last to that eternal glory which is prepared for their blessed abode."

Teignmouth, March 20.

"BISHOPS, PRIESTS, AND DEACONS."

Dear Sir,—If the assumption that the first Churches, under the Apostles' arrangements, are the true patterns for all succeeding Churches be correct, then we must needs first define their composition. This we find ready to hand in 1 Peter ii. 9, where the members are described as "a royal priesthood." They were, therefore, all priests, because a spiritual people, and, to begin with, all on the same level, and expected to offer up the sacrifice of praise to God continually.

Again, they were all expected to be ministers, both in regard to outward and to spiritual things. The rich in this world's goods were to be "rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate." In regard to spiritual things the same principle was to be acknowledged. Those who had gifts for spiritual service were to see that they used them for the glory of God and for the good of others, both in public and in private. It appears to me that those who did so spontaneously in public are spoken of in Philippians i. 1, and in 1 Timothy iii. 12.

It is worthy of notice that in Titus i. 5 and 7, the words "elder" and "bishop" are used interchangeably. In comparing the New Testament they are found practically to mean the same thing; the first term having reference to age or experience, and the latter having reference to official capacity or oversight.

This is a fertile subject for discussion; but my conclusion is that in the first Churches there was only one class of appointed office-bearers, who may be simply termed "elders," and who may be simply described as a committee of general management. I do not find anything else; and do not see that anything more was required.

I am, yours, &c.

An Ex-Presbyterian.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Edward Maxwell surely underestimates the intelligence of your readers. Does he really consider his letter a reply to my inquiry? And would it not be better to look at the priesthood question by itself, and let alone the question of bishops (or elders) and deacons, concerning which there need be little divergence of opinion; unless indeed he disputes the ruling of Lightfoot that bishops and elders are interchangeable expressions in the New Testament, both alike describing the overseers who feed the flock of Christ? If that be not so, let us know some authority recognised by Evangelical Churchmen whom they accept as more authoritative. But accepting Lightfoot's interpretation, and (for a moment and for argument's sake) also receiving Mr. Maxwell's dictum that presbyter and priest mean the same thing, we should land in the absurdity that the three officers recognised in the Church of England are "presbyters and deacons."

The sarcasm, two hundred years old, that "New Presbyter is but Old Priest writ large," was levelled at the spirit of usurpation and intolerance which characterised Episcopalians and Presbyterians alike, in days when toleration was an undiscovered virtue, and each party when in power persecuted those who differed from them. But it only serves to confuse the issue to tell us that priest and presbyter are synonymous. Says Mr. Maxwell: "It is unfortunate that the word 'priest' is connected in so many minds with 'sacrificing.'" As well tell us it is unfortunate that any good dictionary (as Webster's) should inform us that priest means "one who officiates at the altar and performs the rites of sacrifice." Very unfortunate, indeed, for those who accept the official position of a priest and then want to tell us it indicates no exercise of priestly function. The word, with the position it implies, has been the same in all ages, first of all in Pagan and in Jewish history; was introduced into the professing Christian Church as one of its earliest and deadliest errors; is unshrinkingly accepted by the Greek and Roman apostasies; is claimed as their right by modern Anglicans; and possesses the same significance to-day that it ever did in its necessary connection with sacrifice. We repeat our question, will anyone give us the answer? When did this pseudo priesthood creep into the Church? Not in the Apostles' time. Not with any authority from Christ and his Apostles. It is an invention of man—say rather of Satan—and should be abhorrent—the very name of it as well as the thing signified—to every loving heart.

It would be as reasonable to confuse the elders of the Jews with the Jewish priesthood, as to attempt to make out that New Testament presbyters are identical with priests.

Yours truly,

March 24, 1893. James E. Mathieson.

SACRAMENTALISM.

Sir,—The paragraph in The Christian of January 19, having reference to Baptism and the Lord's Supper, was read by me with all the deeper interest since just at that time I had been led to the conviction that, as stated in the paragraph, "Evangelicalism and Protestantism will only overcome Romanism and Popery in proportion as they are themselves free from the errors of that system." Some days afterwards, the inconsistency of the position held by those who would deny Sacerdotalism, yet virtually practise it, was brought forcibly under my notice, and I cannot do better than quote the words of the writer.* He says:—

"Those clergymen of the Church of England who, on platforms, declaim against Sacerdotalism and "sacrificing priests," in their own churches, rigidly confine the actual celebration (i.e., the reading of the Consecration Prayer, with the accompanying manual acts) to those who are in Priests' Orders. I never heard of their inviting the clerk, or the Scripture-reader, or some devout Communicant to 'do this.' And yet it is clear that the only protest worth anything against Sacerdotalism which such persons can make is a practical protest of this sort. It seems worse than absurd to deny a priesthood in the Christian ministry, and yet to act as if there were a very exclusive one every time you celebrate the characteristic rite of the Gospel. . . . Even those amongst us who stoutly deny all priesthood and all Eucharistic sacrifice seem instinctively to recognise this,"—(that the command to "do this" was given to twelve only). The Presbyterians in Scotland, or the Wesleyans in England, never allow their elders or their local preachers to preside at the Lord's Supper. I have known instances where the latter have taken some pains, in the absence of any minister in full connection, to procure the services of someone who they supposed had some claim to ordination. I confess that I cannot understand such a line taken by bodies who believe that there is no sacrifice more than that which every man can offer himself, and that there is no distribution except of mere emblems."

The rapidly increasing power of the Ritualistic party in the Anglican Church in the West Indies, all the more rapid since their teaching is introduced into a Church in a low spiritual state, practically testifies to the presence of the errors referred to in the paragraph of January 19; they may be hidden, or explained away, but they exist, and prove a powerful lever in the hands of those who go forth to enforce the teaching advocated in the book above quoted.

Yours faithfully, S. W. W.

TEMPERANCE ENTERTAINMENTS.

Sir,—Some few days ago we were at a convention of Christian workers, where the question arose, "Are not entertainments a help to our temperance meetings?"

Whatever the reply in the opinions given by our worthy brotherhood, and the statements of those who testify to crowded halls, in consequence of what they call innocent amusements being introduced in temperance lectures, if we look at the reason why we hold these meetings, admitting our motive to be the welfare of our fellow-man, we cannot but allow that the groundwork of that motive is the prompting of Divine will.

Such being the case, if we are inspired by God—as human instruments in his hand—designed to work out his purpose for his glory; does it not appear to a thoughtful mind, that we have a plentitude of means for rendering our message interesting, without as it were lowering our standard of Christian purpose and responsibility, for the sake of pandering to the growing passion for entertainment and frivolity whilst professing to do the work belonging to God.

We would not assume that recreation, innocent timely recreation, is to be forbidden. Certainly not! Neither that a merry heart is of necessity against good work; but in the hour, or hour and a-half, set apart for delivering the Samaritan's message, is it not a deviation from duty, that instead of seeking to impress our hearers with the importance of total abstinence, and endeavouring to reach their convictions by the aid of common sense, besides warning the young of the rock ahead in their life-voyage, we allow ourselves, as speakers, to lose the thread of our hold upon their attention by a halt in our subject—for the singing of "a pretty song."

Workers! Our messages are from God. Time is passing! What have we done towards the removal of that social curse spreading and scathing some in our every pathway? What drunkards have we been instrumental in reclaiming? How many have there been saved from the suicidal habit of moderate beginnings through our faithfulness and our zeal? Souls by tens of thousands are floating down with the tide of vice into a vortex of sin and shame, day by day, hurled on by drink. The police-courts confess to crime-sheets of blacker record than ever, of juvenile dram-drinking; whilst some of the best natures in both sexes are transformed by the drink demon into the lowest type of degradation, misery and shame. Hearts are being broken upon every side of us—homes forsaken—hopes blasted—affections crushed, and many who might have trodden the heights of success to-day, lie—cursed by their passion for intoxicants—wallowing in sin, outcasts from society—victims and slaves to the drink-craze power.

Do not these weigh upon our hearts? Do they not call upon us to deliver them from a thraldom great enough to exclude any amusement for the time, if we consider what this danger means to the unfortunate both in body and soul?

Possibly we may not have many inebriates gather in the circles of our temperance meetings of to-day, and yet it is there where we expect our souls to get fired in the attempt to save our fellow creature, and our hearts tuned to a care for the million. It is there where we have an opportunity of banding together in faithful brotherhood for the adoption of humane measures such as might give hope of the lost being won from the allurements of drink, if offered a helping hand and led to reform.

It has been said that in the permission of entertainments in total abstinence meetings, for the sake of sugar-coating the pill, intended to operate upon a nation's needs, we are concocting the coating so carefully that very little of the medicinal pill gets swallowed. If this be so, and we unwittingly lose sight of our object in the digression of our means, may we not naturally infer that instead of rescuing the drunkard, or taking the initiative step of prevention against the downfall of others in danger, we are not only making a huge mistake, but we are engaging in something very like a sham, and frittering away many good opportunities for seeking the moral, and also the spiritual, salvation of those for whom Christ died?

Surely this is ample confession that in so doing we are apt to pat our zeal to sleep in the rocking-chair of entertainment rather than rouse our energies into activity, and so forget our responsibilities to society—and not to society only but to those who, following our example, fix their obligations to their neighbour upon what we do and what we advocate, thereby lowering the Christ-work standard of duty, and making a mockery of what is reputed to be care for the weak.

Were the subject of entertainments merely a question of how to keep our young people together, away from baneful influence and liable associations, we should readily admit recreation to be a necessity sometimes, but as referring to the occasional meetings where it is supposed we gather for the purpose of helping to stamp out the greatest and most terrible enemy of mankind, and to annihilate the power of the cut-throat drink traffic, when we speak of total abstinence meetings we ask in the words of our heavenly Master, "What, could ye not watch with Me one hour?"

Yours faithfully,

Eastbourne. Annie Drummond.

THE FRENCH PRESS has no daily Huguenot paper; but it is hoped that the Protestants of France will soon make it possible for Le Signal to appear daily. The revival, a year ago, of this well-known weekly paper, which is at once religious and patriotic, had the realisation of this important end for its ultimate object. In last week's issue readers were asked to interest themselves in the enterprise.

IRISH NOTES.

Within the past month an encouraging series of temperance meetings has been held in co. Kerry by Rev. F. Foster.

A most valuable and important work is being done by the Ulster Society for the Education of the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind, which had under its care last year 100 deaf and dumb children and twenty-five blind.

Evangelistic services have been held in St. Peter's Church, Cork, by Rev. W. Gason; at Kilkinamurry, by Mr. Jas. Miller, of the Irish Evangelisation Society; and at Springfield, co. Fermanagh, by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist evangelist.

The Protestant Orphan Society of Antrim and Down is now responsible for 640 orphans, at an annual outlay of about £3000; and altogether there are 6000 orphans in connection with the various Protestant orphan societies in this country, maintained at a cost of £24,000 a year.

The Derry Bible and Colportage Society, an undenominational organisation, has been doing for several years past an excellent work. Last year the colporteurs sold over 2000 Bibles and Testaments, and over 11,000 religious books, and had much success among Roman Catholics.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Commercial Travellers' Christian Union of Scotland has 129 members.

A day nursery for poor children is to be opened in the Fountainbridge district of Edinburgh.

Mr. Quarrier has four times as many applications for boys than those he has lately sent to Canada.

Miss Golding, the rescued nun, has been giving in Glasgow some of her experiences of convent life in France.

An appeal for £10,000 is being made for the extension of the work of the Broomhill Home for Incurables.

Professor Henry Drummond sailed for America on March 22. He will deliver the Lowell Lectures at Boston, and will re-deliver them at Chatauqua.

A bill has been read a second time in the House of Lords enabling youthful offenders in Scotland to be sent to a reformatory without going in the first instance to prison.

Dr. Pierson's last lecture on missions was on "New Motives and Incentives." Missionary literature, medical missions, and women's work were referred to.

It is stated "on good authority" that a few ministers of the Free Church in the North have decided to separate from that body unless the Declaratory Act be repealed at next Assembly.

Ten students attended the Gospel Training College, Dunoon, last year. The tuition is entirely free. Besides the educational classes there is open-air preaching and house-to-house visiting.

JAPAN.—Missionaries and others proceeding to Japan will be glad to know that Mr. Francis Staniland, who has for some years resided in "the Land of the Rising Sun," is open to meet them on steamers and render them other important services. By an advertisement in the January issue of Missionary Tidings we learn that his firm of F. Staniland and Co., general commission agents, 52, Main-street, Yokohama, is in association with Messrs. Bywater, Tanqueray, and Phayre, 79, Queen Victoria-street, London, and similar agencies in other great centres.

THE WAIFS AND STRAYS SOCIETY has rescued upwards of 4000, and has now 1650 little ones under its care. Some of them are boarded out with well-recommended foster parents in the country, under proper supervision; the others are maintained in fifty small homes. The children are received from all parts of the country, and every deserving case is accepted on its merits, no votes or influence being required to secure admission. The income of the Society, however, is totally inadequate to allow the committee to deal effectively with the constantly increasing number of deserving cases.

E. de M. Rudolf, Secretary.

VICHY, ALLIER.—In June, 1892, a home was opened at Vichy, where invalid Protestants of small means might meet with all necessary care and comfort. The numbers who have taken advantage of the establishment have exceeded all expectation. The work having succeeded so well, it is hoped that it may be extended. An unfurnished house of twenty rooms has been taken, and Christian friends are asked to contribute towards the sum needed for the purchase of furniture; between 4,000 and 5,000 francs are required. Monsieur E. Camus, Pasteur de l'Eglise Réformée, 14, Avenue d'Orvilliers, Moulins Allier, France, will answer communications.

Obituary.

REV. JOHN H. TOPPING.

We hear with sorrow of the death of this faithful minister, whose work at Norland Chapel and in association with the late Dr. Adolph Saphir endeared him to many. Of late years Mr. Topping, being far from strong, lived at Camberley, Surrey, where he carried on a quiet unsectarian work. He was in his sixty-third year. The funeral took place on Friday at Kensal Green Cemetery, and was attended by many warmly-attached friends.

MRS. EDIS, NORWOOD.

This lady, widow of Robert Edis, of Huntingdon, passed away in her sleep after three days' painless illness as the day dawned on Friday, March 24. Her bright deathbed was a glorious witness for the truth which maketh free. Thoughtful for others, rejoicing in her innumerable blessings, praying to be spared if she could still be useful, ready to go if her Saviour's will, she sank to rest in her sleep. Mrs. Edis was in her seventy-seventh year. She was the mother of Colonel Edis and Dr. Edis; also of Mrs. G. S. Reaney, names known to many of our readers.

DR. SAMUEL COX.

The death is announced of this well-known theological writer. A minister of the Baptist denomination, he was for many years pastor of Mansfield-road Church, Nottingham, removing on his retirement some time ago to Hastings, where he died. Dr. Cox was for some years editor of "The Expositor," and his works on exegesis have a European reputation. He was born in London in 1826, and was trained at Stepney College. The list of his theological works is imposing, and included commentaries on Job and Ecclesiastes; treatises developing "larger hope" views; and sermons and addresses.

GENERAL JOHN RICHARD ANDERSON, C.B.

After a long and honourable service in the Royal Artillery, this Christian officer fell asleep in Jesus in Edinburgh, on March 23. Five years ago he said to one of his six soldier brothers, "I know that I am saved because I am trusting in Christ, and Christ Himself said, 'he that believeth on Me hath everlasting life.'" Repeatedly and gratefully he recorded how unmerited goodness and mercy had followed him all his days, and of his confident trust in the sheltering "Rock of Ages." The eldest son of the late General Anderson, R.A., a well-known and highly esteemed Waterloo officer, who died in 1865, has now entered into his rest. He also "sleeps in Jesus," and we on earth have the comforting assurance that "them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him."

MRS. MARTHA ROWLAND.

On March 12, Martha, widow of the late Rev. James Rowland, of Henley, and mother of Rev. Alfred Rowland, of Crouch End, passed away gently into the land of light and love.

Her life was bright, happy, and useful; her end was peace. She retained her mental powers until the last twelve hours, when she became unconscious; and as the Sabbath sun was rising, she went forth in the morning brightness to a glorious Sabbath of unending joy. She had never talked much in words of her spiritual experiences, but her life had been eloquent for Christ, nor in her last hours was her spiritual force abated. "I am weak, but He holds me, so I shall not fall," was her testimony. When one marvelled at her patience she pointed to a text on the wall: "My grace is sufficient for thee," and slowly whispered "That's it." She looked forward to the "many mansions" in her "Father's house." Her heart was there, her life was complete, her work was done; and now her reward is won.

REV. THOMAS MORICE, OF MINNESOTA.

We hear with regret of the death of this old student from Harley House, who for some few years has done faithful and useful evangelistic work in the United States. A native of Aberdeen, where his father survives to mourn him, Mr. Morice became interested in Y.M.C.A. and other work. Coming to London to follow a business career, he felt led to enter the East London Training Institute. After his three years' course he went to America, where most of his work was done amongst young men and women, with whom he had great influence for good, and, under God, was the means of winning many for Christ. He was an earnest evangelical preacher, much sought after in the Western States in Sabbath school, Christian Endeavour, and other religious movements. His unexpected death leaves a young widow and two children. His sister was at one time also a student in Dr. Guinness's Missionary College, and went out to assist in work connected with her brother's church, and to pursue her studies for the foreign mission field.

MR. G. GRAVERT, SEAMEN'S MISSIONARY.

Many will hear with regret of the falling asleep of Mr. George Gravert, who for upwards of forty years has laboured faithfully and well among seamen in Sunderland. During that period he has sold and given away many thousands of Bibles and portions of the Scriptures, and has distributed vast numbers of Gospel tracts in many languages. He spoke fluently in the high and low German, Danish, Swedish, and Dutch tongues, and was able to make himself well understood in French; so that in his daily visits to vessels of many different nationalities he came in contact with a great number of seamen, gathering them round him in the cabins and deck houses, reading and explaining to them the truths of the Bible; and while thus becoming well known amongst large numbers of foreign captains and sailors, he was instrumental in the conversion of not a few by whom his memory will be lovingly cherished. He passed away very quietly on Sunday afternoon, March 19, at his residence in Hendon Burn-avenue, after a short illness, in his seventy-second year. We hope to give shortly a portrait and sketch of this devoted man.

Madame Tel Sono.

Dear Sir,—Having notified on my circular that I should be returning to Japan in May, I now write to say that my intention of so doing is indefinitely postponed—at any rate till August or September. My "Lord's money," which I have come here to raise, is coming in slowly. His handfuls of purpose, however, greet me day by day. Truly his hand is upon me for good! Such shall never get discouraged who encourage themselves in Him.

May I also be permitted to say that if your readers would arrange meetings for me (1) in London and suburbs during the month of April, and (2) in Scotland during May, I should feel very much encouraged and grateful. Kindly note my change of address.

Yours faithfully, Tel Sono.

19, Pelham Place, S. Kensington, S.W.

Port Luz, Las Palmas, Grand Canary.

Mr. E. W. Searle and his wife have been engaged for two years past in a very interesting and encouraging work among sailors at Las Palmas, in the Grand Canary, within a week's voyage from England, in a charming climate. Last year 2407 vessels (two-thirds of these being steamers) anchored in the port, their crews, embracing twelve nationalities, numbering 70,000 men. More than 1000 visits were paid to ships in port, and about 20,000 books and tracts distributed and many Gospel meetings held.

In a recent letter, Mr. Searle expresses an earnest wish that one or more Christians from this country would make Las Palmas their home. A fine sphere of work is opening up, larger than his time, strength, or resources permit him to overtake. The cost of living would be found moderate. One of Mr. Searle's wants is a mission boat, which possibly one of the Lord's stewards would supply; last year the charges for boat hire, for visiting ships in the offing, amounted to £33.

The treasurer of the work is Col. Morton, of the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, who will be glad to take charge of any contributions that may be entrusted to him. Inquiries may be addressed to Mr. Searle direct at Las Palmas.

BRISTOL AND WEST OF ENGLAND MISSION TO THE JEWS.—The first tea and social gathering in connection with this mission was held recently at the Mission House, 30, Portland-square. A number of Jews were present, and the meeting was addressed by Revs. H. Goldberg, the missioner, and P. Prescott, Wesleyan minister. Having been educated at St. John's Hall, Highbury, and University College, Durham, Mr. Goldberg has thrown his whole heart into the work, and is meeting with encouragement. Notwithstanding the opposition of the President of the Synagogue, who has attacked the work in one of the local papers, some of the Hebrews rally round it. Communications may be addressed to Rev. Peter Prescott, Merryville, Waverley-road, Redland, Bristol.

HOXTON MARKET CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.—The annual meeting of this institute was held on Wednesday week at Rectory Road, the president, Rev. Alderman C. Fleming Williams, presiding. The institute embraces a large and small hall, reading room, library, kitchen, baths, gymnasium, and workshop. Over thirty agencies are at work under its roof, including a working lads' and young women's guilds, sewing and dressmaking classes, boys' drill and elocution classes, temperance society, bands of hope, evangelistic services, and men's Saturday social meetings, and a variety of relief work. The hon. superintendent, Mr. Burtt, and several branch leaders delivered addresses upon the work. A monthly illustrated magazine was started with the new year, giving detailed reports of the work.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The committee of the Melbourne Association have called a conference of ministers to consider the relation of the Y.M.C.A. to the churches.

Mr. W. A. Wilson, of Peckham, has been appointed general secretary of the West Branch, Savile Row, Regent-street, vice Mr. J. W. Holmes.

The Dublin Association has just passed over sixty members and associates, a member of the committee having offered to pay the subscriptions of fifty for one year.

Mr. Hughes has tendered his resignation of the secretariat at Cardiff, where he has laboured faithfully for a number of years, and contemplates taking up evangelistic work.

A new Association has been formed at East Grinstead, and the roll already contains the names of thirty young men. A movement is on foot to establish an Association at East Dulwich.

The report of the Croydon Y.M.C.A. shows growing work in that thriving place. In every department—not least in the evangelistic and Bible-class—the advance has been very marked.

The Newcastle Y.M.C.A. is commencing on April 9 a Pleasant Sunday Afternoon. Mr. Blackham, founder of the movement, will address the first gathering, and the Vicar of Newcastle will speak on the second Sunday.

Efforts are being put forth by the National Council to resuscitate the work at Portsmouth, which lapsed a year or two ago. There is now a likelihood of a new organisation being started, which will give pre-eminence to spiritual work.

The visit of Mr. Holmes, missionary secretary, to the Jerusalem Y.M.C.A., was made the occasion for a most interesting meeting, forty-six Arabic young men being present, together with thirty-five belonging to the Anglo-Hebrew section of the Association.

A series of open-air Gospel meetings will be held in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, on Monday evenings from May to September, and the hon. secs., Messrs. Jameson and Poynton, ask for the prayers and sympathy of their brethren in England. Open-air work in Ireland was difficult a few years ago, but now there are grand openings. Rome is losing its power. More prayer, and we may expect a season of much revival, such as was experienced in 1859.

The Kingstown Y.M.C.A. on Saturday last was the scene of an interesting missionary meeting. Mr. D. C. Hamilton, the hon. sec. of the Qua Iboe Mission on the West Coast of Africa, showed a large number of slides by magic lantern, illustrating the work and the people in that distant country. Only two missionaries, Messrs Bill and Baillie, with their wives are at present labouring at Qua Iboe, but it is hoped that during the present year another missionary will join them.

Since October last the new midland district of Ireland has secured the services of an energetic young Irishman for travelling secretary and general secretary of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., Mr. W. A. Boyd, late of Cork, who has already visited Rathmines, Bray, Kingstown, Arklow, Athlone, Tullamore, and has thrown new life into the work. During the present month he will visit Galway, Sligo, Boyle, all in the West of Ireland, and not visited before by Y.M.C.A. men, except once, and that a very special occasion.

A full and successful annual meeting of the Stafford Rooms Y.M.C.A., London, took place on Friday last, when, in the absence of Mr. F. A. Bevan, the chair was occupied by Mr. T. A. Denny. The Archdeacon of London, the Vicar of Paddington (Rev. W. Abbott, M.A.), and Rev. Dr. Pentecost were the principal speakers. The report showed that good work had been done during the year, and that there were signs of increased vigour and enterprise as the result of Mr. Basil Hewer's appointment to the secretariat.

The Sydney Association reports that Mr. Grubb's mission had resulted in an increased activity on the part of the workers, and an accession to their numbers. The Sunday evangelistic services had been prosecuted with unremitting vigour. The aggregate attendance for the year was 17,070, and 644 had remained to the after-meetings. The mission at North Shore had been faithfully carried on in the face of some difficulty and discouragement. Steam and sailing vessels to the number of 1263 had been visited, and many of the apprentices and sailors had made use of the room during their stay in port.

GAMBLING IN NEW ZEALAND.—A friend writes:—The extent to which gambling is carried on here is shocking. The colonials bet on everything—horse-racing, yachting, running, cricket, and shooting matches; while lotteries and sweepstakes are winked at. These are openly allowed in Australia, where Tattersall has two or three sweepstakes of £100,000 each in the course of a year, and numbers of New Zealanders go in for these. A station hand won £27,000 last year in a lottery on the Melbourne Cup.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Some earnest ladies are forming a branch at Coventry.

The Sydney branch is regretting much the departure of Lady Jersey, who during her husband's term of office in the colony has rendered the utmost service to the Y.W.C.A. workers.

The committee of the Y.W.C.A. at Clevedon are about to open a Holiday Boarding House for members of the association. Application should be made to the secretary, Mrs. Fenton, Rutland Lodge, Clevedon.

In response to an invitation from the Southport Association, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor has recently addressed three meetings in that town. The Mayor presided over the last of the meetings, and much interest was manifested in the whole series.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

A strong society has just been commenced in connection with St. Luke's, Bedminster. With eighty-six active members and fourteen associates, the society should make its influence effective in the parish.

The Society in connection with the Presbyterian Church at Flint has been in existence eight months, and the pastor reports that it has gained strength, and has been a source of much good among the young people.

At Sandford, Isle of Wight, a society has been formed in connection with the Bible Christian chapel. Twenty-one active and six associate members have been enrolled, and the meetings are looked forward to with much pleasure.

The society at Bridgwater is realising much blessing. At the prayer meeting on Sunday week eight sought and found the Saviour, most of them being elder scholars in the Sunday school, and six being associate members of the Y.P.S.C.E. The society was commenced with ten active members, and there are now nineteen.

SEDGLEY TEMPERANCE MISSION.

The thirty-third annual report of this energetic and useful mission shows that great blessing has been granted during the past year. Says the director:—

"The Sunday and Thursday evening Gospel services have been well attended. The Sunday evening addresses, illustrated by limelight, during the winter, have lost none of their attraction, neither, we trust, of their influence for good. We are glad to see the magic lantern being pressed into the service of God; the Gospel by limelight may be a novel phrase, but we may confidently expect it to be abundantly successful."

The outdoor work last summer proved very interesting, the people being most willing to hear the Word. "Tract distribution continues to hold a foremost place in our effort to disseminate the truth. In addition to a general and continuous circulation of tracts, we endeavour to place one in every house, some 600 in our village, on a Thursday."

The mothers' meeting, conducted by Miss Homer, has gone on well. Many unused to attend Gospel services are brought under its influence by this means, as the reading and expounding of God's Word, prayer, and praise form an inseparable part.

The report describes the temperance work, and adds the following trenchant remarks on what is fast becoming the problem of the day:—"Political clubs may exist, clubs upon which the existing laws have no bearing, and which in many cases are simply drinking and gambling dens, can and do flourish, spreading their degrading and pestiferous influence all around; but to promote the glory of God in the salvation of the bodies and souls of men, to free our country—exalted to heaven with privileges—from the blighting, blasting curse of drunkenness, with its concomitant evils, which include every vice under heaven, in the one way and by the one Divinely-appointed means, is practically ignored. To expose, confront, and combat with sin and vice; to aid and strengthen the virtuous; to undertake for the oppressed; to upraise the downtrodden; to constantly bear in mind the common brotherhood of man, is the blessed work that God has committed to his Church; and the only way and means by which this can be accomplished is that originating with, and followed out by God Himself in the person of the Divine Son, even our Lord Jesus Christ, who, in giving Himself a sacrifice for our sins, also gave his life as an example that we should follow his steps."

We would warmly commend this excellent mission to sympathy and prayer. Communications should be addressed to F. A. Homer, Esq., J.P., Sedgley, Dudley.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

"Uncle Mose" is quoted as saying: "No matter how much de cars dey get loaded, de ingine w'at does the works gits along stric'ly on water."

"Farmer John," writing in an American paper, remarks shrewdly: "'Tain't more temperance sentiment that's needed to banish the saloons; it's more temperance backbone."

Dr. Arthur, of New South Wales, has been calling renewed attention to the deplorable state of things in Sydney, owing to the laxity in control of the drink traffic and its attendant evils.

Meetings in support of the Local Veto Bill have been held in a large number of towns, and resolutions in its favour have been unanimously passed by the various temperance organisations.

Great interest was shown in a "Temperance Crusade" held last week in Portman Rooms convened by the B.W.T.A., and addressed by ladies well-known as leaders in the temperance movement. Amongst these, Lady F. Cavendish, Lady Henry Somerset, Countess of Portsmouth, Mrs. Shaen, Miss Willard, and others.

The spring town elections in New York State have resulted, in many places, in no-licence victories. Ithaca, following the plan which has worked so well in Cambridge, Mass., has achieved a no-licence victory, electing its ticket by 127 majority. All classes of temperance men were united in the campaign in favour of no licence.

The "club curse" is undoubtedly the next great problem confronting temperance workers, as, until these clubs are dealt with in some way, little will after all be gained, even were the public-houses closed. Hence we are glad to notice that a bill dealing with "club registration" has been read a second time in the House of Commons.

The Pall Mall Gazette has issued an "Extra" (1d.), containing not only the full text of the Local Option Bill, but also a clear and compendious account of the liquor laws of other nations, previous legislative proposals at home, and interviews with the "trade" and with temperance workers. On the principle that it is well to hear both sides, this "Extra" will, we fancy, be in great demand.

Mr. S. H. Whitbread, M.P., speaking at Luton on Wednesday week, said the Local Veto Bill was a Prohibition Bill pure and simple, and had aroused in the trade a very fierce, and, to a certain extent, naturally fierce, opposition. He suggested that a scheme for the reduction of the number of public-houses and compensation for licences taken away should be carried out on the principle of betterment.

From official reports it appears that drunkenness is largely on the increase among the Indians, half-breeds, and police, in the North-West Territories, owing to the introduction of the licensing system by the Government at Ottawa. The result is the demoralisation of the mounted police, the further degradation of the Indians, and the interruption of civilising and christianising influences throughout the whole region.

The Belgian Consul at Yokohama calls attention to the notable increase in the Japanese importation of alcohol. At first this remarkable importation was credited to the rapid development of chemistry in Japan, but now it appears that the alcohol, imported mostly from Germany, is used for imitating foreign liquours. A mixture of water and coloured alcohol is, besides, sold to the natives in the numerous brandy retail shops in the Japanese Empire.

At a conference of London temperance organisations, held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening week to consider the best means of supporting the Local Veto Bill, Dr. Dawson Burns read a letter from Sir W. Harcourt, advising that no attention should be paid to "rumours persistently circulated in the Press" in relation to the bill, as they were entirely devoid of authority or foundation. Mr. Caine, M.P., Sir W. Lawson, M.P., and other gentlemen addressed the meeting.

It appears from a return, issued last week, that the malt and corn used in the manufacture of beer last year in the United Kingdom amounted to 55,852,570 bushels; the sugar used in brewing to 2,096,720 cwt.; and the "licence duty paid and beer duty charged" amounted to £10,079,671. It also appears that London is the largest brewing centre, consuming 10,956,363 bushels of malt and corn, and having 139 breweries; and Burton comes next, with a consumption of 6,228,906 bushels.

An anti-opium meeting was held in the Town Hall, Sandown, on Monday week. The hall was well filled, and much prayerful earnestness and enthusiasm prevailed. The chairman, Rev. W. T. Storrs, denounced the trade in opium as unworthy of a Christian Government, because he knew, when in North India as a missionary, the misery and demoralisation produced by the habit of smoking opium. Messrs. Langman and W. Raju Naidu made stirring speeches, which disclosed terrible facts, relating to the opium trade in China and India.

Personalia.

Mr. F. N. Charrington, L.C.C., is (we are sorry to hear) confined to his bed with an attack of influenza.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Matheson have moved from Queen's Gate to 46, Harcourt-terrace, Redcliffe-square, S.W.

Dr. F. E. Clark, founder of the Society of Christian Endeavour, has been addressing enthusiastic audiences in Bombay.

Mr. Walter Sloan has been asked to return from China, in order to give help in England, in the work of the China Inland Mission.

The Misses Murray, of Yang-chau, are expected home shortly. During their absence Miss Bessie Hanbury will take charge of the Training Home.

Rev. Evan H. Hopkins is, we hear, to succeed the late Dr. Bennett at St. Luke's, Redcliffe-square. Richmond will miss him much, but West London will welcome him.

Dr. Clough.—The Madras Mail of Feb. 1 contains an interesting account of the welcome accorded to the veteran missionary Dr. Clough on his return to the scene of his labours at Ongole.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert R. Francis have arrived at Dhara Doon, in N.W. India, in good health, intending to spend some time in connection with the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society.

Mr. William Joseph Lewis (Swanmore-road, Ryde) is, we are glad to say, recovering from the recently-reported severe attack of lung-congestion, and thanks his friends for their prayers and sympathy.

Rev. Dr. Simon, Principal of the Congregational Theological Hall, Edinburgh, has been appointed Principal of the Yorkshire United Independent College, and Professor of Systematic Theology.

The Bishop of Wakefield has taken measures to close a very unhappy dispute in the glass bottle trade. His action seems likely to bring about the resumption of work, and thus remove the sore distress felt in many families.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe has been appointed Prebendary of St. Paul's. He is surely well entitled to the distinction by reason of devoted labour and varied usefulness; and all will rejoice that these should have found some recognition.

Rev. George Lord, chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union, has been granted a three months' holiday by the church at Stanley, Liverpool, to which he has so faithfully ministered for thirty years. He is now at Genoa.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor writes:—"We shall be thankful for prayer for God's blessing on a short visit to Germany, from April 4-12, at the invitation of the committee of the German Alliance Mission, Barmen, who have given us seven workers for China."

Rev. T. Y. Tymms, Principal of Rawdon Baptist College, has since the end of last year been seriously out of health. Having somewhat recovered, he has removed to Grange for a few weeks. It is feared he will not be able to resume work at the college for some time.

Mr. J. E. Duff, who has been helping in the business work of the C.I.M. at Shanghai for some time, is about to proceed to Han-chung to relieve Mr. Easton from the local secretaryship. He was to be married to Miss C. L. Williams before setting out on his journey.

Rev. Thomas Cook, whose missions have lately been so much blessed in South Africa, has, it is stated, decided to ask the Wesleyan Conference of 1893 for a year's leave of absence, in order to hold a series of missions in the colonies. Mr. Cook, should the Conference grant his request, will probably leave England in 1894.

Mr. Stanley P. Smith has undertaken, says China's Millions, to visit the mission stations in the three western provinces, Si-ch'uen, Yun-nan, and Kwei-chau, as Mr. Stevenson's representative. (We learn by telegram that Mr. Stanley Smith was united in marriage to Miss Anna Lang before setting out on this journey.)

Mrs. Wilkes, of Manor Cottage, Sturry-street, Poplar, writing as to the needs of her rescue work in the East End, and the death of many leading helpers, says: "The work is steady though small, and the good done is a fact well known to those who see our daily life. Many poor young mothers now are doing well instead of swelling the numbers on the streets, and many by altered lives show that the work is not in vain. I have much to praise God for—health, courage, faith, and hope."

Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner.—The central committee of the Army and Navy Missionary Union announce that Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner, of the China Inland Mission, and late of the 2nd Dragoon Guards, has consented to be the union's first representative in the foreign missionary field. Hitherto he has been working in China at his own charges, but circumstances make this no longer possible. Mr. Polhill-Turner remains, as heretofore, entirely subject to the direction of the China Inland Mission.

Archdeacon Sinclair, speaking at St. Paul's on Sunday week from John xiv. 6, "I am . . . the Truth," dwelt very forcibly upon the fundamental distinction between what is inspired and what is not, and the sufficiency of Holy Scripture as the one rule of faith and conduct. If we once admitted tradition, nothing, he maintained, could keep us from falling step by step into acceptance of the Inquisition, the worship of relics, Mariolatry, masses for the dead, transubstantiation, and the infallibility of the Pope.

Mr. W. R. Lane, the well-known evangelist, sails for America in the s.s. Majestic on April 5. After two or three weeks with the students in Mr. Moody's Training School, Chicago, he goes to Hamilton, Ontario, and to other towns in Canada, following up some conferences for Christians which have been arranged. Mr. Lane hopes to return to England about the end of June. Letters concerning Gospel missions next autumn and winter should be addressed to him at 3, Upper High Lever-road, North Kensington, W.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Henry Lakin begins on Sunday a series of evangelistic services at the Edinburgh Castle, for which he will be glad of prayer.

Mr. and Mrs. Evens have returned from America after an evangelistic campaign. They have visited some of the largest churches in and around New York, and the Gospel spoken and sung was blessed to many.

Sheffield.—A ten days' mission has been held in Townhead-street Chapel, by Messrs. McKittrick, Newell, and Ruskin, from Cliff College. The service proved most encouraging, and many profess to have been won to the Saviour.

Blackgang and Isle of Wight.—There has been much blessing of late in connection with the fortnight's revival services conducted by Mr. Abraham Wallis, of Forest Gate; several decided for God during the fortnight and others afterwards.

New Barnet.—Mr. Goudie has finished a fourteen days' mission in connection with the Baptist Church. The services were well attended, and it has been a time of real blessing. Many who were impressed were dealt with in the inquiry room, and a good number it is believed have accepted the Saviour.

Evangelist L. W. Munhall has closed a Gospel mission in Worcester, Mass., U.S.A. Twelve churches united. More than four thousand persons publicly expressed their desire to begin the Christian life, and nearly or quite twelve hundred made verbal confession of Christ as Saviour, and handed in their names indicating their church preference. Mr. Munhall laboured in the same field six years ago.

Mr. Newton Jones has conducted a mission here, attended with much blessing. In six days, twenty-six meetings were held, including children's services, Bible readings, enquiry meetings, adult services and meetings for men only. The Bible readings and young people's services were rendered specially interesting and instructive by the use of charts. While known as the "Sunday-school Union Evangelist," our brother reaches with equal effect both young and old. G. C. W.

Nottingham.—The eight days' Gospel Mission, conducted by Messrs. Weaver, has been a season of blessing, which will be long remembered by the workers and friends, most of all by the large number who professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. Last Lord's Day was a blessed time, forty-two having given in their names as those who had decided to serve the Lord. The committee have invited the evangelists to continue the mission another week.

Chicago.—A roll-call was lately made among the churches concerning revivals. It was found that many thousands had been added to the churches during the period from Jan. 1 to March 1. The Methodists and the Baptists seem to have been the most favoured. These special meetings are not closed yet. A great many evangelists are here and hard at work, and while the city authorities report an unusual influx of the criminal classes, yet where sin abounds, grace much more abounds.

John O. Foster.

Mr. Henry Morgan, with his wife, has paid a visit to Princes Risborough with his Bible carriage. We feel enriched by his visit, for he has not only warned sinners of their danger, and pointed them to the Saviour, but his words have aroused some Christians who were growing listless and despondent to take fresh courage, and sent them to work with a renewed zeal and strengthened faith. We are thankful to God for sending him here, for we do not get many fresh faces to visit us and to speak to us so faithfully.

Alfred Hill.

Thetford.—On Sunday week, two United Mission services were held in the Oddfellows' Hall, by Gipsy Smith. The hall was crowded at each service, there being quite 900 present in the evening, and numbers were unable to find admission. A united prayer meeting was held on the preceding Saturday evening in the Salvation Army Barracks, and prayer was truly answered in the numbers who came to listen to the Word, and the great power which manifestly accompanied it. All denominational barriers were laid aside, and all vied one with the other in doing their best to make the services successful. Revs. J. P. Watts, Rector of St. Peter's, E. Bacock, Primitive Methodist, and other ministers took part.

Miss Jennie Smith has, under the auspices of the W.C.T.U., been devoting the past few months to railroad men, firemen, and policemen in Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, and other frontier States. Notwithstanding the storms that have so generally prevailed, she has continued her work, and held on an average two meetings every day. Many of these meetings were held in round houses, firemen's halls, and police headquarters, places where the Gospel was for the first time proclaimed. The Spirit of the Lord has been manifested in a remarkable degree in her meetings, and nearly 300 have been hopefully converted. Among this number were drunkards and gamblers, snatched as "brands from the burning," and by Divine grace made new "creatures in Christ Jesus." Instances are given of some of these reformed men now devoting their time to work among their former associates, leading them to give up the service of Satan and take Christ as their leader.

Gathered Gold.

Do good with what thou hast, or it will do thee no good.—Penn.

There can be nothing but pity for the man who is as good as he hopes to be.

If we are trusting, we are not troubling; if we are troubling, we are not trusting.

God's blessing is a good roof over our head to defend us from the storms of man's wrath.—W. Gurnall.

The serpent broke into paradise, but no wicked one shall ever get into heaven. There is no happiness to be had without holiness.—John Trapp.

Other things being equal, or nearly so, he will best explain Scripture who most loves Scripture, and who has most lived Scripture.—Augustine.

You might as well attempt to check an earthquake as to prevent the going forth of the spirit of holiness from a soul washed with blood, or a church refined by fire.—G. C. Wells.

It is not one grace which makes a Christian. A man may have great knowledge, but if he lacks charity it profits nothing; or if he be a man of courage, but without godliness, he is a hero, but not a saint.—James Hamilton.

THE SPIRIT OF THE WORLD.

A worldly spirit is not to be considered as a single sin, or as something that may consist with some real degrees of Christian goodness, but as a state of real death to the kingdom and life of God in our souls.

The heresy of all heresies is a worldly spirit. It is the whole nature and misery of our fall; it keeps up the death of our souls, and so long as it lasts makes it impossible for us to be born again from above.

Publicans and harlots are all born of the spirit of this world; but its highest birth are the scribes, and Pharisees, and hypocrites, who turn godliness into gain, and serve God for the sake of Mammon; these live, and move, and have their being in and from the spirit of this world.

Of all things, therefore, detest the spirit of this world; or there is no help—you must live and die an utter stranger to all that is Divine and heavenly: you will go out of the world in the same poverty and death to the Divine life in which you entered into it. For a worldly, earthly spirit can know nothing of God; it can know nothing, feel nothing, taste nothing, delight in nothing, but with earthly senses, and after an earthly manner.—William Law.

BUDDHA—"THE LIGHT OF ASIA."—At a meeting of the Victoria Institute last week, Rev. R. Collins, M.A., late Principal of Cottayam College, gave an account of the life and times of Buddha. Sir Edwin Arnold's poetical idea of Buddha as a divine Saviour was contrasted with the real Buddha, who, as gathered from the earliest known accounts, was only a reforming ascetic among the many ascetics of his day. His reformation of religion was based on the regulation of conduct; instead of the many religious external observances of those amongst whom he lived, he would have right action in a moral sense. What some claim as the superhuman side of Buddha's history, was pronounced to be legendary, originating in times long after Buddha himself lived. It was also shown that Buddha himself did not teach his followers any of those wonderful doctrines that are now disseminated under the names of "Theosophy" and "Occultism."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Charles Ernest Watney, B.A., of Ridley, has been accepted for missionary work.

The Bishop of London has appointed April 23 as Temperance Sunday throughout his diocese.

Rev. J. Seaver will preach his farewell sermon at St. Mary's, Peckham, on Sunday evening.

The Chapel-of-Ease, Holloway, has started a missionary band with the name of "The Ondos."

The Spring Conference of the Church Association (noticed in our last) proved throughout useful, profitable, and full of vigorous spirit.

The Archbishop of York has received, in response to his recent appeal on behalf of raising a fund for augmenting the poor benefices in the diocese, a donation of £1000.

A series of four lectures in connection with the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance have lately been given in the Guildhall, Worcester, by Revs. J. W. Marshall and H. J. R. Marston.

A lecture was delivered in the Shire Hall, Hertford, on Tuesday week, by General Sir R. Phayre, entitled "The Present Systems of Corrupt Christianity as Signs of the Times in which we are now Living."

Mr. Seaver's successor at Peckham (says the Record) is Rev. Thomas Goss, Vicar of St. James's, Carlisle, who has spent all his clerical life in the North, and who will be an accession to the strength of the Evangelical clergy in London.

A committee of the Convocation of York has reported that there are in the diocese 144 benefices with an income of under a hundred pounds a year, the average being only £67, and 741 under two hundred pounds a year, the average in the latter case being £156.

The Universities Mission to Central Africa reports that its income for the year 1892 was £21,483, the largest amount ever received by the mission in one year. The sum of £11,200 was also received for the endowment of the Nyassa Bishopric. The expenditure amounted to £19,835.

Miss Frances Wakeham, of Marshalls, Braintree, who lately died, at the age of eighty-one, has bequeathed £10,000 towards the erection and endowment of a new church at Bocking, near Braintree. She also leaves several thousand pounds to existing churches and church institutions.

The Archdeaconry of Middlesex, vacant by the death of Dr. Hessey, has been conferred on Rev. Robinson Thornton, D.D., Vicar of St. John's, Notting Hill, who has been secretary of the Diocesan Conference since its inauguration in 1882, and in other ways has done service in the diocese.

At the annual meeting of the Clerical and Lay Union, held on Thursday in Leopold Rooms, Ludgate Circus, a very animated discussion took place as to the proposed amalgamation of the Union with the Protestant Churchmen's Alliance and the Church Association. The latter has not yet consented to the idea, but the two former seem likely to come to terms.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule, who is not often heard in London pulpits, spoke at Westminster Abbey on Sunday week. His text was 1 Cor. x. 13, "He will with the temptation make a way of escape." The sermon was marked by all the speaker's well-known individuality, and especially by the manifest desire to help his hearers to grapple with the temptations of the inner and the outer life.

The Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, at their annual meeting last week, made a distribution of surplus funds in grants to meet benefactions on behalf of poor benefices in England and Wales. They were unable fully to respond to all the applications made to them. The benefices approved for augmentation were 154 in number, ranging in value from nothing to £200 per annum. The total value of grants promised was £40,000, and the value of the benefactions anticipated to obtain such grants was £56,103 3s.

The Bishop of Ripon appeals for Easter offerings for the clergy. "It is," he says, "no secret that in the general depression of agriculture the clergy have suffered heavily. From their incomes, already in many cases too slender, heavy deductions have been made for some years past. I shall understate the case if I put the average loss at 15 per cent. What this means to vicars of parishes with incomes of, say, £100 or £200 I know but too well, even anxiety and poverty, mental strain and physical illness." The Bishop adds that he proposes to appeal to the wealthy Churchmen of the diocese on behalf of the 130 or 140 livings which are under £200 a year to provide him with a fund wherewith he may supplement the Easter offerings of the people to the clergy, and so make up in part the loss referred to.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. Williams has resigned the pastorate at Norden.

Rev. W. A. Meaton has now completed three months' evangelistic labours in Ireland.

Rev. Rowland Evans, Baptist minister at Girlington, has declined a call to Hare-court Church, Canonbury.

The work at Beckenham, carried on for the last year by Rev. T. Sissons, has of late been remarkably successful.

The year-book of Salem Church, Bradford, shows 332 members, thirty-two having been added during the year.

Ten thousand free breakfasts have been given during the season to poor children by Bath-lane Church, Newcastle.

Rev. John Marsden, B.A., after a pastorate of twenty-one years at Paul's Meeting, Taunton, has intimated his intention of retiring.

Mr. E. Pryce Jones, appointed missionary to Farafanga, Madagascar, was ordained at Park Chapel, Camden-town, on Wednesday week.

Rev. Charles Ashford, for over seventeen years pastor at Bury, has resigned the pastorate and accepted a call to the Whitefield Memorial Church, Bristol.

The young men's Bible-class connected with Victoria-street Chapel, Derby, which has just celebrated its forty-third anniversary, has a membership of 120.

Haverstock Mission Sunday-school, Grafton-terrace, N.W. (in connection with Haverstock Chapel, Maitland-park), reports 409 children. The teaching staff now numbers eighteen.

At the annual meeting of Roe-street Church, Macclesfield, held last week, it was reported that nineteen members were received during the year. Reports of various sections of church work were read, and were all of an encouraging nature.

The annual meeting of the Leeds and York Auxiliary to the Church Aid Society was held last week. The contributions last year amounted to £442. Last year Yorkshire raised £13,375 for the London Missionary Society, and only £2875 for the Church Aid Society.

At the thirteenth anniversary of Rev. Robert Berry's settlement at Islington Chapel, it was reported that 783 members had been received into fellowship during the pastorate—an average of sixty a year—the present membership being 482, as against thirty-eight in 1880.

The report of the Visitation scheme at Bacup states that the total number of houses visited amounts to 4885. The number of families who report themselves as regular attenders at places of worship is 3376, those who do not attend any place 759, those who go occasionally 572. The visitors have been well received everywhere, not above a dozen cases of rudeness being reported.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist Centenary Thanksgiving Fund now amounts to £120,000.

The Pastor's College Conference is fixed for April 17-20; he annual supper being given on Wednesday, April 19.

t Rev. James Evans, who has held the pastorate at Po'emoor, near Huddersfield, since 1875, has accepted an invitation to Whitworth, Rochdale.

Rev. E. H. Ellis, who lately went to Melbourne, writes: "We have fourteen churches vacant, and there are some good openings for good men out here."

Rev. George Boulsher, having, after eighteen years' service in America, returned to this country, has been recognised as pastor of the Baptist Church, Waterloo, Liverpool.

A cable despatch from Boston, U.S.A., states that Tremont Temple, the famous Baptist church in that city, under the pastorate of Dr. Lorimer, was totally destroyed by fire early on Sunday morning.

A special meeting of the church at the Metropolitan Tabernacle was held last night for considering the further supply of the pulpit when Dr. Pierson's present engagement shall in June have come to an end.

The annual meeting of the Baptist Church, Rochester, was held on Wednesday week. The reports of the secretary and treasurer were most gratifying. Thirty-three have been added to the church, twenty-one baptized. The membership now is 123. All the agencies are prospering, and the prospects of the church most cheering.

The East Midland Association for Notts, Derby, Leicester, and Lincoln reports that in each county a considerable number of visits had been paid to village churches by pastors and officers of the larger churches in the towns, and that evangelistic work was being carried on with zeal by most of the churches in the Association.

At the final gathering in connection with the centenary of the Baptist Missionary Society, which took place in Northampton last week, an interesting intimation was made by Rev. W. H. Bentley, to the effect that on the previous night he completed the translation of the Congo New Testament, and he hoped to take it back to that country with him shortly.

METHODIST.

Meadow-lane Mission, Leeds, reports 540 church members and 871 Sunday scholars.

The Wesleyans of Wentworth-street, Peterborough, have just celebrated the removal of £1100 debt.

The anniversary of the Hull Wesleyan Mission showed evidence of much blessing during the past year.

The students at Headingley College have held a very successful home and foreign missionary anniversary.

Miss Morton has just concluded a most successful series of evangelistic services at Gortigal, Stewartstown.

Mr. Kirby proposes to establish a mission centre in York with refreshment bar and various social attractions.

The Primitives at Birmingham propose to commence at once the erection of a conference hall at a cost of £2000.

Rev. S. F. Collier, of the Manchester and Salford Mission, will, it is hoped, continue his work for another year.

Mr. J. Morman, the blind evangelist, has conducted a mission at Worksop. Large congregations have assembled, and many have been saved.

The London ministers' meeting, held last week in City-road Chapel, devoted a good deal of consideration to the question of the value of a Liturgy.

The society at Treharris has been quickened by the turning to Christ of thirty who have listened to the Word in school and chapel for some years.

Special mission services have been held at Mallow by Revs. William Crawford, M.A., Samuel Dunlop, and J. U. Park, B.A.; and at Maryborough by Rev. W. R. Budd.

At a home mission convention of the Nottingham and Derby district, Rev. A. Llewellyn said that forty-six missions during the year had produced 1074 adult inquirers and 577 young people influenced.

At a meeting held at Rugby in aid of the London Mission, a letter was read from Rev. Dr. Perceval, headmaster of Rugby School, regretting inability to attend, and enclosing a contribution to the fund.

A convention for class leaders has recently been held in New-street Chapel, York. Admirable papers were read by Rev. A. Roebuck and Mr. Seaman, and many testimonies to the worth of the class meeting were given, as well as many suggestions for its working.

The third anniversary of the Soldiers' Home, Buckingham Palace-road, was celebrated on Tuesday week, March 21. Striking proof was furnished of the excellent work this institution is doing among the Guards and the men of the London garrison. Since its commencement the work has been carried forward on a strictly unsectarian basis, and this policy has obtained the hearty support and sympathy of the authorities and the representatives of various Christian churches.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. A. H. Reid has felt compelled to resign his charge at Torquay.

At Stamfordham a fortnight's special services has been conducted by Mr. W. Hall, of Annan.

The Bristol Presbytery report that evangelistic and temperance work has lately been most encouraging.

Dr. Thain Davidson paid a visit to his old congregation at Islington, preaching at Colebrooke-row on Sunday evening.

Twenty-seven new members were added to the fellowship of Somers Town Church (Rev. Z. B. Woffendale) on Sunday evening.

Rev. Dr. Swanson has removed from Kilburn, and his address in future will be 19, Greencroft-gardens, South Hampstead, N.W.

The report of Trinity Church, Swindon, shows that the membership is 153. The Sunday-school has 240 scholars and twenty-eight teachers.

The report of the St. John's Wood Church shows steady progress. The members on the roll number 876 at Marlborough-place and 300 at Kilburn mission.

Warrior-square Church, St. Leonards, has just held its tenth anniversary. Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson preached to large congregations in the afternoon and evening of Thursday week.

The executors of the late Mr. Sturge have just handed over another £2000 to the China Mission Fund of the English Presbyterian Church, making £11,000, and the estate is not yet wound up.

Rev. Abraham Roberts, of Newsham Park Welsh Chapel, Liverpool, and Moderator of the Liverpool Calvinistic Presbytery, has decided to accept the call to Charing Cross-road Welsh Chapel, London.

At the annual meeting of the Dudley congregation the minister, Rev. F. Stubbs, expressed his gratification that as his ministry in the town extended to many outside his own congregation, so also did the support accorded to his work.

At the annual meeting of the Westbourne Grove congregation all the institutions of the church were reported to be in a cheering condition. While the senior minister, Rev. Dr. Morison, is in the Holy Land, the services are being conducted by the junior minister, Rev. A. Connell.

For several alternate Sunday evenings recently, Rev. J. Cunningham has, at Wandsworth, been discoursing to large congregations on the Doctrines of the Church of Rome. "The Chair of Peter," "The Seven Sacraments," "Penance," and "The Sacrifice of the Mass" have been taken up successively.

Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson, of Cambridge, have offered to purchase a piece of ground and present it to the Presbyterian Church, on condition that at some time in the future it should be used as a site on which to erect a Presbyterian Theological College. A further benefaction of £15,000 would also be devised for the building of the college.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Mr. Thomas Hodgkin, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, has just paid a visit to Dublin which has been a time of much spiritual, intellectual, and social interest.

George Wood, of Oldham, sailed for America on the 25th inst., and Mary A. Marriage Allen is expected to return to London early in the coming month from her labours among the negroes of the Southern States.

It is cheering to be able to report that the new "Friends' Missionary Home" has found a healthy and convenient location in North London, and that a Friend and his wife have offered to reside there and make a home for young men desiring to be missionaries.

By the early death of William V. Wright, of Canada, who spent over three years in Japan, the cause of missions loses an able supporter and noble worker, his bereaved family a loving husband, son, and father, and the Friends' Church a loyal minister and member. He died at Denver, Cola.

The new Friends' Meeting-house and Institute at Dundee was opened on the 24th inst., and is, we hope, a token of "reviving life and activity" among the Friends in the North. The land that produced a Barclay in the seventeenth century, and has blessed the world with so many leaders since, may again take its rightful place in sending forth evangelistic workers for the Friends' Church.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The meetings in the north appear to have been greatly blessed.

The Hanbury-street Elevator is crowded, and is doing excellent work.

The Blackfriars shelter has been enlarged owing to the pressure for admission.

The Drury-lane Slum Corps have unfortunately been attacked by a rowdy gang.

General Booth's birthday is to be celebrated on April 10 by special meetings in Westminster chapel.

Miss Lucy Booth having recovered, has now returned to her duties as leader of the work in India.

The General spoke in Union Church, Islington, on Monday. He begins this day a series of meetings in Camborne.

With a view to gradually assisting the younger habitués of the shelter, Captain Hardy, of Leeds, is forming a shoeblack brigade.

Although Mr. Bramwell Booth is not yet sufficiently strong to bear the strain of conducting large and public gatherings, he is nevertheless taking his share in the March campaign.

Says the War Cry: "Australia cables the capture of 650 prisoners the first week. India is the arena of constant revolution—advance and victory. America has commenced a backsliders' campaign. Reports from Germany read more than ever like English, Sweden has set up a three thousand goal, and all other nations are, more or less, moved by the spell and fascination of soul-saving."

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Hammersmith, on 20th inst., Mrs. Macbeth, aged sixty-five, wife of the Rev. R. Macbeth, and herself beloved for her work's sake.—At Stirling, on 19th inst., Rev. R. Hogarth, senior United Presbyterian minister at Stranraer.—In Canonbury, on 22nd inst., Rev. Uriah Davies, who has laboured devotedly at St. Matthew's, Canonbury, for more than thirty-two years.—At Hull, Mr. W. Norman, aged seventy-seven, a valuable worker at Anlaby-road Church.—At King's Lynn, Captain Matthew Creak, a valued worker and local preacher, who, during the half-century he spent on the ocean, could boast that not one life had been lost in any vessel of which he was captain.—At Great Missenden, Mrs. Dorey, wife of the esteemed Baptist pastor.—At Hendon, on 14th inst., Mrs. Fairfax, aged ninety, formerly well known at Ware, Herts.—At Henley, on 17th inst., Mr. J. L. Pither, aged seventy-five, who at one time did good work in the Antipodes.—At Aberdeen, suddenly, Mr. W. A. Millward, a well-known Manchester merchant, and very active in Christian work.—At Dawlish, Rev. E. A. Bowden, of the Congregational Chapel.—At Peppard, Mrs. E. Francis, aged seventy, a quiet devoted follower of Jesus.—At Stockport, on 15th inst., Mr. John Ogle, well known locally as a faithful worker.—At Castlecomb, Mr. W. James, a ready helper in the Lord's work.—At Norwich, Mrs. W. P. Jarrold, aged seventy-two, long associated with the Chapel-in-the-Field, and with all manner of earnest undertakings.—At Northampton, Mr. H. J. Wilson, aged sixty, a busy worker.—At Dunfermline, Mr. W. Robertson, a warm sympathiser in Christian work.—At Wrexham, Rev. H. Hughes, aged seventy-eight, the first student to enter Brecon College, who laboured for some years in Demerara, and afterwards held pastorates at Horsley-upon-Tyne, Newent, and Cefn Mawr.—At Northampton, Mr. John Higgins, aged fifty-eight, well known in Christian work.—At Folkestone, on 18th inst., Rev. W. R. Bamber, of St. Clement's, City-road.—At Colchester, Rev. H. Caddell, M.A., aged eighty-one, for thirty-nine years vicar of St. Peter's, Colchester.—At Northampton, on 19th inst., Mr. Joseph Gibbs, after a painful illness, a devoted and leading Christian worker.—At Exmouth, on 15th inst., Mr. Gillmore Goodland, aged fifty-one, whose last words were "Christ is on the Father's throne."—News has been received of the death of a well-known Canadian Congregational minister, Rev. Robert Brown, of Toronto, a descendant of the old Scottish Covenanter "John Brown, Priest Hill." His death was accelerated through great exposure while engaged in mission work in Manitoba.—At Minsterworth, on the 20th inst., Mr. C. H. Taylor, aged sixty-nine, a devoted Christian; two of his sons are now useful ministers.—At Dublin, Rev. Geo. T. Hiffernan, incumbent of Newport, co. Tipperary.—At Cork, Mr. J. Harris, assistant manager of the Tract Depot.—At West Kilburn, Rebecca, wife of Mr. R. Brooks, a believer from youth, and during recent years a great sufferer from illness, throughout which she was fortified with Divine grace, and from which she had issue in a peaceful departure.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of Rev. Thomas Evans, of Mussoorie, Indian Missionary and Reformer.

☞ Those who send The Christian by post must be careful to keep the stamp on the wrapper, and not to let it partially adhere to the cover of the paper. When this is not attended to, the Post-office charges extra postage on the ground that the paper is "closed from inspection."

Our friend Mr. Fuller Gooch is about to make another forward step in his new pastorate of the Free Christian Church at West Norwood, by the opening on Wednesday next of a large iron hall, which will accommodate nearly 1000 people. Meetings will be held afternoon and evening, and we trust our brother will have the presence and the practical sympathy of many of the friends of Gospel work in London.

We have received a letter from Sir Wm. Fox, of Auckland, N.Z., in which he says:—

You have on previous occasions received from Lady Fox and myself donations for a few London charities. I have now the melancholy duty of enclosing you a bank post bill for £195, to be distributed among the parties and in the sums specified. . . . You will have probably heard of my wife's, Lady Fox's, very sudden death in June last, by an attack of "la grippe." At the same time I was confined to my bed with an attack of the same disease, which prostrated me for nearly seven months, and am now only slowly recovering from its almost fatal effects, which is my excuse for the great delay in communicating with you. I am at present in Wellington, but hope to return to my residence in Auckland in a week or two.

Information is at length being received regarding the persecution of Christians in Asiatic Turkey. The Moslem population is showing anew its hatred of the Armenians, and hundreds of the latter have been thrown into prison at Cæsarea, Marsovan, and other places. The insinuation that the Armenians contemplate revolt is but an excuse for the cruelty that is being shown them, seeing that they are but a weak minority in the towns where the persecutions have taken place. We recently stated that Mr. Thoumaian was among the incarcerated Christians in Marsovan. For him and his work, as well as for others, earnest appeal should be made to the throne of grace at the present time.

In the discussion which took place in the House of Commons on the Early Closing Bill, Mr. John Burns spoke of the utter want of care and good feeling among the working-classes generally towards tradesmen on the point of early shopping. He declared that he had quite failed to create such a healthy sentiment as ought to prevail. Men who themselves clamour for shorter hours can yet by their selfish carelessness, keep others working till late at night, and thus deprive them and their wives and families of the rest and recreation which they need. It will be a good thing if Parliament can do something to emancipate the slaves of the counter; it is almost a better thing that the working classes should have one of their own number who has the courage and honesty to tell them their faults, and also to speak of these faults from his place in Parliament.

If by celebrating the martyrdom of Barrowe, Greenwood, and Penry, who suffered death for conscience' sake three hundred years ago, the Congregationalists can awaken anything of a similar spirit in the men of to-day, the will do an unspeakable service to the Church at large. There is a magnifying of differences which tends to needless divisions, but there is also an easy contentment with anything which is deadly to conscience and consecration. The danger of seeing no difference between truth and error, or seeing it, to make no stir about it, is, on the whole, greater than any tendency to narrow exclusiveness. The true martyr spirit, which places fidelity to God before ease, or honour, or worldly gain, is the very salt of the Church which can alone keep her from corruption.

Amidst the manifestoes, pitiful and pathetic, panic-stricken or defiant, which are issued by our brethren in Ireland, it is cheering to find an utterance like the following, calm and strong, because it leans on God:—

Minute addressed to its Members by Ulster Quarterly Meeting of Society of Friends.

In preparing our report to the Yearly Meeting on the subject of peace, our minds are deeply exercised by the threatening condition of affairs throughout Ireland, which may possibly end in the horrors of civil war.

We therefore most earnestly counsel our fellow members to be faithful to our Christian testimony, and to use all their influence towards allaying the military spirit now prevalent, which is so contagious, and which we believe to be completely at variance with the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Rather let a holy care rest upon us to abide in that power which gives dominion over the hopes and fears that arise from the concerns of an unstable world.

How numerous and how encouraging are the instances of members of our Society who, in the midst of war and civil commotion, have been strengthened to maintain a faithful testimony, and under circumstances of great outward peril to commit themselves, and all that was dear to them in this life, to the care and keeping of the unslumbering Shepherd of Israel.

John F. Harris, Clerk.

Lisburn, 20 of 3 Month, 1893.

In addition to the remonstrances and protests emanating from bodies of Protestant Christians in Ireland, the Young Women's Christian Association of Ireland has addressed a letter to the Central Council, Divisional Councils, secretaries, and members of the Y.W.C.A. in England, Wales, and Scotland, earnestly protesting against the Home Rule Bill. If the measure before Parliament were much more complete and unobjectionable than, by the confession of its warmest friends, is the case, we think that Christians out of Ireland could not rightly hurry it forward, or forbear to give full and exhaustive consideration to the almost unanimous objection of their fellow Christians in Ireland. All Christians will admit that the subject must be lifted above self-interests; but the question "What is right?" can only be adequately answered by thorough, exhaustive, and dispassionate consideration, which both sides ought readily to accord.

The Easter number of All the World contains the following significant little story:—

"I need oil," said an ancient monk. So he planted him an olive sapling.

"Lord," he prayed, "it needs rain, that its roots may drink and swell. Send gentle showers." And the Lord sent a gentle shower.

"Lord," prayed the monk, "my tree needs sun. Send sun, I pray Thee." And the sun shone, gilding the dripping clouds.

"Now frost, my Lord, to brace its tissues," said the monk. And, behold, the little tree stood sparkling with frost. But at evensong it died. Then the monk sought the cell of a brother monk, and told his strange experience.

"I, too, have planted a little tree," he said, "and see, it thrives well. But I entrusted my little tree to its God. He who made it knows better what it needs than a man like me. I laid no condition. I fixed not ways or means. 'Lord, send it what it needs.' I prayed—storm or sunshine, wind, rain, or frost. Thou hast made it and Thou dost know."

At this time of fear and prayer this little parable may be a word in season. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." It is also man's opportunity for trusting God. He sees the end from the beginning. Let us remember that He doeth according to his will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. And all He does is right. Especially let the children of God remember that times of tribulation are eminently times in which his people should prove themselves to be not of the world though in it; that these are occasions for the lights of the world to shine, and for the salt of the earth to prove its saltness.

Bishop Alford has issued a pungent "response" to the Declaration on the Lincoln Judgment, signed by the Deans of Ripon and Norwich and many Evangelical clergymen. He says:—

It is with great regret that Protestant Churchmen study the Declaration on the Lincoln Judgment signed by many well-known and justly honoured clergymen of the Evangelical school. The silence and quiescent attitude so long maintained need not occasion surprise. The difficulty of the situation suggests ample reason for long and patient forbearance, but not for the absence in such a document of a plain and direct protest against the idolatry of what is called "the Catholic Mass," accompanied with sacramental elevation and eucharistic adoration, as now practised in many a parish church.

The object of the Declaration is "truth and peace," but there can be no peace without truth for the foundation. There is no truth in the Mass tolerated under the protection of the Lincoln Judgment; therefore truth protests and peace is wanting. There is no truth in eucharistic adoration. An idol in the parish church, elevated for adoration, brings no peace either to the soul or to the parish.

The Bishop complains that the Lincoln Judgment introduces idol worship into parish churches, alongside or in place of Divine worship, at the will of the priest. The Declaration says: "As loyal Churchmen we bow to the decisions of the Supreme Court;" Bishop Alford responds that "Churchmen cannot but renounce discordant judicial decisions." And to the discouragement given by the Declaration to all thoughts of secession, the Bishop replies: "We should refuse to worship in a Ritualistic church for the same reason as we should refuse to worship in a Roman Catholic chapel." There could not be stronger endorsement of the remark in our issue of Jan. 19, that "Evangelicalism and Protestantism will only overcome Romanism and Popery in proportion as they are themselves free from the errors of that system."

One of the most gratifying signs of the spread of right feeling between the different classes of our countrymen is the University settlement movement. It will do much to aid the rich and educated to understand the poor and illiterate, and vice versâ. The men who work it are finding out, however, that they cannot do without the aid of women to visit the sick and the poor. Separation between the sexes is against the law of nature, and cannot be practised without entailing serious loss. Man's helpmeet has to be with him from the cradle to the grave. The truth of this is more apparent, perhaps, in religious work than anything else, and those who would do the wisest and the best for their age will do well to associate woman with them in their enterprises. The example of the Master ought to be decisive.

Commenting on the punishment which has recently overtaken some of the commercial thieves who prey on society, The Echo said: "We cannot but express the hope that the downfall of the Liberator and its kindred societies may act as a salutary check upon the worship of mammon among the followers of Christ." We should be thankful if this were so. Few things are more humiliating than the deference paid by Christians to worldly rank, and the possession of money. The man with the gold ring counts for too much, and is too often put into office, and consulted and followed whether he be worthy or not. How wide the difference between this mercenary view of men, and the guiding principle in the early days, when men were called to the work of dispensing the Church's gifts, because they were "full of faith and the Holy Ghost."

The Daily News keeps on making its damaging reports of the doings of Workmen's Clubs, the colour of their politics being no shelter from its attacks. One of them which its commissioners recently visited had for its motto, "Liberty, reform, progress"—which calls forth the vigorous denunciation, "Liberty to set going among the people the gin taps and the beer barrels during the quiet hours of Sunday, and to keep them going into the dead of night, when the deliberate voice of the country and the authoritative decision of Parliament have declared again and again that they ought not to be going! Reform in the accommodation provided in the spirit vaults! Progress in the fuddling and boozing which are the curse of the country, and the stumblingblock in the way of every good and beneficent movement for the welfare and happiness of the masses of the people! A plague on such liberty, reform, and progress!" The publicans also are protesting against rivals which can keep open at all hours and be under no supervision. Thus the very abuses of bad things work their remedy. One thing is sure to follow from the present agitation—drink will be deprived of some of its powers for evil.

The nearness of Sheffield to Doncaster, one of the great racing centres, has been the occasion of a great amount of gambling among its inhabitants. Gambling quite rivals, if it does not exceed, drink in its ruinous influences on the working classes. Troubled by this painful fact, the Chairman of the Congregational Association for the present year made his address bear very largely upon it, and afterwards a resolution was passed urging the Government to introduce a bill making it illegal to publish betting news and prophecies. Fortune-telling is a punishable offence, but the evil it ever wrought is nothing to that which the degraded daily Press causes by its "prophecies." The great towns of the Midlands and the North might be greatly improved by a purer Press.

Those who have always been emphatic in praising the appearance of Continental cities, the absence from the streets of everything calculated to suggest evil, must have found food for painful reflection in the telegram of the Paris correspondent of The Daily News, who says that a question has been asked in the Senate on the indecencies of the streets and Press in Paris. Senator Bérenger said that public balls and crowded thoroughfares are alike the scenes of objectionable displays. His chief objection seems to have been to the balls given by the Society of Artists, the committee of which was composed of "elderly and serious artists." Something will now be done to prevent such scandals, and to prosecute the establishments where they go on. The kiosks are also to be cleansed. That there should be any sense of shame and uneasiness in a capital which has done so much to demoralise the youth of the world is a sign of improvement to fill Christian hearts with joy.

The little village of Zsablya, in Hungary, is peopled by Hungarians and Germans who are all Roman Catholics. For a long time past they had their religious services in German; but some weeks ago the Bishop ordered that the services should be held in Hungarian. Against this order the German population protested, threatening to become Protestants. The Bishop became frightened, and replied by telegram that every Sunday they might have two services—one in Hungarian, followed by one in German, and that Hungarian "fêtes" might be celebrated the day following in German. The Germans, finding that they were treated with too much contempt, preferred to sacrifice their religious convictions, and after a touching scene they took leave of their curé, and went bodily over to the Pastor Spaunagl, to become Lutherans.

On one aspect of the action of the Bombay Decennial Conference nothing, so far as we have observed, has yet been written or said publicly, although it is spoken of in private, and has great influence with some minds. It is this, that men living on the spot are best able to judge of the things that are going on before their eyes. To which we reply:—1. Men living on the spot are often the blindest to the things they see; "they see and do not perceive." 2. Other men, also living on the spot, both see and condemn what is going on. 3. The action of the Government in regulating vice is hidden away as much as possible. 4. We who are not on the spot are, in a measure, responsible for what is done, and cannot allow others to act on our behalf. 5. It is quite as easy for us at home as for our brethren in India to know that our Government has no moral right either to sanction vice by regulating it, or to manufacture and promote the sale of things which destroy the bodies and souls of men. Geography really does not come into the question.

Dr. Macfarlane, formerly of New Guinea, says that, although it took seventeen years for European missionaries to win their first converts in Tahiti, to his knowledge it had never taken the natives as many months to win converts. He, therefore, advocates the plan of a native ministry acting under the care of the missionaries. Dr. Moffat also believed that Africa would never be evangelised except by African preachers. This view quite coincides with the history of the Gospel in our own country; for, much as the Romanising party make of Augustine of Canterbury, the real work of making Christ known had been long carried on by men of our own blood and speech. Mr. Low, in his history of the diocese of Durham, says:—"The Northumbrian Church did far more for the spread of the Gospel in England than the Roman mission in Kent, and it is to a presbyter of that Church, the Venerable Bede, that England is indebted for the earliest and most trustworthy history both of her ecclesiastical and civil state."

The work of the London Missionary Society in New Guinea covers (says The Chronicle) more than 1000 miles of coast, and employs more than seventy native evangelists from the Loyalty Islands, Samoan Islands, and the Hervey Islands. As these brethren and also the English brethren are dependent upon imported food for support, it is proposed to build a steamship to communicate with them; it will also be useful for conveying the native evangelists to and from their distant homes. The cost of this new effort it is hoped to meet by appealing to the young persons of the several congregations. This small section of missionary work impresses the imagination with the worth of native agency; and, similarly, in India the number of native Christian workers has increased from 1643 in 1881 to 3278 in 1890, just double. How enormously this development of native agency will tell in half a century.

A correspondent writes:—"Some one has written objecting to the word substitution, as expressing the work of Christ our Saviour, and wishing to express the saving truth by the word identification. An evangelist, however, does not tell the sinner he was chosen in Christ before the world began, but lifts up Christ on the cross as dying the just for the unjust; and the Lord Jesus, when explaining to Nicodemus the manner in which life comes to the sinner, used the serpent lifted up, and did not open out to him the mystery of the Red Sea." Substitution, indeed, does not express the whole truth of the Gospel; but the whole truth cannot be preached in every sermon.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.—A meeting of the members of the congregation took place in the main building of the Metropolitan Tabernacle last week. The object of the gathering was to discuss the question of the future supply to the pulpit. The members were evidently much divided in their opinions as to the most suitable minister for the post of permanent pastor. After much discussion it was decided by ballot, by a majority of more than 1000, that Mr. Thomas Spurgeon should be invited to occupy the pulpit for twelve months, from July, with a view to instalment to the position of permanent pastor, provided his health and the success of his ministry are maintained. A second proposition, suggesting the retirement of Dr. James Spurgeon in June, was also carried by a large majority. Until that date Dr. Pierson and Dr. James Spurgeon will conduct the services.

The Book of the Kingdom.—9.

DISPENSATIONS NOT ETERNAL.—II.

"Unto me (Paul), who am less than the least of all saints, was this grace given, to preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the dispensation of the mystery which from all ages hath been hid in God who created all things; to the intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavenly places might be made known through the Church the manifold wisdom of God, according to which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." Eph. iii. 8-11. R.V.

Oh, how unlike the complex ways of man,
God's easy, artless, unencumbered plan.
—Cowper.

Let the whole period of human history, as revealed in the Scripture of truth, be represented by a circle, of which He that sitteth upon the throne is the Centre. In describing the circle, start with Gen. i.-iii.—"In the beginning GOD," Creator and Ruler over all; man created, and all things put under his feet, but deceived and fallen, and the dominion delivered over to the liar and murderer, to whom man listened, whom he obeyed, and who thus became by human rebellion and Satanic usurpation the prince and god of this world. Complete the circle with 1 Cor. xv. 24-28—all things subjected to Christ; He, the Son, also subjected to Him that did subject all things unto Him; that GOD may be all in all.

Now mark the circle into segments—(1) Adam to the Flood; (2) Noah to Nimrod and the Dispersion; (3) Abraham to Moses; (4) Joshua to the Captivity; (5) Nebuchadnezzar to John the Baptist; (6) Jesus preaching the Kingdom of God and of heaven as come nigh, but rejected and the King slain—to Jesus coming again to take his great power and reign; (7) His reign, until he has subdued all enemies under his feet and delivered up the Kingdom to God and his Father, that GOD, Father, Son, and Spirit may be all things in all. (Other divisions may be made; but these answer the purpose of our illustration.)

Many diagrams have been devised, in which lines horizontal and perpendicular, stretching forward and upward and downward, represent the great events of God's procedure; but we venture to suggest that the circle divided into segments is better, because it makes manifest the unity of God's purpose, and shows that the various dispensations are parts of one whole, and all tend to one great result—the downfall of the usurper and the vindication and glorification of God, by the revelation of the infinite perfections of his nature and his character, which are all summed up in his one name—LOVE.

Not only did God's ideal Man exist before man was created, but He was in God's purpose the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; and his Church was chosen in Him before the foundation of the world. The great and far-reaching purpose of God, however, was wrought out by stages and processes, in order that his creatures may comprehend it. Tennyson touched a great truth when he wrote:—

For I doubt not through the ages ONE INCREASING PURPOSE runs,
And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns.

It is one purpose, though it has many parts; just as man's one life has been divided into seven ages.

It is supposed by many that because in the order of the dispensations the Church began at Pentecost, therefore the saints of the Old Testament are not included in that body. But the Kingdom of God was not preached until John the Baptist proclaimed it in the wilderness of Judea; are the Old Testament saints therefore excluded from that Kingdom? The all-important truth, that except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God, was declared first to Nicodemus; were the Old Testament saints, therefore, unregenerate persons? The same argument that would shut the Old Testament saints from Pentecost would shut them out from Calvary and the Resurrection.

Faith is unrestricted by dispensational limitations; unbelief is not advantaged by dispensational progression. The elders who obtained a good report by faith, overleaped the dispensations in which their lot was cast; they saw the promises and saluted them from afar; were persuaded of them and embraced them; and confessed that they were strangers and sojourners on the earth: of whom the world was not worthy; the latchet of whose shoes we are not worthy to stoop down and unloose. Though they obtained attestation through their faith they bore not away the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that not apart from us should they be made complete. Surely, then, with us they shall be made complete.

In like manner some have imagined that the Jewish middle wall of partition will be built up again, not as against the Gentile but as against the Jew. In this age of the Gospel the believing Jew is un-Jewed, the believing Gentile is un-Gentiled, and both have put on the New Man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him, where there is neither Jew nor Gentile, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian nor Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all and in all. Yet it is believed possible that in the eternal ages, the Jew, to whom were entrusted the oracles of God, to whom pertaineth the sonship, and the glory, and the covenants, and the legislation, and the divine service, and the promises, whose are the fathers, and of whom (as concerning the flesh) is Christ, who is over all God blessed for ever: shall never experience the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ. That after they have looked upon Him whom they pierced, and mourned for Him as for an only son, and been in bitterness for Him as for a first-born; after their light has come and the glory of the Lord has risen upon them; after men shall have named them the priests of the Lord, and the ministers of our God; after they have solved the great missionary problem, when the remnant of Jacob shall have become in the midst of many peoples as a dew from the Lord, as showers upon the grass; when God shall have blessed them and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him: that then, while Gentile believers are members of the body of Christ, from this vital union the elect nation and the great cloud of witnesses are everlastingly debarred.

It is supposed that Abraham, the friend of God, whom He permitted and honoured to rehearse in type, two thousand years before the fact, the sacrifice of the only begotten and beloved Son; that Abraham, the father of believers, in whom all nations are blessed, and whose seed, whose children, we are, and heirs according to the promise made to him; that our father Abraham and all his seed through Isaac the child of promise—are to occupy an altogether lower place in the eternal future than those of the redeemed who live between the day of Pentecost and the Lord's return; that we are members of the body of Christ, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all, while Abel and Seth and Enoch, Noah, Daniel, and Job, Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and Joseph, David and Samuel and the Prophets, before Christ; and all others to the end of time after Christ's return—are not thus united to Him, but are to be limited through eternity to blessing infinitely meaner in kind and infinitely inferior in degree.

These to us incredible suggestions are (if we understand them correctly) entertained by some whom we esteem very highly in love for their works' sake. With unfeigned willingness to sit at their feet and to learn from them, we submit for their consideration whether the non-recognition that the one and all-inclusive question before the universe is—may not have been the cause of these transitional and temporary distinctions having been regarded as to be perpetuated for ever?

One issue comprehends all. The tempter's assault on man was a means to an end; through Adam he struck at the sovereignty of God. The glove was thrown down in Eden when the arch-liar gave God the lie, and man accepted Satan as his god. As we have shown, the Bible discusses no other theme except as subsidiary to this. When this is settled all is settled.

Dispensational periods were necessary to show that Satan's dominance meant anarchy, corruption, violence, and ruin. That the few souls saved by water brought antediluvian rebellion into the new world beyond the flood. That the slip of the vine of humanity, taken out of the wood and cultivated in a very fruitful hill, under every favourable influence, could only produce poisonous berries, like the parent plant. That, therefore, by new creation, out of the death of the old, must man be saved. That God's wisdom and love and power foresaw and effected this great salvation in his beloved Son. That man in Christ restores, with infinite increase of glory, that which man deceived by Satan took away. And that God, made a liar by one deluded man in Paradise, is glorified as the God of righteousness and truth in the heavenly Jerusalem, before innumerable hosts of angels, by the general assembly and church of the first-born who are enrolled in heaven, by the spirits of just men perfected.

God's vindication is complete. Love reigns. The slanderer is proved a liar, and is cast into the lake of fire. The glory of God lightens the Eternal City; the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the Temple of it.

When the building is finished the scaffolding is removed. "When I became a man I put away childish things." Schoolboy, freshman, undergraduate, are forgotten terms when the education is complete. Dispensational distinctions will have fulfilled their purpose, when the Son shall have delivered up the Kingdom to the Father, and GOD, the Triune Godhead, shall be all in all. Man thenceforth knows only two divisions—all they who in Adam die, and all they who in Christ out of that death are made alive, and are members of his Body for evermore.

SOUTH LONDON.—The Committee of the Friar-street Mission, Borough, state that the hall is situated in the poorest part of South London, and for the last nine years has been open for the preaching of the Gospel by the City Missionary, Sunday-school Work, Mothers' Meetings, Penny Bank, Band of Hope, and kindred objects. This good work has been continued with increasing difficulty year by year, in consequence of many friends who supported the cause at first being removed by death, and the committee fear that there will be no alternative but to close the hall unless others come promptly to their aid. The report shows much good work. It may be had of the secretary, Mr. C. L. Jones, 34, Solon New-road, Clapham, S.W.

The Secret of Peace.

BY DR. J. R. MILLER.*

Let nothing disturb thee,
Nothing affright thee;
All things are passing;
God never changeth;
Patient endurance
Attaineth to all things;
Who God possesseth
In nothing is wanting;
Alone God sufficeth.

Peace is possible to every believer in Christ. No Christian can say, "That is very beautiful. It shines in my friend's face like heaven's radiance. But it is not for me." The peace of God is for every believer. God shows no favouritism in dispensing this blessing. There is great diversity in the natural gifts and abilities bestowed upon individuals. A violet could never become a rose. An apple tree could never become an oak. A sparrow could never reach the eagle's flight. An owl could never learn the canary's song. Not all men can become fine artists. Not all women can become sweet singers. If it were art, or music, or eloquence, or the poet's power, that was set before us as the ideal of a true life, many of us might say, "I never can attain to that." In matters of original endowment God divides severally as He will.

But in grace the best is open to all. The Divine peace is not for a few. No matter how restless, how turbulent, how full of care, how naturally given to worry and anxiety one may be, this sweet, quiet, restful peace of God is possible of attainment.

Yet there are a great many good people who have not yet learned the secret of peace. There are Christian men in business, and in the midst of life's affairs, who are always full of care, fearful of the outcome of their ventures, restless, tossed on the bosom of life's rough sea like leaves on the billows. There are Christian women who love Christ, and read the Bible, and pray, and partake of the Lord's Supper, and work in the Sunday school, and in missionary societies, and who are very dear to Christ, yet whose lives are certainly full of little anxieties. They are easily annoyed. Their faces show lines of care and fret. Now and then they have brief seasons of restful trust, when they seem to have gotten the victory; but in a little time they are back again in the old broken restlessness.

This is not the best the religion of Christ can do for us. More than two hundred and fifty times does the word "peace" occur in the Bible. St. Paul, the homeless, hunted, suffering apostle, used it more than forty times, writing it ofttimes in prison with a chain rattling on his wrist as he wrote. One of our Lord's sweetest farewell words was: "Peace I leave with you"; and when He came from the grave, three times did the benediction fall from his lips, "Peace be unto you." The ideal of life for a believer in Christ is one of peace.

It is very evident that this life of peace is not a life without care. Christ nowhere suggests the thought that his disciples are lifted out of the common conditions of earthly life into a sheltered pilgrimage, where the storms do not beat upon them, where sickness and pain do not reach them, where there are no disagreeable people to live with, and no adversities and disappointments to mar the calmness and quietness of the life from year to year. He said expressly that He did not want his disciples taken out of the world. The Christian is called to live in the midst of the ordinary conditions of life. The winds blow no more softly for him. Bad men are no more gentle because one of God's children is beside them. Sickness turns not away from a home because one of Christ's little ones dwells there. Circumstances are no more kindly because it is a Christian who is being hurt by their pitiless grind.

Care is one of the conditions of human life. The birds have no care. The lambs that feed in the meadows have no care. The savage who lives in nature's wilderness has but little anxiety; his wants are few, and his life lacks that sensitiveness which feels trials. But as life grows in the things that ennoble it and make it worthy, care increases. The love which the religion of Christ teaches makes our hearts more and more sensitive, so that instead of taking us out of the world's trying experiences its makes us feel its hardships and burdens all the more. Life's relationships all bring with them burden and anxiety. The peace which Christ promises is not made by emptying a little spot of all the darkness, suffering, and cost of its condition, and setting us down into it.

Nor is this peace produced by so changing our nature that we shall not feel the things that cause pain and disturbance. To do this our hearts would have to be robbed of the very qualities in them which are noblest and divinest. Only think what it would mean to you to have taken out of your life the possibility of suffering from the trials, the losses, the injustices, the wrongs, the sorrows of life. To be made so that you would not feel these things would be to lose out of your heart the power to love and to sympathise.

Our purest joys and our deepest sufferings lie very close together. To have the capacity to love and be happy is to have also the capacity to suffer. Religion makes our hearts more gentle, more thoughtful, more sympathetic, and prepares us to be pained more, not less, by the friction, the trials, the frets of life. The Christian suffers no less in sorrow, trial, and care because he is a Christian; he probably suffers more. It is no easier in a human sense for a friend of Christ to meet disappointments, adversities, bereavements, and losses, and to endure the frictions and annoyances of life, than it is for the worldly man; it may be harder. It is not by dulling the sensibilities that Christ gives peace. It is a peace in the heart which He gives—a peace which one may have within while without storms are raging; a calm in the soul in the midst of external agitations and tumults; a quiet restfulness which holds the life in serene composure even while all things seem to be disastrous; a spirit unperturbed, unfretted, unruffled, in the midst of life's multitudinous cares.

What are the secrets of this peace? How is it to be gotten? St. Paul gives the answer in two very definite counsels. The first is, "In nothing be anxious." Anxiety is worry. We cannot help having things in life that would naturally make us anxious. Yet, come what may,

WE ARE NOT TO BE ANXIOUS.

There are reasons for this counsel. Worry does no good. It changes nothing. Fretting over a disappointment does not give us the thing we wanted. Worrying about the weather does not make it cold or warm, cloudy or sunny. Our Lord reminds us of the uselessness of worry when He says that by being anxious about our stature we cannot make ourselves any taller.

Anxiety enfeebles and wastes our strength. One day's worry exhausts a person more than a whole week of quiet, peaceful work. It is worry, not overwork, as a rule, that kills people. Worry keeps the brain excited, the blood feverish, the heart working wildly, the nerves quivering, the whole machinery of the life in unnatural tension, and it is no wonder then that people break down.

Anxiety mars one's work. Nobody can do the best work when fevered by worry. One may rush and always be in great haste, and may talk about being busy, fuming and sweating as if he were doing ten men's duties; and yet some quiet person alongside, who is moving leisurely and without any anxious haste, is probably accomplishing twice as much, and doing it better. Fluster unfits one for good work.

Anxiety irritates and frets one. A sweet spirit is an essential feature of every beautiful life. Ungoverned temper is not only un-Christian, but is also most unlovely. There may be a difference of taste concerning many matters. What one thinks beautiful in dress or manner another may condemn. But no one thinks bad temper lovely. Yet worry leads to irritability, makes one censorious, querulous, of a complaining, repining spirit. One cannot have a uniformly sweet spirit, patient, gentle, amiable, without peace in the heart; peace makes the face lovely, even in homeliness. It curbs the tongue, that it shall speak no hasty, ill-advised, impatient words. It gives quiet dignity to all the movements. Anxiety spoils many a disposition, and writes lines of unrest and care upon many a face which ought to keep lovely into old age.

Then anxiety is sin. It is not a mere unhappy thing that wastes the strength, mars the work, and hurts the temper; it is also distrust of God. We say we believe in the love of God, and then we worry over what He sends—the circumstances He appoints for us, the tasks He sets for us, the place He assigns us, the path in which He leads us, the way He deals with us. Worry is sin.

Hence we are to set it down as a positive rule that we are never to be anxious. There are no exceptions. We are not to say that our case is peculiar; that even Job would be impatient if he had our trials; that even Moses would lose his temper if he had our provocations; or that even Paul would worry if he had our cares. This law of life has no exceptions—"In nothing be anxious."

What, then, shall we do with the things which would naturally worry us? St. Paul tells us, "In everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God." That is, instead of being fretted and distracted over the things which we cannot control, we are to put them out of our own hands into God's by specific prayer, and leave them there. No human wisdom can explain the mysteries of life. No human hand can take the strange complication of life's events and so adjust them that they will make beauty and happiness. But there is One to whose wisdom all life's mysteries are open and clear. There is no confusion in this world as God's eye looks upon events. What is keen trial to us to-day He sees resulting in blessing and good a little while hence. The thousand apparently tangled circumstances and events, amid which our life is moving, are to Him threads with which perfect loveliness is being woven.

We are not to try, therefore, to thrust from us the cares and trials that come to us clearly as God's will, but are quietly to submit to them. It is this restless struggle against the things we cannot compel out of our life that makes such pain and bitterness for so many of us. The bird, which when put in a cage flies against the wires in wild efforts to be free, only bruises its body, and beats its wings into bleeding wounds in unavailing struggle. Far wiser is the bird which, when put in a cage, begins to sing. If we would but learn this lesson, and cheerfully accept the things we cannot resist, as our Father's will for us, we would have peace in our heart, and would get a blessing out of every trial.

Just to be still though tempests break,
To know He never would forsake
The heart He made to be his own;
To know He is not King alone,
But Father, infinite in care
Of every waif that breathes the air.
If this be mine, how light the weight
I bear through changing time's estate.

Just to be joyous in to-day,
To know time's floods, which sweep away
The gold and precious things of life,
With desolation's breathings rife,
Can never touch the arms I hold
Around my gems, more dear than gold
Unless He wills—if this I know,
Fearless my footsteps come and go.

Just to be still and murmur not;
To know He never yet forgot
The child He led! to-morrow's care
To lay on Him—my guide—to bear;
To see the sunlight of to-day,
Nor sigh that it may fade away.
If this my part, my days shall be
Forecasts of immortality.

We are told that the peace of God shall guard our hearts and thoughts. It is a military figure that is suggested. Men sleep in quiet confidence in their tents, with enemies all about, because waking sentinels keep watch through all the night. Our hearts may be quiet and confident in any danger because God watches. "The Lord is thy keeper." "He that keepeth thee shall not slumber." It is not a mere philosophy of self-control that is taught us. There is a keeping not our own. It is possible for us so to commit all our life's sorrows, cares, and alarms to Christ that the Divine love shall wrap us around like a blessed atmosphere, quieting all fear and filling us with holy peace. One asks a question, and then answers it:—

How shall I quiet my heart?
How shall I keep it still?
How shall I hush its tremulous start,
At tidings of good or ill?
How shall I gather and hold
Contentment and peace and rest,
Wrapping their sweetness, fold on fold,
Over my troubled breast?

The Spirit of God is still,
And gentle and mild and sweet;
What time his omnipotent glorious will
Guideth the worlds at his feet,
Controlling all lesser things,
This turbulent heart of mine,
He keepeth us under his folded wings,
In a peace serene, divine.

Is not the lesson worth learning at any cost? It can be learned; it has been learned. Its one secret is perfect submission to the will of God. Every resistance or disobedience causes unrest and sorrow; but quiet acceptance, with loving confidence and joyous song, will bring the peace of God into the soul.

BETHEL AND PENIEL.

BY J. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

I.—THE HOUSE OF GOD.

Night fell upon a lonely soul, as it is wont to fall in southern latitudes, abrupt and cold. Jacob, the subtle supplanter, was homeless. Behind him, an injured brother, an angered father, an anxious mother. Before him the dread unknown, with all its possibilities for good and evil. In his present frame of mind there was little thought of good ahead. Padan Aram was very far off, and it was impossible to tell what reception might await him there, even if he reached his journey's end. Many were the dangers besetting the path of a solitary wanderer through that rugged country. There were wild beasts and robbers, and the still more dangerous fever damps at night. Perhaps, as he chose out the stones to form his pillow—his staff, his only load or weapon, by his side—Jacob was placing himself in the way of some such foe, the fate of many.

As darkness settled over him, with all its chill discomfort, seeming to shut him off from every other living creature, so the black night of hopelessness closed in upon his soul. It no doubt seemed very hard, to his way of thinking, that he should thus have been driven forth. By a specious line of argument he had doubtless long since absolved himself from blame for his behaviour towards his brother. The sale of the birthright, enjoyed by his brother through the merest chance, instead of being shared by him as his twin, had been a simple matter of business. Esau would have died had he not succoured him with that red pottage, and then he, Jacob, would have inherited all unchallenged. What could be fairer, then, than the bargain he had struck? Had not the subsequent deception to secure the birthright blessing been the natural consequence of the sale, against which Esau had no right to complain? Of course it had; and, what was more, Rebekah, their mother, had both suggested and sanctioned it. Yet Jacob could not banish the question from his mind, and as he lay and pondered the stars came out.

Shining above him in measureless space, the scintillating lights of heaven raised his thoughts. They spoke of the Creator, of the God of his father and his grandfather. Hitherto that God had helped and blessed them. Was his arm now shortened, or his power stayed, that this should be the case no longer? Could not He who lighted up those heavens raise one star of hope for him? Isaac his father had called upon that God to give him of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, with plenteous corn and wine. The old man's words still lingered in his ears. "The smell of my son is as the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed."

Yes, already joy was bursting in upon his troubled soul. The glorious firmament which spoke of God revealed Him in its vast infinitude, and every ray from out those priceless jewels of the night sent messages of hope to earth. The thought of it drew from him that which mounted up to where they were, a yearning after God. Angels of light were ascending and descending before his eyes, and the Lord Himself was manifested in his handiwork. Jacob's heart was set in tune to echo angel music, and he heard the voice of God.

Alone, yet not alone, in that wide plain where all just now had seemed so drear, the spirit which had realised that God was there was drinking in the words of promise. A voice within him told that all that land whereon he lay was his, and for his seed; that in that seed, which should be as the sand of the sea shore for multitude, should all the earth be blessed. And then, most precious word of all, he heard the promise, "I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again unto this land, for I will not leave thee till I have done that which I have spoken to thee of."

Jacob awoke. A glorious future rose before him, as the early sunbeams crowned the distant hills, and showed him something of his vast inheritance. A trusty safeguard had been placed around him, which enabled him to cast all care upon the Lord, who had been ever with him. Where now were his moody forebodings of yester-eve? Where his perils and dark look-outs? "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not! How dreadful is this place! This is none other but the house of God, the gate of heaven!"

Had any change come over his surroundings while he slept? They remained as they had ever been: the change had been in Jacob. He had only learned to realise what always had existed for God's servants, and which still exists for such as lift their eyes above the world, who seek the solitudes where God is found, who let their Maker tune their hearts till every chord reverberates his words. Yet many of us, at the very gate of heaven, fail to see and fail to hear for lack of this.

Awe first, then gratitude, had filled the traveller, and as a token of both feelings he there raised a simple altar to his God, and poured on it a portion of his provender, an offering of oil, vowing to make sacred—sacrifice—a tenth of all that God should give him. And he called the name of that place Beth El—House of God.

So Jacob went forth on his journey, the fear of Esau still behind, but trust in God sustaining him, and all seemed bright. His step was lithe, his heart glowed warm, for he had tasted what is offered to each child of God. Not one of us but in our darkest hour may find our humblest resting place THE HOUSE OF GOD.

II.—THE FACE OF GOD.

Again the night fell upon the path of Jacob. Again, after twenty years of prosperity, Jacob was homeless. Again he was alone, and lost in anxious thought. With his staff he had passed over Jordan; he was now two bands, and a lordly present had gone before him in the hope of appeasing the wrath of that injured brother.

How different his treatment of Esau appeared to him now! No more self vindications, no more excuses, though Esau had taken the birthright after all, and he had taken the blessing. The fear of retaliation which had sent him forth now threatened to prevent return. He had hardly disposed of an awkward question with Laban, when here were four hundred men come out to overwhelm his unprotected droves of animals, with his family of wives and little ones, who had crossed the ford of "evacuation"—Jabbok—before him.

Yet he still remembered Bethel, and the promise that he should return, so often before his mind during those years of servitude, and he had already invoked the aid of the God who had then appeared to him. Jacob, in mind, if not in body, was again at Bethel, once more at the gate of heaven.

Once more the traveller raised his thoughts on high, and this time felt the presence of his God not only in the distant heavens, but in close embrace, as man to man. This time angels were no longer needed as intermediaries, and Jacob laboured in earnest, prevailing prayer. "I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless me." Jacob thought that he, a mortal man, could force the hand of God. Alas! it needed but one touch and his power was gone: he could only keep hold. A thorn had been planted in his flesh, a messenger of Satan sent to buffet him, lest he should be exalted above measure. He almost forgot that his very faith, the strength with which he wrestled, was God-given—that it was the grace sufficient for his need.

The day was breaking, and once more those warm beams shone upon the western hills, but the struggle was not yet over.

"What is thy name?" the question came to him.

"My name? Jacob—Supplanter."

Then the answer sounded as the promises had done at Bethel, "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Isra El, a Prince with God, for as a prince thou hast power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." The blessing had come, the prayer was answered, and Israel—Jacob no longer—could glory in his infirmity, successful in his weakness, to God be the praise. He had not been content, as so many are, to rise from his knees in feeble hope that the blessing might come, that his prayer might be granted: he had asked and received: he had wrestled with God until the night was far spent, and with returning day had come the long-expected answer.

But Jacob was a man, and so real had his struggle been that he still felt the form of a man in his grasp ere he woke, and having been asked his name, he also made a like request, "Tell me, I pray Thee, thy Name."

"Wherefore is it that thou dost ask after my name? Hast thou not wrestled all night with me? Have I been so long time with thee and yet hast thou not known me, Israel? Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is Secret, Wonderful, Councillor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, and the Prince of Peace."

And He blessed him there.

Jacob was satisfied, and he called the place Peni El—The Face of God—for he said, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." The sun was rising over him in his triumph, but he halted on his thigh; that thorn in the flesh remained, lest he should forget with whose grace, whose power, he had prevailed, and glory in aught but in infirmity. This place had indeed been more to him than the House of God, but had there been no Bethel there could have been no Peniel. He had gone on from height to height, with many a lesson to learn between, but not in his own strength or wisdom, in God's.

"Lord, teach us to pray." Jacob had prayed in secret; he had not needed vain repetitions; his whole soul had gone out in the determination, "I will not let Thee go except Thou bless me." He had not defined the blessing he sought, and endeavoured to direct the will of God. His Heavenly Father knew what things he had need of before he asked Him. So he had no disappointment in unanswered details, but he had his blessing; effectual, fervent prayer had much availed, and the Father which saw in secret rewarded openly.

Jacob resumed his journey, but the much-feared meeting with Esau brought not even unpleasantness, and he went forward strong in his answered prayer, for he had seen what we may see in every trouble, if we do but ask with Jacob's faith, THE FACE OF GOD.

THE SHEPHERD AND THE FLOCK.

Ezek. xxxiv. 16.

The great Shepherd classifying his sheep! What a comfort to all believers, especially to the suffering ones! He does not look at his flock in a mass only, but carefully notes the state of each. He knows the "lost," the "driven away," the "broken," the "sick," and deals accordingly in his unerring love! "Thou hast considered my trouble" (Ps. xxxi. 7). "The Lord thinketh upon me" (Ps. xl. 17). Like a good physician, thoughtfully weighing the case. Some of our troubles we could not, need not, tell to our fellow-men. "Jesus only" is enough, and how closely this binds us to Him. "Thou hast known my soul in adversities" (Ps. xl. 17).

When the sorrow is a secret
Between my Lord and me;
I learn the fuller measure
Of his deep sympathy.

Dear sufferer. Jesus loves to be confided in. It gives Him joy when his love suffices. Let Him "not meet thee in any other field" (Ruth ii. 22).

In verse 4 of this chapter the under-shepherds had failed in their care of the flock, and in verse 16 He says He will do it all Himself. "I myself will feed my sheep" (ver. 15, R.V.). It is just like our blessed Lord to do this—not to allow his flock to suffer. There was a day we never can forget when we heard Him saying, "If ye seek Me, let these go their way" (John xviii. 8).

Suffering child of God, fall back into the hands that still bear the nail-prints. Let the dying, and undying love, of Jesus be your consolation in the day of trial. He will not think lightly of your trouble. Earthly friends, from want of thought or want of experience, often make poor comforters, physicians of no value; but Jesus cares, and He has also an experimental acquaintance with your grief.

One of the titles He won for Himself on this weary earth was "A man of sorrows." How unapproachable his agony—in Gethsemane's garden with his chosen three, and among them the one who had leaned on his bosom! Yet we read that even from them "He was removed about a stone's cast." In that dread hour "God only knew the heart of God." "We have not an high priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities."

Ah! well He knows thy pilgrim path—
There was but one too rough for thee;
He gazed upon that path of blood,
And onward pressed to set thee free.

LECTURES ON MOROCCO.—Many thanks for your kind notice of my lectures; but may I ask you to correct an error? You say "next week," instead of "next winter," which makes a considerable difference. When correcting it you might be so good as to mention that I am arranging to spend the summer in the United States and Canada, and that inquiries there may be addressed to the Y.M.C.A. Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XII.

THE SEALED BOOK.

As the eye of the Seer becomes accustomed to the dazzling light which streams from the "throne set in heaven," and after he has to some extent taken in the marvellous scene of Divine majesty, of life and of glory, that has burst upon him, other features emerge in the picture; and, gazing intently, he sees that in the right hand of Him that sits on the throne is a mysterious book or scroll covered with inscriptions, and sealed with seven seals. And as he calls to mind how, five hundred years before, his fellow prophet, to whom had been vouchsafed such revelations of the future, had been directed to "seal the book to the time of the end," he concludes that the moment for its opening has now arrived, and that "the things that must be hereafter" are to be disclosed. His impression is confirmed by the demand, proclaimed in tones of thrilling power by the mighty angel, that some one shall prove his worthiness to open the portentous scroll; and with eager anticipation he looks for the appearance on the scene of one who shall fulfil the prescribed condition. Alas! neither from the angelic hosts, nor from the Church triumphant in glory, nor from her ranks still militant here on earth, does one come forward; and in an agony of tears the aged disciple sees his hopes crushed. "No one was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon." But as he weeps in bitter disappointment, a voice of comfort falls on his ear. He is bid dry his tears and once more lift up his eyes. One has been found worthy. Described in enigmatical terms as "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" and "the Root of David," who had in conflict achieved the victory, and thus obtained the right to open the book, the beloved disciple awaits the appearance of his Lord, in all his Divine majesty, as the One who "sprang out of Judah," the "rod of Jesse's stem," David's Son, yet David's Lord.

But it is no lion that is now seen, no conqueror with insignia of royalty that appears. A LAMB—a Lamb slain, but a Lamb living—the emblem of meekness, innocence, and suffering, occupies the seat of glory in the midst of the throne, of the living ones, and of the crowned elders. It is the One that has laid down his life as a sacrifice and who was "led as a lamb to the slaughter," who now stands, bearing the symbols of omnipotence and omniscience, in the very centre of the throne; a Lamb that has suffered, and yet, because of that suffering, a glorious victor. For by that death He hath prevailed.

O wondrous mystery of the Cross! O marvel of marvels! Crucified through weakness, "He liveth by the power of God." Through death He hath abolished death, and destroyed him that had the power of death. The "Man of sorrows" is the "King of glory." The way to the Throne was by the Cross of Calvary. Does not a new and entrancing light beam upon the prophet's soul, as in the enraptured contemplation of the scene he remembers the words that years before had announced the person and work of the Saviour, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"—as he seems to hear again the sweet teachings of the Good Shepherd—"I lay down my life for the sheep" — as the wondrous meaning of all the sacrifices from Abel's lamb onward comes to mind, and as he once more stands beneath the cross, and hears the expiring cry of the incarnate Son, "It is finished"?

O wondrous mystery of the Cross! The Lamb as it had been slain is the glory of heaven. He, "who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, made Himself of no reputation, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name." Dying, He has conquered; dying, He has redeemed the inheritance; dying, He has "reconciled all things unto God, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven." The once slain Lamb is the object of worship—God over all blessed for ever. The Lamb in the midst of the throne leads to fountains of living water. It is the Song of the Lamb which the victors on the shore of the sea of glass mingled with fire triumphantly sing. It is the Lamb who overcomes as Lord of lords and King of kings. It is the Lamb whose espousals are heralded by the voice of a great multitude, and the voice of many waters, and the voice of mighty thunderings in their Hallelujah Chorus. It is the Lamb who is the light of the heavenly city. It is "the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb" who are its temple. The saved are written in the Lamb's book of life. The root and offspring of David, the bright and morning star, is none other than the Lamb. Oh, what unfathomable depths of mystery and wonder lie in the "Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ"! Oh, what inexhaustible streams of living water flow from that smitten Rock! Oh, what eternal glory radiates from that death on the accursed tree! "Christ crucified is the power of God and the wisdom of God!"

The Lamb is all the glory of Immanuel's land!

"And he came and took the book out of the right hand of Him that sat upon the throne. And when he had taken the book——" Well, what then? Oh, then burst forth the melodies of the new song. Then, sweeping the strings of their golden harps with such chords of music as earth has never heard, the white-robed elders sound the first notes of the volume of adoring praise which is to echo through the universe of God. Oh! the ineffable sweetness of that song. If, as is said, Haydn, when he first heard the strains of the Hallelujah Chorus in St. Paul's Cathedral, covered his face, and, overcome with emotion, exclaimed, "This is Heaven," what ecstatic delight must have thrilled the Seer's whole being, as the celestial harmonies fell on his ear, and he recognised in the theme of the harpers the name and work of Him on whose bosom he had leaned in Galilee, and whose words of eternal life had brought salvation to his soul.

THOU art worthy,
THOU wast slain,
THOU hast redeemed us by thy blood,
THOU hast consecrated us to be kings and priests unto our God.

Oh! the glory, pure and peaceful, how unlike earth's shadows fleet,
On its air is borne the music from its golden harps most sweet,
Wafted by its countless echoes is one living name alone—
Its circumference is boundless, while its centre is his throne!

And no sooner have these first notes of praise pealed forth their glorious testimony than they are taken up by the whole angelic host. The "many angels round about the throne," "the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands," instantly swell the strain. For many centuries they had "desired to look into" "the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow." For many centuries it had been their appointed work to "minister for them who should be heirs of salvation." With their Lord, some of them had communed with Abraham, some had rescued lingering Lot; others had thronged the steps of the heavenly ascent from Bethel's wilderness, and had guarded Jacob's return to Canaan; and myriads encircled Sinai's heights at the giving of the Law. They had been despatched to refresh a fainting Elijah, to encourage and enlighten a praying Daniel; their glorious bands had heralded the advent of the new-born King over the plains of Bethlehem; they had ministered to their tempted Lord—had strengthened Him in his agony in Gethsemane, watched by his tomb, witnessed his resurrection, cheered the bereaved disciples. One brought Peter and John out of prison; another had released Peter when condemned to death; a third stood by Paul on the doomed vessel in Adria's sea. All along the ages the tender, loving, mighty ministry of the "angels which excel in strength," had sustained, at Heaven's command, the often weary steps of the pilgrims to Zion's Hill; and now, the mystery of redemption fully revealed, the marvel of the atoning cross of Christ explained, the "innumerable company of angels" utter their "loud voice," and in their sevenfold ascription of praise unitedly cry—

"Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."

Worthy from all eternity He had been, as the everlasting Son of the Father. But the death of the cross had given him a new claim as the One who, having, in matchless grace, identified Himself with sinners, had borne their sins by the sacrifice of Himself, expiated their guilt, and perfected for ever them that are sanctified.

Well may angelic hosts, those "ministers of his that do his pleasure," join the song of the redeemed for whom He died, and "give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name."

But others follow them,

The whole creation join in one
To bless the sacred name
Of Him that sits upon the throne,
And to adore the Lamb.

The solemn diapason of the universe resounds with waves of harmony such as "ear hath not heard," wakening the echoes of creation in all its illimitable depths. Onward from sun to sun, from star to star, rolls the mighty anthem in ever-increasing and entrancing sweetness:—

The planets, glittering on their heavenly way,
The shining constellations join and say,
Alleluia!
The clouds that onward sweep,
The winds on pinions light,
The thunders, echoing loud and deep,
The lightnings wildly bright,
In sweet consent unite their Alleluia.

"Every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing and honour, and glory and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the LAMB for ever and ever."

And as by the necessities of the scenic representation, and in order to give place for all that was to be heard and seen, the chorus of the redeemed, of the angels, and of Creation, fades away into stillness, the sublime voices of the four living ones—the Cherubim—"of which we cannot now speak particularly," peal forth the final chord. Their echoes round the throne of glory, and the four-and-twenty elders fall down and "worship Him that liveth for ever and ever."

Oh, that with yonder sacred throng,
We at his feet may fall,
There join the everlasting song,
And crown Him Lord of all.

"NOT VERY FAR."

By Mrs. A. R. Cousin, Author of "The Sands of Time are Sinking."

Thou art not very far from the Kingdom of God,
Thou hast heard the sweet call of the King,
Thou hast met the glad messengers speeding abroad,
His free-hearted welcome to bring.
And the Kingdom looks bright, but the world is so dear,
With its labour, and pleasure, and sin!
The Kingdom! 'twere sad to have seen it so near
Yet never to enter therein.

Yes, "not very far" is the threshold of grace,
But beware, O sinner, beware!
For "not very far" is a perilous place,
Thou art lost if thou linger there.

Thou art not very far from the foot of the cross,
Its shadow is falling on thee,
And the blood that redeemeth the sinner from loss
Is flowing so precious and free.
That Cross of Atonement! that hallowing blood!
'Tis a saving or sentencing sight!
It is death at the foot of the cross to have stood,
And thy robes never washed and made white!

Thou art not very far from the Saviour's heart,
There is pitying grace in his eye;
There is virtue in Him for each sorrow and smart,
And his garment is waving so nigh.
Oh, follow his footsteps, draw close to his side,
Fall down at his merciful feet,
Lest haply his pathway from thine should divide,
Nevermore through the ages to meet.

Oh, many were once as near heaven as thou,
But they lingered and lost their day;
They are weeping, and wailing, and wandering now,
On the coasts of the cast-away.
They are far from the Kingdom, and far from the Crown,
And far from the ransoming Cross!
Oh, infinite sadness! no tears but his own,
May weep such a fathomless loss!

Yes, "not very far" is the threshold of grace,
But beware, O sinner, beware!
For "not very far" is a perilous place,
Thou art lost if thou linger there.

THE BIBLE IN SOUTH AFRICA. — The South African Auxiliary of the Bible Society has recently issued its forty-fifth report. During last year 25,817 Bibles and Testaments were issued by the auxiliary, and circulated among the people of Cape Colony and the neighbouring states. Of this number 4734 have been distributed by colporteurs. These men have done excellent work, travelling many thousands of miles and traversing thinly-populated districts.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO ME

HIS RESURRECTION.

"But you know," said a minister to an old man who had but lately been converted, "Jesus can hear you when you speak to Him like I speak to you." "Oh, but," the old man replied, "Jesus be dead!" "Dead!" said the minister; "no, He is not dead now. He died for your sin; but He did not continue in the grave. He rose again, and is living now." The man looked with astonishment, and said, "Well, I never heard it afore." Yet the man had all his life long known and repeated the Creed, but had never understood even the fact that our Lord rose again.

None of the young readers of The Christian will be so ignorant as that; yet it may be that not a few of them, while believing the fact of Christ's resurrection, do not know how much they owe to it. One who had been a true Christian for many years once remarked, "I can see the reason why Christ died for me; but I do not understand why He rose again." There are not a few believers, young and old, who stop at the cross, and never get to the empty sepulchre. The fact associated with Good Friday is more significant to them than that we remember on Easter Sunday.

And yet have you noticed how important a place this fact holds in the New Testament? It was included by our Lord in his predictions of his death (Matt. xvi. 21), and was promised as the one sign which was to prove Him to be the Son of God (Jno. ii. 18-22). It was the fact that first recalled the disciples from the despair into which the crucifixion had thrown them. It was the theme of the Apostles' preaching (Acts ii. 32), and it occupies as prominent a place in the gospel message as does our Lord's death for sin (1 Cor. x. 4). That must be a very imperfect gospel which leaves out such a fact as this, or fails to understand what it means.

What is this fact to you? Endeavour to recall the event itself. It is the evening of the crucifixion. Jesus is really dead; the thrust of the soldier's spear into his side leaves no room for doubt. His body has been taken down from the cross, wrapped in linen, and laid in the tomb of Joseph. The stone rolled to the mouth of the tomb is sealed, and a watch of Roman soldiers is set. Early on the first day of the week the sepulchre is empty, and He who was dead begins to appear again to his disciples, and renews his fellowship with them. His appearances were so frequent, and of such a character, that mistake was impossible. Even Thomas, sceptical though he was, could not but believe at last. That is the fact; what does it mean? Seek prayerfully to understand.

1. Could you believe in Christ if He had never risen? Granted that his life was a very beautiful one, that his works were very wonderful, and that He spake such words as never other man spake, yet would you be able to place full confidence in his teaching? When some had demanded from Him a sign, He had distinctly promised that He should rise again from the dead (Matt. xii. 39, 40). If He has not risen, what becomes of his truthfulness? And if there is doubt concerning one matter, how can we trust Him in the rest? If the tomb continues to hold Him, then his enemies were right when they called Him "a deceiver" (Matt. xxvii. 63). Can you not see that no single promise of Jesus can be relied on if He has not risen from the dead?

2. Could your sin be forgiven if He had never risen? Paul says not:—"If Christ be not raised your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins" (1 Cor. xv. 17). The death of Christ, if it had not been followed by the resurrection, would not have saved anyone. "He was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification" (Rom. iv. 25). For remember, Christ was not only your substitute, He was your representative. He not only acted for you, but He acted as you. He takes you as far, and no farther, than He himself goes. If He goes to death and stops there, you must stop there too. But if He rises again, and ascends to the Father's right hand, He takes you there. You are in Him. Read carefully Rom. viii. 34, and note that the death of Christ, important as it is, is followed by something that appears more important still: "Yea rather, that is, risen again." You have no assurance of pardon until Christ is seen as risen again. On the cross He was paying our debt; in his resurrection God gives us the receipt. You cannot stop at the cross. Do you see more clearly how important the resurrection is?

3. What you know of the fact of your own resurrection depends upon this fact. Do you know what "firstfruits" means? (See 1 Cor. xv. 20.) His resurrection not only makes yours sure, but it determines what yours shall be. The gospel designs to save as completely as sin destroyed. As the effect of sin was felt in every part of man's being, spirit, soul, and body, so will the salvation brought to us in Christ. Your resurrection body shall be like his. (See 1 Cor. xv. 42—49; Phil. iii. 20, 21.) Cherish this hope; and live in the power of it.

And remember that your Lord is living to-day, all-powerful to save. Expect a salvation worthy of Him who has put away sin, and vanquished death and the grave.

One brief paper cannot set forth all that his resurrection is to us. Let the Easter song, "He is risen," be our song continually.

A NEW HEBRIDES "PARISH."

Rev. J. H. Lawrie, missionary of the Church of Scotland at Aneityum, New Hebrides, thus describes, in the New York Independent, recent itinerant work:—

During the past five weeks I have been evangelising over all the out-districts of my parish. While residing at the north side of the island, a series of daily meetings were held; and my joy was very great when, as a result of this special effort, over thirty individuals came as inquirers after their own salvation. The last week of my stay I invited any who felt anxiety about their own personal safety to visit me at the mission house; and for three days the above number of men and women kept me from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., with scarcely time to take lunch at midday. I tried to be patient and faithful with each individual, and usually spent an hour trying to explain saving truth, and enforce the necessity for taking Jesus into their hearts as a personal Saviour.

The text that was most instrumental in awakening concern at the meeting was a daily ringing the changes on "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" When earth and sea and sky were sought in the native parabolic style for equivalents, and nothing of such lasting value as a man's own soul could be found, then came the only conclusion: Jesus offered Himself, and here was the offer of mercy now to any repenting sinner. The fifty-first Psalm was given as a memory lesson, and a number of natives committed to memory the whole Psalm. On the last Sabbath-day I was with the people on the Aname side of the island. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was dispensed to a most devout company of worshippers. On the previous Friday a number of backsliders were restored to full communion, six men and women were admitted for the first time, and two of these adults were baptised.

At the afternoon meeting on the Communion Sabbath another special effort was made on behalf of outsiders, and five of my oldest office-bearers spoke. One having been the murderer of the last Christian martyr on the island, referred to his own former fighting life, and told how his present desire was to fight against sin and the devil, as he felt that the mercy of God to him had been great. Another, who is a converted drunkard, told how he used to stupefy himself both with foreign liquor and with native kava; how, when he tried to pray, thoughts did not accompany his words, and how hardened he was until awakened to a sense of his danger by the Word and Spirit of God. Then he appealed to all kava drinkers to turn in their hearts ere it be too late. The next speaker dealt with those who try their hands at sorcery, and told how the ulterior object is not simply to bewitch but to seduce: then, again, he pointed to the one cure for all these ills within us and around us.

In conclusion, the last speaker, who was my first pundit and consistent helper, spoke about his own ignorance, but that by receiving the truths taught by the missionary he now rejoiced in Jesus as his Lord and Saviour; then he invited all to the same and only source of salvation. At the close of the service I intimated that a couple of helpers were wanted by a brother missionary on a heathen island, and on Monday morning a stalwart young man and his wife came and offered themselves for this foreign service, where another language is spoken. They were accepted, and in a few days my boat will convey them and their luggage to the harbour station, so as to be ready for the next trip of the inter island steamer.

NORTHFIELD DESCRIBED.

In The Reaper, Mr. John Anderson, the editor, is describing his recent tour in America. In the April issue we have the following excellent description of Mr. Moody's native town so far as its physical features are concerned:—

The natural beauty of the place and its surroundings is simply perfect. The valley of the Connecticut here begins to open out till it gradually reaches a width of probably ten miles. From the knoll on which "The Northfield" (hotel in summer and seminary in winter) is built, a magnificent view of the valley is obtained, stretching far eastward. Richly cultivated, well wooded, and dotted all over with pleasant homesteads, the valley lies spread out like a panoramic picture, till, in the remote distance it seems to be hemmed in by a lofty mountain barrier. The valley is guarded and sheltered on either side by a range of softly-rounded and beautifully-wooded hills, of varied configuration, with occasional depressions and openings that give glimpses of more distant peaks, and combine to form a scene of singular loveliness and beauty.

The village proper lies back from the river about half a mile, and consists of one long double row of detached houses, each one standing in its own ground and surrounded by trees, shrubbery, and flower plots. A noble avenue of lofty spreading trees that would grace a nobleman's park extends for nearly a mile in a straight line along the village roadway. The houses are nearly all built of wood, which permits of a greater variety in design, and more attractive treatment in colours, than is possible with stone and lime erections. The first impression on the mind of the belated Britisher is that the structures must be flimsy and incapable of resisting the inroads of time and weather, but a very brief investigation suffices to dissipate that idea. I had the great pleasure of enjoying the hospitality of our beloved friends, Mr. and Mrs. Sankey, on more than one occasion, in their neat wooden villa, and was astonished out of measure to find that it had borne the summer heat and winter frosts of at least 100 years, and it seems to carry within its stout wooden timbers the possibilities of a considerable prolongation of its hale and hearty old age.

These houses are nearly all occupied by their owners, well-to-do tradesmen, who have a plot of ground attached to their dwellings or on the meadow by the river-side. The villagers are therefore, as a whole, in very comfortable circumstances. It was something new for us to see tradesmen waited for and driven home after their day's work by their wives in their own buggies.

The eastern end of the village is more modern and contains several very commodious and attractive-looking wooden residences; but the main features are the fine buildings of Northfield Seminary, consisting of several large dormitories, recitation halls, &c., all substantially built of stone from handsome designs, and admirably equipped in every respect for the work to which they have been dedicated. The grasp and foresight of a master mind are evident in all the plans and arrangements. These buildings are not grouped together in the stereotyped institution fashion, but are built in what might at first sight seem a haphazard way wherever a suitable site offered. But as the eye wanders over the ground and takes note of the arrangements it soon becomes apparent that while the separate buildings stand apart in home-like individuality, they yet unite to form a family group on what is evidently a well-conceived and carefully-arranged general plan. Mr. Moody urges his neighbours to abandon the use of fences round their property, and in this matter sets a good example. The Seminary buildings stand in a stretch of open park ground with carefully kept lawns and paths, but without a single enclosure. There are many charming drives in the neighbourhood.

It was a rare pleasure to be taken over some of Mr. Moody's favourite routes; and the pleasure was doubled when Mrs. Moody, acting as guide and interpreter, pointed out the beauties of the scenery, while, with firm and skilful grip, she handled the reins.

GOD CLOTHING THE GRASS.*

By Rev. D. Davies, Brighton.

Wherefore if God so clothe the grass of the field.

Perhaps it never occurred to you that God clothed the grass of the field; yet Christ tells us here that He does. He was speaking to poor peasant people at this time, who had to make their own clothing; to mothers who had to make their children's dresses, for they could not command such luxuries as dressmakers. Indeed, they had also to spin the yarn, and weave the material in many cases, and often they wondered where they could get the next dress or suit from, and consequently got very depressed. Jesus bade them not be so faint-hearted, and assured them that the Lord who clothed the flowers of the field, yea, the very grass, would not fail to clothe them and their little children.

Now, if we remember that God clothes the flowers and grass of the field:—

1. The blades, leaves, and flowers, ought to be full of interest to us. You see buds, for instance, bursting just now. What are they doing? Only throwing off their winter clothing and donning their spring and summer dresses. Some of us think that they do it rather early, and that they must take care. It is not wise to throw off all our winter's clothing long before May comes in, but these little buds are very precocious; they want to peep out to see the sun. They find it very warm in their winter jackets, and thus want to take them off. Well, what sort of jackets are they? They are water and frost proof. Those little scales of which they are made are in many instances covered with a hard coat of varnish equal to any copal varnish that you have ever seen in your life. The result is that the frost can never touch those little buds all through the winter. They are safe enough in their close jackets all through the winter frosts and winter rains. Now, who gave them those jackets? God. Had he not given them coats just suitable for winter, they would never have seen the spring; the frost would very soon nip them, and that is the reason why we are sometimes a little impatient with the buds for throwing off their jackets too soon, for if the frost comes back it will be sure to nip them. They will catch a terrible cold, which may cause them their death.

Then there are others with jackets of a different sort—chesnut buds, for instance. Their coats are joined together at the seams by a kind of resin or sticky material, so that the rain and the frost cannot go right into the heart of the little bud, and, of course, each little scale that is thus carefully fastened to its neighbour is also quite water and frost proof.

Again, there are other little jackets, covered with a sort of woollen covering inside. Just as your mother gives you under-flannels in order that you may be warm, so God gives those little buds under-flannels inside the hard cases, which keep out the damp and cold.

So far then, I think, I have shown that even the little buds—for I have just spoken of buds in general—those little buds that you see on the trees and shrubs, are taken care of by God all through the winter, even when God is thought by many to have very little to do with the earth. The trees, remember, have to pass through the winter with bare arms in storm and frost, but then those trees are strong, and God has given them good thick bark, but the little buds are under his special protection during all these trying months.

At length the spring comes, and every little bud says, "I want to see the sun and the beautiful landscape. I am so hot in this coat. It was all very well in December and January, but I shall want a nicer and lighter dress than this oilskin now that spring is come." Thus the buds everywhere agree to throw off their clothing. We do hope they have not done it too early. Sometimes the east wind hides round the corner, and says, "What silly little things! I'll make them wish they had their sou'westers on"; and Master Frost says, "They had better not make too bold, or I'll nip their heads off."

Well, if they are not in too much of a hurry, they will have their suits in due time, and each will be exactly fitted for spring and summer. Now look by way of change if you like at some flower-bud, say the primrose. That pretty primrose has come out you know, before most other flowers. And what do you see when the primrose begins to show itself? Oh, the outer covering begins to open. We call that the flower-cup, or the calyx. That is its coat, and as that begins to open, some other garment begins to appear inside, namely, the corolla or flower. That is its fancy waistcoat, and a very gay one it is, such a nice yellow shade, whereas the outside coat was green. Then inside that again there is a something else, what we call the stamen, a sort of ornamental shirt front; and again inside all that, there is what we call the pistil, the most important part of the flower, where its life is hid. So you see God does with the little primrose just as your mother has done with you. He has given it outer and under clothing, in order that its life may be taken care of. The more we notice these wonderful coverings the more we are surprised at the way in which they overlap each other, and thus make a perfect suit between them.

Now, God does that for flowers generally. Then if He takes care of the flowers in that way, He will take care of us. Thus:—

2. The buds and flowers teach us faith in God's loving care of us. That was just the teaching of Christ. "Why take ye thought for raiment?" No doubt some poor mother was wondering what she would do with little Johnny, who was so fast outgrowing his clothes. Every morning he seemed to shove his legs and arms an inch each further than he ever had before. Where could she get the material to cover such arms and legs as his? Jesus said: "You anxious mothers, just think of God, who has provided for that little flower as it outgrows its clothes." "Why take ye thought of raiment? Consider the lilies of the field?" We are not to understand by these those beautiful large lilies that we see, or even the lilies of the valley. The word here refers to flowers in general—little daisies if you like, or little primroses—flowers of the field. Why the flowers of the field? Because they are not watched over. Of course if you have a nice conservatory and a very attentive and clever gardener, you are not so surprised that the flowers live. You know that God takes care of them: but they are also taken special care of by man. Now Jesus does not speak about hot-house plants here. He talks about those that are out in the field, uncared for by anyone but God.

Well consider them—consider that little flower that is just outside your garden, the other side of the wall. I sometimes like to look at the flowers inside the wall, and then at those outside, flowers over which the gardener has been spending so much of his time, and the little flowers over which only God has been watching; and I tell you, those wild flowers sometimes charm me more than all your cultivated flowers. Now just think of these wild flowers that seem to have to fight their own battle, though really God fights it for them. "Consider the lilies of the field, they toil not, neither do they spin." They cannot make their own clothing; cannot put a stitch in time though it saved their lives. "Yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." If I could only show you through the microscope, or even through a common magnifying lens, how beautiful that little primrose looks, and then if I could get the most ornamental thing that your mother wears and just put that under the lens, you would see how very rough that was, and even if Solomon had left us one of his beautiful garments—one of his court suits—to look at through the microscope, we should unhesitatingly give the prize to the primrose, and not give even an "honourable mention" to poor old Solomon's coat.

"Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Why does God give such beautiful clothes to these little things which so soon die? I will answer that by asking you another question. Suppose your mother knew that you would soon die, do you think she would begrudge you a nice little coat? Do you think she would say, "It is not worth giving a nice little coat to him, he will soon be gone, poor little boy?" I will undertake to say your mother would never talk in that fashion, but would give you the best coat she could get. That is just what God does with the flowers. What if a flower will die to-morrow? God will clothe it beautifully even for to-day. How much more will He clothe us! Then as we look forth into the fields, and see God clothing every flower that peeps above the soil, we will say, "Thank God! we will trust Him, and obey Him in all the future, and we know He will never never leave us, and never never forsake us."

PRAISE GOD.

O heart of mine, look up and see
God's glorious sun gleams bright for thee;
The flowers put forth their choicest hues
To charm thine eyes; ten thousand views
More beauteous still, break on thy sight,
Each fairer and more wondrous bright.

List! list! the songbirds sing for thee,
How sweet each burst of melody!
Art thou not raptured with the sound
That fills each answ'ring nook around?
Lift up thy voice, thou, too, canst sing;
Then sing and praise thy glorious King.

The streamlets dance along their way,
And they, too, sing a cheerful lay;
Though low, 'tis sweet: the billows roar
Their praise along the trembling shore.
Canst thou be still, O heart of mine?
Nay; raise thy voice, sing praise divine,

The wind, too, sings its wondrous song,
Now sadly sweet, now grandly strong;
Adown the vales, among the trees,
Is heard thy voice of praise, O breeze;
Why shouldst not thou, my soul, rejoice
Before thy God, with cheerful voice?

With bird, and stream, and sea, and wind,
Praise God for all his favours kind;
But most of all for that grand love
Which sent his Son from heaven above
To bleed, to die, to rise, to reign,
For thee, my soul! Lift up the strain.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The Christian Endeavour Society at Oakland, Cal., raised nearly 1000dols. last year.

Translated into the Sioux language, the equivalent of our English words, "Christian Endeavour Society," is "Society of those who want to work for Jesus."

There is a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour composed of the missionary children of the American Board, with five branches in different parts of Japan. At the annual meeting of the mission an afternoon is given to this society.

The Y.P.S.C.E. which was started last October at Highfield-road Baptist Chapel, Dartford, has been the means of deepening the spiritual life of the young people of the church. The meetings are well sustained and greatly enjoyed, especially the monthly consecration meeting.

At a large gathering of Endeavourers held at Openshaw, Rev. J. E. Roberts, M.A., spoke upon the principles of the Society of Christian Endeavour. These might be summed up under four heads—(1) The value of personal testimony on the part of every member; (2) The recognition that Christ had the first claim upon the Christian Endeavourers; (3) The necessity for personal service in connection with the Christian Church; and (4) The helpfulness of fellowship in working out these aims.

The first united Gospel Mission in connection with united societies of Christian Endeavour has recently been held in Chester. There are now eleven societies in the city, and these co-operated in the work. The missioner was Mr. Henry Thorne, whose services have been graciously owned of God. Many have professed to find peace, besides a general quickening of believers. The afternoon Bible readings were times of great profit and refreshing.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 9.—1 CHRON. XVII.

Nathan answered David with the prompting of a good and holy impulse. But it was not after the mind of God. The impressions and judgment of even good men may be at fault. Before we can advise others or act ourselves we need to retire into the presence of God, where, the soul being weaned and quieted, we may hear his voice and receive our directions from his lips.

What a touching account God gives of his identification with his people. He has walked with them and does so still. He shares their pilgrim life. They are strangers with Him. He not only walks with them, but in them (2 Cor. vi. 16). He needs no habitation other than their believing, loving hearts.

Remark the I wills of this address to David. He takes us from the sheepcotes, when we have shown ourselves faithful in a very little, and makes us leaders of others. He cuts off our enemies, and gives us a name like unto the names of those who have won position by their genius. He builds the house and assures the future. Oh, let us thank Him for his marvellous and sovereign grace!

Do as thou hast said. Learn this art of turning God's promises into the prayer which reckons that not one good thing can fail. If God has blessed, then it is blessed for ever.

MONDAY, APRIL 10.—1 CHRON. XVIII.

Twice over in this chapter we are told that God gave victory to David whithersoever he went (6, 13). When the heart is right with God, God gives victory. Victory in conflict with temptation and over all our foes. Then, too, we vanquish the plottings of wickedness in our neighbourhoods and towns. There are leagues and combinations of ungodly men, who uphold the various evils that afflict our times, but these would be broken up before the Church of God if only she would become united within herself, and seriously set herself to prayer and action on behalf of the wretched victims of high-handed wrong. We forget to plead and use the binding and loosing power that Jesus gave to the twos and threes.

The spoils of these nations was the nucleus of those vast treasures which David accumulated for the building of the Temple. This is very significant. The heathen shall yet contribute to the building up of the true Temple of God. They shall as converts be built into its walls, as living stones. Their glory and riches shall be brought in to its treasuries. The radiant visions of the prophets (Isa. lx.) shall yet be realised, literally for the Jewish people, and spiritually in the Bride, the Lamb's wife, the new Jerusalem.

TUESDAY, APRIL 11.—1 CHRON. XIX.

Our good intentions are often misunderstood by men of the world, as David's were by Hanun. But this should not alter our behaviour towards them. Our sun must still shine on them, and our rain fall. What though the soil bring forth briars and thorns, that is no sufficient reason for withholding our genial influences. Moreover, if the Son of Peace be not there, our peace returns to us again.

The heathen were the aggressors. This formidable confederacy took the field against David. When such is the case in our own spiritual history, we must certainly play the man, as Joab said; and in reliance on God go forth to the war. However great and terrible the crisis, there is no need for fear. We must be of good courage, and quit ourselves like men, and leave God to decide the result. There are other combatants on the field of battle than we can see. The Captain of the Lord's host is there with his bright legions.

A little village of Chinese Christians was exposed to the inveterate hate of the idolaters around, who on two occasions gathered in infuriated mobs to massacre them, and divide their property. They shut themselves within their doors, and prayed. On the first occasion, their assailants were scattered by a tremendous thunderstorm; on the second, they began on their way to discuss the division of the spoils, and a quarrel arose between the leaders which led to a fight, in which many were killed and wounded, so that nothing was done against the Christians. We are but a little flock, but God is with us. Let us not use the weapons of earthly policy, but trust his deliverances.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 12.—1 CHRON. XX.

There is deep significance in this tarrying of David in Jerusalem, when his soldiers were away in the field. It was the opening of the door to his great sin. Had he been in his accustomed place at the head of his troops, he had never been exposed to the temptation which proved his ruin. Let us watch against effeminacy or sloth. Probably the great successes that had attended David's arms, and the abundant prosperity that surrounded him like a golden summer, enervated his spiritual vigour and relaxed his watchfulness. We can bear any form of temptation easier than we can unclouded success. In the storm we naturally cleave to Jesus, but in the calm we think we can almost dispense with Him. When climbing the hill of difficulty we lean hard on our guide, but on the level tableland we vaunt our ability to walk of ourselves. There is never such need for watchful prayer as when we dream we can very well do without it.

There always will be giants, till the golden reign of the Prince of Peace. But none of them can stand against our King. Their fall is inevitable. As Goliath fell before Him who destroyed him that had the power of death, so shall all his seed, even to death and the grave, be utterly abolished. All enemies shall be put under Christ's feet.

THURSDAY, APRIL 13.—1 CHRON. XXI.

The opening verse of this chapter gives the true cause of the Divine wrath which followed on David's attempt to number the people. That move of his was suggested by Satan. Even Joab saw the unwisdom of it and sought to dissuade the king from prosecuting his design. But he persisted to his hurt. Probably he desired to see what had been the increase of population during the prosperous times that had been passing over him and his people. There was a spirit of vainglory and vaunting which were very grievous in the sight of God. It was the same spirit as that which afterwards led Hezekiah to show his palace and treasures to the ambassadors from Babylon.

Our contrition which cries "I have sinned, I have done very foolishly, put away the iniquity of thy servant," does not avail to undo the consequences. There may not be punishment, because our stripes were laid on Jesus, but there will inevitably be chastisement. The population on which David so prided himself were to be decimated by famine, pestilence, or sword. Who can wonder at David's choice. Infinitely better to fall into the hands of God, than into those of men. We cannot do so well for ourselves as He will do for us. And there is a delicacy of perception in Him which stays his hand, just so soon as the discipline has fulfilled his Divine purpose.

How remarkable that the site of the Temple should have been the possession and gift of a Jebusite. One of the many indications of Gospel times when Jew and Gentile mingle in the one church! What a suggestive picture—the sword of God's justice arrested at the altar of sacrifice! The fire falls on the sacrifice and not on the city! Oh, Lamb of God, by thy stripes we are healed

FRIDAY, APRIL 14.—1 CHRON. XXII.

The strangers were principally the ancient inhabitants of Canaan. They served a useful purpose in doing the rough work of preparation for the Temple. And David's great war furnished him with abundant material. So all mankind is contributing to the building of the one Church, which is to be exceedingly magnifical of fame and glory throughout the entire universe. War and strife, with their feverish contention, are not helpful for constructive purposes. The Temple can only be built by the King of Peace. The men of rest build most expeditiously and permanently. Drink in Christ's rest, so shalt thou do the best and swiftest work.

Be careful to discover God's place for your life. For God never requires his servants to do aught for Him without making Himself responsible for all they need in the way of materials and fellow-workers. Yes, and even the opposition which other men encounter, or which we had to face in earlier days, subsides and dies out of sight so soon as we set ourselves to execute the Divine purpose. Let us trust God utterly. No good thing will He withhold from those whose heart is perfect before Him.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15.—1 CHRON. XXIII.

The Levites are a blessed example of how we may reverse the disadvantages of our birth and descent. Their father was accursed of Jacob. They were to be scattered in Israel. It seemed as if they were for ever doomed to a subordinate and ignominious lot. But from the moment that they stood in the gate, at the summons of Moses, to slay those that worshipped the golden calf, their position began to improve. Through the wilderness wanderings, they bore the ark, the vessels, and other materials of the Tabernacle, and now they were appointed, since there was no further need to carry the tabernacle and its vessels, to even higher service.

The house of Aaron furnished Israel with priests, to burn incense, and offer sacrifices, and to bless in the name of God. And the Levites were selected to wait on them, and more, to stand every morning and evening to thank and praise the Lord. Theirs was the service of praise (Psa. cxxxiv).

Many are born to high and important possibilities which they mar by their negligence or sin; whilst others enter on life, with the entail of grievous disabilities, who, nevertheless, by faithful continuance in well doing, emerge ultimately to stand in the front ranks of the hosts of God. Oh for more of the Levite service in our own lives! Praising Him; offering burnt-offerings: and caring for the service and charge of his house.

Job's Appeal to God.—Job xxiii. 1—10.

Golden Text, Jno. xiii. 7.

The dialogue between Job and his friends is still proceeding. All three friends have spoken twice, and Job has answered them in turn, without making any acknowledgment of the sin which they believe is the occasion of his trouble. Not that he has claimed sinlessness (see vii. 20; ix. 20, 30, 31; xiv. 17). But he rejects the idea that his special suffering is a punishment for his special sin. This stout assertion of Job's, silences, though it does not convince his friends. And as their theory is the one which he himself has held, he is in great difficulty. How can the theory be maintained when he suffers though he has sought to walk in his integrity before God, while many notoriously wicked are prosperous (xxi. 7—13)?

Gleams of Gospel light appear now and then in the speech of Job, as though in his darkness he was learning what had been hardly understood before. His question about the Daysman (ix. 32-35), which Elihu seeks to answer (xxxiii. 6, 7), but which is only answered fully when Jesus appears (Jno. xiv. 6), receives a partial answer in Job's own words (xvi. 19-21). He has also asked a question about a future life (xiv. 14). But what is at first only a question, expressing a yearning and a hope, becomes afterwards a joyous confidence (xix. 25-27). If his affliction has brought him even a glimpse of such truths as these, it is already proving a blessing to him.

Eliphaz has just spoken a third time (xxii.). Determined to stand by his theory whatever may become of Job, he insinuates that even the righteousness of Job was selfishly designed to gain God's favour (1-4); then, without any evidence, ventures upon definite charges of sin (5-9), and concludes with a call to repentance, enforced by an appeal to Job's temporal interest (21-30). This lesson commences Job's reply to this last word of Eliphaz.

1, 2. The bitterness of his complaint is more than equalled by the severity of his affliction. This does not justify his complaint, but it condemns the heartlessness of his friends.

3. From them Job turns to God with longing to meet with Him. There is much in God's treatment of him that he cannot understand, but he trusts Him still. Trouble works for our good when it leads us more earnestly to Him. You know now where to find Him (Heb. iv. 15, 16).

4. Job was too confident that he could make out a good case for himself. His mouth was not full of arguments when he did meet with God (xlii. 1-6). Yet the children of God may find arguments with which to come to Him in affliction. Let them be drawn from his Fatherhood, his rich promises, and his perfect knowledge of our frame.

5, 6. There are two sides to communion, one in which we speak to God, the other in which God speaks to us. Do we not sometimes lose the blessing because we do not wait to hear his answer? Remember that it is there, at the throne of grace, where you tell your difficulty that God will put strength into you by his answer. Wait—if strength is to be renewed (Isa. xl. 31).

7. We dare not use this language as Job used it. Who that knows himself can make mention of his own righteousness before God? In another sense the language may be ours (Rom. viii. 33, 34).

8, 9. On every hand are the works of God bearing witness to his power; but the soul in trouble wants God Himself. Even in God's revelations of Himself to us He veils Himself from us. The cloud is always the symbol of his presence.

10. Do you sometimes fail to find God in what He does to you? Does your way appear to be hid from the Lord? Not so. He knows our way. There is a meaning to it we cannot yet understand (Jno. xlii. 7). Because it is his way it is mysterious to us (Prov. xx. 24). If we cannot see it now we may anticipate the end. The fire is not in order to consume the gold, but rather to purify it (Jas. i. 12).

Comprehending God.—Arago complained to Sir David Brewster that he found it impossible to understand the God of the philosophers. "It is of the God of the christian," said Brewster, "that I wish to speak." "Ah," exclaimed Arago, "He was the God of my mother, before whom she always experienced so much comfort in kneeling." God in Christ is what the heart needs and can understand.

Benefit of affliction.—There is on the island of Goa, near Bombay, a tree called "the sorrowful tree." Half an hour after sunset the tree is full of sweet-smelling flowers, which either drop off or close up with the first appearance of the sun. So are there graces which only appear when in the darkness of adversity.

A Striking Incident.

It has occurred to me that an incident connected with the recent close of my ministry at Bow, in the East of London, might be of interest to your readers, as well as a source of some encouragement to those whose work in the Lord's service lies much amongst sceptics.

During 1892 I received several anonymous letters respecting a young lady member of my church, who had grown lax in attendance at the Lord's Supper. The object of these letters was to urge the futility of any efforts to secure more careful observation of the ordinance on the young lady's part, also to convey that she would never prove a satisfactory member. At length the writer so far declared himself as to intimate that he was engaged to be married to the young lady on New Year's Day, 1893; that he was an atheist; that he could not understand how any people could pay attention to such "utter rubbish" as religion, and that when he was married he would see to it that his wife should never enter church, chapel, or any place of worship.

Needless to say our endeavours were redoubled to save our church member from such an unpromising future as lay before her. I tenderly remonstrated with her, pointing out the sinfulness of a union with an avowed sceptic and its certain consequences. It seems she had made a promise to the young man's mother on her deathbed to marry the son. It was pointed out to her that the truest way to observe such a promise was to break it. Deliberate deceit on the young man's part finally turned the scale, the engagement was broken off, and then I thought the matter was settled and done with, and that I should hear no more about it.

On January 15 of this year I preached farewell sermons at Bow, and on the next day received the following letter from the young man, which speaks for itself:

Dear Sir,—I must write: I shall go mad if I don't. This is the dead of the night, yet I must unburden my mind. I cannot sleep. What shall I do? I feel I am utterly lost. God help me. What was it that urged me to go to chapel to-night, the first time I have been in a place of worship since I was a child? I did not think it would affect me in the least, but your words went straight home. I could hardly keep from crying out. Something seemed to be pulling me in two. I can't rest. Oh, can it be possible that God can pardon such a sinner as I? Are my dear sainted mother's and another one's prayers to be answered? Would to God they could. I can't realise that God should care for such a one as I. What harm I have done to his cause! I have always been fighting against Him.

Oh, Mr. Hurndall, if any one needs your prayer it is I. I have gone through some heart-breaking trouble lately, but it sinks into insignificance against this most awful thought, that I am lost, lost! There must be a heaven. I think I am feeling the pangs of hell now. I must come on Wednesday and hear you for the last time. I had a tea ticket sent me. I was half inclined to throw it in the fire, but I am thankful I didn't now. You might be able to say a word of encouragement to one who badly needs it. Would to God I had come and heard you before. When the past comes before me it seems impossible that I can be saved. You can form no idea how wicked I have been. I broke my mother's heart, God forgive me, and I caused the greatest grief to one whom I would gladly lay down my life for; but worse than all, what pain I have given God—Him, whose name I have reviled. Can I ever atone?

There is something else I must confess to you, though it wrings my heart to do so, but I cannot keep it in. I had murder in my heart to-day. Your words have saved me from a dastardly crime. I was desperate. I hardly knew what I was about. I should have [been] in prison to-night if I had done what I intended to do. What must you think of me? But I can go on my knees and thank God that I heard you to-night. I have said there was no God, but I can say so no longer. My eyes are opened at last. What is it but God's hand that is on me now?

I feel I ought not to trouble you when you are so broken down, but I should just like you to know what good you have done to me, at all events. It is such a relief off my mind to be able to confide in you. I pray God to help and comfort you in your great trial. I can understand now how your flock will miss you, but none more so than me, although I have only heard you once. But I shall never forget it. That last hymn, how it touched me, how feelingly it was sung. One more thing before I finish—that is, remember me in your prayers as one who is striving to do what is right, but how hard it seems. I have been so bad, yet I think about what you said to-night. I pray God to help me. Yours heartily, ——

Now for the remarkable issue. This young man was present at the farewell meeting on the Wednesday, January 18, of this year. A few words were spoken to the unsaved. He went homewards at the close of the meeting in deep thought, so absorbed that in crossing a street near his home he did not hear a warning shout behind him. He was struck down by a cab. The cabman happened to know him, and carried him to his home. The young lady member of my church to whom he had been engaged was sent for, and arrived at two in the night, remaining with him until 10 o'clock the next morning, when he passed away. From her lips I have had an account of the closing hours. The young man spoke earnestly and beautifully about spiritual matters; pleaded with his father, a confirmed atheist, and prayed for him; and sent me a special message that he died a Christian.

What a triumph of Divine grace! Of whom should we despair? May this simple uncoloured statement of what it is not too much to describe as a modern miracle quicken the faith of some worn and weary worker amongst the unbelieving.

VI.

"And we shout so loud, we exult, we rejoice,
That we lose the low moan of our brothers around,
And we shout so adeep down creation's profound,
We are deaf to God's voice."

This, without note or comment, is the heading to a series of sketches that occupy page after page of my diary, and as we can do no more than hurriedly glance through them, it may be most helpful to pick out the ones which seem a fair specimen of the rest. "Three Minutes," as it is named, is a carefully drawn head, with a face which, in spite of its clear, penetrative, shrewd expression, yet leaves in the beholder a certain dissatisfaction.

It is hard to analyse wherein lies the want, unless it come from the restless eyes, the tremulous lips, and the general absence of placidity. To the drawing is linked the memory of two Christian workers—the one a minister of religion, outwardly in the zenith of success; the other a lay worker of the slums, troubled and disheartened by unexplained failure.

The relation between the two is expressed by an interview somewhat similar to this. "Want to speak to me? Oh, certainly. I am very busy—but I'll give you three minutes" (pulls out watch). "Can't get hold of the people — failed, discouraged." "Oh, no, I am sure you are getting on all right—always felt you were a capital hand at it—good-bye, I'm sorry I have no more time, but you must just stick to it." And so they part; and the result is very insignificant, only this, that the younger man leaves the other's presence with an odd frozen-up feeling as if a breath of icy wind had passed over him and shrivelled him up. Not soon again, I fancy, would he unburden his load and crave another's sympathy and advice, for alas! among us, are there not hundreds of "three minutes'" men and women to whom he might have turned with a similar result? They are always busy—bustling is a better word—always on the point of a meeting, or a service, or a class, here, there, everywhere. Generally they are men of strong physique, with a great fund of natural energy, and they have got into their heads the curious notion that religion can best be dinned into people by a system of shouting from every pulpit and platform, secular and religious, and so the noise they make has deafened them to all the gentler voices of life with their mightier influences.

It was the firm belief of a great English preacher who drew thousands to him that far more was wrought by the work of the study, of the fireside talk of individual dealing, than by pulpit sermons or platform teachings. I know some will say, "What men want is truth — truth pure and naked, winning its way without human aid. Personal influence is dangerous, begets hero-worship and the like; what do we want with a man's private life any more than with an actor's when the curtain drops? The kindly human friend, the counsellor, ever at the beck and call of those who want him, ever ready to believe that he needs those who need him; this is sentimentalism. Let a man preach his message, and what more can you expect from him." Now, grant it as true that a few strong souls do find all they want in this abstract Christianity, I yet submit that it is likewise true that the majority of ordinary mortals need human props and support in learning the Divine love.

"God gives us love, something to love
He lends us; but when love is grown
To ripeness, that on which it throve
Falls off, and love is left alone."

Further over these sketches we may not linger. In different degrees, the same spirit runs through them all, the spirit, as some one has called it, of the "everlasting go." On one page it is the good-natured willing worker, who has been drawn into the whirlpool of parish duties, until home with its quiet hours of taking in, and storing up becomes a cipher, and she laughingly admits to you that they do not leave her time now, "even for a cold."

Turn to another picture, the room of a poor working man's house this time. It is filled with litte, untidiness, and every imaginable disorder. The wife excuses herself on the ground that she is so busy with all the children, and confesses that she herself is "rather a bad one at getting up in the cold dark mornings." Your wonder at such conditions in what ought to be a happy orderly home is certainly diminished when the woman proudly informs you that she still teaches a class, and that three evenings every week are spent from home in work for religious societies. This is a case in a thousand, you say, but I believe many workers will bear out my own experience, that the fever of "doing" and "going" is spreading itself rapidly amongst the poorer, as well as the richer classes. There are factory girls I meet with times without number, earnest Christian girls, who see no harm in spending every evening at some society's meeting. Their different teachers urge them to be regular at the classes, pet, and make much of them, but they are all helping to destroy valuable home training, and to make the girls feel an evening with their mothers intolerably dull.

Over the last sketches I must pass hastily. They are entirely different from the others, and they deserve only the most kindly criticism. Those they portray I hold in the highest regard and honour, at the same time seeing in their common peculiarity a great error of judgment—an error which within my own knowledge has had disastrous effects, and done much to drive from the truth rather than to allure to it. Over these drawings is written the text, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves," and the sketches without exception are those of good-hearted earnest Christian workers, who have never realised the first clause of the command. Tact, wisdom, consideration of the sensibilities of others, skill in the presentment of the truth, in all these they are lacking.

Let us glance together at two types. The first is the well-meaning person who addresses you at every turn, in the midst of uncongenial surroundings, among people who will neither in the least understand nor make allowance, and speaks to you of the sacred things that lie buried deep in your heart, as if they were a mere matter of business. Such workers insist upon forcing on you tracts, they inveigle you into corners, and there ruthlessly and loudly proclaim truths which you may wholly believe, but which your shy, sensitive nature has only handled with great reverence. With their want of tact and blunt speech they not only offend, but draw ridicule from some on their message as well as themselves. They are constrained to pray with you on every possible occasion regardless of your mood or wishes; they think you hopelessly wrong if you cannot grasp truth by exactly the same corner as they, and at last you flee from them disgusted and prejudiced against Evangelical teaching.

For the second type one needs a still greater stock of patience. It is that of the worker who persists in bringing home religion by means of anonymous letters and warnings.

Is it, I ask, calculated to make the truth acceptable to a person to besiege him with letters or tracts, written, indeed, with good intention, but to which the writer has not the courage to attach his name? Such action savours of the cowardly and mean, in that it admits of no fair argument, and places the object of pity at a disadvantage; whereas an open avowal on the part of the Christian worker to the man in question that he wished to teach, help, or advise the latter, would be more courteous and more courageous.

And here the diary closes. Many, I know, will see far otherwise than I have on the various points we have looked at together; be that as it may, in one thing we shall surely all agree, and that the most important—viz., the lesson of the various characters and sketches is wider tolerance, larger charity, and to appeal to ourselves and to our opinions as Cromwell appealed to his Parliament, "I beseech you, my beloved brethren, I beseech you by the mercies of Christ to believe that you may be mistaken."

THE GLASGOW SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY has issued its report, showing earnest work and much blessing. The two missionaries report 1515 services, attended by over 89,000 seamen and others. All through the year God has graciously honoured his word in the salvation of sinners and in bringing blessing to his own people. The offices are at 128, Hope-street, Glasgow.

MISS ELSA BORG,

THE "ANNIE MACPHERSON" OF SWEDEN.

IF anyone to whom the subject of this sketch is unknown, should ask "Who is Elsa Borg?" no better general reply could be given than that she is the Annie Macpherson of Sweden. Between these two devoted workers for Christ there are many points of similarity, both in their aims and methods of work. Albeit that the one labours in a more remote and comparatively secluded sphere than the other, yet both hearts overflow with a Christian philanthropy leading to self-denying efforts for all sorts and conditions of men; while both are specially characterised by yearning desire for the neglected little ones, who alas! are found in such large numbers among the lapsed masses of humanity. Such workers should live in the hearts and the prayers of all who love the Lord, and it is with the purpose of making our beloved Swedish sister more widely known to all such, that we present our readers with this brief record of her history and work.

Elsa Borg was born in 1826, in Rytterne, Vestmanland, Sweden, where her father was a clergyman of the Established Lutheran Church. She was early left an orphan, and when her education was finished, she became governess for nine years to her step-sister's children. After some time of seclusion and study, feeling she must have someone to live for besides herself, and longing for a definite object in life, she took a situation as teacher to a family in the country. While here, though surrounded by none but worldly people, with no influences likely to bring about such a result, it pleased the Lord to bring her to the knowledge of Himself as He is revealed in Christ; grace led her to yield herself as a living sacrifice to God, her life thenceforth to be devoted to Him. The time had not, however, come for the definite purpose He had in view to be made manifest, so that the next twenty years of her life were spent in varied pursuits, the greater part in a school she opened in one of the Swedish towns. Work for Christ of a mission kind was also engaged in as opportunity occurred, and a training such as Divine Providence saw best suited for future usefulness was acquired.

It was just at the end of this period that the need for something to be done to attack the strongholds of sin which were to be found in Stockholm was laid upon the heart of some of God's people in Sweden. A district known as "the White Mountains," one of the worst parts of the city, was specially thought on, and earnest prayer was made that a way might be opened for Christian work there. It was resolved to start a Home for Bible-women, from whence mission work of every sort might be carried on, and Miss Borg was communicated with, with the view of interesting and engaging her in the movement. The Lord's time had come, the Lord's worker was ready, and in his own way the start was made. On New Year's Day, 1876, a small house in the centre of the district was offered for the first few years rent free if our sister would open it as a training home for Bible-women.

It was a great test of faith; she was no longer young, there was no human help of any account to reckon upon, and no funds, six krona, or less than seven shillings of English money, being the first and largest donation bestowed. Such work at that time was new in Sweden, and little understood, so that it meant entire reliance upon the living God; in no way could the arm of flesh be her support.

The house placed at her disposal needed to be repaired before it could be opened for the new work, and in the meantime Miss Borg paid a visit to England for the purpose of seeing similar efforts carried on in London, spending some time at Mildmay, and becoming familiarised with some of the best-known Christian institutions of the Metropolis. In many ways the time so spent was of great value as a preparation for future service. But everything she saw seemed so great and so well sustained in comparison with the smallness and the difficulties of the sphere to which she had to return; this, however, only served to strengthen and perfect her trust in God, and our friend went back to Stockholm determined to lean hard upon his almighty arm. One of the first questions to be settled was, Should there be a committee of management? This was decided in the negative, and the result, after years of trial, is that, as Miss Borg said recently to the writer, "The Lord has proved a good and precious Director." Trials abounded, and herculean difficulties presented themselves; indeed, if the whole story were told of that first Training Home, and the experiences of its inmates, few works would be found to have involved more real self-sacrifice and heroic endurance.

Miss Borg started with one Bible-woman to begin with, but others came forward, and the Home soon became too small for those desiring admission, only about twelve being able to be accommodated at once. These, after a course of one year's practical training were, and are, sent out into different spheres of Christian activity, such as orphanages, rescue homes, hospitals, sailors' rests, district visiting, etc. The need of enlargement was soon felt, and in 1878 another Home was opened, which is now occupied by a matron with three Bible-women, and twenty-two inmates. More than two hundred workers have gone out from these homes to different parts of the world, some being in Finland, in Russia, Alaska, Persia, Africa, and elsewhere. The visits and efforts of the women while in course of training resulted in much blessing to souls, and revealed great needs in many directions for further efforts. Among fallen women especially their influence for good began to be manifest: cases rescued from this class had to be provided for, and at first were taken to the Training Homes, but this was found impracticable to continue; a small house was therefore taken in the country for the purpose, but subsequently a larger house was provided in Stockholm, near to the Training Homes, and great have been, and are, the results God has permitted to follow.

Another branch of work was laid upon Miss Borg's heart, and rendered a necessity by the pressure of results already attained; it was on behalf of destitute orphans and neglected children. The workers were constantly meeting with these, and some at first were taken to the Homes, but it was soon found necessary to start a separate institution, and in 1881 the first Orphanage was established, commencing with a matron and eleven children. Since then it has moved to a larger house, and has now a matron and helper, with twenty little ones in charge. Soon, in 1884, another house was opened, where twenty-two children are provided for, and in 1885 yet another was added for the accommodation of sixteen more of the otherwise abandoned and helpless waifs of Stockholm.

In 1891 an offer was made to Miss Borg of a house rent free in a lovely country village about thirty miles from the city, if she would remove one of the Orphan Homes there; this offer was thankfully accepted, as was also another similar one since made, so that now two of these homes are removed from all the dangers of town life, much to the advantage of the children both physically and morally. Moreover they are out of the reach of depraved parents and friends, whose influence in many cases proved a great difficulty while in the same locality. It should be said that only girls are received to these homes, such being of all ages, from infants to fifteen or sixteen years of age. The older are set to help the younger, all are trained for domestic service; and now at the village homes for outdoor work, in which women are so much employed in Sweden. A family life is maintained, everything possible being done for the comfort and well-being of the children; and, needless to say, spiritual influence of the purest and most evangelical type is brought to bear upon them all. It was the writer's privilege very recently to visit these orphans in their happy surroundings, and a scene of greater brightness, or a home breathing a more thoroughly Christian atmosphere, it has never been his lot to see. Many of the children are truly converted to God, and Miss Borg counts upon the prayers of some of these little ones as valued aids in her happy work. A fourth Orphanage was opened in 1886, which also has twenty children under its roof.

There is in connection with the city branch a mission hall, where Gospel services are held, and which is the centre of much useful work carried on in the neighbourhood, much blessing resting on the labours of the workers employed. In connection with this mission at "the White Mountains," two or three female workers amongst Arab women in North Africa are sent out supported by voluntary contributions received by Miss Borg for that purpose.

Anything said by way of eulogy or exalting the instrument would greatly grieve the honoured worker of whom we have written, than whom no more simple-minded or unobtrusive toiler has ever been found in the great field of God. For sixteen years she has been upheld by God's power alone, her faith a living testimony to the faithfulness and all-sufficiency of Him who has been her only trust. Often has faith been sorely tried, but as often have signal interpositions of Divine providence been manifest. This was especially seen on one occasion, when the house most important to her needs had to be sold; no means being forthcoming to retain it, when the City authorities were led to purchase it, and allowed Miss Borg to continue in possession at a moderate rent, voting from year to year 4000 kroner in addition to help her work in the district she occupies.

Beside her many other labours, Miss Borg has for many years been the editor of a monthly magazine called Trans i Tvila, or "The Rest of Faith," which has been a blessing and help to many, scattering precious seed where otherwise none would fall. Just now, or when the writer last saw her, she was receiving numerous applications from different parts entreating her to take distressing cases into the Orphanages, but all were more than full. It was on her heart to open yet another, and earnest prayer was being offered that the Lord would enable her to do so.

A few small contributions had already been promised or given, which seemed an earnest of more to follow, but they were far too few to warrant action. Would that the hearts of God's people might be opened to send her prompt help, so that this dear aged servant of Christ may be spared in her last days the pain of refusing urgent calls for rescue on behalf of the perishing, simply for lack of money, which spent for God, shall bring praise to Him and salvation to souls for whom the blood of his Son was given.

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND STEBBINS.

These esteemed brethren, after closing up their Irish campaign, have paid a visit to London, much to the satisfaction of their many friends in this city. As noted elsewhere, both evangelists, with Miss Whittle, took part in the annual meeting of the Stratford Conference Hall. At the noon prayer meeting in Aldersgate-street on Thursday last Major Whittle gave a very choice and stimulating address; while Mr. Stebbins and Miss Whittle sang delightfully a new song, composed by the former to words written by the Major.

The same evening the evangelists were present at Dr. Pentecost's weekday congregational meeting in Marylebone Presbyterian Church, which took the form of a service of song. The chief singers were Mr. Stebbins, Miss Whittle, and Dr. Pentecost's eldest daughter. Either as solos, duets, or trios, some of the very choicest pieces from "Songs and Solos," and "New Hymns" were rendered with all the charm and power that come from the combination of richly sympathetic and cultured voices. It seemed to some of the listeners, at any rate, like an hour at heaven's gate.

Major Whittle gave a very telling Gospel exhortation, and Dr. Pentecost interspersed most interesting remarks of a reminiscent character.

On the forenoon of Good Friday Mr. Stebbins, accompanied by Miss Ada Rose, sang at Dr. Parker's service in the City Temple. Our gifted American brother received hearty thanks from the famous preacher, and a cordial welcome to come again whenever he was in London. Mr. Stebbins sailed for New York on Saturday in the Umbria.

Persecution in Morocco.

Dear Sir,—Two Spanish Protestants have been sent to prison to-day by their consul for attending our meetings. They were not allowed to call witnesses or make any defence, neither could they obtain a paper stating what they were charged with. They are imprisoned in the foul Moorish prison, in a room containing some thirty or forty thieves, murderers, etc., etc. Both are married men with families, and the wife of one of them is confined to her bed by illness.

The men do not know how long their imprisonment is to last. May I ask for the prayers of all readers of The Christian?

Yours very sincerely, N. H. Patrick.

UNDER THE BANNER.

A HYMN FOR THE LORD'S SUPPER.

"He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love."—S. Song ii. 4.

He brought me to the banquet,
Else had I never come;
He taught my heart to praise Him,
Else had my lips been dumb.
With patient quest He sought me—
The sheep that went astray;
With his own blood he bought me—
A price none else could pay.

"Is it for me, sweet Saviour,
This feast of love divine?
For me these precious emblems,—
The broken Bread, the Wine?
With faith so poor and feeble,
With love so faint and cold,
May I approach thy table?
May I communion hold?"

So questioned I. For answer,
He bade me look above:
And lo! displayed above me
The banner of his love.
Inscribed upon that banner
My welcome I may trace;
Oh! how it doth unravel
The mystery of grace!

And now, no more I tremble,
No more my faith is weak;
He surely will interpret
The joy I cannot speak.
And since He spreads the Table,
And doth the feast prepare
For all his chosen people,
I too may venture there.

He brought me to the banquet,
Then surely He is near;
It surely is the cadence
Of his dear voice I hear:
"Not everyone that doeth,"
The message seems to be,—
"But everyone that loveth
Should thus remember Me."

Thrice happy, blest position!
How safe from all alarms!
His arms are "underneath" me—
Those "everlasting arms;"
And over me his banner,
All gloriously unfurled,
Defies the angry armies
Of an unfriendly world.

No party name may blazon
Upon his banquet wall;
No rivalry obtaineth
Where He is "all in all."
His saints should turn their faces
(Like those of cherubim)
In love to one another,
And all in love to Him.

If such the tidal blessing
When fellow-Christians meet,
What of the ocean-fulness
Around his mercy seat?
What of the full communion
Our Father hath in store?
What of the "weight of glory"
That lieth on before?

Who first of us who gather
Within the house below
Shall pass into that glory,
It matters not to know:
Only a blood-red banner
Conceals the House above,
And still the fair inscription
On either side is "Love."

He brought me to the banquet,
Else I had never come;
He taught my heart to praise Him
Else had my lips been dumb.
And in that richer banquet,
Preparing for his bride,
I know that I shall see Him,
And shall be glorified.

SECRETARIES' PRAYER UNION.—Mr. E. J. Kennedy, of Exeter Hall, has consented to act as the President of this Union for the ensuing year.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

Rev. John Wilkinson's summary of work during 1892, in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, is full of interest for such as study evangelistic progress. After reiterating the Apostolic rule "to the Jew first," and insisting upon the duty of Christians to give the Written Word as freely as they speak to others of the grace of God, he says—"The world will never be supplied with Scriptures by sales; and the world will never be evangelised without the Jews." It is cheering to learn that the work has extended in various parts of the world, and that the lives and health of the labourers have been preserved.

By way of introduction, Mr. Wilkinson says:—"During the sixteen and a-half years of the existence of this Mission, we have received for general and special objects, in freewill offerings alone, over £80,000, in sums varying from a half-penny to five thousand pounds. We have never been in debt. I am now in my forty-third year of service for Israel, and the service is increasingly happy and blessed."

Glancing at the various institutions, he writes:—"The many thousands of Jews driven out of other countries and flocking to our own country, many to remain permanently amongst us, and others passing through to other lands, will probably make London, to the end of their dispersion, one of the most important centres of missionary effort throughout the world. We have probably in London alone, at the present time, no less than 100,000 Jews, nearly double the number we had when this Mission was commenced. Our provincial towns have probably another 50,000. Nearly all who come to our shores are very poor, destitute, and in deep need. Many were well-to-do tradesmen or merchants, who have lost all by banishment from home, business, and country, to wander over the face of the earth, and to be plundered everywhere of the little all they were able to bring away with them. The poor delicate women and children suffer dreadfully.

"Through the ministry of our Medical Mission we come into repeated touch, during the year of regular work, with about 5000 fresh cases of men, women, and children. The sewing class, night school, Gospel meetings, and the shelter, bring us into contact with many other thousands of needy ones, so that by means of our regular agents and agencies we can wisely administer temporal and temporary relief in food, fire, and clothing, without any extra cost in distributing. This affords our Christian friends a splendid opportunity of doing some real charity in the Lord Jesus Christ's name, among his brethren, and for his sake.

"Our Medical Mission, which of course is exclusively for Jews, reaches the sick poor, and is a blessing to thousands. It employs two qualified medical missionaries, assisted by two trained deaconesses, who speak German, and are aided in service and in song by other devoted lady-helpers. Many through this branch have been led to confess their faith in Christ."

Other useful institutions include—the Convalescent Home at Highgate; the Children's Home at Newington Green; and the Sewing Class, with a weekly attendance of nearly 300 Jewesses. There are accounts, by the various workers, of loving effort at home and abroad. Mr. Levinski, who meets the Jewish immigrants at Tilbury, says that from six to nine boats arrive every week from Hamburg, bringing Jews who have come from Poland, Russia, Germany, Austria, or Hungary. During eight months he met over five thousand Jews on the boats, distributing among them Scriptures in various languages, and assisting them in all the way in his power.

In some concluding words, Mr. Wilkinson says:—"The driving the Jews by hundreds of thousands out of one land is producing a Jewish question in every land, which can be solved only by restoration to Palestine. Restoration has already set in. Eighteen colonies are already established by Jews in the Holy Land; eight in the Jaffa district, five in the Galilee district, and five in the Carmel district. About 400 families are in these colonies, cultivating about 25,000 acres of land. Some of the colonies belong to the Rothschilds, and others to private individuals. During the past year one railway has been opened, and others are in course of construction. Within the last few years more Jews have returned to Palestine than the number who came back from Babylon under Ezra and Nehemiah. Surely these and many other events tell us plainly that the end of Israel's dispersion is very near; and that the return of our Blessed Lord cannot be far off. Let us live in readiness for, and work in expectation of, his speedy coming!"

"AGE NOT OVER THIRTY."

How often does the above form an item in advertisements for workers for different departments of Christian work—often in conjunction, too, with other qualities which are (except in rare instances) the growth of years of experience and discipline! It seems worth while to inquire if this demand for youthful workers is according to the divine plan. How slow, judged by human rules, are the divine methods, and how long does the Lord take in preparing his servants for the work He assigns?

What are the qualities so desirable in youthful workers? Probably, chiefly, zeal, earnest enthusiasm—what we call "go." But may not these be often secured at the expense of other qualifications, perhaps even more valuable—stability, patience, sympathy with the erring and disappointed? Moses' life illustrates this well—"When he was full forty years old" (not so very young, either) "it came into his heart to visit his brethren,"..."and seeing one of them suffer wrong he defended him, and avenged him"..."I smote the Egyptian." Plenty of zeal and "go." "He supposed they would have understood how that God, by his hand, would deliver them; but they understood not." . . . "Then fled Moses and was a stranger in the land of Midian." . . . "And when forty years were expired" the Lord appeared to him and said, "Come now, I will send thee unto Pharaoh that thou mayest bring forth my people," etc. "And Moses said, Who am I that I should go?" How different his estimate of his own ability and fitness—but had he learnt nothing during those forty years?

Who can imagine that the fiery, impetuous Moses at forty could (humanly speaking) have had the patience he afterwards displayed under all the provocations of Israel's wilderness journey, when the inspired commentary upon his character is "The man Moses was very meek"?

Study the life and work of many of the Lord's anointed ones, and see what long preparation for their life work. John Baptist, though "filled with the Holy Ghost" from birth, was "in the deserts until the time of his showing unto Israel," and even our Lord Himself, though at twelve He "must be about his Father's business," and "they were astonished at his answers," yet was thirty when He entered upon his public ministry.

Looking back over one's own life, one can see that though perhaps at twenty-five there may have been a greater eagerness to undertake work, possibly greater physical power, and a good deal of warm enthusiasm, yet at forty-two there is at least greater knowledge of human hearts, more patience, less confidence in self and more in God. Does experience of repeated disappointment and trial count for nothing?

Are not such splendid instances of fruit in old age, as George Müller, over eighty, and Isaac Sharp, eighty-eight, still actively engaged, and many others, sufficient proof that one is not necessarily worn out at forty, or even fifty?

When staying some time ago at Miss Mason's House of Rest, Eastbourne (which, by the way, is a true resting-place), two cases in point greatly impressed me. One, a young girl twenty-three or twenty-five perhaps, superintendent of a Y.W.C.A., so youthful, inexperienced, and wanting in weight and sobriety, one could not imagine any girl in trouble making her her confidante; the other a lady about fifty, decidedly slow, methodical, &c., but thoroughly good and motherly, had had great experience with young people in the mission field, but could not get employment because too old, though in every way well fitted, and by no means worn out physically.

I commend this subject to those whose work may be to appoint or recommend to different spheres, asking them to consider whether being somewhat past the prime of life is a sufficient reason to reject any applicant. E. M. H.

STRATFORD CONFERENCE HALL.

The work of the Stratford Conference Hall and Young Men's Christian Association has from the first enjoyed in a rich degree the blessing of God. As is well known, the spacious building in the West Ham-lane was erected eight years ago as a memorial of the great harvest of souls gathered in during Mr. Moody's mission in 1884. It has ever since been a rallying point for Christian workers in East London, and within its walls the Gospel has been faithfully proclaimed, and with continual spiritual success.

The report for last year, presented at the annual meeting on Tuesday evening last week, recorded with joy Mr. Moody's second visit to Stratford, last year. Reviewing the work of the year, the members of the council declared: "We are day by day more than ever convinced that, notwithstanding the lamentable increase of soul-destroying errors, the Gospel of the grace of God, faithfully proclaimed, attracts the multitude as no other teaching does. On every Sunday evening our hall is filled with men and women ready to listen to the glad tidings of great joy—a full, free, and present salvation through a definite personal acceptance of Christ and his finished work—and many a soul goes forth rejoicing in pardon and peace." This is a very cheering statement, but it is only one among many in the report. Space fails for more than a mention of the good work of the Mizpah Bands and Evangelistic Choirs; the mission organisations for testimony in the open air and the common lodging houses; and the loving ministries of the Samaritan and Convalescent Home funds. These operations engage men and women alike. The work of the Y.M.C.A., though more restricted in its scope, is by no means secondary in importance or influence. The Sunday afternoon Bible class registers an average attendance of 145, and a large number of young men owe their spiritual enlightenment to it.

The annual meeting already mentioned was presided over by Lord Bennet, who in a few words professed his personal interest in Christ, although he was sorry that his Christian life did not begin earlier than twenty months ago. He intimated that he hoped in a few weeks to go to the United States, to join Mr. Moody in Gospel work.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., struck a high note in a brief address to Christian workers. We have no right, he said, to take all the privileges and refuse the responsibilities of the Gospel of salvation. Christ died not only to save us from hell, but to "purify to Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." So we are set apart for God's work in the world, to bring about his kingdom. In the Sermon on the Mount, the charter by which Christians must regulate their lives, Christ told his disciples: "Ye are the salt of the earth"; but in order to do its purifying work, salt must come into contact with that which it is to preserve. Christians are as salt in the world of corruption, and they must not be above coming into contact with the vice, wretchedness, and rottenness of society. Only by effort on such lines can men and women living in sin and misery be won to Christ.

With reference to methods of work, Mr. Caine said that in his mission hall at Clapham he sometimes holds ticket meetings, "Somebody Else" being the ticket which secures admission. The plan seemed to commend itself warmly to some who heard of it for the first time. In conclusion, Mr. Caine remarked upon the wealth of many in Gospel privileges, adding, "I have been sucking goodness out of the Gospel for thirty-three years, and there is plenty more yet. But we must not be lazy, or we shall surely be barren in our own souls."

After a few words by Mr. R. C. Morgan, expressing deep interest in the work, Mr. C. Boardman, the treasurer of the institution, made a financial statement, showing a debt of £300 still on the building. Some promises towards the reduction of this amount, as well as towards carrying on the work, were received during the evening. The last speaker was Major Whittle, who was heard with pleasure by many old friends. In the course of the evening, Mr. G. C. Stebbins and Miss Whittle rendered duets, which were highly appreciated.

TEMPERANCE IN RUSSIA.—The Russian clergy have received orders to preach against drinking, which has hitherto been encouraged by the State for fiscal reasons.

MR. JOHN CURRIE IN GLASGOW.

This evangelist has concluded a three weeks' mission in Bridgeton Baptist Church, Glasgow. The meetings have been very much blessed throughout. Though small in attendance at first, they quite overflowed the building towards the close.

Mr. Currie has a wonderful grip of Scripture loctrine, and his addresses make the Bible speak. The members of the church profited much by his teaching, and from the beginning his message was blessed to sinners. Many of the young people of the church were led to decide for Christ, and some who had scarcely ever seen the inside of a church were attracted by our brother and won to Christ. Several of those who knew Mr. Currie in this country before he left for America came to hear, and have been converted. Others notorious for their wickedness are now witnessing a good confession.

Once or twice the meetings were addressed by Mrs. Currie, and on the occasion of the two last meetings, Mr. G. C. Stebbins, the brother-in-law of Mr. Currie, was present, and sang some of his beautiful hymns. These three weeks have been the healthiest season of revival we remember in the church.

Wm. J. Millar, Pastor.

THE GLASGOW BIBLE INSTITUTE.

There has been no increase in the number of students residing in the institute during the month, for, although there have been a good many applications, the directors are desirous of exercising some degree of care in the selections made, more especially as the first session is now pretty well advanced. There have been additional enrolments both in the day and evening classes.

One of the students, in his notes of the day classes, says:—"The work of the day classes for the past month has gone on with unbroken regularity. The Bible, as most will know, is the text book, and the course of study at present is proceeding right through it systematically. Time to the students does seem to fly rapidly. There is inclination enough on their part (if it were possible) to clip the wings of old Time. The examinations for the past month have covered such subjects as the Critical Theories on the Pentateuch; the historical books of the Old Testament, with the contemporary poetical and prophetical books in chronological order; also, the Doctrine of God, etc."

The practical side of the work till the early part of March was mostly confined to visiting and assisting at various mission halls, and with perhaps a rare exception, every night God's saving power has been made manifest. The students assisted Mr. MacKeith (the far-famed children's preacher) in the after meetings of a series of children's services held in Free St. Peter's Church. We have every reason to believe a great work was done for God. The impression seems to be indelibly stamping itself on many minds that the Christian Church has not yet half realised the importance of work amongst the children. It is amazing to see how children of tender years can grasp the truth and be started to work for Jesus. We witnessed a most gladdening sight at Bethany Hall on a recent Sabbath night. There had been a good work among the children there, and Mr. Logan wisely got them started to do something for Jesus; and there in the after meeting were little boys and girls who had been converted, going through among their wee companions, speaking to them about their souls and about Jesus.

During the week commencing March 12, a special mission was undertaken by the students, in Paterson-street Hall (Berkeley-street U.P. Church Mission). The narrow streets adjoining are densely populated, and wickedness abounds. A strong effort was made by house-to-house visitation, open-air meetings, and children's meetings before the evening Gospel meeting, to stir up an interest among the people, and the Lord gave very real blessing. Night after night a number of souls were dealt with, and every evening several (sometimes ten or twelve) made profession of faith in Christ. The work among the children, too, was deeply interesting, and a large number of the little ones professed to trust Jesus. The students are now carrying on a special mission at Bethany Hall, Bridgeton. There are large attendances, and considerable blessing. The work here is of a very lively description, and is evidently telling on the community.—The Reaper.

MEMORIES OF M'CHEYNE.

Sunday week was the 50th anniversary of the death of Rev. Robert Murray M'Cheyne, the first minister of St. Peter's Church, Dundee, and one of the most saintly men Scotland ever produced. In M'Cheyne Memorial Free Church — a building erected to commemorate Mr. M'Cheyne's life and work—Rev. Mr. Alexander, the minister, made fitting reference to the occasion. The hymns sung were those of which Mr. M'Cheyne had been fond; the lessons read from the Old and New Testaments were those read fifty years ago when the congregation of St. Peter's met to mourn their deceased pastor. The text consisted of the words inscribed on the front of M'Cheyne Memorial Church—"And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever" (Daniel xii. 3).

The preacher in his discourse said there were not many men who died fifty years ago about whom he should care to preach, but this man was one who stood out from among the men of his generation, whose name was as fragrant in Dundee as it was fifty years ago; and whose fame had gone over all the English-speaking world, and whose life and works were read in every part of Protestant Christendom. His was the name of one of their few Protestant saints. What was the secret of it? His life was short—he died before he was thirty; he was a simple Presbyterian minister; he was not, according to the law of the Church of Scotland as interpreted by the Court of Session, entitled to be regarded as a proper minister of that Church; he had no business to sit among his betters at the Presbytery; he was not a great man as the world counted greatness; and, while their hearts would be thrilled by reading his sermons, they were not the sermons of a great preacher; his ministry was less than six years, and even that time was broken by ill-health. Why was such a man so remembered? There was but one answer—he carried about with him wherever he went the savour of heaven and of holiness. He was a man of God, who daily saw his Maker's face; one who daily came forth from that awful Presence with a message for the people, and who spoke words of power. M'Cheyne was fortunate in having Dr. Bonar as his biographer, and that, too, was one of the secrets of his fame. M'Cheyne was as unlike the popular idea of a religious man as could be. He was a young Christian gentleman, thoroughly accomplished, and, above all, thoroughly earnest.

Touching on the main events of M'Cheyne's life, the speaker said that great results followed his work in the parish of St. Peter's, and the question naturally arose, What was the kind of preaching? It was simply evangelical doctrine, which was often so much despised nowadays. He preached simply the ruin of man by sin, the regenerating might of the Holy Spirit, and the redemptive power of Jesus Christ crucified. In conclusion, the preacher enforced the lessons to be learned from the life of M'Cheyne, both by the members of that congregation which bore his name, and by the Christian community in general.

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE CITY.

Prayer for the three nights' mission at the Old Welcome, Cross Key-square, by Mr. W. R. Lane, for young women in the City, was abundantly answered. The attendance was very large; one night the lecture hall, which seats about 600, was crowded. At the close of the address many were convicted of sin, and earnestly sought salvation. Some with difficulties which before had hindered them finding the peace they needed, were enabled definitely to take Christ for their Saviour and Deliverer.

The Christians also were blessed, and many who had never before confessed Christ were led to do so. Now remains the blessed work of looking after these young converts, and helping them to stand fast in the Lord.

E. Fisher.

THE OPIUM CURSE.—A very interesting and enthusiastic series of meetings was recently held in the Isle of Wight in connection with the Anti-Opium League. Mr. W. Raju Naidu and Rev. A. Langman (of the C.I.M.) were the deputation. All the meetings were well attended, the audiences giving expression to feelings of horror and surprise at the facts revealed concerning the misery and degradation caused by the opium trade.

BOSTON MONDAY LECTURES.

At Mr. Joseph Cook's 234th Boston Monday Lecture on March 13, the prelude was "Perils and Promises of the World's Fair: Crime and Christianity in Chicago." As a nation it is our solemn duty to prevent the World's Fair from becoming a carnival of crime. Chicago has been noted for the lawlessness among its mixed population; but there are as many flies in the ointment in New York as in that of Chicago. They do not, however, buzz as loudly. What are the prospects for crimes being committed at the World's Fair? Among the sources of crime Mr. Cook announced that the W.C.T.U. find a plan for bringing to Chicago 25,000 girls. Against this horrible iniquity they protest to the mayor, who has promised to use the utmost of his power against a crime worse than the burning of victims with fire. Our German forefathers were, on the whole, purer than we. The hope and welfare of a nation depend on chastity. Cases of kidnapping of girls were mentioned.

In the Chicago Fair there are eighty-seven places where liquor is to be sold on the grounds. The sidewalks are to be sprinkled with whisky to allure visitors into the saloons. Miss Willard is needed from England to lead an army of 200,000 women against the liquor interest.

Sabbath desecration will be terribly prevalent. Gambling in its various forms will be there. Schools have opened for instructing youth in gambling. Anthony Comstock will be needed there to make war on gambling, as he is now doing in New Jersey. An instance of open robbery was given in a central part of Chicago. If that is done in the open part of the city, what will it be in the byeways? Already Chicago is feeling that her police cannot maintain order during the Fair, and is calling for help. But New York and other cities will have no duty to send police there. Added to all this is the expectation of having Carter Harrison as mayor. He and 6000 saloons will make Chicago a national disgrace. In fact, there are said to be three Chicagos—the American, the foreign, and the infernal.

On the other hand there will be counteracting influences. Evangelical agencies will be at work for good. Mr. Moody and other men whom God has honoured will be there. The American Sunday will also be there on exhibition. Some are fearing the influence of the Congress of Religions, but more good than evil is to be hoped from it. The signs of the times are favourable.

The lecture considered "the worth of Sunday to religion." The value of social worship was set forth; the good that can be accomplished by allying one's self with active workers. The prodigal son grows old, not more because he is fed by husks than because he is not fed by the Holy Spirit. The value of developing conscience was dwelt upon, and nothing is greater in conscience than God. Phillips Brooks defined conscience as all openness of the soul to God. Baptism, the Lord's Supper, the Lord's Day, preaching, make the Church. Holy convocation is like the sun to vegetation. Secret societies cannot take the place of the Church. The lecturer needed three hours every Sunday for putting adipose on his spiritual ribs. The Lord's Day becomes the devil's day when used as a holiday. We do not wish to be continentalised in regard to Sunday, or to have a continental police army. Mr. Cook read some of the many replies he had received on the Sunday opening question. They all agreed but two. He closed with a summary of the lectures.

The report of the lecture committee, including the resolutions, closed the successful eighteenth year of the course.

A TWISTED CHRISTIAN.—A gentleman in New York recently said to another, "Is Mr. L—— a Christian?" He replied, "Well, yes: Godward he is all right, but manward he is just a little twisted." How many really good people lay themselves open to this description! They do not carry out their Christian principles so as to be void of offence. Their life is not lived up to their faith. In small things they dishonour God. In some of their common-life dealings they do not carry out their principles amongst their fellow-men. We are afraid the "little twist" is more or less to be seen in us all. Alas! twists of temper, twists of inconsistency, society twists, business twists, home twists! May God set us upright and give us in our daily life a straight backbone, so that we may walk upright amongst our fellow-men on our way to heaven!—The Quiver.

MR. SPURGEON'S LAST BOOK.*

Posthumous is a pathetic word. Whether they be children or books, or works of any other kind, that see the light after the father or author has closed his eyes in death, they never fail to elicit a tender human interest. Mrs. Spurgeon's wifely preface to this posthumous writing appeals to the hearts of all who loved her husband, and the number of these has been multiplied since he died. She says: "It stands alone in its sacred and sorrowful significance. It is the tired worker's final labour of love for his Lord. It is the last sweet song from lips that were ever sounding forth the praises of his King. It is the dying shout of victory from the standard-bearer who bore his Captain's colours unflinchingly through the thickest of the fight...Much of the later portion was written on the very borderland of Heaven, amid the nearing glories of the unseen world, and almost 'within sight of the golden gates.'"

This is not only an exposition and a commentary. It is an education in the true method of Bible-reading, which is Bible-feeding. It shows us how it was that Charles H. Spurgeon was always so simple, so ready, so overflowing. Not only his soul but his spirit was fed with Scripture truth. Not only the intellectual and emotional part of his nature was interested, but the spiritual part, by which we come into contact with God, who is a Spirit, was taught and built up, as he found his words and did eat them, and they became the joy and the rejoicing of his heart.

These comments, therefore, are even more experimental than expository, for experience is the best expositor. Thus he says, on Matt. xiii. 52: "Old truth is made new by a living experience; new views of truth, if indeed it be truth, are only the old in a fresh light...Only things worth putting into a treasury are worth bringing forth to the household. That scribe had need be well instructed who has to keep on handing out a variety of precious truth throughout a long life."

We believe that few things would please Mrs. Spurgeon better than to be enabled by subscriptions to her book fund to send a copy of their pastor's posthumous book to all those who have passed through the Pastors' College, or who are in it now. It will give them invaluable help in the first of the four Gospels. It contains numerous terse sentences which will be useful for quotation when they have been read, marked, learned, and inwardly digested.

A UNITED MISSION IN NOTTS.

Mr. Herbert J. Knight, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's mission at Keyworth, near Nottingham. The mission was promoted by the Congregational and Primitive Methodist Churches, and the services were held in the two churches alternately. In each church there was not only accommodation for the large congregations which gathered, but also suitable rooms for conversation and prayer with inquirers. Every house in the village was visited previous to the mission, and united meetings for prayer were held. An outdoor meeting was held every evening.

The services were marked by quiet joy and assurance on the part of Christians, and Mr. Knight's earnest, impressive, and persuasive appeals to the unconverted were followed by many conversions. Men and women of all ages were deeply moved by the Holy Ghost, and were constrained to yield themselves to God through penitence and faith which are in Christ Jesus.

There were separate meetings for men, at which Mr. Knight was able to speak of the peculiar temptations of young men, and to say plain and kindly words of advice and warning. The attendance increased as the time passed on, and interest in spiritual religion increased with the progress of the mission. The co-operation of the two churches was in every way pleasant, and the unity of the Spirit was kept in the bond of peace.

GOUT.—Lecturing recently at Birmingham, Sir Crichton Browne said that gout was almost unknown in Ireland until the introduction of Dublin stout.

MISSES SMITH AND BAX.

On Wednesday, March 15, a mission was commenced in the Methodist Church, Manorhamilton, by Miss Smith and Miss Bax. From the first the attendance was large, and increased daily, until 400 to 500 people were packed into the church. Some prejudices had to be overcome, but the power of God's Spirit prevailed, and day by day during the two weeks of the mission men, women, and children were "inquiring the way to Zion with their faces thitherward."

Tuesday, March 28, was the close, and seemed to be the crowning meeting of the series. In the short space of forty-five minutes 110 persons stood up to witness for Jesus. Miss Bax delivered a most impressive total abstinence address, and fifty signed the pledge. H. M.

RICHARD WEAVER IN LONDON.

This honoured servant of the Lord has again visited Malden Hall, the North-west Branch of the Evangelistic Mission. On Sunday, March 26, the hall was full in the afternoon, and in the evening every part was packed. Some hundreds attended the overflow meeting held in the schoolroom below, and God gave blessing at both services.

On Monday a special effort was made to reach the men of Kentish Town. Each member of the men's Bible-class invited two men to a tea, to which about 250 responded. These occupied the front seats in the meeting upstairs; then the doors were thrown open to the public, and Richard Weaver spoke with very great power. Big, burly-looking men were thoroughly broken down, and wept like children. At the close of the service several got up and went to the front row of seats, confessing their desire to be saved, and some very remarkable cases were met with by the workers.

Such was the case each night of the mission, which came to an end only too soon. Many prayers are going up to God that He will strengthen his servant in body, richly bless him in soul, and still use him more abundantly in his service.

The veteran evangelist hopes to begin a week's mission at the Presbyterian Church, Kentish Town-road, N.W., on Sunday next.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION.

In connection with the celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission at Hoxton Hall, an interesting meeting was held last week, under the presidency of Mr. William Noble, the founder in 1878 of this particular form of the temperance work. The capacious hall was well filled. Mr. Webb opened the proceedings by prayer.

The Chairman, in calling upon the secretary for his statement, referred to the great disaster which had happened to the work by the loss of Mr. William Palmer, who, he said, had supplied the ammunition for the fight which had been carried on at the hall. They intended that the work should continue, but he reminded them that it depended upon themselves. From the statement of Mr. Rae it appeared that every week throughout the year twenty-five or twenty-six meetings were held, the result of which was that pledges had been taken by 313 men, 324 women, and 335 girls. Mr. Occomore (the visitor), in his report, stated he had made 1856 visits from house to house during the year. The Help One Another Society was still progressing. There were 249 on the book at the end of the year. The Girls' Guild had 905 on the book, all on good standing, with an average of 672 in regular attendance.

The Chairman gave an interesting account of the commencement of the Blue Ribbon Army. He described the difficulties they had had to face, and said since the doors had been opened over a million pledges had been taken, and cards had been issued from Hoxton Hall to every country in the world. They had lost their best friend in Mr. Palmer, but he (the chairman) had faith that if real work was done the means would be forthcoming, that they would not, he felt sure, let the work fall through. With regard to the Government Bill, he said he wished it went to the extent of shutting up the wretched clubs. Mr. Matthew Burnett, Mr. Jones, and others delivered short speeches. During the evening the Zulu Christian Choir sang a selection of sacred and temperance songs.

Y.M.C.A. MISSION AT HULL.

We expected great things, and God has answered our prayers. Hundreds of men and women have been awakened, and many have obtained pardon, and peace through the Word preached and sung by our friends.

The Y.M.C.A. committee engaged Hengler's Circus, the largest building in the town, seating about 3500. On Sunday afternoon, March 19, at a meeting for men only, Mr. E. J. Kennedy gave an address on betting and gambling to a vast audience. He treated the subject with marked ability. The evening meeting was open to all; the building was packed in every part. Numbers were under deep conviction of sin, and there were some remarkable cases of conversion. Miss Ada Rose sang several solos with wonderful effect.

During the week services were held every afternoon and evening (Saturday excepted), and were well attended. Every meeting was fraught with blessing. Mr. G. C. Stebbins arrived on Tuesday, from Glasgow, and remained until the close of the mission. In company with Miss Rose, he delivered the Gospel in song with much earnestness, and we believe won many hearts for the Master.

The closing meetings on Sunday, March 26, will not be soon forgotten. In the morning Lord Bennet presided at a meeting for non-churchgoers. Mr. Kennedy gave an address on "L.S.D." He pointed out the great responsibility of those to whom wealth is entrusted, and spoke of its power for good or for evil. Leaving the monetary view of the subject, he skilfully used the letters to denote Love, Salvation, and Deliverance.

In the afternoon the meeting was devoted to the question of social purity. The circus was crowded with men only—numbers could not obtain seats. Mr. Kennedy handled the delicate subject in a very judicious manner. At the close of this address, Lord Bennet gave the story of his life, and showed how God could "pluck a brand from the burning."

In the evening the throng was so great that a neighbouring chapel was pressed into the service for an overflow; even when a thousand people were packed into it many hundreds were turned away. The inquiry rooms were occupied until nearly eleven o'clock. Mr. Norman Bennet, of Cambridge, Mr. Sweet and Miss Sweet, of London, rendered splendid service at the closing meetings. The one regret expressed by all was that the mission could not be continued another week. The prayers of thousands of God's people in this town will follow Mr. Kennedy and those who assisted him in our Y.M.C.A. Mission. J. W.

BETHNAL GREEN FREE LIBRARY.

Lord Kinnaird presided at the seventeenth annual meeting of this institution, when Mr. Atkinson, superintendent of the work of the Christian Community, read a very satisfactory account of the year's work. The income was £580, and the expenditure £614, in addition to which the income of books, presented by friends, amounted to between two and three thousand volumes. Nearly 34,000 readers attended the reading room in ten months; and numbers out of employment who cannot afford a penny to buy a paper read the advertisement sheets posted up in the street at 7 a.m. The library is really a school of technical instruction to such as choose to make use of it, while evening classes and free lectures are an important feature. On account of the number of books having outgrown the building, the chief want at present is a larger building, in a main thoroughfare, in which the work can be developed by affording more ample space for the readers who wish to attend.

The Chairman, Mr. George Nokes, the Rev. W. J. Dawson, Mr. George Howell, M.P., and other friends spoke earnestly in support of the institution.

BOURNEMOUTH.—A meeting has recently been held in the Digby Institute in furtherance of the Medical Missionary Association, at which addresses of great interest, full of incident and information, were given by Dr. Roberts, late of Belleville Mission, Paris (Mlle. de Bröen), and by Dr. Maxwell (formerly of Formosa), Superintendent of the London Medical Mission, 49, Highbury Park, where a number of students not only have the advantage of medical instruction but of evangelical and evangelistic training. Mr. Jno. M. Douglas and Mr. R. C. Morgan also spoke.

HEBREW CHRISTIAN PRAYER UNION.

The Hebrew Christian Prayer Union is an association of Jewish believers, spiritual successors of Andrew and Philip, who, having found the Lord, promptly sought their kinsfolk and told them of the Messiah. The Union numbers several hundred members, who meet periodically for prayer and mutual encouragement in Christian life and work. The roll contains the names of many pastors and missionaries belonging to the House of Israel; and however undemonstrative its operations may be, as viewed from without, the Union is undoubtedly influential in holy purpose and testimony for God.

It is the custom of the members of the Union to meet with a peculiarly interesting object every year at the Passover season. That object is to commemorate the fulfilment of Mosaic types in by showing "the Lord's death until He come." On Thursday last we had the privilege of attending this solemn yet joyous gathering in the Mission House of the British Jews Society, Church-street, Spitalfields. It was a unique assembly of devoted labourers on behalf of Israel. The antiquated symbols of the past economy, which were engaging the hearts and minds of the thousands of "Orthodox" Jews in the neighbourhood of the Mission House, were, of course, dispensed with; and attention was directed to what took place on that epoch-marking evening "after supper," when the Lord instituted the great memorial ordinance. The deliverance, under Moses, from the bondage of Egypt, which the Passover commemorates, was not forgotten; but its glory was eclipsed by the greater work of emancipation from sin and Satan and death, achieved by the Son of God, not for a nation only but for all the world.

The proceedings were conducted by Rev. A. Bernstein, president of the Union. After Mr. M. S. Bergmann had read Exodus xii., in which the institution of the Passover is described, Rev. J. B. Barraclough engaged in prayer. The special significance of the meeting was then pointed out by the president as commemorating a double event, each of them associated with the shedding of blood. Like all the other addresses, this emphasised the Scripture truth that "it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul." In conclusion, Mr. Bernstein intimated that the company present included

THE WELL-KNOWN RABBI LICHTENSTEIN.

Of him all must have heard, first as one who for years preached Jesus as the Christ in his synagogue at Tapio-Szele, in Hungary; and secondly, as having, about twelve months ago, broken entirely away from the fetters of Rabbinism and openly confessed his Lord in baptism. The president's hope that the Rabbi might prove in very deed "a teacher sent from God" to instruct Christians as well as enlighten his own people, evoked a spontaneous prayer from the hearts of many present, who had not only learned of the Rabbi's confession but knew something of the persecution he has been called upon to endure for the name of Christ.

A vigorous address followed by Rev. J. M. Eppstein, head of the Wanderers' Home for Believing and Inquiring Israelites, based on Exod. xii. 13, "The blood shall be to you for a token," etc., and Matt. xxvii. 25, "His blood be on us and our children." He showed that the blood shed according to God's command in Egypt brought blessing to Israel, while as a consequence of having shed the blood of the Holy and Just One, they have been pursued by the curse of Cain; and therefore they are in dispersion until this day. The led the people to the length they went in regard to Christ, whom they had previously been disposed to take by force and make King. When, however, Israel shall turn to the Lord, then God will "see the blood," and deliver repentant souls. Then that which Israel invoked upon their heads as a curse will, by the God of all grace, be made a blessing.

The thin unleavened Passover cakes (matsoth) having been passed round, and the wine having been partaken of after thanks duly given by different members of the company, a few words were spoken by Rabbi Lichtenstein. The resurrection of Christ was his theme—the purest German his medium of discourse. Scripture quotations being also given in Hebrew. When Mary Magdalen and the other Mary visited the sepulchre, but found not Him whom they loved, they wept; but when they afterwards heard that He had risen from the dead, they rejoiced. The Lord is risen indeed; and He has sent forth a spirit of liberty, and joy, and peace. Instead, therefore, of living in fear of man, children of Israel should enter into the love and life of God through the living Christ, and by the operation of the Holy Spirit which has been sent forth from the Father and the Son.

A season of prayer, in which Rev. E. O. C. Roeder, Mr. J. P. Cohen, H. Ehrlich, and others took part, followed the communion service, suitable hymns being sung at intervals.

MR. VARLEY IN INDIA.

The Lord has graciously blessed the ministry of his Word in this large city. Nearly a month ago we erected the capacious tent which Dr. Pentecost used here with such marked success. Our esteemed brother kindly granted me the use of this famous canvas house, and very near the same site it has been re-erected. I have given more than forty addresses in the city during the month, and week by week the interest has spread through the community. The lectures have been attended by hundreds of the students who go to the various colleges, and an aggregate of from 15,000 to 18,000 persons have heard the twenty-two addresses given on the esplanade. Fully one-half have been from amongst the educated natives, and the exhibition of Christ has been signally owned of God.

The latest meetings at the tent were simply wonderful. At one of these, many hundreds bore their testimony to Christ as their Redeemer, Lord, and King. All classes have attended the meetings. Civil and military, Europeans, Hindus, Eurasians, and Mohammedans. I believe backsliders have been restored, whilst many believers have been revived and afresh furnished with living and vital truths. Many careless ones have been aroused, and we have seen in measure the fulfilment of the Word, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto Me." Oh, for power to exalt the Christ! This is India's greatest need.

On the closing day I met as inquirers thirty of the students, and fully forty the following Friday. As an illustration of the interest taken by the natives, I may add that a leading Hindu, who has a large business in the city, supplied us in the tent with a very handsome chandelier (two of which, by an unfortunate accident, fell and were smashed), lamps, oil, and attendants for the whole mission. On the closing day I asked for the account. This gentleman writes: "In token of my sympathy and appreciation of the great and glorious work you are engaged in, and for the interesting addresses you have delivered here, to which several of my fellow-countrymen and co-religionists, including myself, have listened with much attention, you will permit me to make no charge for the little I have been able to do in assisting your mission."

I rejoice that quite a number of students are impressed with a deep sense of sin and the power of the Word of God, and they are shaken utterly as to any confidence in the idolatries which have been and are common. I ask fervent prayer from our fellow-believers in England in regard to them and to this deeply interesting work.

When at the closing meeting I intimated that I believed it to be the Divine will that I should go to England for the summer, and return by the end of October for a long season in India, taking Calcutta, Madras, and other cities, the enthusiasm was very great. Asking if any present would like to send greeting to Dr. Pentecost, whom I expected to see in London, hundreds held up their hands.

It is singular that my intention to visit Calcutta first has not been attained. The interest in Bombay, Poona, Kohlipur, Bangalore, and Madras has been so real that I could not hurry the work. The summer is upon us, and it is too late to take Calcutta before my return to England. I expect to arrive in England by the end of April. My purpose is six months of ardent campaigning in the dear old land, and then return to Calcutta.

I am just returned to Bangalore for a final ten days' mission ere I embark for London. There is a sound of blessing. Twenty-two last night confessed Christ. Brethren, pray for us in this great harvest field.

Yours faithfully,

Henry Varley.

INDIAN SOLDIERS' TEMPERANCE.

Dear Sir,—It may interest your many readers to know that the membership in the Army Temperance Association, India, on March 1, 1893, reached the highest total ever recorded, 20,111, all total abstainers. Considering that the strength of the British forces serving in India is about 68,000, the proportion of total abstainers is very high. During the present trooping season we have been very successful in our work among the men of the drafts coming out to India.

Excellent work has been done at Kurachi and Deolali, the trooping depots, as well as in every corps when drafts have arrived. The Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders head our "order of merit" with a membership of 519, and there are twenty-two battalions with over 300 members. We are obtaining a firmer hold of the men in the cavalry regiments; the 16th Lancers stand first with 243 members. In the 71st Field Battery there are 105 abstainers out of a total strength of 160, and in the 5th Western, Garrison Battery, 106 out of a strength of 150.

At Singapore, where intoxicating drinks are cheap and very injurious, there are 130 Artillerymen who are abstainers out of a total strength of 200. The number of our military branches is 179. During the winter I am visiting all our branches in continental India. On every hand the work prospers. Our next aim is to secure 30,000 members.

Yours faithfully,

J. H. Bateson, General Secretary A.T.C.

Simla.

FROM THE NIZAM'S COUNTRY.

In company with Dr. W. H. L. Balstone and three native Christians I have been going over the way we travelled. Then we were everywhere surprised to find a people so simple-minded and accessible, yet unreached by the Gospel. We were recognised, and more gladly heard this year than last. It is not possible to tell the encouragements that beckon toward a speedy effort to evangelise these poor aborigines.

Dr. Balstone goes to Jugdulpur to open a medical mission. At least three more doctors or medical missionaries must follow, and a score of other workers for other efforts are wanted. Preachers, teachers, a few ladies, and native helpers will find here a wide-open door for soul-saving work. Judging from what we have seen of these humble Koiwans in the last six years, we incline to the opinion that long-armed efforts will not yield any great results. But let missionaries and devoted native helpers settle down among them, identify themselves fully with their simple life, and preach and exhort with all long-suffering, and we feel sure great results will be seen in the Christianising of these people.

Divided into four dialectic sections, these Koiwans in the Nizam's dominions, the Godavery Valley and Bastar, number about 400,000. Among them are 100,000 low-class Hindus, mostly unbinduised, and just as accessible as the Kois. It is an amazing field. We have now at work five native preachers, and myself with Dr. Balstone are on the ground with our families. We are at work under circumstances of the most promising sort. We assuredly expect a great ingathering of souls soon.

God has raised up some friends in America and some in India to help forward this good work. One Christian brother in India sent us Rs.500 for the opening of a mission work at Sironcha, on the banks of the Godavery River, in British territory—a splendid centre from which to work up and down the river, both sides, and on the frontier of Bastar. Sironcha is a little less than half-way from our headquarters, Yellandu, and the capital of Bastar in our Gospel highway. We have just stationed as we came along two of our best native preachers there. Within fifteen miles they have 10,000 accessible low-class Hindus and Kois, who have been begging us to come to them for two years.

Step by step God is leading us to these long-unvisited denizens of forest and hill. Their plaintive cry for help calls loudly to us to come over and help them now. We specially ask the prayerful and practical sympathy of Christians in England. Either Dr. Balstone or myself will be glad to answer any queries about this great open door.

MISSION TO LEPERS.

The annual meeting of the Mission to Lepers in India, henceforward to be known as "The Mission to Lepers in India and the East," was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on Thursday, March 30, and marks an important epoch in the history of the society.

The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. J. Elder Cumming, D.D., after which the secretary and superintendent, Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, presented the report and abstract of accounts for the past year. There was a bright ring about both those documents. More baptisms than ever before are recorded; many more suffering lepers received; new work begun in several places; the Lord had graciously supplied the needed funds for all.

The adoption of the report and re-election of office-bearers was moved in a speech of high tone by Dr. E. Sargood Fry, the new superintendent of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. He said this work among the lepers is one which exemplifies in the most beautiful degree the very essence of Christianity itself. Rev. John Sloan, in seconding, said he had seen the pitiable condition of the lepers at Rangoon, and he urged that the Mission to Lepers should be put in funds to commence work there, where there is much need, and where a resident of the place has offered a gift of twenty acres of land as a site for an asylum.

The second resolution, moved by the chairman, Mr. J. Campbell White, of Overtoun, in an earnest and telling speech, was as follows:—

That inasmuch as the Mission to Lepers in India have now extended their operations to China and Japan, the title of the Society be for the future "The Mission to Lepers in India and the East," and that steps be immediately taken to increase the income of the society.

The resolution was seconded by Professor Lindsay, Convener of the Foreign Mission Committee of the Free Church of Scotland. He said it seemed to him, from a knowledge of Christian work in past centuries, that work amongst the lepers might be almost taken as a thermometer to gauge the evangelistic spirit of the Church. One required to be acquainted somewhat intimately with the history of mediæval revivals to know that whenever God sent abroad a revival of religion in the Middle Ages, somehow or other He put it into the minds of Christians to tend the lepers. It was, he believed, by means of Christian self-denying work that leprosy was banished out of Europe. The Mission to the Lepers was doing as noble a work in India as any agency he knew of.

The society now works in thirty-six different centres in India, Burma, Ceylon, and China, and has made a grant of £200 towards the erection of a home for lepers near Kumamoto, Isle of Kiushiu, Japan. Since the report was prepared appeals have come for help in Central India, Rangoon, and Hankow, Central China, the latter appeal being signed by Rev. Dr. Griffith John and the other missionaries of the London Missionary Society in the district.

CRUMBS OF COMFORT.

"When He giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?"

Job spake from experience. His was not the testimony of one who knew nothing about it! Troubles and calamities had followed fast on his heels, and one by one earthly joys and comforts had fled. Trusted friends, and even the wife of his bosom, had turned against him in the hour of his affliction, and had bade him "curse God and die." Yet from the midst of all this the brave lips utter words which may well be as an anchor to our souls when we, too, are battling in the floods of adversity.

Quietness! When the flocks and herds are gone from the stall? Yes, for "the cattle upon a thousand hills are the Lord's." Quietness! When thy sons and daughters are laid low? Yes, for "the Lord gave and the Lord taketh away," and who knoweth from what dangers and temptations they are saved thereby? Quietness! When every bone and sinew and joint is racked and tortured with agony? Yes, for "He giveth quietness, Who knoweth our frame, and remembereth that we are dust?"

Who can make trouble when God draws near to comfort? What can disturb the quietness over which He has breathed his "Peace, be still"?

Mildred Foss.

THE MALAGASY SLAVE.

Dear Sir,—Your young and other readers who so kindly contributed money for freeing the young Malagasy slave, Rajàmarla (or Mr. Jam), will be glad to know that the negotiations were undertaken by that excellent native pastor, Andrianaivoravèlona (often deservedly called the Malagasy Spurgeon), during February last, at Miss Bliss's request. He has managed many a similar piece of business before, and will see that all the proper formalities are observed.

In a letter from Miss Bliss, dated Ambohimanga, Feb. 15, she writes:—"Nobody sends me The Christian, and I only see an odd number sometimes. So I have not seen Penelle's appeal in it. I am delighted though to hear that there is a chance of setting the dear boy free. I have several times wished that it could be done. I wonder whether the balance (should there be any) may be a nest-egg ready for freeing his sister; she seems such a nice girl, and professed conversion recently."

The "odd numbers" of The Christian that find their way to Miss Bliss are made good use of, for on Sunday evening she gathers about her a few preachers who have learnt a little English, and reads to them articles from The Christian, translating what they do not understand and talking the subject over as they go on. It is very helpful and very interesting. The sister Miss Bliss refers to is Rajàmarla's only sister, and is about a year younger. She is an intelligent girl, and was for some years in our girls' day school. Miss Bliss's address for postal packets, etc., is Ambohimanga, Madagascar, viâ Marseilles.

Yours, very truly,

Edinburgh, March 30. A. P. Peill.

A VISITOR'S VALEDICTORY.

Dear Sir,—On my approaching return to my native land, I should be much obliged if you would allow me to convey, through your columns, my best thanks for all the kindness shown to me during my five months' stay in England. I left Madras as the delegate of the Indian Christians of that place, to plead with our fellow-subjects in England for protection from the curse of the opium habit, owing to the open way in which opium is sold in bazaars, much as if it were an ordinary article of diet. This has unquestionably led to the increase of this pernicious vice, for the habit originated in the Government licensed opium dens, when they are closed will, I fear, be carried into the homes in private, and thus, unless stringent measures are taken to restrict the sale to medical purposes, the habit must increase, owing to the present facilities for obtaining this poisonous drug.

I can only earnestly hope and pray that Sir Mark Stewart's motion for the sale of opium in India and the Crown Colonies being restricted by legislative enactments, similar to those in force in this country, may be carried. My countrymen will then see that the benign rule of our gracious Queen-Empress has been extended to opium, for unless something is done, and done soon, an amount of injury, moral and physical, will be inflicted which it is difficult to imagine.

This visit to England has convinced me that what we in India thought and feared was indifference is, in reality, ignorance of the subject, owing to the way in which many of those capable of speaking on it have withheld their testimony. Now I feel it is all changed, and this great question cannot be set aside until it is settled in the light of simple justice to those who, like yourselves, are fellow-subjects of our Queen.

I would also take this opportunity of expressing my grateful thanks to all who in this country are interesting themselves in the work in the zenanas in India, as it is to this branch of Christian work I am, under God's goodness, indebted for all that I know of Jesus as my only Saviour, and all the joy He has given me in working for the advancement of his kingdom, and the removal of all obstacles in the spread of that blessed Gospel which has brought joy and peace into my heart. I shall return to my native land greatly encouraged by the thought that many in this land are, by prayer, holding up my hands in my humble work for Christ among the outcasts (pariahs) of my city.

Your grateful fellow labourer,

W. Raju Naidu.

London, April 3.

FROM MRS. McKITTRICK, BALOLO.

My Dear Friend,—We arrived at this place, the upper end of the Cataract region, a fortnight ago, and are now waiting for a steamer to convey us to the Lolanga River. The land journey is necessarily a trying one, particularly at this season of the year, but our Guide has been with us every step of the way; and in spite of a few fevers and other inconveniences we are all here to-day in good health, rejoicing in the loving care and manifested presence of the Saviour. Prayer has been answered on our behalf, and we want through you to lay before the readers of The Christian our special need of continued earnest prayer.

The Lord is trying our faith just now in the loss of some of our fellow-missionaries, and by the imminent danger in which others are placed. Since we left England early in November three of our number have been called home to God. Mrs. Todd, wife of one of our pioneer missionaries, who has lived and laboured devotedly at Lolanga station, where she will be missed by the thousands who more or less came under the influence of her loving Christianity. Mrs. Haupt, who, a few days after her arrival at Ikau, was called to nurse her husband through a dangerous hematuric fever. He recovered, but two days after she fell ill herself, and is now among those who have passed on before. She will be mourned not only in her Irish home, but by many friends in the East-end of London, as well as all those out here, black and white, who had the privilege of knowing her. Our dear friend Mr. Scarnell is the third who in this short space of time has laid down his life for Christ on the Congo. He had been out nearly three years, and was in sole charge of Bongandanga Station, during the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Cole, when attacked by the fever which has ended for him so gloriously, but for us so sorrowfully.

These are gone from us to our Father's house, and the latest report from up river informs us that the natives of Basa Nkosu, in which district our Ikau Station is situated, have killed two State officials, and the lives of our beloved brethren and sisters there are in great danger. One of them wrote to me that they are being kept in perfect peace during this troublous time. Thank God we know what it is to be living in the shadow of his hand.

At each of our stations now on the upper river and here at Stanley Pool, there are hallowed spots where we have laid those who have finished their course to rest "until the day break." We who remain long that Christ may be magnified in us, whether living or dying, and that men and women who count not their lives dear unto them may be sent out to this stronghold of heathendom as ambassadors of the Lord Jesus Christ.

These few words will serve to show you how my return to the Congo has been saddened; but, praise God, we have abundant cause for joy in the spiritual blessing we hear of in many places. A week ago we had the privilege of seeing four young people baptized by Dr. Sims in the waters of Stanley Pool, and at every station we have passed we have seen proofs that the Gospel of Jesus is exercising its saving and transforming power on these dark Africans.

With kind regards, yours in Christian service,

F. Theodora McKittrick.

THE SCANDINAVIAN TEMPERANCE HOME report shows that during the past year there have been held in the Home 364 Gospel meetings, 52 Gospel Temperance meetings, and about 200 Bible-classes and prayer meetings. Out of the Destitute Seamen's Fund no fewer than 204 men were helped with clothing. During the year some 300 men were granted free night's lodging at the Salvation Army Shelter near the Home. Six hundred and twenty bookbags, all well filled and nicely trimmed, were given away during he year. The report may be had of Mrs. Welin, Temperance Home, West India Docks, E

ORPHANS IN JAPAN.—Mr. Ishii and his associates in the orphan asylum at Okayama have passed through a trying experience of late. Funds have been low, barely enough coming in day by day to feed those 194 children. But their faith fails not and needy as they are they have organised a missionary society to pray and give for work in other lands. The older children are formed into a Salvation Army, and with bugles and tracts, songs and speeches, have witnessed the good confession before crowds of people.—N. Y. Independent.

Letters to the Editor.

BISHOPS, PRIESTS, AND DEACONS.

Sir,—In your issue of 23rd ult., Mr. Edward Maxwell replies to a question in Mr. James E. Mathieson's letter in The Christian of March 16. But, as I understand that letter as a whole, the reply, as I think, is insufficient.

Mr. Mathieson does not deny that "deacons and bishops or elders," in other words two ministerial orders "had been recognised from the Apostles' time," which view is in accordance with the New Testament and with at least the first hundred years of Christian antiquity. Nor does he, as he says, "quarrel with episcopacy if the bishops in their rule and manner of living are in accordance with Scriptural simplicity." What I understand him essentially to protest against, is that clerical "official priesthood," whose exclusive and intolerant advocates amongst Anglicans have assumed an "untenable position in attempting to unchurch believers who refuse to acknowledge" such an unscriptural caste, with its usurpations, its spiritual despotism, and its unwarrantable denial of the validity of non-episcopal orders, sacraments, and marriages.

"Bishop Lightfoot points out that the sacerdotal functions and privileges, which alone are mentioned in the apostolic writings, pertain to all believers alike, and do not refer solely or specially to the ministerial office."..."The primitive conception of the Christian Church," he adds, "was supplanted by this sacerdotal view of the ministry, of which no distinct traces are visible in the ages immediately after the Apostles."—On "The Christian Ministry" (7th ed., pp. 244-246). The claims of those ultra episcopalians are based on an assertion that an episcopate of three orders, bishops, priests (or presbyters writ short), and deacons was constituted by our Lord and his Apostles, and that an uninterrupted succession of bishops distinct from and superior to presbyters or elders, but historically unproveable, has been perpetuated from the days of the Apostles to our own days, and forms a vital and indispensable element in the validity of Christian orders, and even in salvation. Now, if it be indeed a fact, that such a form of government was ordained of God in the days of our Lord or of his Apostles; if the Divine head of the Christian Church really demanded that no other form was to be allowable until his second coming for the constitution of a true Christian Church; if any form was appointed by Him as exclusively lawful, and as absolutely necessary for salvation, then it unavoidably follows, that:—

1. As in the case of the Jewish Church, its priesthood, its symbolic tabernacle, sacrifices, ceremonies, and observances pointing to Christ and his unshareable prerogatives and atoning work of redemption, God gave a pattern unto Moses, with the express injunction:—"Look that thou make them after their pattern which was shewed thee in the mount" (Ex. xxv. 40, xxvi. 30; Acts vii. 44; Heb. viii. 1-5), so also to warrant so-called "Church principles" on which the hierarchical scheme of the sacerdotal and ultra episcopalians rests, the Divine pattern (if there be one) for the Christian Churches, their ministry, ceremonies, and modes of worship, a pattern complete in all its parts in the day of our Lord and his Apostles, must be pointed out in the New Testament.

2. From such a divine pattern no deviation whatever, no addition, no diminution, could possibly be allowed. To do so would be the worst sacrilege, the most sinful presumption.

3. But, as no such divine pattern can be shown in the New Testament, the claims of the Greek Church, the Roman Catholic Church, or of any other church, or of certain Anglo-Catholics in the Church of England, but contradicting her principles and her teaching, are absolutely without any adequate foundation.

Moreover, those two churches and those Anglo-Catholics have not even adhered to the most ancient models adopted from convenience and expediency by the earliest churches, with Holy Scripture, and not human tradition, nor usurping "Church authority," as their supreme rule of faith and practice.

For instance, as Bishop Lightfoot remarks of deacons. He "assumes that the office" of the "seven men of honest report" in Acts vi. 1—6 "represents the later diaconate." "The work primarily assigned to the deacons," he points out, "was the relief of the poor. Their office was essentially a 'serving of tables,' as distinguished from the higher function of preaching and instruction. But" (not in obedience to any divine pattern, but) "partly from the circumstances of their position, partly from the personal character of those first appointed, the deacons at once assumed a prominence which is not indicated in the original creation of the office." Elsewhere he remarks that the functions of "the later diaconate" are (not identical with, but) "substantially those which devolved on the deacons of the earliest ages, and which still in theory, though not altogether in practice, form the primary duties of the office."—Ibid., pp. 187—190.

Archbishop Whately, in showing the extreme church system with its imperative succession of bishops (rather than a succession of pure Gospel doctrines) and its unalterable "church principles," consistently and logically unchurches every episcopal and every other church on earth, remarks that, amongst other things, the apostolic "order of deaconesses regularly appointed to particular functions in the earliest churches" has been discontinued, "and their deacons appear to have had an office considerably different from those of our own church." He shows differences in the case of bishops. For instance, "A church and a diocese seem to have been for a considerable time coextensive and identical."

Now, whilst our Evangelical and Protestant churches are at perfect liberty, on their own responsibility, to adopt on good grounds alterations or additions "not at variance with any apostolical injunctions, or with any Gospel principle," this he forcibly says "is a question which cannot even be entertained by those who hold that no church is competent to vary at all from the ancient model. Their principle would go to exclude at once from the pale of Christ's Church almost every Christian body since the first two or three centuries."—"The Kingdom of Christ," 6th ed., pp. 137-141. H. A.

MISSIONARY SUPPORT.

Dear Sir,—I was pleased to read in your columns of Jan. 26 the letter of Mr. Arnold Foster respecting the cheapness of missions, because I believe he expresses the opinions of many missionaries who refrain from making public their sentiments on this question from a fear of fostering the idea in the minds of some of the opponents of Christianity, that many men enter the mission field only from mercenary motives.

I know the cheapness of living in a foreign country is often painted in very roseate hues by speakers from public platforms and other places, but I think if some of those would make a practical experiment of the theory they wish to inculcate in the minds of the enthusiastic and uninitiated Christian, they would admit that the position resulting from such a procedure had not much couleur de rose in it.

Of course, in nearly all cases the pay is quite enough to provide for the food of the body, and just a few other necessary expenses; but is that sufficient? Should the reason and intellect be starved? Assuming that everything be consecrated to the Lord, surely the man with his mind stored with the treasures culled from our best writers is not less efficient for carrying on the Master's work than he whose mind has become dwarfed and stunted from lack of proper pabulum. The purchase of new books is a large item in a missionary's expenditure, and a fair allowance for that purpose ought always to be considered in determining his income.

In looking through your paper, for instance, how many of us have to be contented with just reading the titles of the books, while our souls are earnestly longing to gather some of the pearls which are to be found in the perusal of their pages. Perhaps in isolated stations the want of books is most felt. I wonder how many of your readers at home have one volume out of their abundance that they could easily spare for the benefit of their less fortunate brethren. As literature is scarce here, I for one should deem it a favour and a blessing if any so minded would send me a spare volume or two.

Yours, etc.,
F. W. Savidge.

DR. SAPHIR'S BOOKS.

Sir,—A few weeks since you stated that a fund had been opened for the purchase and distribution of the works of the late Dr. Saphir among students and ministers. I applied to the secretary, and have received a copy of Dr. Saphir's latest published book, "The Divine Unity of Scripture." It is a splendid work, and just the thing for circulating as an antidote to the literature of the so-called "higher criticism."

With my small income I could not have purchased this book, and my object in writing is to call attention to this fund. I most earnestly ask those who have the means to subscribe, so that these invaluable works may be distributed throughout the land. The hon. secretary of the committee is Mr. C. E. Greenwood, Elim, Coper's Cope-road, Beckenham, S.E., and the hon. treasurer, Mr. Richard H. Hill, 3, Lombard-court, Lombard-street, E.C.

Yours sincerely,
A Grateful Recipient.

THE BOLTON CORPORATION, being of opinion that the Factory Acts apply to public-houses, has decided to restrict the hours of barmaids to 74 a week.

MANCHESTER REFUGES.

The annual meeting of the Boys' and Girls' Refuges, Strangeways, Manchester, was held last week in the Mayor's Parlour, at the Town Hall. The report, read by Mr. L. K. Shaw, showed progress in many departments. By means of these various branches the institution had received and dealt with a total number of 2,105 children in various degrees of need and suffering during the year. In addition to these, the number of cases investigated and children protected by the Prevention of Cruelty to Children branch was 375, involving the welfare of 1324 children. The Open-all-night Shelter had received during the year, for longer or shorter periods, 368 little wanderers, no less than 109 of whom were brought in between ten o'clock at night and four o'clock in the morning. The beds at this shelter were occupied 1962 times, and the number of meals provided was 5861. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children carried 40 cases out of 375 into court, and obtained convictions in no less than 37. The punishment ranged from one to fifteen months.

In connection with this branch the report proceeded:—"Our subscribers and the public generally will be glad to know that the committee are taking the most vigorous steps to carry out the provisions of the Act of 1889—first, in preventing the cruelty, and, secondly, in punishing with all the sternness the law allows those who commit it. Our officers are constantly on the alert; they are daily in communication with the police authorities of both city and borough, whose sympathy and co-operation we very thankfully acknowledge. As Manchester was one of the first cities, now over twelve years ago, to seek by legal enactment to ameliorate the condition of her poorest children, so she continues to-day one of the most active workers in the same cause. In this connection we may mention that we have been urging on the authorities the importance of regulating juvenile street-hawking. It is an evil under any conditions, but while allowed by law we believe the evils attending it may be minimised by requiring that each juvenile so occupied should be registered, and carry a licence or badge (revocable at any time for misconduct) showing that such young person is physically and morally suitable for this dangerous calling." The report contained several letters from children who have been emigrated during the past few years. In regard to finances the report says:—"The total cost of a work so large and so varied is of course considerable; it amounts to £12,858 16s. 2d. At the same time we are bound to tell our readers that the total income has only reached £12,319 4s. 7d. Consequently with the debit balance brought forward from 1891 there was a deficiency at the year's close of £1265 2s. 10d.

Addresses followed by the Mayor of Manchester, the Dean of Manchester, Messrs. Henry Lee, F. Platt-Higgins, H. B. Harrison, and others.

MR. H. COOK'S GOSPEL SHIPS.

The new steam mission schooner has made her first tour among light-ship crews in the English Channel. The lonely watchers on board these vessels gave us a hearty welcome. So long away from home and friends, the dear fellows were delighted to see us on our voyage up from Devon, where we had been holding consecration services.

A lady deeply interested in the work, hearing that a friend had kindly advanced £500 to meet present liabilities, has generously offered to give £250 towards clearing this, provided I can raise £250 by June 1st. One friend has given me the first £5, and another has promised £50. May I ask the Lord's people to enable me to clear off this debt, and thus be free? Our work now needs prayerful and practical sympathy, as we are in great need of help to continue the work on the coasts of England and France in our two Gospel ships. The Herald of Mercy has been on the West Coast of England since Christmas, and some very cheering times have been realised on board in the conversion of several fishermen, Brother Perry being the evangelist. We are now among the fishing fleet from Lowestoft at Plymouth, where we are hailed with great pleasure among the fishermen. Our next port will be at Penzance, and afterwards in Cornwall. Gifts of Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel books; also comforters, overalls, and bags for books and papers will be very welcome.

Henry Cook.

EAST END THEATRICALS.—On Good Friday in Shoreditch the usual social gathering of those employed in connection with East End theatres was held. Words of valuable counsel were addressed to those present by Mr. George Williams, the host, and other friends.

The Book World.

Seven Lamps of Fire; or, The Seven-fold Gift of the Holy Ghost, is a thoughtful and instructive essay, by Rev. Philip Norton, of Worcester. (1s. Nisbet.)

Thoughts on Elijah. By Pastor O. Stockmayer. (6d. "Christian Herald" Office.) Seventeen lucid and spiritual Bible-readings, translated from the German. There is precious teaching on every page.

The Sunday-school Teacher's Bible Manual is a new serial issued by Cassell & Co. It is in the form of an encyclopædia, and seems to have been compiled with much care. The work is to be completed in twelve parts (6d. each), the first of which, just issued, carries the student as far as the name "Azariah."

The Biblical Doctrine of Sin. By J. S. Candlish, D.D. (1s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) This is a valuable addition to the "Handbooks for Bible Classes" series. In twelve chapters, Professor Candlish opens up a great theme, and shows that Scripture and experience are in perfect agreement. The book is scholarly and simple, and should prove of great service to students and thoughtful readers.

Vaughan Persey. By Helen Bristow (C. H. Kelly). A story with a purpose. A young man, hoping to help the villagers morally, opens a "Sunday Recreation Hall" for them. He finds at length that its effects tend to atheism. The pain and sorrow of this discovery lead to his own conversion, the closing of the hall on the Lord's Day, followed by earnest labour to undo the ill he feels he has done.

The New Art of Healing; or, the Relation between the Principles of Voice Production and Health. By Rev. J. P. Sandlands, M.A., vicar of Brigstock. A useful little volume from the pen of one who has been very successful in treating "clergymen's sore throat." He holds the cultivation or neglect of the voice to have an important bearing upon the general health. (Marshall Brothers.)

El Sonador. By the Countess de Gasparin. (3fr. 50c. Paris: Calmann Levy, 3, Rue Auber.) The accomplished "dreamer" is kindly affectioned towards Spain; hence the title of her volume of French poems. The pages enshrine lofty thoughts chastely expressed. The Cenci tragedy is the subject of some lines, and an engraving of Beatrice, from Guido's famous painting, forms a frontispiece of the volume.

Led from Darkness: The History of a Life Struggle, is another vivacious little volume from the pen of Pastor H. E. Stone. Agatha Newman escaped from Roman Catholic bondage to the liberty of Christ. The pages illustrate the "wheels within wheels" of the Ritualistic propaganda; and, in detailing the experiences of a country Baptist pastor, introduce us to deacons of various types, some of them decidedly mean and unlovely. (2s. Marlborough & Co.)

Who are Israel? By Mrs. Stevenson. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) The author sees no future for Jews or Israelites, save that of absorption into the Church, and argues that no national restoration to the land of Palestine is promised. Consequently, there can be no Coming King in any personal sense; the "blessed hope" cherished ardently by tens of thousands of God's choicest saints fades away, and the predictions of prophet, apostle, and seer must be explained as merely poetic expressions for spiritual blessing. We need scarcely remark that our own study of Scripture leads us to a very different conclusion.

My Mission Tour in South Africa: By Rev. Thomas Cook. (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) This devoted evangelist, having recently completed a six months' tour in South Africa, with the result that more than 6000 persons professed conversion, has felt it right to publish the story, avowedly in order to stir up others to enter what he is fully convinced is a fruitful field. He argues strongly the value of preaching to the natives through interpreters, and gives many interesting illustrations of the blessing which attended the Gospel thus set forth by one unfamiliar with the native tongue. Both among colonists and Kaffirs there seems to be abundant entrance for the good news. The book will be read with great interest, and will doubtless lead others to offer themselves for similar service.

The Fall of Adam. By Rev. Stephen Shepherd Maguth, LL.D. A treatise demonstrating evil in its origin to have been the resultant of natural law, under circumstances which were peculiar to the Edenic Period of Time. Two vols. large 8vo. (Digby Long & Co.) We are assured by the author that "Now for the first time in the history of the incarnation of man upon this earth has the Holy Spirit of Inspiration revealed in the world, through me, the true nature of the Fall of Edenic man." "I claim, then, under the guiding inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, to have given to the world in this treatise, the true and only solution of that ancient mystery, and of its relation both to God and to man." To us the inspiration seems much more than questionable. It contradicts Scripture, burlesques the narratives of our Lord's temptation, denies the existence of the devil, and substitutes for the Bible narrative of the Fall a supposition which we regard as improbable, unnatural, and revolting.

The liberty of choosing those parts of Scripture which suit his theory and rejecting those which are opposed to it, is exercised without stint, and the result is a revised Bible, a revised history of man, and a revised theology, concerning which we can only say that the old is a great deal better.

Found Out! is a bright and useful address to boys and girls, by E. C. Millard, of Rev. G. C. Grubb's Mission. (1d. Marlborough and Co.)

The Hinderer and Daniel's Seventieth Week, by R. Eyles, is a prophetical study on what are called "futurist" lines. (2d. J. E. Hawkins).

Jehovah Titles. By James Sprunt (1s. Stoneman.) This suggestive little book has reached a second edition. It conveys much spiritual teaching.

Evolution or Special Creation.—Which? By the author of "Haste to the Rescue." (6d. Nisbet.) This is not a scientific thesis, but "a word in season for Christians." It is a simple and cogent argument.

Light at Last; or, From Rome to the Gospel, is a very readable booklet, translated from the French, giving the story of one who, by the grace of God, was delivered from the thraldom of Romanism. (1½d. George Stoneman.)

What the Prophetic Scriptures Teach Concerning the Antichrist and the Second Advent is a useful outline from the pen of Mrs. Alfred Packman. It is a reverent endeavour to unfold Scripture predictions. (1s. Partridge.)

The Bristol Gospel Books, envelope size, are well suited for general distribution. The series includes ten booklets. Sample packets may be had for 7d., post free, from H. A. Burleigh, Gordon House, Tyndall's Park-road, Bristol.

Messrs. Bemrose & Sons have issued, in booklet form, with the title Spirit, Soul, and Body, a forcible sermon, based on 1 Thess. v. 23, by Archdeacon Sinclair, preached three months ago at Derby, on the occasion of the opening of the new Y.M.C.A. buildings.

The Lord's Coming. A few hints to the children of God. By Mrs. M. Baxter. A revised and enlarged edition of this useful little book is very welcome. Mrs. Baxter is a clear and sober exponent of the prophetic Scriptures. (3d. "Christian Herald" Office.)

Exposure of Popery is the title of a very useful publication, by Rev. J. F. Ullmann, missionary at Dehra Dun, N.W.P. It is a translation with additions of a work by the same author in Hindustani, and should prove of real service in India. (4 annas. Rev. A. W. Prautch, Thana, Bombay.)

The Helps to the Study of the Bible, which are appended to the Oxford Bible for Teachers, have undergone complete revision, and many important and valuable new features have been introduced. The minion crown 8vo size, on India paper and on ordinary printing paper, will be ready early in May, and the other sizes will follow somewhat later.

Baptismal Regeneration; the Fundamental Error of Christendom. An address by T. W. Moore, LL.D. ("Christian Commonwealth" Publishing Co.) An instructive, closely-reasoned pamphlet, setting forth the danger of extremes, baptismal regeneration on the one hand, and indifference in regard to the baptismal ordinance on the other; and urging an unquestioning obedience to Christ's command as simply and loyally construed.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A "Spurgeon Memorial" Baptist Temple is to be erected in Leith.

The Church of Scotland Women's Guild has a membership of 14,000.

The Aged Christian Friend Society of Scotland has seventy pensioners on its roll.

Just now (says The Dundee Advertiser) the sunshine and the drought combined are giving a seedtime according to the farmer's own heart. The land was never so easy to work, and the March dust never so abundant.

A bazaar at Kirkcaldy, in connection with the Provost Swan Memorial and Y.M.C.A. Buildings, has been highly satisfactory, over £600 having been realised. This completes the sum required for the buildings, £3000.

At the annual meeting of the Perth City Mission, it was stated that many of the houses occupied by the poor classes were unsuitable for family life. No greater boon could be conferred on Perth than the clearing out of old tenements unsuitable for human habitation, and leaving open spaces for air, exercise, and recreation. From overcrowding, bad air, and general insanitary surroundings, evils of all kinds proceeded.

The Great St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, was crowded last week to hear an address by Dr. Harry Guinness on "The Dark Continent." The doctor carried his large audience to far up the Congo, and his clear description and many little incidents related made the lecture most pleasing. The illustrative limelight views were from photographs taken by himself in the interior. He also narrated the life of the missionaries, and the customs and the manners of the people amongst whom they were working.

THE BIBLE FLOWER MISSION, Mildmay Park, hopes to re-open its mission on Tuesday, April 25, and the workers will be grateful for gifts of flowers, with clearly-written and carefully-selected text-cards, suitable for hospitals and workhouses. Parcels should be addressed to Deaconess House, Mildmay Park, London, N.

THE Y.M.C.A.

A Convention on college Y.M.C.A. work has been held at Saratoga.

In South Carolina the Y.M.C.A. report encouraging progress during the past year.

The recent Kentucky convention showed twenty-two associations, with 2,271 members.

In Kansas City the membership roll now records 839 members, while the average attendance at Gospel meetings is 105.

Belfast Y.M.C.A. has a roll of over 2000 members, and carries on a large amount of Gospel work in the city and neighbourhood.

At Kaukauna Song Services have been followed with good success. Twenty minutes of singing and ten minutes of straight Gospel talk win close attention.

The North-East Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s, with Aldersgate-street as a centre, is contemplating the appointment of an evening travelling secretary.

At the annual meeting of the Kingston and Surbiton Association, the new secretary, Mr. A. Hill, was warmly welcomed, and cheering details were given of the work generally.

The Arbroath Association are making a splendid use of their new premises in all departments of their work, the Bible-classes and evangelistic work evidently leading the way.

At Montrose, as a result of a social of over two hundred young fellows, a class of about a hundred juniors, which has been in existence separately for some time, was organised as a branch of the Y.M.C.A.

The Elgin, Ill., Association has just received a gift of twenty-four lots in that city from Mr. G. P. Lord, who has already contributed generously to the work of the Association. These lots are considered to be worth £5,000.

The Glasgow Y.M.C.A. Evangelisation Committee have begun evangelistic services in the Drygate Corporation lodging-house. This makes the ninth "Home" in which services are carried on under the Association's auspices.

An encouraging account is to hand of the work of the nine Associations that have been established in Russia, and two others in course of formation. There are between six and seven hundred active members, and double the number of associates.

The Glasgow Association has at present under consideration suggestions for holiday tours and camps for members of the Associations. Two proposals are in the meantime put forward—a walking tour in the English Lake district, and a Y.M.C.A. camp at Keswick during the following week.

In Minnesota the State committee has done excellent work among the woodsmen, among the young men in small towns and country places, in college work, in district work as well as in the other lines undertaken, especially in the student vacation movement, when seventy young men spent their Christmas holidays in working for the Master in various small towns.

Mr. McCann, missionary secretary, sent out last October by the English National Council, has taken a second extensive tour amongst the towns of the Bombay presidency, helping forward existing work for young men, and, where possible, inaugurating fresh effort in their behalf. The annual meeting of the Bombay Y.M.C.A. was recently held. The gross membership numbers no fewer than 570, and the receipts more than cover the expenditure.

Intelligence has come to hand respecting the Y.M.C.A. at Hobart, Tasmania, where Mr. Herbert Fairfax, late of Brisbane, has become general secretary. The work is chiefly spiritual, and is carried on by a young and energetic band of workers, whose mission efforts have recently been greatly owned of God. Y.M.C.A. and other literature from sympathetic friends at home is appealed for by Mr. Fairfax.

Representatives of the Banks, University, Civil Service, Lawyers', and other Prayer Unions, met in large numbers for conference under the auspices of the National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s at Exeter Hall on March 27th. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes opened what proved to be a very practical and useful discussion upon the subject, "Class Distinctions in Religious Work." He was followed by several speakers, including Archdeacon Sinclair, who presided ever the conference.

TRAM AND 'BUS MEN.—An interesting meeting of the men connected with the tram and 'bus yards of North London was held on Tuesday last in St. James' Lecture Hall, Holloway. After tea stirring addresses were also given by various City missionaries. Mr. J. Barber Glenn, of the Street Tramways Company, also spoke a few words of encouragement, urging the men to be sober and thrifty and to avoid gambling, which led so many men from the path of rectitude.

Evangelistic Notes.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey, having completed their campaign in Baltimore, proceeded next to Charlotte and Wilmington, N.C.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has just concluded a ten days' mission at Brunswick Chapel, Swansea. The services were well attended and very successful in results.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a seven days' mission at the Congregational Church, Holbeach, Lincolnshire (Rev. J. E. Whittaker, pastor), which has been very encouraging.

Glasgow.—Mr. W. A. Campbell is holding special evangelistic services in London-road Free Church, Bridgeton. The working classes are attending well, and it is believed a very real work is going on.

Mr. A. Gooderham, Manchester City Mission Evangelist, has concluded a fourteen days' mission at the Mission Hall, Holland-street, Pendleton. Night by night many professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

St. Albans.—Mr. Goudie, of the Herts Union of Baptist Churches, has finished a mission in Soapwell-lane. The services were well attended, many were impressed, and professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

Mr. Newton Jones conducted a mission at the Congregational Church, Primrose Hill, Netherton, from March 25 to 29. The attendances were large, and it was a time of great spiritual blessing. Many young people entered the inquiry rooms.

Rev. C. J. Hall, of New York, has been holding successful Gospel meetings, under the auspices of the different Y.M.C.A. unions, in Longmont, Loveland, Fort Collins, Berthoud, and Denver, and other cities. God has been pleased to give great blessing.

West Hartlepool.—A special mission has been conducted by Rev. Harvey Field. Preparation was thoroughly made, the whole district being mapped out and well visited. The church co-operated heartily with the preacher. Scores of souls were won, both adults and juniors. Meetings for men and women only were largely attended and proved successful.

Mr. Bray, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a Gospel mission at Barnard's Cross. Believers have received a reviving, and have been built up in the faith. Unbelievers have been led to Christ. Opportunities were afforded of reaching railway men, policemen, men's Bible classes, and mission workers; all of these meetings being very encouraging, and signs following.

Mr. Daniel McCann, of the Evangelisation Society (Scottish Branch), has just finished a three weeks' mission in connection with Craigneuk Free Church, near Motherwell. Craigneuk is a very staid place, but night after night the meetings increased in numbers. Some souls have been brought to decision, a number of backsliders brought back, many impressed, and the Christians greatly refreshed.

Gipsy Smith has been doing a good work at Denver, Colorado, and throngs of people have attended the Methodist Episcopal Church in which he has preached. The interest is steadily increasing, and already many have been converted. He is a revivalist of tremendous power, and possesses the rare faculty of holding his congregation as only a magnetic orator can hold an audience. He preaches with the earnestness born of deep conviction.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgan paid a visit to Henley-on-Thames with their Bible carriage, and stayed from Friday till Tuesday. We had the privilege of being with them at an open-air service, where their faithful testimony for the Lord Jesus was attentively listened to. We commend them to the Lord's children in places where they may stay on their journey. We also know that the books they sell have been much appreciated. C. G. Oppermann.

Henley-on-Thames

Rev. Thomas Cook has concluded a very successful mission in the Teignmouth Wesleyan Chapel, preaching every night with great power. About 140 persons went into the inquiry-room for counsel and prayer. The church has been quickened, backsliders have been restored, the unawakened have been converted, and some who had long been halting between two opinions have been brought to full decision for Christ. Many have had the joy of leading those whom they had long prayed for to the Saviour, while one or two whole families have been saved. The services for men and children were well attended, and were seasons of great power.

Eastbourne.—A ten days' mission has been conducted by Mr. W. Sampson. Much prayer had been offered, and the whole town visited, while the mission band nightly missioned the streets. On the first Sunday afternoon scores of children went forward, and on every night there have been conversions. The names of about seventy adults have been taken, some being very remarkable cases. On the last Sunday there was a general break down, and many professed conversion. On the closing night of the mission the Salvation Army and Longstone Hall Mission joined in a large procession of about 300 persons, afterwards crowding the chapel. The work is still going on.

Tasmania.—There is under the Southern Cross a preacher named Rev. John MacNeil who must not be confounded with our own John MacNeill. This Antipodean evangelist has held in various parts of Tasmania special mission services which have been greatly blessed. In Hobart Town we hear that "in addition to services in three churches, Mr. MacNeil conducted two united meetings of the scholars attending the Sabbath-schools of the Presbyterian churches. Open-air meetings were likewise held in the Domain, when large assemblages were drawn together to hear the Gospel. As opportunity offered, Mr. MacNeil visited public institutions and addressed the inmates. The writer was privileged to be present at a memorable meeting in the Hobart Gaol, where by permission of the governor the prisoners, male and female, had the opportunity offered them of hearing the Gospel. With few exceptions the whole of the inmates assembled. With more than his wonted power, and with a tenderness and pathos that moved to tears many all unused to weeping, the Gospel was preached to them. All were visibly touched, while a score with bowed heads and uplifted hands professed their acceptance of the Saviour and their purpose to lead a changed life."

Rev. F. C. Spurr will hold missions as follows:—April 8 to 17, Walworth-road Chapel; April 22-May 2, Romford; May 7-10, Lower Norwood; May 14-17, Brockley.

SOME EAST-END WORKERS.

A visitor writes:—"Finding myself in Shoreditch on a recent Sunday evening whilst the church bells were inviting worshippers, I resolved to look up some of the byways of service. Nichol-street was my first call. Here the doors of the Ragged School were open, as they have been these forty years, and streams of youthful humanity were pouring in. The self-denying workers were present to receive them, and these little ones, to the number of 1000 or more, would listen ere they left to the old, old story of Jesus and his love. Passing round to Club-row, I called at the Home of Industry. Here I found from basement to ceiling the children and young people had possession. One felt the occasion was being used by the teachers for real seed-sowing, and the prayer involuntarily arose that it might be fixed by the Spirit's power on many of the young hearts of this throng of over five hundred children. To reach Albert-street led me through devious pathways with plenty of outside children under the baneful instruction of the street. But inside this spacious institution were children big and little, young men and young women in Bible-classes, and the hundreds thus gathered were being taught to remember their Creator in the days of their youth. Peeping in at the large adult service in King Edward-street, under the same management as Albert-street, I passed to the open Whitechapel-road, and entered the Pavilion Theatre in time to hear Mr. George Nokes—familiarly known as the Bishop of Whitechapel—give his final address for the season. The fifteen hundred or more congregants were held in rapt attention as the story of Felix trembling was depicted and improved by one who knew his audience and their special sins and temptations.

"Finally, I got a warm grip of the hand from the venerable George Holland, as the evening service was forming into an after-meeting of the George Yard Ragged School. The children had gone, the seniors remained, and one felt that the earnest manifold service which had gone on was of the kind from which virtue goeth out. Surely these corners of the Master's vineyard, which need to be sought out, and which proclaim themselves not by beat of drum, count for much in the Master's eyes. There may be some of your readers who might wish to see some of the phases of out-of-the-way efforts when visiting London, and if they have difficulty in guidance from friends, they can get all information and help by applying to the Ragged School Union, at 37, Norfolk-street, as the headquarters of such efforts amongst street children."

A NEWSPAPER FOR THE BLIND has been started. It is in the Braille type, and published every Wednesday. (3d. post free.) The Weekly Summary, for that is the title of the paper, contains political, general, and musical news, abridged from the daily papers and from The Graphic and The Saturday Review, by kind permission of the editors. Though not, strictly speaking, a charitable undertaking, the only object is to benefit the blind. It is not in any sense a commercial enterprise, the staff giving their services. Subscriptions may be paid in advance to the hon. treasurer, Miss L. Bloxam, Eltham Court, Eltham, Kent.

Personalia.

Mr. Eugene Stock and Rev. R. W. Stewart are expected to arrive in London this week.

Rev. Alexander Hamilton, D.D., of Brighton, we regret to hear, is very seriously ill, suffering from a complication of maladies.

Principal Chalmers, whose serious illness we recently announced, has rallied somewhat, but is still lying in a critical condition.

The Dean of Ripon and Mrs. Fremantle have come up to Wimbledon, where they are expected to reside until the beginning of June.

Rev. Dr. Bullinger, we are pleased to be able to say, has made satisfactory recovery from an attack of influenza, which recently prostrated him.

Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot was unable to fulfil his engagement to address the lay workers at St. Paul's on Saturday. He has been compelled to rest awhile.

Rev. W. Wetton Cox, Secretary of the London Association in Aid of the Moravian Missions, has broken down from over-work, and is likely to be confined to his bed for some weeks.

Mr. B. Short, whose Tabernacle lectures here will be remembered by many, has been giving in various churches in Sydney, N.S.W., addresses on the Tabernacle Types, illustrating the whole with his admirable model. To many at the Antipodes these expositions have come as a new discovery.

Rev. G. T. Ennals, of Cann Hall Baptist Chapel, Leytonstone, E., was, at the annual meeting of the Baptist Board a few days ago, elected vice-president, to succeed to the presidency next year. Mr. Ennals has recently been very unwell. His friends will be glad to learn that he is again at his much-loved work.

Miss Lucy Booth, on her recovery from her recent illness, was warmly welcomed back to her post at a great meeting held in the Novelty Theatre, Bombay. Miss Booth delivered a pathetic speech, which was listened to with much interest, describing her feelings at the time when she was given up by the doctors and seemed on the point of death.

Dr. Baedeker is about to pass eight days (beginning April 4) in Barmen and Elberfeld, in company with Rev. J. Hudson Taylor. He hopes to be in Berlin on April 12, and on the following day to proceed to Russia, visiting Riga, Dorpat, Revel, and St. Petersburg, with the object of again penetrating Siberia to preach the Gospel to the prisoners there. Dr. Baedeker asks for prayer that he may be upheld and prospered.

Col. Shephard, the New York journalist who has just died under an operation, had the unique distinction of a love for Scriptural quotations. It was not in his leading articles he introduced them—that would not have been so uncommon, but as a headline to the first column of the leader page. They were a standing feature of his paper, varied, of course, with the successive issues, and it used to be said that he never allowed anyone but himself to choose the texts.

Rev. A. B. Earle, D.D., who for so many years has been much blessed in evangelising, although now in his eighty-first year, is still in active service. The Evangelist, giving a sketch of his career, speaks of him as a contemporary of Charles G. Finney, and adds:—"He is the last of the great revivalists. That mighty, searching power of preaching the law and righteous will of God, which probed souls to their depths, and wrought abiding conviction of sin, and anguish of soul under a sense of guilt before God, coming at length to a complete yielding of the heart to God, and to the inflowing of a sweet sense of pardon and acceptance, will cease from the land when this man dies. There are no such men born any more. There are no such preachers appearing any more."

HOME FOR LITTLE BOYS.—The committee of the Home for Little Boys, Farningham and Swanley, have appointed Mr. A. E. Charles, formerly assistant-secretary, son of the late Mr. A. O. Charles, and Mr. W. Robson, of the London Missionary Society, to be jointly associated in the secretariat of the Homes, recently held by the late Mr. Benjamin Clarke.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a month's mission at Litchfield Parish Church, Hampshire, by Rev. Walter Bradbury.—For a special mission by Mr. Campbel in the east-end of Glasgow.—For blessing on special work in the North of Ireland.—For blessing on a Bible-class.—For much blessing on a ten days' mission at Swathling, to be conducted by Mr. W. Monro Collings, commencing April 16.—That God's blessing may rest upon a special mission, to be held at St. Matthew's Church, Birmingham, by Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken, from April 8 to 24, that souls may be won for Christ.—For an eight days' mission to be held at the London Medical Mission, by Mr. Crombie.

The Christian.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to individual members. Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Mr. Henry Reed, of Tasmania.

An action for alleged slander was lately brought in the Scottish courts against Miss E. M. Stirling, of the Nova Scotia Homes for Children, by a man in Edinburgh on whose personal character she had reflected in a letter published in our columns. Before the case went to proof the plaintiff withdrew from the action and submitted to an adverse judgment with expenses. The friends of Miss Stirling and her efforts on behalf of destitute children will rejoice with her in this deliverance, and will, we trust, make it an occasion for increased sympathy with her life work.

The lack of spiritual power, and the lack of funds for the support of the Lord's work, are doing more to bring Christianity into contempt than all the combined forces of infidelity put together. Miss Mason's new home for aged workers, for example, is now quite ready for habitation, yet the rooms are standing empty for want of funds, and several dear old workers, unable any longer to labour, are pining in back attics, half starving themselves to meet their "rent," who might be housed in these rooms, rent free. And yet we hear of Christian people investing their money in breweries, or losing it in building societies.

"Cruel cheapness" is a theme on which we have often descanted strongly in these columns, and the records of East-end and other sweating dens have furnished superabundant material for criticism. But it is as needful to avoid unfairness towards employers as it is to uphold the natural rights of the toiling workers. A recent case in the police court, in which a worker sued for a week's wages, revealed the fact that ladies' mantles are stitched for a penny, and the statement suggested many unpleasant reflections. Special inquiry on the part of The Westminster Gazette resulted, however, in eliciting the additional information that eighteen such mantles could easily be sewn, with machine, by a worker in one hour, which put a different complexion on the case. This ought to be stated in justice; though we fear the white slaves who eke out a starvation wage that the public may buy cheap garments are still a great host.

The Teachers' Union put teachers' grievances in the forefront when it met at Liverpool. Mr. Yoxall gave a picture of the assistant teacher which will probably live in the memory of the nation until a change for the better is made in his position and pay. At twenty years of age the assistant came out of the training college with the idea of "a high calling and election," to find himself "over-worked and under-paid, much inspected and little trusted, often blamed and seldom praised"; he was "the helot and the scapegoat of the public elementary school, his services were undervalued, his person was underrated." The facts are that 872 assistant teachers are paid less than £40 a year, 1978 are paid less than £45, 3087 less than £50, and 9291 less than £75. This is sweating of a bad type.

The Teachers' Union had a case for more than the salaries of teachers; it dealt effectively with the question of child labour, urging that, in consideration of the physical, moral, and intellectual development of the children, the recommendations of the Berlin Conference should be carried out. On whom can the blame be fairly laid that this has not been done? Want of time cannot be pleaded in extenuation; superabundance of red tape might be urged. Meanwhile, the helpless children suffer. "The vast majority of English children still enter the labour market at ten." We are worse than our Continental neighbours. At twelve a boy may be sent to work full time as a miner! This fact makes one's hearth look less bright and attractive.

"The coming legislation on licensed houses, which is now forecasted in the Local Veto Bill, is telling upon the market value of these shares"—i.e., of English breweries. Thus writes an authority on investments, who adds that he does not think it at all desirable to hold the ordinary shares of English breweries in even the very soundest company. This is good news, and, taken along with the present wild exertions of the public-house interest to defeat the Local Veto Bill, is not only a proof of the efficacy of that measure, but a sign that it is at least feared it may pass. Are we right in thinking that the lovers of temperance are not making quite as vigorous exertions for the Bill as the lovers of beer are making against it? Perhaps it is only that their meetings are less noisy, and therefore less notice is taken of them by the Press. When the beer party get on to the platform or into a meeting they are generally very demonstrative.

Dr. Parker went to the core of the question when he said, with regard to the Separatist martyrs of three hundred years ago, that their action was a protest against calling a baptized nation a Christian nation, and against the pretensions of a priesthood. He further affirmed, as to present times, that the Independents of to-day could not have any sacerdotalism at Rome, at Canterbury, or in Nonconformist churches; at the same time, he admitted that there was "a little sacerdotalism among themselves. In his conception of a church, anyone could administer the Holy Supper, and he need not hasten home because his young brother-assistant had not been ordained, and he (Dr. Parker) must therefore preside." This witness, we believe, may be true in some instances, but not in all. A good man, a clerk on a London wharf, used, with the full knowledge and consent of a well-known Independent minister, to dispense the elements at the communion in a poor mission-room. Rags of Popery do, however, hang like burrs, and the sooner they are torn away the better.

Rev. W. Hardy-Harwood, successor to Dr. Allon, touched an important point the other night, when he said that the kind of English history people studied was largely the cause of the ignorance existing about such men as Barrowe, Greenwood, and Penry; some histories said more about a king's mistress than a religious reformer. Especially is this remark important in relation to school books, which are generally taken for granted by parents. In the halo thrown round some character, in the turn given to an event, in the side remark, poison of a subtle and deadly kind may be dropped into a child's mind.

A correspondent of The English Churchman says that in Ruskin's "Stones of Venice" (Foundations, Vol. ii. p. 356) occurs the following passage written by Mr. Ruskin's father in 1839, which is of interest, as almost prophetic of present difficulties:—

> It was admitted by all that, by the very act of abandoning the Roman religion, we became a free and enlightened people. It was only by throwing off the yoke of that slavish religion that we attained to the freedom of thought which has advanced us in the scale of society. We are so much advanced by adopting and adhering to a reformed religion, that, to prove our liberal and unprejudiced views, we throw down the barriers between the two religions, of which the one is the acknowledged cause of light and knowledge, the other the cause of darkness and ignorance! We are so much altered for the better by leaving this people entirely, and giving them neither part nor lot amongst us, that it becomes proper to mingle with them again! We have found so much good in leaving them, that we deem it the best possible reason for returning to be among them! No fear of their Church again shaking us, with all our light and knowledge. It is true the most enlightened nations fell under the spell of her enchantments into total darkness and superstition; but no fear of us—we are too well informed!

These wise and prescient words should be well pondered now, for there is ten times more need of the warning than when they were written. Tennyson summed up the essence of the warning in that photographic line, which we have quoted before, and in which one of the chief tendencies of the time is delineated as with a sunbeam—

> Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name.

In the name of liberty to let loose a tiger would be pronounced insanity; but what is a tiger to the woman drunk with the blood of the saints of God, and whose nature and character are declared by herself to be unchangeable?

We shall be sure to hear a good deal this month (or, perhaps, for nine days) of an article in The Contemporary on "The Policy of the Pope," the author of which speaks as a Catholic himself, who desires, along with other of the faithful, to hold the results of the New Criticism on the Bible, and yet remain in the Church. We do not see why he should not, for if he is willing to do as the Church tells him, he need not trouble about his views as to the Scriptures. His guide is outside the Word of God. But while much will be made of his difficulty, how many writers in the daily or weekly press will have a word to say about the triumphs of the Gospel in every land to which it has been carried? Let one man loudly state his doubts, and he shall have more hearers than a hundred men who have a settled faith. But for all that, "the word of the Lord grows, and is multiplied."

According to The Herald of Peace, a marked change for the better has recently, and very gradually, come over the sentiment of Germany with regard to peace and war. "Indeed, it appears as if Germany is now preparing to assume even a prominent position in the advocacy of peace and arbitration, and to manifest such practical earnestness in this direction as materially to check the extreme military spirit which still dominates the Imperial Government and its Ministry." The proofs of this change which are adduced are certainly of an impressive kind. "They may fairly be considered to be in good degree a result of the labours of those earnest men and women who, at Berlin, Wiesbaden, Frankfort, Leipzig, and other places in Germany, as also in Austria, have of late years formed themselves into committees for the systematic promotion of peace and arbitration throughout the German-speaking population of Central Europe." A most striking illustration of the vitality of truth, and of the wisdom of declaring it amidst the most discouraging circumstances.

Yet the response of Germany to peace ideas has parallels in history. Our own English Peace Society was formed at the close of the Napoleonic wars, when the evils of war had been forced on every one's attention for years. The Quakers sprang into existence in the midst of all the troubles of the Civil War. When the Huguenots had appealed to the sword, and had tasted the bitterness of defeat, some of their more devout members discovered that "carnal weapons" were not the Divine means for establishing the Kingdom of Heaven, and formed themselves into a kind of French Society of Friends. Perhaps one of the most impressive lessons in the history of the Huguenots is to be seen in the demoralisation which always followed any temporary military successes, the pride, the love of show, and the delight in war for its own sake; and, on the other hand, the purification which always followed on defeat, when they were driven into fastnesses and wilderness places. When they were beaten by the arm of flesh they conquered by prayer and grew in numbers.

The Germans ought to have learnt something from the terrible experiences of their war with France. Archibald Forbes gives in The Daily News a most impressive picture of the Landwehr-men, most of whom were married:—

He was not precisely melancholy—that would be too strong an expression; but there was a certain pathos in his eye and his aspect was distinctly serious. I will not say that he was taciturn, but he certainly was less loquacious than were his younger comrades of the line. The bivouac of a Landwehr battalion had always a character of comparative silence, which intensified into sombreness on the days when the field post made a delivery of letters from home. It was a curious thing to notice, throughout the German army in the field, how frequently the home letters used to be read with a photograph in one hand and the letter in the other. The photograph which the Linesman drew from his coat-cuff or breast pocket was mostly the portrait of a young person of the other sex who presumably was a sweetheart. The Landwehr-man's photograph, on the other hand, was of a more domestic character—a stout and somewhat careworn woman in the centre, with a varying amount of offspring posed around her. A staunch and brave soldier, the Landwehr-man was acutely sensible how much more to him meant the inevitable risks of the battle-field than to the youngster of the line who had not given hostages to fortune, and for whom the chance of death or wound had not the unselfish apprehension which weighed on the older man, although it did not in the least deter him from encountering loyally the dangers of war.

Of the struggle on French soil, when civilians took every opportunity of killing Germans, he says, "It was war reduced to first principles, stripped of all its specious refinements, and there is little more to be said about it." Now it is just about the facts that we need to hear a good deal more.

For some time past there have been indications in several quarters of a revolt against the fashionable critical speculation in regard to the Bible. Scholars who are not disposed promptly to adopt every boasted "conclusion," have taken to putting very inconvenient questions to the German analysts and their most loyal British followers. The spirit of dissatisfaction is growing, and some who have hitherto held aloof are now speaking out. In the April issue of The Expository Times, Professor G. G. Cameron, D.D., of Aberdeen, convicts the critics of "reasoning in a circle," and appeals to them, in the interests of truth and for the information of students, to distinguish between the historical and the unhistorical in the Old Testament. If the reconstruction of the history of Israel is worth anything, this appeal can be complied with. But "criticism" is as deaf as it is incoherent. We firmly believe that the near future will disclose many evidences that it has entered upon its decline.

It is a curious thing that one of the much debated questions of theologians is whether, at any rate in the earliest days, the people of God had any conception of the doctrine of a future life. Texts have been quoted for and against. But, like many other important truths, it surely depends on the broad scope of the Divine life of which these men of God were conscious in their own souls. It is not conceivable that men who walked with God as did Abraham, Jacob, Moses, and Elijah, could regard themselves doomed to extinction. "These all died in faith.....and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims. .....They desired a better country, that is, an heavenly." When our Lord "brought life and immortality to light," He set before the whole world, by his resurrection, a truth which had been the comfort of his people's hearts. Fa[illegible] embodied and exemplified the reality which lies concealed in the invisible world.

Perhaps the old difficulties which are felt about things invisible are somewhat diminished in our time even by the influence of that science which, while fastening us down to material things, is evermore revealing their marvellous hidden and unsuspected qualities and forces, showing us worlds enfolded in the outer husk.

According to The Church at Home and Abroad, the work of evangelising Mexico, which, as a missionary effort, is not quite twenty-one years old, is a remarkable success. The first worker was Miss Melinda Rankin, who began the distribution of Bibles in Northern Mexico in 1850, and continued her pioneering efforts for twenty years, when the missionary societies entered the field. Religious liberty is granted by the Government, and President Diaz, who is anxious for the progress of the country, makes it a reality as far as he can. "The Romish Church is not growing better, but her power to injure is held in check by Divine Providence. Her priesthood is not growing purer or less venal, but its authority and power to terrorise are growing weaker." The chief difficulty is "the frivolity of the people and the widespread prevalence of infidelity and agnosticism"—the old difficulty which a superstitious form of Christianity never fails to produce.

The World's Fair.

During the coming summer, special efforts will be made in Chicago to counteract vice and wickedness of every sort by the influences of the Gospel.

I have drawn up a plan of campaign which provides for evangelistic services in churches, halls, and tents, in different parts of the city. All the forces of the Bible Institute will be brought into action. Many of the best workers in the world have promised to lend their assistance, including Dr. John Hall, Dr. Talmage, Dr. A. J. Gordon, Dr. Pierson, Professor Morehead, Rev. B. Fay-Mills, Mr. Wharton, Major Whittle, Mr. Sankey, Mr. Stebbins, Mr. J. H. Burke, Professor Towner; Dr. Monro Gibson (London); Rev. John McNeill; Rev. J. H. Riddell, Rev. John Robertson (of Glasgow); Pastor Th. Monod (Paris); Pastor Stöcker (Berlin); Rev. Hubert Brooke (England); Rev. Charles Inwood (Ireland), and others.

The expenses will be heavy. May I not ask Christian friends for funds to carry out the work? Kindly address communications to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or to myself, at East Northfield, Mass., U.S.A.

D. L. Moody.

PEACE, BE STILL.

"Joy cometh in the morning."—Ps. xxx, 5.

Hark! There is joy upon the breeze!
Through morning's gates it comes to me;
Peace falls in calmness o'er the seas;
Jesus hath bid the storm-winds flee.

The night of sorrow lingered long,
Faith sank beneath the surging wave!
But He for tears hath given a song—
"Jesus, Redeemer, Thou canst save."

Clouds roll their darkness from the skies,
Night from his presence hastes away;
Gladness and joy again arise
With the sweet waking of the day.

Hush! There is joy o'er earth and sea!
Praise shall my trembling spirit fill,
Jesus, my Lord, Thy love to me
Hath answered softly "Peace, be still."

LOVE NEVER SPOILS.—It is the alternation of harshness and weak indulgence which ruins many a poor helpless child, who is made detestable to everybody, not through its own fault, but the fault of its relations.—Dinah Mulock Craik.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER is, we regret to hear, laid aside by bronchitis, and has, therefore, been unable to fulfil his engagement this week at Kentish Town. His two sons are supplying his lack of service, and have had good meetings. Many, we feel sure, will pray for this aged and honoured servant of Christ.

REV. DR. PINDOR, whose very remarkable work in Silesia we described in our issue for June 2, 1892, has been invited, in consequence of that article, by Rev. R. A. Torrey, of the Chicago Evangelisation Society, to preach at the World's Fair to the Poles, of whom there are in Chicago alone 70,000, most of them Roman Catholics. While passing through England, Dr. Pindor is endeavouring to awaken sympathy and secure help on behalf of his poor people at Trzyniec, a village near Teschen, where men and women wept when they heard he was about to leave them for a few months. Dr. Pindor may be communicated with through Dr. Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E.

The Book of the Kingdom—10.

THE KINGDOM WITHIN.

The Kingdom of God is subjective and objective; inward and outward; present and future. It must be inward before it can be outward, for every kingdom must have its foundation in the hearts of its subjects, or it cannot last. And this is supremely true of the Reign of Love.

The old creation has utterly fallen through sin, so that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God." Therefore, "except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God. . . . Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God." Marvel not that Jesus said, "Ye must be born again."

Just as, one by one, by natural birth, we enter into the world, so one by one, by spiritual birth, we enter into the Kingdom of God. And when we enter into the Kingdom the Kingdom enters into us. The Kingdom must be established in the hearts of its subjects before it can be outwardly manifested. In this dispensation, God is taking out from among the nations a people for his name, in whom, in proportion to their faith, every thought is brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. These are the inheritors of the Kingdom of God.

This is that inward Kingdom of which the Spirit says, "The Kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." This is the Kingdom which cometh not with outward show. Of this the King Himself spake, when He said, "Be not anxious, saying, What shall we eat, or drink, or be clothed with? But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Only they in whom is the Kingdom, i.e., in whom God reigns, and who are therefore in the Kingdom, can truly pray "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done, as in Heaven, so on earth."

All that will characterise the Kingdom in its outward manifestation exists in germ and embryo in the Kingdom within. Man is a microcosm, a little world, and in the believer, according to the measure of his faith, the kingdoms of this inward world have become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. Here the disorder of earth is reduced to the harmony of heaven. For upon Him who reigns the Spirit of the Lord rests, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and might, of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord. Righteousness and faithfulness are his girdle. Every form of inward life is subject to Him. The wolf dwells with the lamb, the leopard lies down with the kid, the calf and the young lion and the fatling together, and a Little Child leads them; they do not hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain, when the heart is filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

Holiness, the deepening of the spiritual life, consecration, sanctification, perfect love, purity, a clean heart, Pentecost, the fulness of the Spirit, are different terms expressing the condition of the soul in whom the Kingdom of God has come with power, and who, receiving grace upon grace, and adding to faith the sevenfold grace—virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, love—obtains an abundant entrance into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Just as the typical men, Joseph and Mordecai, were pre-eminently the loyal subjects of their respective kings, by whom they were entrusted with supreme executive power ("Only in the throne will I be greater than thou," Gen. xli. 40; "Mordecai the Jew was next unto King Ahasuerus," Est. x. 3): so Jesus, as in all things He has the pre-eminence, is pre-eminent in obedience and therefore in authority: "I delight to do thy will, O God, yea thy law is within my heart." His one reply to the threefold temptation to body, soul, and spirit, was "It is written" (in Deuteronomy, the book of the law which he delighted to do). When the people would by force have made Him King, He withdrew alone and prayed; for God's hour of his crowning was not yet come. He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, wherefore God hath highly exalted Him. As He taught us by example every other right thing, so He taught us that unquestioning obedience is the way to rule. The Kingdom of God was within Him, therefore God has made Him King. He knocks at the heart's-door of Laodicea to-day, and to him that by obedience overcomes will He give to sit with Him on his throne, even as He by obedience overcame, and sat down with his Father on his throne. M.

"Saved in his Life."

"The power of an endless life."

God has inseparably linked salvation by the priesthood with salvation by the blood. It is one salvation, wrought out on the cross, continued through all our journey here, and perfected in resurrection. We read in the Epistle to the Hebrews, "Being made perfect, He became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey Him"—not a salvation rejoiced in to-day, and finished in the glory, but one unbroken chain of deliverance all the way through. "Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver; in whom we trust that He will yet deliver us" (2 Cor. i. 10). For this our God and Father made provision in the suffering obedience of Christ's life on earth, just as on the cross in his own body He paid our debt in blood, and so we read (Heb. ii. 18), "In that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able also to succour them that are tempted."

We know that He was essentially perfect as the Holy One of God, but it needed a life-training in suffering that He might lead the flock committed to his keeping as one who had trodden the same way before. In this, as in our redemption from wrath, God our Father spared not his own Son, that nothing might be lacking for the fulness of our blessing every step of the way. He tasted every variety of suffering, short only of sin, that He might minister in the sanctuary above for an erring people, and know with "the tongue of them that are taught how to sustain with words him that is weary" (Isa. l. 4. R.V).

There are some very precious things to be noted concerning this priestly office of Christ. We see that it is, in God's estimation, an office of glory. "Christ glorified not Himself to be made an High Priest, but He that said unto Him, 'Thou art my Son; to-day have I begotten Thee.'" The same word that called Him as the eternal Son of the Father called Him also to the priesthood for an ignorant and erring people. We have this truth prefigured in the garments "for glory and for beauty" of the Jewish High Priest: in the beaten gold and precious stones, on which were graven, "as signets are graven," the names of the children of Israel; not all together, but "every one with his name" on each separate stone, each having its own special lustre and value. Aaron bore those names upon his heart before God continually, and there was Divine provision made that the breastplate, in which the stones were set, "be not loosed from the ephod." What a picture it gives us of God's thoughts of us as bought with the price of blood—what warning that we seek rightly to value the grace that so richly provided for our blessing at such infinite cost. Then it is a priesthood that "passeth not from one to another" as in the days of Jewish ritual. "Being made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life." "This man, because He continueth ever, hath an untransferable priesthood. Wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost (completely, R.V. mar.) that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them" (Heb. vii. 24, 25). The force of this blessed contrast would be understood by Jewish converts whose priests "were not suffered to continue by reason of death." The One who wrought our first deliverance from the awful grasp of the destroyer; who sank "in the deep mire where there is no standing" (Psalm lxix. 2), that He might lift us up to the bosom of the Father, is the one who has led and ever will lead us until He brings us safely home. As a skilled physician knows each minute point of the case intrusted to him; as the maker of a delicate instrument can best bring out the music of its chords; so He knoweth individually our frame, He remembereth that we are dust. He has studied us through and through, and knoweth us altogether. Then, as He knoweth us, so also He knows the Father: and while one hand leads the sheep, the other can open all the treasury of God to supply the smallest need from its infinite resources.

We read again, "Such an High Priest became us who was holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; needing not as Jewish priests to offer up first for his own sins, and then for the people's, for this He did once when He offered up Himself." He appears as the proof of the eternal satisfaction of that one offering, once offered, not in earthly sanctuary, but in highest heaven, where God ever sees his face as for us entered, our Surety and Forerunner.

Then also Christ's priesthood is distinctively an office of blessing, being typified by that of Melchisedec, King of Salem, and "priest of the most high God," who came out to bless Abraham in his victory over his enemies. He came of the tribe of Judah, of which tribe no man gave attendance at Jewish altars, and was especially a figure of Him who meets us at every turn of our earthly journey with the bread and wine of heavenly sustenance and cheer, confirmed to us by the purpose and oath of Jehovah.

But while we have such an High Priest, called of God to this most precious service, a minister of the sanctuary and of the true Tabernacle above, what use do we make of it all? One special point of fitness for the priesthood we find in Heb. v. 2: "Who can have compassion on the ignorant and on them that are out of the way." Thus we see it is a provision for the foolish and the erring which it cost God the life-suffering of his Son to make, and which brings us into the closest contact with Christ as our Shepherd and Priest; the One only skilled to lead on those compassed with infirmity, because in infinite grace Himself took our infirmities in the days of his flesh.

God forbid that we should ever become independent of this priesthood for the erring—of the deep compassions of the heart of Christ for those who are too helpless and too poor to take one step without Him. Let us take heed that we do not put ourselves beyond this Divine provision, lest our eyes should be upon what He has made us rather than upon what He is.

The priestly garments were for the eye of God in the sanctuary. The priest himself was for the worshipper. It was not the glitter of the sapphire or the diamond, on which the name of his tribe was graven, that gave rest to the heart of the repentant Israelite, but the knowledge that the High Priest himself had gone in for him into the holy place, even as Christ has entered heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us. 2 Kings vi. 13-17.

ADDRESS TO YOUNG MEN.

BY REV. JOHN McNEILL.*

THERE is a story which shows, vividly and dramatically, the transition from the blind side to the seeing side, from the darkness to the light. It shows the blessedness of it and the need of it: and it indicates that salvation from darkness, and blindness, and ignorance is not a painful thing which, if a man undergoes it at all, he will undergo rather as if his eyes were being bored out with a red-hot iron, than as if his eyes were being put in. That is the opinion which some men and some young men have —that this Gospel rather (to use their own elegant phrase) pulls the wool over a young fellow's eyes—that it rather puts them out than opens them—that it is a severe, bitter, cruel operation, with a cutting knife a good deal in it, rather than what it is here; the opening of the eyes, with all that that means—deliverance, salvation, freedom, laughing at your enemies, and shouting with all your might because a great and unexpected change has taken place in you. All things have become radically altered, simply because your eyes are opened, and you see the real setting and staging of things as God has appointed them.

You remember the king of Syria was warring, and he could not understand why the trap which he set continually for the king of Israel failed. He had laid his traps well, carefully, adroitly, but all his well-planned, carefully-guarded schemes were continually frustrated; and at last he said, "Will somebody kindly tell me at once what the reason is, to save me cutting off the heads of a lot of you? Will somebody turn king's evidence—for I do not want an indiscriminate slaughter—and tell me who reveals all these things?" And one of the servants said, "Nobody, my lord, O king." This man had been thinking over it too. He had begun to find his own head trembling on his neck, but he found his escape here: "It is that prophet. Never mind the army and the officers, or the king; but, O king of Syria, if you could lay that prophet by the heels, then Israel would be weak and at your mercy." "Oh, oh!" he said, "is that it? Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold, he is in Dothan. Therefore sent he thither chariots, and horses, and a great host." Think of it. How ridiculous! They came with a great host to catch—to catch God! What a fine world the devil would have made this from the beginning if only he could have caught God! And how often, clever and all as he is, he has tried that same thing. And does he not do it yet? That which for ever baffles him is that it is God he is trying to catch. He grips and clutches at this and that and the other thing, and he says, "Now I have it!" But—phew! away! He has missed it! Missed again! From the beginning, right on to here, right on to the end of the Bible, right on till the end of time, as long as God, by his grace, identifies Himself with men, so long the devil will endure that chagrin.

Alas! alas! it is not all chagrin. He does get some of us. He gets many of us. It is the one big thought that is labouring in my heart—that if God's grace is in you, my young brother, the devil will have an infinite chagrin over the head of you. He will lay many traps, and you will not get into them; not because you are not foolish enough to go, but simply because God is your keeper and your defence. He watches against all the wiles of the devil. It is utterly impossible that you can be taken and snared and captured if you are kept in God's hand.

"He said, Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host. And they came by night, and compassed the city about." I see this right down through the Bible. It comes out very vividly. When the great Man of God came —the last, the only, the unique Man of God, the heavenly Elisha, the Lord Jesus Christ—the devil, through his servants, rose to the height of it then. "Now," said he, "now if I could get Him!" And he tried it. You remember how Herod killed the children. You remember that dismal story of the weeping in Ramah, and the lamentation when Herod sent out the order that all the male children under a certain age should be killed. What was that but just this old story—an attempt to catch God—to blot out the sun? That is what was meant. But he missed Jesus. He killed a lot, but that same infinite chagrin was repeated, and that howl of disappointed rage was heard again—"Missed it!"

Again and again, down through the Gospel history, when Jesus, the heavenly Elisha, became a full-grown man, and started on his great ministry, the chief priests and Pharisees took counsel together to kill Him—to blot out the sun. And they managed it, and in the height of their triumph they found the height of their disappointment. He rose again from the dead! That is glorious, is it not? "Now," they said, "we have Him"; and they killed Him dead, and put Him down into the grave, and put a big stone on it, and sealed the stone, and got Pilate to set a watch, as if he could set a watch to prevent the rising of the sun to-morrow morning. And hell howled with baffled rage. He rose! There is no killing Him. There is no catching Him. And there is no killing, or catching, or arresting of those who are one with Him.

"And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, a host compassed the city both with horses and chariots. And his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do?" I do not want to give this away to everybody. I dare not. I cannot. I will be amazingly glad if I can find that it is for me; and I will show you how I think it comes to me; and that will be the opportunity for all of us. This happened to the servant of the man of God. We do not know his name; but what makes him at all important is that he happened to be related to the man who was related to Almighty God. "The servant of the man of God." See the link. That is what brought him into the same salvation as the man of God.

Is that your relation? Take this Elisha to stand —and it is no fancifulness—for the great, unique, only Man of God, the Lord Jesus Christ; and here is the point. Take this young fellow's place, and you take this young man's peril first, and deliverance next. But if you do not like the place, do not take it. To become servant to Elisha was an honourable thing. Yet many a young fellow in Israel, when he heard that Elisha wanted a body-servant, would say, "Ah! you do not find me undertaking it. I do not throw myself away on a job like that. I prefer to drive my pigs to a better market, What salary do you give?" And I suppose that the answer would be that there was no salary—that Elisha had no salary to give. He was not a man of means. He was only a poor evangelistic tramp going up and down the country. He was greatly beholden to a woman of Shunem, who gave him a lodging free—gave him a little bedchamber, and a bed, and a chair, and a candlestick, and just what little attention she had time and opportunity to afford him; so that it was no great situation, you see, from the point of view of a young man's pride, or worldly ambition, or worldly honour. So is it to-night.

My dear young brethren, the Lord Jesus Christ wants servants. He is recruiting for body-servants, for a body-guard to be identified with Him. Will you come on? Will you strike hands with Him? I am only the recruiting-sergeant beating the drum and gathering you around me and telling you the terms; but I must not do as the old recruiting-sergeants did. I must not blow your heads up with nonsense. I must not tell you tales about glory and fame, and getting on and on until you become commander-in-chief. I must honestly tell you the other side of it. But I will whisper in your ears that there are no blanks, and that it is all prizes, if you will come and "stick in"—if you will rough it, if you will be true. "To him that overcomes," says Christ, "will I grant to sit with Me on my throne." Will you come? Do you think that it is worth while? Here below there will be persecution, trouble, trial on every side, contempt, despite, scoffing, scorn, seeing ofttimes the prizes of the world go past you, and being content to take what to human pride is the path of extreme lowliness, and a flinging of yourself away. So with this young man. There were far grander prizes in Israel, and he took what seemed to be a blank, the poorest situation in the land, and became the servant of a man who had nothing. He was nobody in himself, but he had joined himself to God's representative in the land. Therefore he was in for it all, and therefore he got it all—first the persecution, and afterwards the glory and the victory.

"Behold, a host compassed the city both with horses and with chariots; and his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do? And he answered, Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." I can think of the application of this to a young man, and when I am speaking of young men I am thinking of young women, and I am thinking of us all. Ah! here we are. We have come to Christ. We have believed on Him. Just see what that brings. Let any man think quietly for a moment. There is a young fellow full of flesh and blood, to whom Christianity means this—that he comes out in face of his fellows to say, "A clean heart, a pure body, a clean tongue, a clean hand, a clean life for me," and the moment that he makes that confession and profession, see what squadrons of hell sweep and mass and compass round about him; on right and left of him, behind him, and all round about, the powers of the devil are saying, "We will hem you in. We will watch you. We will crush you. We will utterly ruin and spoil you."

Talk about the Light Brigade charging an army! Not only the whole Church, but the individual Christian in the name of Christ charges a world, while the upper world, the angels of God, look down in stupendous, breathless amazement, waiting to shout if he gets through. That is where we are. In view of the public-house, the club-dances, the lascivious music, the card-parties, the theatres, the gambling, the unclean literature, the unclean pictures, the temptations from companions that I cannot describe, the whispered word, the sneer from male or female, and the thoughts within the heart that oftentimes leap out to the temptations from without, that solitary prophet and his servant surrounded by the whole power of a mighty king do not form a spectacle so interesting as the young man who says, "Christ for me! his service to-day, and his glory hereafter." It is a big thing to say it, and an heroic thing to do it, and He who called you will keep you to the very end.

"He answered, Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." That is my answer—that is the answer of the heavenly Elisha to all of us to-night. "Fear not." It is the one word that should be on the preacher's lips. We must say sharp things and cutting things. We must at times "be cruel to be kind," but I do not know any words that more continually should ring from every pulpit to every audience, whether of young men or of old men, than just this word, "Fear not," for we are all, as it were, frightened. We are frightened just in proportion as we can see the natural side of things.

"Courage, brother, do not stumble,
Though thy way be black as night."

Fear not, you with the lusts working in your flesh —you with fears rising in you as you go along these streets and see how nearly that shaft was winged to a fatal place to lay you low. Passing the batteries of hell at every turn, well may we fear. Shall we reach heaven? Shall I reach it? After all this preaching and praying, what if the devil seize me in the end? What if I become as Paul even feared, as a natural man, realising the tremendous odds against him and his own insignificance—what if I become a castaway, a derelict, abandoned, beaten, overcome, trodden underfoot? "Fear not." Grand words in your ears to-night, brother, with the great storm whistling through your rigging. "Fear not." Courage! Look up! God is with us! "They that be with us are more than they that be with them."

God knows how numbers tell. God knows that we do not like to be in a minority. We do not. I have been in the minority many times. It is a good bracing exercise. It is a fine tonic to be in a minority, and yet it is hard to bear. You would rather be in the majority. We feel that it is hard, young brother, do we not? We are in a sad minority. The great mass of fellows seem to be on the other side. To be holy, to crucify the flesh, and to be Christ's bodyguard, and worthy of our Master, so that He will not have occasion to turn us off from shame, seems to be utterly beyond us. I say that we are in such a pitiful minority. That is just why the Lord did this wonder. The Lord knows that numbers tell. He knows that numbers tell against Him, and, if I may so put it with reverence. He seems to have said, "I will show that young fellow something. I will show him something for the benefit of all young fellows like him; I will give him a sight of only one corner of the New Jerusalem. I will just give him the sight of a mere handful of the innumerable company to which he belongs, of whom he is a member and an integral part, being as really of them as though he stood in their sinlessness around the throne. "And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray Thee, open his eyes that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw; and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

How splendidly it was done. What fools men are to try to entrap God. How He turns the tables upon them. There is Elisha, and there is his servant, and the Syrians come and gather round about them, and say, "Now, all that we have to do is just to close in upon them." But God came also, and outside the circle of the Syrians he planted his own circle. The trappers were trapped, and the enemy were taken in flank and in rear, and driven out contemptuously, God coming behind them. That is the situation still. The trappers are trapped. The beleaguers are beleaguered. The encompassers are encompassed. The gates of hell are stormed. "Chariots of fire and horses of fire round about Elisha." They were not made for the occasion. Elisha did not ask for them. All that was needed was to see them. The difference was an opened eye. Then came gladness, victory, exultation. The seeing made all the difference. To Elisha's eyes it was there. That is why he was so quiet. The Lord open our eyes—the eyes of our understanding.

This incident does not fade away now, or become less interesting. It becomes intensely interesting. My hearer, do you see? Have you seen? Seen what? Seen the defence, the provision. At the back of all that army which I have already described—at the back of all these batteries of hell, have you seen God? Have you seen the mountains? Have you seen how God has planted them and filled them? Do you really understand, and do you believe that those who are for you, poor obscure man, poor obscure lassie in London here, trying to live a clean life and to be Christ's, are more actually, counting head for head, than those that are against you? God could fill the streets so that you would see nothing from morning's hour till evening's close but angels and archangels, Cherubim and Seraphim, and the spirits of just men made perfect, pell-mell, rank upon rank, battalion upon battalion—the armies of heaven around about you.

CRUMBS OF COMFORT.

"The God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulation."

Tribulation! the word itself signifying the process by which the ancients separated their wheat from the chaff. How significant the meaning for us. Our very sorrows to be the instrument of threshing out of our nature the chaff of worldliness and self-seeking. Who comforteth us in all our tribulations—not one too small for his loving sympathy, not one too great for his omnipotence to control or divert—that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble?

It is only those whose hearts have bled with a like anguish who can be entrusted with the divine mission of consolation, and impart to stricken souls the comfort wherewith "He has comforted us."

We look back on the time when the bitter draught was held to our lips, and the flesh quivered at the "drink ye all of it," and yet we realise that hour of intensest sorrow to have been the hour of closest, most intimate fellowship with our suffering Redeemer.

And to those who are passing through such seasons of anguish we would with loving hands lead them through the human sympathy to the Divine, to the God of comfort who has comforted us in all our tribulations.

LITERATURE FOR CHINA.

Sir,—This is the last day of the Chinese year. The snow lies deep on the ground; the slush in the narrow streets of the city is indescribable; the weather is extremely cold; and the people are very busy making their preparations for the new year. The street chapels have been closed to daily preaching these four days. Many of our converts have gone to their respective homes, and we missionaries have a day or two which, in a measure, we can call our own, and which some of us use up in paying off old debts in the shape of letter writing.

Early next week I hope to be off myself on one of our annual visits to the country stations. I feel that I must, before starting, send you a line or two, if only to thank you for continuing to send me The Christian, and to tell you how much I appreciate your kindness in so doing. The paper is always welcome, and always helpful. Having read it myself I give it to others to read, and in this way the copy you send me is seen by many.

I desire also to thank the many friends who have, through you, so liberally responded to my appeal for help on behalf of the Central China Religious Tract Society. The year 1892 was in some respects the most eventful in the society's history. A few days after the annual meeting of that year, the society was deprived of its depot and stock by the great fire of January 12, and left without funds wherewith to obtain more. The loss, at the time, was estimated at about 2500 dols., but it was found afterwards to have been considerably more. The committee lost no time in mourning over the calamity, but resolved at once to go on with the work, and appeal to the friends of the society for the necessary funds. The appeal was made, and not in vain. In a very short time the stock was replaced and lodged in a new and safe depot in the Foreign Concession. During the year we issued over 1,000,000 of books and tracts; and, notwithstanding the immensity of our circulation, the total expenditure was some hundreds of dollars less than the income.

The readers of The Christian will rejoice to know that our prospects as a society have never been brighter than they are to-day. It is impossible to over-estimate the value of the work of the society. At the annual meeting, Jan. 6, I made the following remarks: "This society was born over thirty years ago in a dingy native house, in a narrow lane of the native town. On beginning work in Hankow I soon found that I could not get along without tracts. The people came in crowds to hear a foreigner who could speak Chinese, and my first book was an attempt to answer in print the questions which were being constantly asked by them. This book, 'The Guide to Heaven,' is still in circulation. Then followed the 'Great Themes of the Gospel,' and a small Catechism. As far back as 1882, some of these books fell into the hands of the author of the notorious 'Death Blow to Corrupt Doctrines,' and in an edition of it, which reached me from Hunan a few months ago, no less than nineteen pages of clear, intelligent, though hostile criticism, are devoted to 'The Guide to Heaven,' thus showing that even at this early date these books were read and understood.

"In those days I was the only member of the society, its sole committee, publisher, and subscriber; but I am glad to see that you have grown considerably since then. Nevertheless there has been no change in the spirit and aim of the society. The chief aim of the society from the beginning has been to meet the religious and spiritual wants of the Chinese people. Other societies may have other aims, and we wish them God-speed as long as they keep the instruction and elevation of the Chinese in view. China needs light on all conceivable subjects, and the more that is poured in the better. But what China needs above all else is Jesus Christ. Other things are important, but the spiritual must ever be the first and chiefest. Bearing this in mind, the society has endeavoured from the beginning to reach and influence the masses. The style of our books, though thoroughly good, is simple and intelligible. Our leading aim has been lucidity and definiteness. We never, if we can help it, sacrifice the meaning to the style. Some of our books are prepared in the literary style, and some in the Mandarin dialect, but whether in the one or the other our grand aim has been to make known to this people, in a language that cannot be mistaken, the gospel of the grace of God as revealed in Jesus Christ.

"In acting thus we have made no mistake, as witness our immense circulation. Including scriptures, over a million and a quarter of Christian books and tracts were issued from Hankow last year, and this is being done year by year. Witness also the sum of 2725 dols. subscribed in China last year, chiefly by missionaries, that is, by men who know the books and the good they are doing. God has given us a special work to do, and He will bless us if we trust in Him and continue faithful to our mission."

I then gave instances which had come under my notice recently, of men who showed a remarkable acquaintance with Christian truth, having obtained it entirely from the reading of books. Others gave other instances of equal interest; and before the close of the meeting, we all felt as we had never done before how greatly God had honoured and blessed the Tract Society in Central China.

It was a part of our programme for this year to publish annotated Gospels for circulation among the heathen. The missionaries in China had appealed again and again to the Bible Societies to provide annotated scriptures for this purpose, but in vain. Many missionaries, despairing of anything being done by the Bible Societies, have been urging the Central China Religious Tract Society to take the matter in hand, and, after much hesitation, it had resolved to do so. On January 22, whilst the annual report was in the press, a letter was received from the secretary of the National Bible Society of Scotland, stating that his society was now prepared to issue annotated Gospels, which, though not so full, should yet be similar in the main to the edition proposed by the Central China Religious Tract Society. Although it will very materially affect our plans for the year, we gladly relinquish the work to the National Bible Society, for the burden of such a work falls naturally rather to a Bible society than to a tract society, and because the work can be done much more efficiently by the former than by the latter. We feel, nevertheless, that there is a work to be done in the line of commentaries which no Bible society can possibly attempt, and that it is for us as a tract society to take it up. Our converts need greater help than they have at present in their efforts to understand the Word of God, and we hope soon to commence the publication of a series of commentaries which shall, in easy compass and simple language, meet this need. In this effort we ask for the practical sympathy and earnest prayers of all who take an interest in its work.

As to the action of the National Bible Society of Scotland, I can safely say that it has brought unmingled joy to many hearts in China. We have long been hoping and praying for this, and we cannot but rejoice in it as an answer to both. In taking this step the directors of the society have evinced a true insight into the needs of this people, and no small courage in trying to meet those needs. The notes to hand are on Mark's Gospel, and prepared by the directors themselves. They are simply explanatory, and in no way of a controversial character. Whilst they will be found of great value to the Chinese reader, they contain nothing that any lover of the Bible in the home lands could possibly object to. Personally, I could wish the notes were fuller, and I hope the day will come when fuller notes will be possible. In the meantime we accept these with grateful hearts, and congratulate the National Bible Society of Scotland in this honest and brave attempt to supply the people of China with the Word of God in an intelligible form. The movement is indeed a forward one, and of vital importance to Bible work in this land. It is my sincere hope that the other two societies will not be slow to follow in the footsteps of their younger sister. They have done a noble work in China in the past, but it is within their power to increase their influence a hundredfold.

Yours sincerely,

Griffith John.

WEST AFRICA.—The missionaries attached to the Mendi and Sherbro Mission, on the West Coast of Africa, have discovered an immense deposit of plumbago of the richest quality, and an extraordinary deposit of quicksilver, and some pearl and shell fisheries. A London mining engineer, Mr. V. Richards, has gone to report on these properties, and if the statements should be corroborated a syndicate will found a company to work these valuable concessions.

Apocalyptic Scenes.

By Sir S. Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

XIII.

THE FIRST FIVE SEALS.

The great drama now begins. The glorious anthem of the redeemed, of the angelic myriads, and of all creation, winding up with the deep "Amen" of the living ones "in the midst of the throne and round about the throne," has for the time died away. Silence has ensued, and the Lamb, once slain, but now living, Omnipotent and Omniscient, proceeds to undertake the great function for the discharge of which He alone in the universe has proved his worthiness. With what breathless attention must the enraptured though awe-struck seer have awaited the opening of that mysterious scroll, the breaking of its seals, the disclosure of the future till then hidden in the bosom of the Eternal God.

The first seal is opened, and, as with the sound of rolling thunder, one of the living ones utters the word of command to the first actor in the great procession which is to pass across the field of vision, "Come!" And there appears a snow-white horse, bestridden by one who bears the distinguishing marks of a bow and a chaplet, and is described as pursuing a course of uninterrupted victory. The horse, the bow, the crown, are all symbols. What mean they?

The horse, in this, as in the succeeding three seals, is the symbol of the then existing earthly empire, whose territory was the home of the Church of God, and the scene of her future history. Different world-empires had been already prefigured in prophecy under the varying symbols of a lion, a bear, a leopard, a wild beast, a ram, an he-goat, each having its particular appositeness in regard to the power which it denoted. Now a horse is chosen, the frequent designation of a heathen military power. (See Ezek. xv. 21, Jer. li. 21, Hagg. ii. 22, Zec. ix. 10.) It is the days of the Roman Empire, and a horse was one of its well-known heraldic or national symbols, just as a female figure with shield and trident is that of the British Empire. It was one of the Roman war-standards (Pliny x. 4; see also illustrative medal of the Emperor Augustus: Elliott, vol. i. p. 122), and a white horse was used by Roman generals in their triumphs. (Pliny, Panegyr. xxii., and Lactantius, De Morte Pers., cap. xvi. quoted by Elliott vol. i. p. 128.)

The rider carries a bow, and the fact is thus signified that the ruling dynasty springs from a race peculiarly identified with the bow as a national weapon. Such were the Cretans, whose manufacture and use of the bow were notorious. A bow on a tombstone denoted the Cretan nationality of the entombed one.

The family that gave imperial rulers to the Roman Empire, came from Crete. Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, and the two Antonines, unlike the twelve preceding Cæsars, who were almost all of old Roman families, were Cretans. The historian Aurelius Victor says, "Hitherto men of Roman or Italian origin ruled the empire; from after this time foreigners in extraction."

He also wears a stephanos, a laurel crown or chaplet. This is a peculiar note of time. The diadem or jewelled crown of later imperial days, had not yet been adopted. The emperors then wore the stephanos. The career of the dynasty referred to was one of almost uninterrupted victory without the empire, while peace and prosperity, symbolised by the snowy whiteness of the horse, reigned unbroken within its confines. What saith Gibbon, the able, though infidel, historian of the Roman Empire, and the most remarkable, because unconscious, expositor of much of its prophetic history, concerning those days? He describes it as a "golden age" of prosperity; a period in which "the vast extent of the Roman Empire was governed by absolute power under the guidance of wisdom and virtue"—a period "unstained by civil blood," and "undisturbed by revolution." He adds, "If a man were called to fix the period in the history of the world during which the condition of the human race was most happy and prosperous, he would, without hesitation, name that which elapsed from the death of Domitian to the accession of Commodus." The columns of Trajan and Antoninus Aurelius attest the almost uniformly triumphant wars of the period, commemorated, moreover, by medals bearing the very words "The going forth." The first seal was the prosperous period of the Roman Empire.

Another thunderous "Come" from one of the living ones, now peals through the air, and in obedience thereto appears a horse of blood-red colour. Instead of the "peace" that had prevailed, war, civil war, ensues; scenes of internecine strife are witnessed, and the symbol of military power—the short sword or machaira, but of exaggerated size, a "great machaira"—is in the horseman's hand. Military despotism, civil war, and bloodshed, are written upon the face of the vision in unmistakeable letters.

And what saith history? No fewer than thirteen emperors were slain in internal strifes during the 56 years from 193 A.D. to 249 A.D. They "killed one another." Gibbon commences his history of this period with the words, "The power of the sword." That sword was borne by the Pretorian Prefects as their badge of authority; they were publicly invested with it; here it was one of unnatural, undue size—"there was given unto him a great sword." It was to these Roman military chiefs that the wars and bloodshed of the period were almost exclusively owing, Says Gibbon: "The licentious fury of the Pretorian guards was the first symptom and cause of the decline of the Roman Empire."

The third actor is now summoned to appear, and lo! a black horse comes forth, its rider carrying the well-known emblems of justice and fair dealing, while a voice is heard from the seat of supreme control, giving the prices at which the necessaries of life are to be sold, and forbidding injustice in the traffic of oil and wine.

Again the meaning is not far to seek; it lies on the very surface of history. It was the era that commenced with the reign of Caracalla, who issued the memorable edict making the Roman city co-extensive with the empire, and thus imposing the taxes of citizens on the inhabitants of the provinces as well as their provincial tribute. The weight of taxation became intolerable. "The great body of Caracalla's subjects," writes Gibbon, "were oppressed by the aggravated taxes; and every part of the empire crushed under the weight of his iron sceptre." The edict was enforced by the provincial governors, or pretors, whose coins bore the emblems of a balance, an ear of wheat, and a corn measure. "The Roman world," says the historian again, "was darkened [notice the black horse] with the deadly shade" of oppression. Then it was that from the seat of supreme government the prophet hears a voice commanding fair dealing in the articles on which the taxes were levied, and naming the very prices at which they should be justly assessed. From the imperial throne of Alexander Severus were made the last authoritative attempts to remedy corruption and oppression. (See Elliott, vol. i., pp. 147-170.)

Once more the thunder shout is heard, and forth stalks a horse of livid hue; no human hand guides it; its ghastly rider bears the name of Death, and following in his train appears some symbolic representation of Hades, the world of the departed. A terrible scene is witnessed. Over a quarter of that part of the earth which is the scene of vision, death reigns supreme. Human strife, famine, and pestilences desolate its fair regions, and the wild beasts of the forests range round its cities and villages to take their prey from among the plague and famine stricken inhabitants.

Listen again to Gibbon, who, apparently unconscious that he is employing the very language of the Book that he derided, describes the period that immediately followed the death of Alexander Severus as "years of shame and misfortune, of confusion and calamity." "The ruined empire seemed to approach the last and fatal moment of its dissolution." He speaks of "the sword of barbarous invaders and military tyrants," of "the general famine," "the furious plague which raged without intermission for fifteen years, 5000 persons dying at one time daily in Rome," and adds that "war, pestilence, and famine had consumed, in a few years, the moiety of the human species." And it is recorded that the ravages of wild beasts over the depopulated portions of the empire had become a crying evil. Thus to each of God's "four sore judgments" (cf. Ezek. xiv. 21, and Jer. xv. 2) was allotted its own fourth part of the desolations of the rapidly dissolving Empire.

And now the scene changes. The prophet's glance is directed, not to the terrestrial landscape, but to the precincts of the temple. The place of sacrifice, the altar, is the foremost object, and at its feet—around it—is a company of the noble army of martyrs. There is something about them—what we are not told—which declares their history. They have laid down their lives in their steadfast devotedness to the Word of God, and because of their outspoken testimony, which even the fiercest persecution could not silence. A cry of irrepressible yearning for the manifestation of God's righteous judgment bursts from the multitude of slain, yet living ones; and the answer comes that it is only delayed till they, who were still in the heat of battle on earth, and who were likewise, with others to follow, to seal their testimony with their blood, should have played their glorious part in the conflict with the powers of evil. They are publicly invested with snow-white garments, and stand faultless and unblemished in the eyes of all. Their memory, once universally aspersed and vilified, is now as widely honoured.

The "Era of Martyrs," pre-eminently thus distinguished, had set in. The Empire, revived for a time under Diocletian and others, entered upon a course of most terrible persecution, designed to exterminate Christianity. Christian blood was shed throughout the extent of the Roman world; for worship the servants of Christ met in the catacombs; their only public witnessing was by martyrdom; and at the end of the ten years of the persecutions the three Emperors, Diocletian, Maximian, and Galerius, raised pillars commemorative of their success. Christianity was believed to have been destroyed. And the blood of the saints cried, like Abel's, for vengeance. For it was not so much that the martyrs themselves invoked judgments on their persecutors (though there were some who, like Tertullian and Cyprian, expected, and in a way predicted, them), as that their deaths called for the vindication of the justice of God. Then were they, who laid down their lives for the truth, led to anticipate that in due time justice would be done, but ere that could take place, other persecutions unto death, under the Antichrist whose advent they expected on the downfall of the Empire, must arise and complete the heroic roll.

Thus far the first five seals.

DR. JOHN G. PATON'S MOVEMENTS.

As many friends of the beloved missionary, learning that he is expected in Britain shortly, are anxious that he should take part in several of the forthcoming "May meetings," and have been repeatedly inquiring regarding his movements, it may prevent misunderstanding and disappointment if you kindly allow me to intimate, through your columns, that, so far as I can judge, his engagements in America render it quite impossible that he can be in London at that season. Not only the importance and number of these claims, and their extraordinary returns in support of the New Hebrides Mission, seem to justify his remaining in the United States, but other matters also required his presence. His evidence against an alleged impostor, at Buffalo, professing to be an agent of the Victorian Church, is imperatively required some time in April. And the change of Government at Washington makes him anxious to secure, before leaving the U.S.A., some definite action of the authorities re trading in fire arms and intoxicants in the South Pacific. I have in these circumstances, though with much regret, to request that organisers of public meetings shall not count on his presence, much less advertise it, without some definite authority, as creating unnecessary disappointment, and perhaps misunderstanding.

As my faithful co-worker and friend, Mr. A. K. Langridge, the organiser of the "John G. Paton Mission Fund," has now, to my great joy and that of my beloved brother, given up other Christian work in order to devote his whole leisure after business hours to the New Hebrides Mission, he will, as hon. secretary (address, Hartland, Wilson-road, Southend, Essex), be happy to answer all inquiries, and arrange for any public meetings which it may be found possible for my brother to hold when he comes amongst us; which, God willing, I hope may be ere very long now.

THIS MAN RECEIVETH SINNERS.

BY REV. R. BALGARNIE.

As an evidence that the Lord Jesus is still receiving such, a striking instance may be given. Two years have elapsed since a mission was held at Spalding, when a well-known farmer and cattle dealer came to the services. His life had been spent in sin; he was the terror of the neighbourhood. No small surprise was evinced when he one night took a seat in the corner of the Drill Hall. There the Lord met him, and the word of conviction went to his heart. He was melted into penitence, and cried, as it were, "Carry me out of the host, for I am wounded." At the close of the address he came into the inquiry room, and, as we both knelt together, he there and then gave himself up to Christ.

When the fact became known it was received with incredulity. One said, "The thing is impossible." Another said, "I have a warrant out against him for poaching." A third said, "I dreaded meeting him in the street, or seeing him in my shop." The evidence of the great change soon became apparent. His boon companions, missing him at their orgies, tried to win him back, but prevailed not. Night after night he returned to the meetings, bringing with him his family and farm-servants, evidently intent that they too should be saved.

At the last service he stood up with many, and testified what the Lord had done for him. He told of the prayers of a godly mother and daughter; of his long-continued rebellion against God; of the wondrous love of Christ in seeking and finding him. Then he poured out his heart in prayer for the conversion of all his household. Many exclaimed, "Is it not wonderful? If this man can be converted no one need despair." I am glad to state that when the person who had taken out the summons against him heard of this blessed change he promptly withdrew it.

The question is frequently put, Will such converts stand? Permit me to give proof in the affirmative, and as a sequel to the above narrative.

Last week I was conducting a week's mission at Holbeach, a town about eight miles from Spalding. On the market day it was arranged that an open-air service should be held for the sake of people from the country. On my way to it, a well-to-do-looking farmer came up and grasped my hand with tears in his eyes. It was my old friend referred to, who, having obtained help of God, continued in the upward way. His face was an index of his mind, for it beamed with joy. His voice was full of praise for what the Lord had done for him. His personal appearance was that of one in whom old things had passed away and all things had become new. He stood up with me in the market place and gave noble testimony for Christ which will be long remembered. Addressing those who knew him, he said, "I have often in this town stood up for the devil; now I am proud to stand up for Christ. You all know that I was the biggest sinner in this part of the country, but the Lord hath pardoned my sins and made me a new man. I cannot tell you the joy I feel, or the change it has produced in my character and life. I want you all to come to Christ. Come and drink of the water of life, and you shall never thirst. I would not change my present experience for all that the world could give."

One man in passing sneered at him. "Ah, my friend," he said, "I understand that sneer. We have often been together in the ways of death; I wish you would join me in the way of life." A poor-looking drover who knew him said, "Give me twopence for a night's lodging." He replied, "Oh, man, I'll give you a new suit of clothes and twopence into the bargain, if you will give yourself to Christ." It was late after the evening service when he started for home, and as he drove off he said, "I have often left this place at midnight in a state of intoxication. Twice I had a narrow escape from death on the way, but, glory be to God, I am in the service of Christ now, and on my way to heaven. Good-bye till we meet again."

THE GOSPEL CARAVAN (Rev. F. Horace Newton, director) started on its work for the present season on Good Friday at Amersham. During the evening two Gospel services were held at different points in the town. The services were continued over Saturday, Sunday, and Easter Monday. In all, ten meetings were conducted during the four days. It is intended to move forward next to Kingshill, Wendover, Great Missenden, etc., etc.

THE SONG OF THE SHOP-GIRL.

A very heart-moving cartoon appears in last week's Punch, entitled "Her Day of Rest, the Song of a Shop-girl." The words of a shop-girl, quoted by Sir John Lubbock in his recent speech in the House of Commons on early closing, are given as follows:—"After the fatigue and worry of the week I am so thoroughly worn out that my only thought is to rest on Sunday; but it goes too quickly, and the other days drag on so slowly." The cartoon represents a young woman of thin and pallid countenance who has fallen asleep on a couch, while The Leisure Hour, which she has been essaying to read, has dropped from her hand to the floor. We give some portions of the accompanying poem:—

Oh, that inexorable weariness
That through the enfeebled flesh lays crushing stress
  On the young spirit! Young? There is no youth
  For such as I. It dies, in very truth,
At the first touch of the taskmaster's hand.
A doctrine hard for you to understand,
  Gay sisters of the primrose path,
Whose only chain is as a flowery band
  The toil that outstays nature hath
A palsying power, a chilling force
Which freezes youth at its fresh source.
    Only the Comus wand
Of an unhallowed Pleasure offers such
Freedom, and with pollution in its touch.
    The languid lift
Of head from pillow tells us the good gift
Of Sabbath rest is more than half in vain.
  Tired! Tired! In flesh, bone, brain,
  Heart, fancy, pulse, and nerve!
Such is our doom who stand and serve
The unregarding public, thoughtless they
  Of slaves whose souls they slay!

Oh, that long standing—standing—standing yet!
With the flesh sick, the inmost soul a-fret,
  Pale, pulseless patiences, our very sex,
That should be a protection, one more load
  To lade, and chafe, and vex.
No tired ox urged to tramping by the goad
  Feels a more mutely-maddening weariness
Than we white, black-garbed, spectral, girls who stand
Stonily smiling on while ladies grand,
  Easily seated, idly turn and toss
  The samples; and our Watcher, 'neath the gloss
Of courtly smugness glaring menace, stalks
About us, creaking cruelty as he walks.

  . . . . This all too fleeting day
To rest is dedicate. But not the rest
Of brightened spirit and of lightened breast.
The dull, dead, half-inanimate leaden crouch
Of sheer exhaustion on this shabby couch
    Is all my week's repose.
  Read? But the tired eyes close,
The book from nerveless fingers drops;
  Almost the slow heart stops.
But the clock halts not on its restless round.
Weariness shudders at the whirring sound,
    As the sharp strike declares
    Swift to its closing wears
One more of those brief interludes from toil
Which leave us still the labour-despot's spoil,
  Slaves of long hours and unrelaxing strain,
  Unstrengthened and unsolaced, soon again
  To tread the round and lift the lengthening chain;
Stand—till hysteria lays its hideous clutch
On our girl-hearts, or epilepsy's touch
  Thrills through tired nerves and palsied brain.
    Again—again—again!
How long? Till Death, upon its kindly quest,
    Gives a true Day of Rest!

SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH.—The thirty-fourth annual report shows that this agency still carries on its excellent work of supplying text rolls, cards, etc., to missions, hospitals, waiting rooms, etc. The report says:—"The directors of the Great North of Scotland Railway, one of the very few lines hitherto unsupplied with the society's publications, have kindly granted permission for the placing of Scripture rolls and handbooks in their waiting rooms. The attention of the committee has of late been given to work in London, in relation to the exhibition of their text rolls in refreshment rooms. They are happy to add that encouragement in this branch of work has been given to them through the proprietors of some of these establishments." The depot of the society is at 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne; Mr. W. Brown being secretary.

MR. MEYER AT CHRIST CHURCH.

In his magazine, The Christian Treasury, for April, Rev. F. B. Meyer has the following among other personal notes relating to his pastorate at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road:—Jurston Hall is open every day, with a supply of daily papers for unemployed working men to see the advertisements. About 550 visit it every week, and there seems some special blessing resting on the place, as so many obtain work. But the cost of fire and attendant and cleaning is considerable. Outside Christ Church we now exhibit, four evenings a week, lantern views, consisting of texts and Scripture scenes, together with the advertisements of our meetings. The initial cost of erecting this has been extremely heavy, far more so than I expected, and there is a constant need of money to supply new slides and daily working expenses (apart from the operator). The needs of the neighbourhood are deplorably great. Scores of families, into whose cases we investigate, are constantly on the verge of pauperism. I shall be, therefore, thankful to receive any gifts sent direct to me at Christ Church.

We have still much to be thankful for in the congregations and the spirit of our people. Each meeting has its special interest, and all seem to be sharing in a graciously rising tide. This, rather than any sudden or extraordinary manifestation of blessing, seems just now to characterise the work.

All readers of this magazine who may be in London during the May meetings are specially invited to come to the quiet morning service on Thursdays at 11.30. A considerable number of Christians of various churches are gathering there, week by week, and the cold collation afterwards furnishes an opportunity of social intercourse.

Mr. Moody has invited me to go again to help him, and take part in his great campaign at Chicago. For some reasons I should greatly have enjoyed the opportunities which such an unusual concourse of Christians will afford, but I am rather hoping to be able to spend a quiet month for physical, intellectual, and spiritual recruitment, as the work of this first year at Christ Church has taxed me to the very uttermost, and with my two recent journeys to the States in my vacations I have practically lost my usual rest time; and it is a growing desire with me to be able, so far as I can, to fulfil the great opportunities of service which are now opening around me.

In the midst of a life crowded with continuous work it is very sweet to come across seed which you have counted lost or dead, but which appears after many days; and it was extremely gratifying to hear of an altercation which took place in a small field last autumn. A missionary overheard a number of rough men decrying parsons generally, when one of the group spoke out in favour of the man, who years before had met him at the prison-gate in Leicester, and had put him on the path of a better life. Thank God! One does not seek these testimonies, but it is very pleasant to have them in this roundabout and unpremeditated fashion.

A correspondent of The Christian World, describing a visit to Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, on Sunday evening, remarks:—The congregation was a good one—indeed, the church was nearly full. There was a considerable working-class element—a large number of men, and a noticeable proportion of young men, with a good sprinkling of poor folk—untidy women in aprons and shawls, men in dirty, slouchy clothes. Mr. Meyer's discourse was given without any reference to notes, and in a style that was perfect of its kind, and full of the art that conceals art. There was a ring of passionate sincerity in every sentence, a tone almost tearful in its intensity now and then, and a wonderful variety of phrase and illustration. The power of the preacher over his listeners was very marked. Scarcely one stirred or coughed. Intent, absorbed faces were everywhere, and now and again a sudden movement or change of manner in the preacher evoked a sort of physical response from his audience.

WELCOME HOME.—The informal way in which the musters of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew" are conducted seems to produce a unity of spirit. At the last muster many had to stand at the door of the fo'c's'le for want of space inside. Among the speakers were Colonel MacGregor, Messrs. Cameron, Jay, Luff, and others. Miss Child gave the text for the month, Phil. iv. 7, and spoke with gratitude to God of the progress of the work among the sailors.

FROM DEATH TO LIFE.

On a cold Sunday in March, 'neath the bare branches of a grand old oak in a park of one of our large cities, where the wind whistled and earth showed the loss of her flowers, sat a little girl with tangled tresses of gold, a sad baby face, and a look of longing in her deep blue eyes.

Hearing the clock from a neighbouring church tell the hour of five, she sprang from the seat where she had paused to catch the last rays of the setting sun, and hurrying along was soon outside the great gates, and making her way through the crowded streets. Suddenly she hesitated, and, stooping, caught a tiny brown object, which was being tossed about and bruised by careless feet. Clasping it to her bosom she hurried on, and soon reaching a poor dwelling in a back street, hastened up the miserable stairs. Pushing open a door, she went softly in, taking with her a breath of fresh air and sunshine to the poor, close room.

Glancing at a bed in the corner of the room, and seeing that its occupant was sleeping, she hastily emptied an old box and left the room. Soon she was back again, and busied herself picking the sticks and pebbles from the earth with which the box was now filled. She dug a hole in the soil, but hesitated, and soon decided not to bury the bulb, for this had proved to be her treasure, until her sick father awoke. This he soon did, and opening his eyes, fastened them languidly on the child who eight years before had been left to him by his young wife.

He lay for a time recalling his happy home of the past before the cruel fever came, taking away his dear wife and leaving him paralysed, with only little Ethel to brighten his dark pathway.

Ethel, seeing her father awake, drew a rickety chair near the bed, and holding the piece of lifeless-looking root in her hand, began to tell in her sweet, childish way a wonderful story her Sunday-school teacher had only this morning related to her. How the soul, oftentimes encased in a weak, shrivelled body like the flower inside the bulb, will burst its bonds and spring forth the most beautiful of all God's creations.

The man manifested no interest either in her story or the bulb, and the child, accustomed to his apathetic moods, buried the little root without receiving a word in reply.

Day by day she watered the earth and watched for signs of inward life in the bulb, but at last, after patient waiting, she grew discouraged and lost faith in it, as well as in the hope founded on the story told by her Sunday-school teacher.

But one day, happening to peep under the bed, where she had hidden her box in disgust, she beheld a tiny green sprout shooting from the earth.

Her father, having long ago forgotten about the bulb, was as much surprised as she to see the tender green, and, to make the child happy, promised to watch over it during the day while she was serving as cash-girl in one of the smaller stores. Ethel explained to him that her teacher taught them that unless the soul was watched over every hour, it would grow unfit for the heaven to which it might possibly come at last, and so she thought it must be the same with the flower.

Day by day as the plant increased in size her father's interest deepened, until when tiny white buds showed themselves beneath their tender covering of green he was almost as much pleased as Ethel.

When the spring came and the air became warm and pleasant he would move his pillow near the open window, and during the long days would secretly admire the flower and almost believe that as its fragrance rose to heaven it could understand and comfort him. Somehow his heart gradually underwent a change. A love and longing for better things filled his soul, and by degrees blossomed out as buds blossom into flowers.

Months have now gone by, and though still a suffering invalid he is not the same unsympathetic companion, but tries to brighten the hard path of his little Ethel. Often in the cool evenings, after work, a little group of her friends who have heard of the wonderful flower gather round the window and listen to the low, sympathetic tones of the sick man as he tells them how through the silent influence of this pure messenger there had crept into his heart a sunshine never known before. He tells them how the flower had seemed to come from death to life, and that the same wonderful thing will be possible for them some time in the happy future.—New York Observer.

FRIEDENHEIM.

"And Jesus, perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child . . And said unto them, Whosoever shall receive this child in my name receiveth Me; and whosoever shall receive Me receiveth Him that sent Me." (Luke ix. 47, 48.)

These were the strikingly beautiful and appropriate words in the "Children's Scripture Union" portion for July 12, 1892, read that morning at the little gathering for family prayers at Friedenheim, and at noon the first patient (a child of ten) was received into the home. Beatrice Tucker had been an inmate of the old Friedenheim. She left in July, 1891, much recovered, but had a very suffering winter, and as the season advanced got worse and worse. She heard of the purchase of the new Friedenheim, and her great longing was to see it, and that it should be "ready" to take her in. Morning after morning she would ask her mother, "Do you think there will be a letter from Miss Davidson to-day, to say the new home is ready?" And at length, when hot summer days came, and the poor mother was nearly worn out with day and night watching, Miss Davidson could resist the promptings of her heart no longer to bring the child out of the small close room to the fresh air and bright surrounding of Sunnyside, where she was herself living, with no paper on the walls, no carpets on the floors, and with only two young servants and the caretakers. She called to say she thought it could be arranged. The move was safely accomplished, and the 12th July found little Beatrice resting radiant and happy in beautiful Sunnyside. "This is a big house," she exclaimed, as she was carried half fainting up the wide staircase; and "My! aint it lovely?" she often repeated, as her eyes rested on the green trees and bright lawn, which she could see from her bed.

She lived only four days, but was perfectly conscious to the very last, and delighted in all the attention and kindness she received from everyone in the house, and from many outside. Though very suffering and weary, she never murmured or complained; only now and then would plaintively ask, "Oh! when will Jesus come? I do want Him to come!" One day when the doctor came in the forenoon, she fixed her great earnest eyes upon him, and said very solemnly, "I know a Doctor who can make me quite well, and He's coming very soon." In the course of the day she said, "I'm very rich; I'm not poor Beattie, I'm so happy; Jesus is quite near." Later she said with such a bright smile, "I think I see Him coming; He'll soon be here."

Wednesday night was one of great increase of illness, though the child maintained that she had "no pain, because Jesus had taken it away." She asked so frequently for Miss Davidson that about 4 a.m. Mrs. Tucker, thinking the end was near, went to fetch her, and for hours the child seemed half in heaven. She often asked, "Please repeat some texts to me," and seemed to breathe them in, assenting or commenting on almost every clause; for instance: 1 John i. 7, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin"; "all sin," she repeated; "not a little bit." Ps. xxiii., "I shall not want"; "I do not want," she emphatically asserted. "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil"; "I do not fear." "For Thou art with me"; "He is." "Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me"; "They do."..." Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life;" "Only a few more days of life for me," and so on.

Looking lovingly at Miss Davidson she said (referring to the old home), "It was so good of Miss Brain to bring me to you; you taught me to know Jesus, and you never would let me forget Him. What would I do without Him now? I would have had to bear all this, and I don't know how I could have done it without Him."

Many friends had sent flowers, and in the night she asked particularly that some red and white sweet peas might be brought to her. She evidently connected them in her mind with Isa. i. 18: "Jesu's blood and righteousness." Putting aside the scarlet, she whispered, "Not the red ones now; my white flowers. I shall be like these soon."

Very sweet was the faith and very clear was the testimony of the dying child to the "living bright reality" of the presence of the Saviour in that sick room. "He was there!" and no wonder that those who watched her felt it was indeed the consecration of the new Friedenheim.

She passed away about nine o'clock on Saturday evening, July 16, but the "Beatrice" bed in the "Ina" Ward will often recall the memory of the little girl whose brief sojourn did so much to encourage and cheer the workers in a time of waiting and difficulty, and to remind them that Jesus still perceives "the thoughts of their hearts," that He does indeed reveal Himself, and still teaches practical and needed lessons through his little ones.

A MISSION AT DONCASTER.

Throughout the whole of the meetings conducted by Mr. E. Arrowsmith there was an abundant evidence of the Holy Spirit's working. Both the boys' and girls' meetings were well attended, and many new members were added to the Scripture Union. Of the boys' work we can speak with the deepest thankfulness to God. At each meeting numbers of fellows decided for Christ, and by the end of the mission quite a noble army of boys had rallied round the banner of the Lord and Saviour of all.

The meeting on the last Thursday evening was one never to be forgotten by those who were present, boy after boy rising to testify what Christ had become to him. It was a soul-stirring sight to see and hear of so many young lives consecrated to God. May they stand firm, and be a mighty blessing in their day and generation! N. B.

SPEAK KINDLY.

Speak kindly, for our days are all too few
For any angry strife;
There is deep meaning, if we only knew,
In our brief life.
No nobler mission can be ours, if we
A pang can stay;
Or if amidst the rush of tears we see,
Wipe one away.

Speak kindly. Gracious words, God sent, God given,
Are never lost;
They come all fragrant with the breath of Heaven,
Yet nothing cost.
Kind words are like kind acts: they steal along
Life's hidden springs;
Then in the darkest storm some little song
The sad heart sings.

Speak kindly, graciously, for all around
Are pains and smarts;
The very air is full of moans and sound
Of breaking hearts.
Seek, seek to bind them up at once did He,
Thy gracious Lord;
Then surely will his hand bestow on thee
A bright reward.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—A goodly muster of the Christian Harbour Lights, consisting of sailors and others, took place on Thursday evening, under the presidency of Mr. George Lampard, at the Temporary Seamen's Chapel, Well-street, London Docks, E. Cheering addresses were given by the chairman, Rev. G. J. Hill, and others; and a number of bright and encouraging testimonies were given by those who had been led to walk in the paths of peace through the efforts of the missionaries attached to this and kindred institutions. At the conclusion pledges were taken, and a petition in favour of the Direct Veto Bill was signed by members and friends.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 16.—1 CHRON. XXIV.

The sons of Aaron were the priesthood of the Temple. They were carefully divided into courses, and the order and work of each course determined by lot. In other words, there was a direct appeal made to God as to the specific work which any member of the priestly band should perform. The work itself had been designated by Aaron, but its allocation to any individual was settled by the lot. Thus there could be no ground for envy or discontent. Let us not doubt that the same direct interposition of God obtains in the Church still. God has not only created us in Christ Jesus to work, but has prepared the work for us to do. Let it be the one ambition of our life to discover what it is. If we received our plan from God each day we should not clash with others, and there would be no ground for heart-burning.

Only eight of the twenty-four courses were from the house of Ithamar, showing that Eli's sin had wrought sad havoc in the ranks of his descendants, as had been foretold through the child Samuel. An instance of the slowness and sureness with which God's mills grind.

The Levites also cast lots for their work. Nothing was left to chance. Each star had its appointed orbit. "To every man his work." We have no need to trust to the casting of a lot, because if we have presented our bodies as an acceptable sacrifice to God, we shall prove what is his acceptable and perfect will.

MONDAY, APRIL 17.—1 CHRON. XXV.

The service of praise came next in the attention of David. Praise was looked on as a distinct branch of work (1). And the singers are classed as prophets. How significant is the statement of the third verse that they prophesied in giving thanks and praising the Lord. We do not make enough of the service of praise in our own secret prayers, or homes. There is no lack of hymnology, but singing hymns does not always edify the saints or glorify God. We should ever keep these two objects before us (Eph. v. 19; Col. iii. 16).

What a happy family Heman's must have been. The whole fourteen sons and three daughters seem to have been musical, and each had mastery of an instrument of music. There is nothing which will tend more to unite and elevate family life than sacred song and minstrelsy. If children show any signs of possessing faculty in these directions, it should be trained. Let all Christians lay out their musical talents for the service of the house of God. "Take my voice and let me sing." There was evident care taken to instruct and train natural gift (7).

In the case of the singers also, the lot was appealed to. Neither age, nor rank, nor proficiency was allowed to settle the question of precedence. All was determined by God. The lot was cast into the lap, but God disposed it. Oh that there were this reference to God's will in all choirs, and amongst all Christian workers!

TUESDAY, APRIL 18.—1 CHRON. XXVI.

The porters had important functions to perform (1—19). Some of them were specially distinguished for their strength and bravery. "Able men in strength for the service." Each man, whether singer or porter, was specially qualified for the work he was called to render. So it is still. God makes all grace abound toward us, so that we may have sufficiency in all things and abound. Whatever be the duty you are clearly called to you may claim appropriate grace for.

The treasurers also claim attention (20—38). The spoil of battles built the temple. Let us learn to use for God his lessons and victories of our conflicts with sin and Satan. This is the best way of utilising some of the saddest hours of life. How carefully does the Holy Ghost preserve the names of those who have dedicated aught to the service of God. Samuel, Saul, Abner, and Joab are not forgotten. Our prayers and alms are had in remembrance before God. We, too, are stewards. God's truth, the hidden things of his kingdom, our property, and the precious talents with which we are endued, are all put under our care for administration.

Officers and judges were also needed (29—32). Those who could not sing or perform heavier work were able to serve in the office of administering justice. See how twice over (30, 32) the business of Jehovah is classed with the service of the king. The most trivial act performed by any of these for the king was accepted as done to God.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19.—1 CHRON. XXVII.

Captains were appointed for every month (1—15). They were chosen from those who had performed great feats of personal valour. Those who have done great exploits are God's chosen leaders. Oh soul, arouse thee, and gird thyself with strength, and go forth to dare and do great things for God; so shalt thou show thyself fit to be a leader in God's host. These captaincies must have dated from David's reign in Hebron, for Asahel is mentioned, who died there. If these arrangements were so complete, what will not be the ordered ranks and array of the celestial armies when they descend from heaven with a shout!

The Princes of the Tribes (16—24).—For some unexplained reason, Gad and Asher are not included in this list. But Abner's son was head of Benjamin. And there is further mention of David's sin in numbering the people. The results of that census were never officially recorded; the statement of 2 Sam. xxiv. was probably culled from tradition and report.

The officers of David's Court were an important body (25—34). He had much tillage—vineyards, olive yards, herds, camels, and other possessions, carefully administered. In addition to these were his private friends and advisers. In what rank or order do we stand? Is our name written in the Book of the chronicles of the kingdom of heaven? Singer, door-keeper, captain, or friend? And are we faithful to Him who has appointed us?

THURSDAY, APRIL 20.—1 CHRON. XXVIII.

It was not presumption but humble faith which prompted David to speak of the Divine choice of himself and his house. Whenever we can get back to what God has said or done for us, we need not hesitate to appropriate it with thanksgiving, and to take our stand on it. The presumption would be if we failed to give God credit for his purposes of love. We are established when we are constant. We must not only observe, but seek out all the commandments of God. The consciousness that we are chosen of God to do a work for Him is no reason why we should become careless and indolent, but an argument for us to be strong and do it. Our first duty is to know God and serve Him. He searches all hearts and understands all imaginations; therefore let us serve Him with a perfect heart, i.e., with entire devotion.

David received the pattern of the temple of imagination from God; and it covered not only the courts and larger buildings, but the size and shape of the bowls, flesh-hooks, basons, and cups. Nothing was left to the device of man. What a suggestion as to the wisest and best course for building up the temple of character and life. When we know we are on God's plan we may well be strong. Who can stay us when we are prosecuting his purposes? He will not fail nor forsake us so long as we are engaged in performing his will.

FRIDAY, APRIL 21.—1 CHRON. XXIX.

Whatever you do for the house of God, do it with all your might. See that you build into the temple gold, silver, and precious stones. Give your own treasures to it, your children as well as your possessions. It is when you have done your best and uttermost, that you can appeal for help from others. It is from a consecrated life that the only moving appeal can go forth for consecration.

How much there is throughout this chapter of willing offering, and the joy which always follows it. People always rejoice when they offer willingly and with a perfect heart. And out of such acts the grandest praise and blessing are ascribed to God. David rejoiced with great joy, and blessed the Lord. Perhaps our praises and joys would flow more easily, if we preceded them by acts of consecration and devotion. Whatever you give God, was first his gift to you. All you are and have is by his arrangement. He makes great and gives strength. But the more we receive the humbler we become. The solemn act of consecration was followed by a feast with great gladness. The tides of joy rolled in with marvellous volume, sweeping over the rejoicing nation.

SATURDAY, APRIL 22.—2 CHRON. I.

When God is with us, we must be strong. "Be strengthened in the grace that is in Christ Jesus." God is with us, as long as we are with Him. He remembers his covenant, the sure mercies of David.

Still God says to us. Ask what I shall give. The Gospels are full of the exhortations of our Lord for us to ask and receive, that our joy may be full. But too often we use our opportunities in prayer selfishly for our own emolument and profit. Like Christ, we have power to turn stones into bread, but unlike Him, we use them for ourselves. Solomon's eye was more single than ours. He sought, as we often fail to do, the Kingdom of God and his righteousness as his first concern, and all other things were added to Him. Let us be more eager for God and the service of men than for ourselves, and we shall have all we need for life and godliness. It is not an easy thing to go out and come in, we need as much grace for the home as for the business and the State. But there is abundance of grace for all our needs in the Good Shepherd, for whom his sheep go out and come in and find pastures.

Solomon's magnificence was great, but in all his glory he was excelled by the flowers of the field; and our Lord who came not to be ministered to, but to minister is greater far.

JOB'S CONFESSION AND RESTORATION.—Job xlii. 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT. James v. 11.

Job's three friends have all been silenced, and another has spoken (xxxii. 1,2). We cannot, with any certainty, identify Elihu. By a comparison of Gen. xxii. 21 with Jer. xxv. 23, we learn that Buz was the nephew of Abraham, and that the country of Buz was close to Tema. This would associate him, both as to time and locality, with Eliphaz. He was a younger man than the other three (xxxii. 6), and during the previous discussion had sat by, saying nothing, but thinking much and feeling deeply. He seemed to speak as one charged with a divine message (xxxiii. 1-7). His address closes with a description of a storm (xxxvii.) which was gathering while he spoke. The storm marked the approach of God Himself. With his coming Elihu ceases, and the voice of the Lord is heard (xxxviii.—xli.). His address differs from that of all the other speakers. Its theme is not Job, but God himself in his works of wisdom and power. He does not, as the rest had done, reproach Job with his sin, yet he produces the effect which they sought for in vain. By turning Job's thought from himself to God, He made Job feel and confess his sin (xl. 3-5). He best knows himself who knows God.

It has been noted that God does not directly answer the problem that Job and his friends had discussed. Mystery still remains, but Job is reconciled to it, and his complaints are silenced when the wonderful works of God in Nature are presented to him. It is not in getting rid of all mystery, but in the acknowledgment of our own ignorance and of the infinite wisdom and goodness of God, that the soul finds rest.

JOB'S CONFESSION (1-6).—There are two sides to it—first, what God is, and next, what Job himself is. A right view of God, as doing all things and executing all his purposes (2), makes him plead guilty to having arrogantly inquired into matters that were too deep for him (3, 4). He had proved, not that God's ways were wrong, but that he was too ignorant to understand them, and too proud to know and acknowledge his ignorance. Twice Job quotes from the address of God (xxxviii. 2, 3, and xl. 7), and confesses that he had done what God's word implied. Hence his contrite and humble spirit (5, 6). He is not less a saint when he speaks thus than when God bore such valuable testimony to him (i. 8).

THE THREE FRIENDS REPROVED (7-9).—The confession of Job does not imply that he had been wrong and his friends right in their discussion. The sin which troubles him the most is not that of which his friends had accused him, but that of which he had been guilty in seeking to defend himself against their false charges. Eliphaz, as the eldest of the three, is addressed in these words of severe reproof. It is with them, and not with Job, as they had falsely declared that God is angry. Had they not spoken sincerely? True; but none the less were their words wrong. They had misrepresented God, and had added to the anguish of Job. Forgiveness must be based on atonement (8). Their offerings were an expression of their guilt, and of their ill-desert. Why demand also the prayers of Job? Because they had wronged him, and their offering to God could not be acceptable until they had acknowledged their wrong to him (see Matt. v. 23, 24).

JOB'S RESTORATION (10).—It is described as a turning of his captivity. During his severe affliction he had been as one exiled from God, enduring the loss of everything in the loss of Him. His life was bitter as that of those in bondage under a hard taskmaster. Deliverance came when "He prayed for his friends." It was no mean proof of his true piety that he could make such cruel friends the subjects of his earnest intercession.

Temporal restoration followed (11-17). "Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof." The way of God's dealings with Job cannot be understood unless the end is kept in view.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

God's work in Nature, the theme of his message to Job. Dr. Danton says:—"God hath never left the world without witness of Himself. He has engraven his name upon his works, as those that make watches put their names on them; or as he that carved a buckler for Minerva so curiously inlaid his own name that it could not be erased without defacing the whole work."

A gentleman being asked to go with a friend to see a grand building erected by Sir Christopher Wren, desired to be excused, that he might continue to look on a flower he held in his hand. "I see more of God," said he, "in this flower than in all the beautiful edifices in the world."

Job's Confession.—Bradford the martyr, yet subscribes himself "a sinner." They who confess no sin are not only sinners, but ignorant. If they knew God better they would see their sin more clearly. The tree must grow downward as well as upward.

Rabbi Lichtenstein.

BY REV. DAVID BARON.

Many of God's people who have taken a prayerful interest in Rabbi Lichtenstein will be rejoiced to learn that this Jewish witness for Christ, so evidently raised up of God, is now on a brief visit to England. He comes at the invitation of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, in order to afford him an opportunity of learning something of Christian life in this country, which we trust will be made a blessing to him, and also that we may get what help we can from him, for at least a month, in efforts to evangelise the ever-increasing Jewish community in London, numbering now about 100,000. His addresses in the large Central Hall, Philpot-street, E., are being listened to by numbers of Jews with great respect and attention, his gentle, persuasive style and manner, and the essentially Jewish basis of his arguments in favour of "Our Messiah, Our Brother and King," disarming all opposition, and preparing Jewish hearts for the reception of the incorruptible seed of the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

His address on "the Passover," delivered to a large company of Jews on Wednesday evening, March 29, will not soon be forgotten by those who heard it. He reminded his hearers that once our fathers had the blood of the lamb to shelter them, but how has it been these many centuries past? Has Israel been Holiness to the Lord? Has the angel of destruction passed by Jewish houses? Alas! for all these many centuries, Israel has been like to Egypt on that memorable night. Everywhere there has been "LAMENTATION AND MOURNING, AND WOE."

There has not been a house but what there has been one dead in it! But why? What is this great curse? For what reason does it rest upon us? In our Midrash, there is to be found the following tradition:—After the destruction of the first temple by Nebuzaradan, he one day walked over the ruins, and came across a spot where blood kept welling up from the ground. He called together a number of the priests and elders of the people who remained, and asked them to explain its meaning; and they answered him that it was the place where the altar of sacrifice had stood, and that this was the blood of the animals which had been slain. The captain of the guard then commanded animals to be slain, but on comparing found that the blood which still bubbled up from the ground was not the blood of beasts. He appealed again to the priests to tell him the meaning of this, and in great consternation they had to confess that it was the blood of Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, the high priest, whom they had slain between the sanctuary and the altar. Thereupon the tyrant commanded the assembled priests to be slain, that their blood might be mingled with it; but still the blood kept oozing up. He then had a great company of men, women, and children brought to the spot, and indiscriminately massacred, hoping thereby to appease the vengeance for which the blood was crying, but still the blood kept welling up. At last even the heart of the tyrant was touched with compassion, and he exclaimed, "O, God of the Jews, will Thine anger against this people never rest? Wilt Thou that, for this sin, the whole nation be exterminated?" Then the blood ceased to ooze up, and was at rest.

"Now," said Rabbi Lichtenstein, "what is this but a parable of

THE BLOOD OF OUR MESSIAH?

Many centuries ago our fathers cried, 'His blood be on us and on our children,' and ever since the voice of our Brother's blood has cried against us unto God from the ground. Our city has been destroyed, and our sanctuary laid waste; our old men have been trodden in the mire of the street: our sons and our daughters have fallen by the sword; and still the blood of our Brother Jesus is crying out against us, and the vengeance of God will not rest. 'How long, O Lord, wilt Thou be angry with Thy people? How long?' Until their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they acquiesce in the punishment of their iniquity; until Israel shall bemoan this great crime, and say, 'We are verily guilty concerning our Brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when He besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us.' Then shall this precious blood, instead of crying out against us shelter us like the blood of the Passover, so that the angel of destruction shall no more enter our dwellings."

To hear a man with the voice and outer garb of a Rabbi speak in this style, is indeed a new thing, and marvellous in our eyes. It is already known to your readers that he resigned his office as District Rabbi of Tapio Szele, after having held it over forty years, six years of which were after his public confession of Christ. His resignation was against the wish of his congregation, many of whom have been led by him to accept the teaching of the New Testament; but he was led to this step because he could no longer bear to see the sufferings of his people, some of whom have been ruined in their business, and persecuted in other ways because of their attachment to him. He also wishes to be more free to speak and write for the Lord Jesus, in a manner that he could not do while holding office, and connected with the Jewish cultus. But by doing this the old man, now sixty-eight years of age, has, like our father Abraham,

STEPPED OUT ON THE WORD OF GOD,

not knowing whither he goes. Efforts have been made from time to time to win him for this or that church or society, including the Papacy, which sent a special emissary to him with all sorts of tempting offers, if he would join the Romish community and remove to Rome.

It has been my privilege to know Rabbi Lichtenstein from the beginning, having been several times with him in his own home; and it is my strong conviction that it would be a great loss to the cause of the Gospel among the Jews, were he to join any church or missionary organisation. This is what his enemies among the Jews themselves urged him to do from the beginning. They said, "If you believe in Christ, and cannot help speaking about Him, why do you not drop your title of Rabbi, resign your position, and join the Christian Church?" They well knew that immediately he did so his influence would, for the most part, be gone. His answer has always been, "No; no one can say that I have no right to believe in our Jewish Messiah as a Jew, and as a Rabbi."

This independent position, outside the churches, yet with a desire to help all, he earnestly wishes to maintain, and we are anxious to strengthen his heart and hands in this resolution. Surely it need only to be made known that he has in his old age, for the Namesake of Christ, given up everything, and is now, with his wife, in lack of all things, for Christian hearts to be moved with a generous impulse to minister to his needs, which are not many, to enable him still, independently, to speak and write of Him, "who is the Light to enlighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel."

BY REV. E. O. C. ROEDER.

A fortnight ago Rabbi Lichtenstein, with whom I had been in brotherly correspondence for some time, sent for me. The welcome he gave me was most affectionate—embracing me as a father. He explained his position, and gave me the reasons why he could not be baptized, adding: "I have a work to do as a Rabbi, and should I be baptized, or join any society, my sphere of labour would at once be narrowed." A large number of letters which he showed me, from Rabbis, Jewish teachers, doctors, etc., proved to me that there was much truth in his remark. Last August I wrote to him, advising him to follow the command of our Lord and be baptized. His answer was: "I come from a stiff-necked people, a very stubborn family, and I am resolved not to join any church, as I can serve my Master and my Jewish people better in my present condition."

During our interview he said: "Since the publication of my pamphlets and my decided preaching of Christ as the Messiah, the Jews have shown a spirit of inquiry after Christ and the Gospel, which would astonish anyone visiting Hungary. Do you see these letters which I have received from all parts of the Austrian empire, written to me by Jews, educated and ignorant, rich and poor, old and young, asking my counsel and expressing their desire to know more of my teaching? All this, I believe, would cease should I join a church. Had I studied my ease and comfort surely I would have accepted some of the generous offers made to me by different societies, but

and work on my own lines. For forty years I have been a well-to-do Rabbi, but since I have publicly witnessed for the Truth I have been so persecuted that I had to resign my rabbinate. The illness of my beloved wife, and also of myself for months past, has not improved my position; but my wants are so few that if I am not able to have my heart's desire fulfilled by working amongst my people in Budapest, I shall retire to a small village, where I can live for very little, and do what I can for the Lord, who surely will not forsake me."

The Rabbi is a man of faith, as the following little incident will show. From his recent severe illness he is still very weak, and when embarking at Hamburg for England, his first sea journey, the captain asked him if he was afraid. He replied, "I sail under the Captain who is able to say to the waters, 'Peace be still,' and under his guidance I shall be safe." Wonderful was the voyage, so calm that even in his weak state of health he was not sea-sick; so peaceful were the waters that he was regarded by many on board as a prophet. I have been deeply moved by his simple faith, and his boldness, though so feeble, in declaring the unsearchable riches of Christ.

I will close by giving you a few extracts from his last publication, entitled, "What do I Really Want?" It was first written, five years ago, as an answer to a touching letter from his son, Dr. Emmanuel Lichtenstein. In the letter referred to, the son asks him again to examine the contents of his pamphlets, and advises him, with filial love, to weigh in the golden scale every word and every expression,—to examine his past life and his holy calling as Rabbi. "Should your conscience," added the son, "reproach you, that in your zeal, in your simplicity, you have gone too far, then give the glory to the God of Israel, and, on cool reflection, retract what you have written in the heat of your fantasy. But should you still hold your belief true, and consider it to be the healthy fruit of your ripe meditation—let me then beg of you to give me further teaching, as your devoted and much beloved son and disciple."

The answer to this letter is very interesting, and gives the Rabbi's account of his faith in Christ, and his position towards Judaism. "Study the Bible minutely," he says;

"READ CAREFULLY THE PROPHETS;

try, without prejudice, to understand the New Testament, and you will be convinced that the eternal truths contained in the Old and New Testaments are inseparably interwoven; that they complete one another, as a diamond does a precious ring, the sheltering roof a house, the golden cupola a dome, the branches a tree. Christianity is the pulsation, the vital power, which will give to dying Judaism new life, light, power, colour, and freshness. What I want is, that the Jews, as Jews, should arouse from their lethargy, apathy, and exclusiveness—that like Moses they should stand at the entrance of the camp, and call in trumpet tones—'Come ye that belong to the Lord!' 'Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus' (Rev. xiv. 12)... What do I want? I want to show Jesus in his heavenly glory, in his Divinity, exalted, and great as eternity. I want to proclaim Him as Saviour, as Messiah, as the Prince of Peace, and my witnesses shall be, yea must be, those who call themselves by his glorious name—Christians. Christians, true Christians, anointed and dedicated for the Lord."

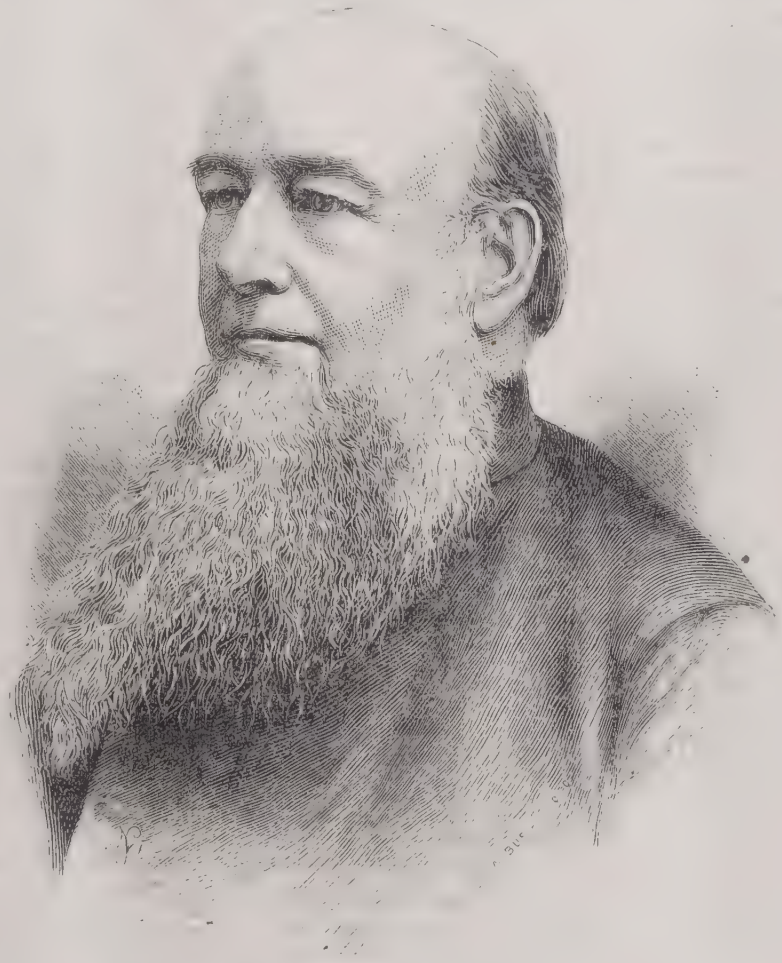
VILLAGE CONFERENCE.—We would remind all interested in village work of the conference to be held at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, 186, Aldersgate-street, on Wednesday next, April 19, at 3 and 7 p.m., on "Work in our Villages." Messrs. J. E. Taylor, T. Heley, G. D. Shipley, Captain Moorhouse, and others will take part.

"THE PROMISED MESSIAH."—The very useful Scripture handbook with this title, which is designed to prove to Jews that Jesus is the promised Messiah, had hardly been published, four years ago, when it was pronounced a work that ought to be translated into Hebrew. It has been issued in Judæo-German, and thus been made accessible to a large section of the Hebrew community. Mr. M. S. Bergmann, of the London City Mission, is preparing a Hebrew version, which will be specially suited for circulation among the more cultured classes of Jews—Rabbis, teachers, students, etc. The work is being revised by Rev. A. Bernstein, of the London Jews' Society; and as soon as sufficient funds are forthcoming, it will go to press. A committee is superintending the enterprise, which has been explained in a circular, of which copies may be had from Major Giberne, 5, Hyde Gardens, Eastbourne

REV. THOMAS EVANS,

INDIAN MISSIONARY AND REFORMER.

THE subject of our sketch this week is a veteran in Gospel testimony and labour in the interest of national righteousness in India.



Thomas Evans was born in 1826, and lived until fourteen years of age in the ancient and picturesque little seaport town of Newport, Pembrokeshire. His father was a sea captain, and seldom at home; but a Godly mother trained the child in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. These holy influences early made a deep and last impression.

At the age of fourteen the lad joined his father at sea, and was in due course well grounded in the practical arts of seamanship and the mysteries of navigation. All along there was a disposition to exercise his gift in the Christian ministry; but for a while the charms of sea life held the young heart. Leaving his father's side, he became chief officer of another vessel, sailing from the Welsh principality. When twenty-two years of age he began to preach, and then under very peculiar circumstances. In the summer of that year, while at Cronstadt, in Russia, he found himself face to face with the horrors of the cholera plague. The fell disease made terrible havoc among the people in St. Petersburg and Cronstadt. The sailors being in a state of panic, Mr. Evans proposed a religious service on board ship; many attended, and as God's care and blessing were invoked, their fears were set at rest. Shortly afterwards, a severe thunderstorm passed over the region, and the cholera at once died out.

With his mind seriously exercised as to whether God wished him to exchange the seafaring life for the Christian ministry, he arrived at Liverpool in September, 1848, with the intention of returning to his home in Cardigan Bay, when the master of a ship bound for the coast of Palestine begged him to accompany him as chief officer. As he had a desire to see the Holy Land he consented, but the voyage was disastrously unpropitious. The ship struck on a reef of rocks in the Bay of St. Jean d'Acre, and sank, the crew having a narrow escape of losing their lives. Protected by an escort of Turkish mounted soldiers, they proceeded to Beyrout, whence they went by steamer to Alexandria. Here they were put into quarantine, and while in that confinement Mr. Evans resolved to give his spared life to the work of preaching Christ among the heathen.

Going home he entered Pontypool Theological College, and, after a course of study, accepted, in 1853 an invitation to the pastorate of "The Tabernacle" church at Pontypool. Here he laboured for two years, in the course of which time he was married. The state of his mind at this time, and his subsequent movements, were thus described by himself in a biographical sketch written a few years ago:

My mind was not at ease. I felt that I was (from fear of the sacrifice) shirking the mission of my life, and setting aside my solemn vow in Alexandria. I resolved to apply for mission work, and leave the issue in the hands of the missionary committee in London. I was cordially received, and resolved to go abroad wherever the committee would send me. I was inclined towards Syria or Africa, but I was asked to go to India.

(From a Photograph by Mr. A. Bust.)

In March, 1855, I sailed from Liverpool in the good ship William Carey, in company with two other Baptist missionaries, for Calcutta. After being a month on sea, I was plunged into deep, deep, sorrow by the death of my beloved wife. This was the first great trial of my life. The sudden blow stunned me, and for some days I had but one wish, and that was to die. But the Lord spoke, and I rose to the resolve to serve Him and make no more idols for self.

Mr. Evans's first station was the holy Hindu city of Muttra, where he began to preach in the vernacular after a few months' study. As time went on, employing no other tongue for months together, he became more apt and free in the use of Hindi than in English or his native Welsh. He proceeds with his story:—

The Lord shone into my soul, and filled my bereaved heart with his own precious love. I was supremely happy in my work, when, like a thunderclap, the awful Mutiny of the Sepoy Bengal Army drove me for refuge to the Fort in Agra. My house in Muttra, with all it contained, was burnt to the ground. I had a narrow escape of my life, and saved two articles precious to me—my Welsh Bible, and my "Bethel" flag which was used in Cronstadt, and which I had, at the risk of my life, snatched from my cabin just before the ship sank in the Bay of St. Jean d'Acre. All the rest, books, MSS., &c., were consumed in the flames of the Mutiny.

In the Fort of Agra I spent ten months, and just after I was married again, and ready to return to my station, a fire in the Fort consumed all I had—even the Bible and the "Bethel" flag I could not rescue; but we had to run for life at 2 a.m., without time to dress or save any article whatever. We all expected the powder magazine to take fire and blow us up together. But God saved me again. After a while I was again able to return to Muttra, where I found nothing of my property but an empty tin box!

In 1861 I went to Delhi, and as the rains had failed the year before, there was a severe famine. I was asked by Government to become secretary of the famine fund, and about five lakhs of rupees (£50,000) were spent to save the starving people who flocked in by thousands for food to Delhi. This extra work involved extra labour and extra exposure to the burning heat of the sun. This brought on fever, which disabled me, and in 1863 I had to return to England for a change.

Muttra is noted for its "Chowbees"—Brahmins ever on the watch to "spoil" pilgrims on a visit to the birthplace of Krishna. Mr. Evans relates with joy an encounter he had with these gentry between thirty and forty years ago. He says:—

Preaching in the bazaar to a band of pilgrims who evidently heard the Gospel for the first time, I was able to persuade them to turn back and not go any further on, to be robbed by the "Chowbees" at each shrine round the circles of the sacred land known there as "Brig." The "Chowbees" were enraged, but I succeeded; and no sooner had the leaders consulted the band and turned to go back than the holy (?) Muttra Brahmins hurled the vilest oaths and curses at the poor sheep whom they longed to fleece well, as they would lead them on from one shrine to another. This event in my Muttra life I have always regarded as an instance of singular success, and the more so as I got the same people to purchase several copies of God's Word to take home with them to a far-off part of the country.

After visiting many churches in the homeland, stirring up interest in mission work, Mr. Evans returned to India in good health. He officiated for a year as pastor of Circular-road Baptist Church, Calcutta, and then went up to Allahabad, where he laboured for seven years. While preaching in the open air at a large Hindu fair on the banks of the Ganges he had a sunstroke, from which he suffers to this day. Later on, having again visited Britain, he settled at Monghyr, where, labouring earnestly in season out of season for the cause of Christ, he remained until 1885, when, on account of ill-health, he retired from active mission service. In the meantime he had thrown his energies into the cause of temperance reform in India. He writes:—

I had before taken an interest in the opium traffic, but not in the liquor trade. The starting of the new system of "out-stills" led me to see the great increase of drinking among the people of India. I appealed to Lord Lytton and to the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, but to no purpose. The system paid, and paid well, the Government, though it ruined the people; and I was as "a voice in the wilderness" till Sir Rivers Thompson became the ruler of Bengal. He, being a man who feared God, heard the cry of drink distress, and nobly introduced a reform. But this was, after all, but partial. I wrote now to the papers in England, and Mr. Samuel Smith asked me for the further information, which I sent with pleasure. This led to the formation of the "Anglo-Indian Temperance Association," and that led to Mr. Caine's visit to India, which again led to the noble vote in the House of Commons on April 30, 1889, when the Excise administration in India was condemned by a majority of ten votes.

This work of public instruction and agitation still engages his heart and head, as occasional communications from his pen in our columns bear ample witness. He finds some comfort in the fact that Government has introduced measures of reform, and that the people are waking up to a sense of India's danger through the drink traffic; but he is by no means content as yet. He has several times been round the whole of India, and the success already realised inspires him with courage and hope to see yet greater victories over the drink demon in a land where, at one time, water-drinking prevailed.

Mr. Evans has written and published much against the liquor and opium traffics, and among his other works is one entitled "The Hand of God in the Indian Mutiny of 1857." We trust he will long be spared to prosecute his important mission in India.

MR. T. E. MURPHY.

For nearly five weeks this gentleman and his wife have been pleading the cause of gospel temperance in Hartford, Ct., closing with a great meeting at the Foot Guard Armoury. Among the tangible results of the work are 15,000 signers to the pledge, and a great awakening of the public to the interests of temperance. Multitudes have been converted to Mr. Murphy's plan of work. He takes no part in the politics of the subject, though believing strongly in no licence, but simply presents the importance of "closing the bar behind one's own nose," and the Lord Jesus Christ as the drunkard's only hope.

He came to Hartford after remarkable success in New Haven and Meriden, as well as in other parts of the country. Hartford certainly received him heartily, and the ministers with few exceptions gave personal endorsement of the movement. The first three weeks of the meetings were held at the First Baptist Church, and that large edifice was densely packed every night, and many times hundreds were turned away. During the last two weeks the services were at the Fourth Congregational Church, a much smaller building, but the crowds came just the same. Certainly the success of the meetings has been far beyond what was expected, and Mr. and Mrs. Murphy leave with the prayers and best wishes of thousands of our people.—Religious Herald.

BIBLE LANDS.

In order to meet the present necessities of the case, there has been a rearrangement of the work of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, the title of which is now altered to "Bible Lands Missions Aid Society," as being more comprehensive and appropriate. The growing infirmities of years has induced the secretary, Rev. T. W. Brown, D.D., to place his resignation in the hands of the committee, and he retires from his post after eleven years of earnest service, carrying with him the heartiest respect of his fellow-workers.

In view of the need of lessened cost of management, the office of secretary has been undertaken by Rev. W. A. Essery, without emolument. The offices of the society have been moved back to 7, Adam-street, Adelphi. The committee, of which Lord Kinnaird is chairman, earnestly appeal to the Christian public to support them in aiding all who labour in Bible lands to gather the lost into the fold of Christ.

Temperance Work in India.

As I promised in my last letter, I now give a résumé of my temperance crusade in the north of India during the last four months. I began this year in the extreme north of the Punjaub at Rawal Pindi. Between that place and Lahore I was able within a month to organise eight new associations, comprising a membership of over 2000 names. At one station alone—Gujranwala—I got nearly 400 pledges, and as this was my first visit to the north of Lahore, I felt that the success in breaking up new ground was very encouraging.

I am happy to be able to say that at all stations I visited in the Punjaub I received not only much personal kindness, but also cordial sympathy and practical aid, from brethren of all sections of mission work. To each and all of these I hereby tender my grateful thanks, for I feel that much of the success realised was due to their kindly efforts, and I was also glad to find that they were all total abstainers, as indeed every mission agent in India ought to be, for the natives of this country have no idea of "moderation" in the indulgence of liquor. They drink in order to get drunk, and they think others do the same.

In my last letter I told you about the Rajah of Ulwar, and the tragedy resulting from his love of liquor. In Gujranwala I was told that the late "Lion of the Punjaub," the bold and the brave Runjeet Singh, who almost proved more than a match to the English in the conquest of the Punjaub, was himself conquered and died at a comparatively early age from indulgence in liquor. Yea, more, it may not be much known that the three sons of the celebrated Akbar—the greatest of the Mogul Emperors in India—Moorad, Jahanghir, and Daniel, all died from drink; the first and the last killed themselves with liquor while Akbar was still alive, the other fell a victim to the same demon while yet Emperor of India. Thus we see that the demon regards no class or creed; all who come within the fatal grip of his clutches (if Divine power does not interpose) are crushed to death. And yet men will go on and say, "I can drink without danger"!

In Lahore, as usual, I had splendid meetings and good results. We have here a noble band of missionaries, led by the veteran Dr. Forman, who are enthusiastic in all sorts of good words and works. Lahore is one of our most successful centres in India, and they now speak of putting up a temperance hall, a temperance journal, and a temperance preacher.

Next to the Punjaub, my success this winter has been greatest in East Bengal. There also a number of new societies have been opened, with several hundreds of members. Your readers will perhaps know that my work is almost exclusively among the natives, many of whom, I am sorry to say, have of late, from all classes, taken to drinking habits, and the work carried on by the Anglo-Indian Temperance Association in London, of which Mr. Caine is the hon. sec., is the first systematic effort put forth to check the rising tide of drinking among the people of India. And when I tell you that we have now no less than a hundred associations, with about 100,000 members, in connection with this organisation, you will have some idea of the amount of good done in the course of some four years, and I am glad to be able to say that the good work is progressing more and more, and that chiefly among the higher classes.

In Benares, where we have the strong influence of a native Brahmin on our side, combined with the devotion of a noble missionary, a grand work has been done among the lower orders, and some thousands of men have given up the liquor and taken to milk instead.

I am just now, in concert with a truly Christian gentleman, Mr. R. N. Anderson, of the Dehra Doon Tea Estate, making a move among the labourers of the tea gardens in the neighbourhood, and we hope to-day (March 15), after a number of preliminary meetings, at a general assembly of the labourers to secure some hundreds of pledges. This is quite a new movement, and I hope it may spread and prosper in many tea gardens in India, for the poor people, who have but a paltry pay, spend much of their hard earnings in that which destroys them. I hope the managers of other industries in rural India may be led to imitate and emulate the tea planters of Dehra Doon, who manifest such noble interest in the well-being of the people under them, and I only wish we had a strong agent who could give the whole of his time and efforts to this new line of temperance work in India.

The noble example made by the committee of the Anglo-Indian Society in London might well be followed by others who take an interest in the welfare of the people of India, who are in no small danger of sinking into the terrible vortex of drunkenness, and once India sinks in there will be but faint hopes of its ever getting out of such a fearful pit of corruption—for the people of this country sadly lack in moral courage and manly spirit to escape out of the bonds of such a gigantic demon as the drink crave.

In all lands the motto, "Prevention is better than cure" applies to indulgence in strong drink, but doubly so in India. So what we do here should be done quickly, else it will be too late once the flood of the destructive drink deluge rushes into and over the country. We have made a small beginning, but if we consider the extent and the magnitude of the evil it is but very small so far, and we sadly need the helping hands and the talking hearts of other advocates who will round our blue flag and fight to the death against the army of Bacchus in this land of heathen superstition, where pride and passion rule and reign.

Who will come to the rescue? I have no time now to say how much this social movement tends to prepare the people for the reception of the Gospel of the grace of God, but that it is so I have evidence in abundance.

THORNE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The annual meeting of this mission was held at Exeter Hall last Friday evening, April 7, Mr. George Williams in the chair. Mr. Thorne read a very interesting and encouraging report of the year's work in all parts of the country, which had been attended with the most satisfactory results. Mr. J. Pearce, the sec., gave the financial statement, showing that the expenses had been met, with a small balance in hand. He referred to the repeated testimony he received; he read from a letter from Chester, which stated that as the result of Mr. Thorne's mission, 100 persons would be added to the churches in that city.

Mr. George Williams expressed his thankfulness to God for the results of the work. Rev. P. S. O'Brien, D.D., Camden Church, Camberwell, and Rev. James Paterson, Belgrave Presbyterian Church, addressed the meeting on some of the features and striking results of Mr. Thorne's work; they were followed by Mr. Josiah Goodman, of Upper Clapton. Mr. S. E. Burrell, of the Edinburgh Castle, gave testimony of the good work in connection with Dr. Barnardo's work, in February. Mr. Hodges and Mr. Leighton, of Brompton and Fulham, alluded to the blessing of Mr. Thorne's influence in their families.

SAILORS' REST, DEVONPORT.

On Friday afternoon the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh, attended by Col. Clarke and Flag-Lieutenant Colin Keppel, visited Miss Weston's Sailors' Rest, Devonport. They were received by Miss Wintz, in the absence of Miss Weston, who escorted their Royal Highnesses round the establishment.

The Prince of Wales expressed himself delighted with all that he saw, and specially admired the cabins. He made the following entry in the visitors' book: "I am much impressed by the admirable management and excellence of this institution.—Albert Edward." On leaving H.R.H. presented £10 to the funds of the Sailors' Rest.

THE CONGREGATIONAL MARTYRS.

The three-hundredth anniversary was celebrated last week of the martyrdom of Henry Barrowe, John Greenwood, and John Penry, who were hanged for refusing to recognise the reigning sovereign as head of the Church—in other words, for objecting to State interference with religious liberty. Speaking on Thursday in the City Temple, Dr. Parker maintained that if Congregationalism were only a polity it would have no martyrs, but it is a doctrine for which men have laid down their lives.

In the evening a large public meeting was held in the same building. Rev. H. Storer Toms, of Enfield, chairman of the London Congregational Union, presided, and in the course of an address, opening up history of three centuries ago, said that the conception of the martyrs was that the Church of Christ should be composed of spiritual men—believers; and in their main contentions the Congregationalists of to-day are in complete agreement with them. Rev. W. H. Harwood remarked that the kind of English history that is usually studied is largely responsible for the popular ignorance about such men as Penry, Greenwood, and Barrowe. Some histories say more about a king's mistress than a religious reformer.

Rev. W. Pierce, of Tollington Park, followed with an address in which he drew a parallel between the early history of the Christian Church and the Separatists of Elizabethan times, and said that he and the men of this generation do not mean to be gagged by respectability. The Rev. J. Guinness Rogers described Barrowe and Greenwood as being "butchered to make a prelate's holiday."

On Saturday afternoon nearly 10,000 persons met in Hyde Park. A procession was formed, and shortly before four o'clock, headed by a band, left the Ladies' Mile, and started across the park towards the Reformers' Tree, carrying a white banner, on which were these words in black letters, with a border of the same colour, "In Memory of Barrowe, Greenwood, and Penry, who died in the cause of Liberty and Truth 300 years ago." At the Reformers' Tree three wagons were grouped to form the platform. Within a few hundred yards is the place were Barrowe and Greenwood were executed. Penry met his death close to the spot now occupied by Maze Pond Chapel, Old Kent-road.

After the singing of Luther's hymn, and prayer led by Rev. W. Pierce, the chairman, Mr. Thomas Ellis, M.P., delivered a suitable address, in the course of which he remarked that in the minds of Welshmen there is a special tenderness for Penry, a native of Wales, who used these words in his last testament:—"If my blood were an ocean sea, and every drop therein were a life unto me, I would give them all, by the help of the Lord, for the maintenance of this my confession."

Rev. Dr. Clifford moved a resolution in the following terms:—"That we who are here assembled (representing Free Churches of London) gratefully commemorate the heroic martyrs of our faith, who died in vindication of our religious privileges three hundred years ago; that we recognise, with devout thankfulness to God, the blessings won for all the people by their fidelity; and that we solemnly pledge ourselves strenuously to maintain the heritage committed unto us, and steadfastly to labour for the perfecting of religious liberty, the spread of religious truth, and the promotion of Christian righteousness and brotherhood among our fellow men." Who, he asked, now talks about the sovereign's supremacy over the conscience? It was death to dispute it 300 years ago, but men scorn it now.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in seconding the motion, spoke specially to the young people present, saying that Penry, just before his death, sent a pathetic letter to his children, entreating them to retain to the end of their days the principles for which their father's blood was going to be shed.

Addresses in support of the resolution were delivered by Revs. Peddr Williams and C. Sylvester Horne. The resolution was carried amid cheers, and afterwards the hymn "God bless our native land" was sung, and the proceedings closed with the benediction, given by Rev. A. Mearns.

BRISTOL.—A proposal to open the Museum and Free Libraries of Bristol on the Lord's Day is being strenuously opposed by some leading Christians in the city. A public meeting will be held on the subject on the 20th inst.

CONFERENCE IN PERSIA.

BY J. H. SHEDD, D.D.

One of the most delightful of the duties of a missionary is to gather the workers and with them study the Word of the Master, and wait upon Him for power from on high. Such an occasion we missionaries greatly enjoyed last week. Fifty of our workers, mostly young men, were here at the college in a three days' conference. The general theme was "The Service of Christ." Many of the phases of this wide and blessed theme were presented. First in influence were the Bible readings, seven in number, on (1) the essentials of this service; (2) the traits of the Master we are to imitate; (3) the promises of the Master; (4) the warnings; (5) the incitements; (6) the methods of the Master; (7) how one servant worked. God speaks, and his words falling, verse after verse, into the heart, have a very deep effect. This effect was manifest in all the reading, and deepest of all at the last, as the example of Paul came before us. The keynote of his service, "Whose I am, and whom I serve"; the way he began his work by asking for directions; how he followed on step by step, under divine guidance; his witnessing, preaching, touring, staying in city after city; his obedience to church rules and fellowship; his building up believers; his pluck and resource in trial and persecution and prison; his tears, sufferings, endurance, triumphant faith and last entreaties seemed but a vivid picture of what we should be and what some are in this service of Christ. Such a view brought tears to many eyes and a fuller consecration to many hearts.

Four excellent sermons gave other views of the same Christlike service. Two of these sermons, by pastors of leading churches, were so full of pathos and power that we must thank God and take courage.

Seven other topics for short papers and discussions filled up the plan of instruction. Many prayers, and prayerful waiting for the promise of the Father, filled up the time of the three days, closing with a very full and tender consecration meeting and the communion of the Lord's Supper. The light of more love to Christ was on every face as the brethren passed out from these three days of sitting in heavenly places to their work.

Already the results are appearing. One of our pastors returned to his church, which has been sadly divided for months past. He preached on Sunday; but what a difference! It must be that the Spirit of Christ spoke through him, for at the close of the service the brethren who had been estranged rushed to his embrace, and with tears and confessions their bitterness and strife melted into a renewal of their old-time love.

In another case the brethren had been sadly remiss in paying up for church and pastor. Three of the young men went from the conference and undertook the job, and from house to house found a delightful response and cleared off the deficiency. Another case of conscience in the conference led the brother to confess his sin in breaking his temperance pledge, and to go home to pour out his wine. If the streets in a hundred villages flowed full of wine poured out, the greatest obstacle to the Gospel this winter would be removed. While we were in our conference the bishop of the Old Church was marrying his nephew to a little girl of ten years. A whole week of drums and fifes, heathenish revelry, and dancing, and drinking wine, till, as the phrase here is, "the very walls were drunk," was so scandalous that the Anglicans would not attend the wedding, though they encourage the use of wine. Evil and good are in close conflict.

Among the means to build up character and quicken the faith and zeal of real workers, I know of none better than such a conference. We expect to hear of greater fruits from it as months go by.—N.Y. Independent.

MR. C. E. FAITHFULL, of the Seamen's Rest, Marseilles, is advocating the provision of floating libraries for vessels plying regularly between particular ports. Since his recent tour on the Riviera, he has determined to do something in this direction. He writes: "The Pure Literature Society of Paris has promised fifty volumes as a first instalment, but as each box will cost 10s., I can only begin with six, hoping to increase fourfold when more means and books are forthcoming." The reading rooms of the Rest are much frequented by men of many nationalities. The address is 38, Quai du Port, Marseilles.

REVIVAL AT MINNEAPOLIS.

The Mills meetings in Minneapolis, says an American paper, commenced on March 8. Mr. Mills was assisted by Dr. Chapman, with Mr. and Mrs. Low and Mr. Hillis as singers. Rev. Ralph Gillam assisted Mr. Mills in following up individual cases. The first service was held in the Emmanuel Baptist Church, where over 1,600 people were present. At the same time Dr. Chapman addressed an audience at Hope Chapel. The regular meetings commenced on Thursday morning at the Westminster Presbyterian Church. While much of the attendance was attributed to curiosity, it was still evident that from the very beginning the interest had taken hold deeply upon all, and the pastors joined hands most cordially in the work. The organisation was as complete as possible. Those engaged in the active committee work of canvassing and advertising, as well as the ushers and singers, comprised at the very commencement nearly 2,000 persons, and as the meetings continued their numbers increased.

The general course of Mr. Mills in other places of conducting meetings, especially for the different classes, was carried out with excellent results. One of the most interesting meetings for men was that held in the Swedish Tabernacle. Each day the audience seemed to grow larger, notwithstanding that some fierce storms interfered not a little with attendance; and it was at last decided to transfer the meetings to the great Exposition Hall, which would seat comfortably over 7000 people, and by a little packing could hold 8000 without much inconvenience. Noonday meetings of great interest and value were held in Century Hall. One unique departure from the usual custom was that of having an all-night meeting, beginning at eleven o'clock and lasting until morning; Mr. Mills and his workers were present. Another was an arrangement for a sort of day nursery, where mothers who wished to attend, but could not leave their children at home, could bring them and put them in the charge of ladies who would care for them while the mothers attended the meetings. Estimates made after the evangelists had been at work a little more than a week, showed that over 3000 persons had professed conversion, and the movement still kept on.

On the 20th the meetings developed into an interdenominational Christian convention, for which invitations had been sent to the ministers throughout that section. Pastors and elders to the number of over 500, from almost every portion of Minnesota and the surrounding States, flocked to the city. The first meeting of the convention, in distinction from the Mills meetings, was given up largely to reports by different pastors on the results of the work. The second day's convention discussed chiefly the essential qualifications necessary for good and effective service, the topic of the day being Christian Service, Preparation, and Reward, based upon the passage, "Of his fulness have all we received." Dr. Chapman delivered a final address on the subject, which was followed by shorter addresses by others. In the evening the great auditorium of the Exposition Hall was thrown open. The choir was enlarged so that it included nearly 2000 voices, and 700 ushers and fifty doorkeepers were in attendance.

The third day's meeting of the convention had for its topic Entire Consecration. Short addresses were made by a number of persons, and the meeting was followed by a consecration service. During the service blanks were passed around in the audience for any who wished to write down questions upon the subject, which Mr. Mills would answer. Over a hundred were handed in, and over half-an-hour was taken in answering. The convention closed on the 23rd, but Mr. Mills continued the meetings, most of them being held in the auditorium.

SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY.—A well attended meeting of this national maritime relief organisation was held on Friday at the Board Room 28, Great George-street, Westminster, under the presidency of Admiral E. S. Adeane. The urgent and general relief issues sanctioned for the past month embraced 806 shipwrecked or distressed mariners, fishermen, and bereaved dependents belonging to 90 missing or wrecked ocean-going, coasting, and fishing vessels. Additional relief grants were also sanctioned to 311 widows and orphans already borne upon the society's special distress list.

A LIVE MISSION.

Garscube Hall, 243, Garscube-road, is one of the most active centres of Christian effort in Glasgow. The pastor, Mr. D. J. Findlay, is lovingly and loyally supported by Mrs. Findlay, and a large staff of earnest workers, who seem to have imbibed in a large measure the characteristic spirit of their chief. We had long heard of this "beehive" by the hearing of the ear, but recently we had the privilege of spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Findlay, and of witnessing the good work that is being done under their leadership.

What with prayer meetings, early and late; meetings for young men, maidens, and children; evangelistic meetings, open-air services, tent meetings, and special missions, Garscube Hall is the headquarters of a very live work for God, that has proved greatly disconcerting to the enemy of souls. Lord's Day and week-days, indoors and out, the year through, Mr. Findlay and his colleagues keep pegging away at the strongholds of sin, and the slain of the Lord have been many. To see those who have been snatched from the burning, with faces transfigured with holy joy; to hear them sing with full hearts and voices the sweet songs of Zion; to listen to their earnest wrestlings in prayer for their former comrades; or to stand around in the open-air, while one after another pleads in words full of the tenderest concern for souls, is to realise perhaps more than one ever realised before the transforming power of the Gospel of Christ.

One noteworthy feature of the work is that it is all voluntary. Both pastor and people give their services gratuitously, and such has been the success that for long the capacious hall has persistently refused to admit all who are drawn, like cold air to a furnace, to this centre of heat and light, where a crucified and risen Christ is faithfully uplifted. Working bands are constantly hiving off, and other centres are being formed with manifest blessing to new neighbourhoods.

At the present moment there is a special mission on at the hall, the evangelist being Mr. John Currie. At times he moves his large audiences to tears, and again convulses them by his humorous and dramatic touches. He seems the evangelist par excellence for the working man. Knowing all the chinks in their armour, he turns himself loose and goes for their souls. At the opening service of the mission, at which the writer was present, five stood up to profess conversion, and night by night the saving work is continued. R. C.

MR. WM. NOBBS IN MILE END.

Mr. Wm. Nobbs has concluded a month's mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. He is one of the few evangelists now left who have taken a month's mission periodically for some years. It is only natural that such men should have a great many friends who welcome their return year b year. Many are those who owe their conversion and present happy lives to these honoured men who give themselves to the Lord's work, and travel land and sea to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Mr. Nobbs has been much blessed during this visit; his addresses to believers have been especially helpful. Those who regularly listened to his Sunday morning addresses have expressed their appreciation of the blessed opportunities afforded them of drinking in precious truths, which, treasured up, will often in the future give comfort and consolation in the time of trouble and difficulty.

Notwithstanding the exceptionally genial weather during March, weather likely to attract people out-of-doors, the meetings have been well attended. On Sunday evenings, as usual, the hall has been filled with nearly 5,000 persons. At one of these services Lord Radstock led the vast congregation in prayer, and at the after-meeting gave a very earnest appeal to the anxious to decide for Christ. Many went into the inquiry room, and professed to find peace in the Lord Jesus.

SERMON LANE MISSION.—May we appeal to the readers of The Christian to help us in the distribution of Gospel books and tracts in this very needy district. We have recently formed a "Tract Distributing Band," who every week visit 600 families in their homes, and have already had much to cheer us in this work. Plain unsectarian Gospel books or tracts will be most acceptable.

A Y.M.C.A. MISSIONARY MEETING.

A missionary meeting of a deeply interesting character was held at the Y.M.C.A., Cornhill, E.C., on Thursday evening, April 6. Mr. W. H. Seagram, who presided, stated that he believed the Y.M.C.A. was to play an important part in the future of foreign missions. More young men are wanted in the field like Mackay, Fred Arnot, and McKittrick, who had been among the pioneers of mission work in Africa.

Mr. F. W. K. Gulston, who has been seven years in China, said he had received his business training (which afterwards proved to be of the utmost value in China) in the centre of the City of London. He had been a member of the Y.M.C.A., and he highly valued the prayers of the brethren in his absence. In the course of his remarks Mr. Gulston referred to various Chinese characteristics, and to the difficulties that beset almost every step of the missionary in the interior. He told of his itinerant work in the provinces of Hupeh and Hunan. The latter is one of the two provinces in China not yet opened up for regular Christian work. They had to contend not only with the prejudice of the Chinese, but the intrigues of the Roman Catholics, who have been in the country for some 300 years.

Mr. A. Forder next spoke of work amongst Arabs at Moab; the charm of his remarks was their extreme simplicity. In a few words he sketched the beginning of the work at Kerak, about 100 miles south-east of Jerusalem nine years ago by Mr. W. Lethaby. When he went there two years ago, the Arabs vowed they would kill him, and came armed to the teeth to carry out their threat. He told them they couldn't hurt a hair of his head, for God was behind him. This seemed to stagger them, for they retired discomfited and never troubled him again. The part of the country where he worked is not under Turkish rule, but under that of petty chiefs, who are very despotic. The place is, in fact, pretty much what it must have been in the days of Abraham. The work is very varied. Besides preaching and teaching, the missionary has to dispense medicines, in fact put his hand to any kind of work. By this means he gains an entrance into the hearts of the people. Long before he had learned the language he had won the people by serving them in love. Many of the people are careless and indifferent to the Gospel, but hearts are being opened to the truth. The work amongst the children is especially valuable. Mr. Forder returns to Kerak on May 5, and a farewell meeting will be held on the preceding day.

Mr. T. Martin spoke briefly of work in North Africa.

AUGUSTINE'S LATE LOVE.

Sero te amavi.—Augustine.

These beautiful lines, by Professor W. M. Blackburn, appeared some years ago in The New York Independent:—

I loved Thee late; though early I well knew
From saintly mother what to Thee was due.
And such a mother! following her child
From home to cities, where in riot wild
I lived and sometimes prayed, without a vow;
"Lord, give me purity; but give not now."

I loved Thee late, Lord! After shameful years
Of strife waged hard between desires and fears,
Thy word now checked me; now my will gave rein
To lusts that drew me deep in vice again.
Yet well I knew that, seeking to be free,
The heart is restless till it rests in Thee.

I loved Thee late; and had I never known
That mother's love which brought to me thine own,
My soul had never panted in its thirst
For pardon from my Lord, who loved me first.
O patience wonderful! Thou didst not hate
The lingering heart of him who loved Thee late.

I loved Thee late; nor did my love begin
Till ruin came as my reward for sin.
A wreck, washed on the rock of saving grace,
Was I when Thou didst show to me thy face;
With gentle shining scatter all my blindness,
And with new life grant me thy lovingkindness.

I loved Thee late; too late I loved Thee, Lord;
Yet not so late but Thou dost still afford
The proof that Thou wilt bear with winning art
One sinner more upon thy loving heart.
And may I prove, when all this life is past,
Though late I loved, I loved Thee to the last.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

Another party of young lads (the 65th band) has started for Canada by the Allan line. Our representatives in Ontario and Manitoba write that applications for them arrive by every post. If a safe voyage is given them, these neglected children will soon find themselves the subjects of constant forethought and care. To their great surprise they will be on terms of social equality with people who own houses and land, horses, cows, and sheep, and whose table is laid with a white cloth and a knife and fork set for them in lieu of obedient service.

The lad starts in life with a box of good clothes and looks just like any boy in the colony he settles in. These clothes give an influence around, telling of a kindly watching power over him in the old land he has left. He is indeed in a new world. There are no flaring gin palaces, hence no midnight rows, no music halls, no want of work. Temptations to street life are changed to a love of animals. He learns to ride and drive horses, he runs after squirrels and rabbits, and makes pets of dogs and all domestic animals.

Instead of being tempted to help himself at every apple-stall, he can there eat all he wishes, he can gather wild berries and chesnuts to his heart's content. His daily athletics have a purpose and tend to health.

Before the summer is over he is wholly devoted to the interests of a country life, and the great city with its sins and sorrows becomes well-nigh forgotten. His tears are dried, he reads his Bible for himself, the Spirit teaches him that our Father in heaven cares and blesses the fatherless and friendless.

Picture our young emigrant, if still of an age to go to school, in morning and evening hours, filling the wood-box from the wood pile, fetching pails of water, running to the wood or field for the cows, not driven beyond his strength, but gently led towards habits of industry. See him going off with the family to church and Sunday-school, and ere long identified by being asked to join the Christian Endeavour, and repeat his piece. He is day by day in the company of good and kindly people, who are telling him what to say and what not to say. In the old land he was a cipher; there, at ten years of age, he is of use to others; his prospect here was a workhouse, or to become a street sharper. In Canada he is treated as any ordinary well-cared-for child.

This is no fancied sketch. Twenty-five thousand such are growing up and being turned into brave citizens, with only three per cent. becoming black sheep, and these were sent off either too old, or not much dealt with individually.

We are more and more convinced that our work has been a blessing to most of the 5760 sent from the Home of Industry, in securing for them a possibility of not only living comfortably, but becoming blessings to society, by living that meek and lowly life shown us in the Gospel of Him who loved them, and died to save them. Our next party sails June 8. £10 rescues one more. Annie Macpherson.

KIRKCALDY, N.B.—Miss Muckersie, 44, High-street, Kirkcaldy, appeals for tracts and magazines for distribution in the model lodging-houses of the town. She would also be glad of any suggestions from those experienced in visiting such places as to the best methods of work.

WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—A large body of information regarding the aims of the Union and its methods of work is given in Lady Henry Somerset's Annual Address (6d.) to the delegates and members of the B.W.T.A. and the W.W.C.T.U., delivered last year in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, and Miss Frances E. Willard's Annual Address (4d.) before the nineteenth convention of the National W.C.T.U., held last year at Denver, Colorado. Other useful publications are the following booklets, envelope size (1s. per dozen, or 6s. per hundred):—By the Duchess of Bedford: Quiet Hours: an address to Christian Workers; and Temperance as it Affects Women of the Upper and Middle Classes. By Lady Henry Somerset: A Wider Outlook; and Woman's Work for a Sober England. By Frances E. Willard: The Modern Temperance Movement; and The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union's Aims and Objects. By Miss Helen L. Hood: Character Building. By Mary A. Warde Poole: The New Hope. REVIVAL IN IRELAND.

MESSRS. MCNEILL AND BURKE.

AFTER a five days' mission at Sligo, which was rked by great harmony of spirit and fruitfulness result, these evangelists entered on a twelve s' campaign at Cork, which will close to-morrow. McNeill's peculiar qualities of address are ing for his message access to large companies people, including many Roman Catholics. Next k we hope to give some details of the Cork sion.

MESSRS. MERTON SMITH AND BELL.

We rejoice to hear that these evangelists have n greatly encouraged by the course of events Strabane, where they laboured in the Gospel for e weeks, instead of one as originally arranged. ch interest was awakened and sustained from day lay. An enthusiastic temperance gathering re- ed in 170 pledges. The evangelists are visiting ndalk and Derry, before sailing to America.

SOLDIERS IN IRELAND.

This is an eventful year for Ireland; one finds rywhere a feeling of uncertainty. We are on the shold of we know not what! But, thank l! his people can say:

Peace! perfect peace! our future all unknown!
Jesus we know, and He is on the throne.

The Home Rule Bill has brought the Christians reland to their knees, and to their God in earnest plicating prayer, that He may overrule everything his glory and the salvation of souls. Will not 's people on the other side of the channel join his petition?

am writing from the Soldiers' Home in Belfast. s a nice new building, and the £5000 which it , with the exception of a few hundreds, was all scribed in Belfast. But at the present moment fall in local stocks, house property, and other estments has excited much alarm. Some of the mest supporters of this home are already suffer- keenly, which accounts for its being £170 in t.

now have charge of seven Soldiers' Homes in ind:—Belfast, Dundalk, Dublin, Athlone, Cork, enstown, and Ballincollig. It requires an ome of £2000 a year to maintain these havens efuge for our brave British soldiers and sailors, our loyal Royal Irish Constabulary (for my work udes these three classes); and while the present ression and alarm last the outlook as to iving funds for Christian work in Ireland is most ous. May I not, therefore, appeal to friends in gland and Scotland at this crisis not to allow a k to languish which is carried on mainly for salvation of English and Scotch soldiers and ors?

Thank God, though our faith is being sorely tried nt funds just now, our hearts are being glad- ed by blessed results in the work. Never were homes more appreciated, or our meetings more ely attended by eager and attentive listeners. can rejoice over many a young lad for whom homes have proved the fulfilment of a mother's yer, "God bless my boy and keep his footsteps ight;" and over many an older soldier who found that "If the Son, therefore, shall make free, ye shall be free indeed," not only from the t but also from the thraldom of habits formed ng long years of sin.

Twenty-three ladies are now helping me; they in the different homes, and spend their lives in ng to win our soldiers, sailors, and policemen Christ. These ladies receive no salaries, but er give to the cause.

o pray for the great multitude of young men are continually passing through our army; 00 of whom annually go to India. Many of n come from good country homes to be greeted very snare of the Devil the moment they arrive ur garrison towns. Help us to befriend them, not only to efficiently carry on our present k, but still further to develop and extend it.

will gladly send a sketch of the work, just ted, called "Our Story" to anyone who applies ie for it.

LORD'S DAY REST ASSOCIATION.

ON Monday evening the anniversary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association was celebrated by a conversazione at the Holborn Restaurant, Sir Douglas Fox in the chair. The report, outlined by the secretary, Mr. C. HILL, stated that a large deputation waited on Mr. Acland to oppose the Sunday opening of museums, on which occasion memorials signed by 146 leading members of Trade Unions, and by 149 secretaries or persons officially connected with various London societies, were presented. Two attempts to open the Guildhall Art Gallery and Museum on Sundays were defeated in May and June. In August and October the Town Council of Sunderland opened their museum, art gallery, and news room on Sundays; in November, by thirty-eight votes against twelve, they resolved to close them again. At Oxford the Sunday opening of the public library had been abandoned, and there are now nine towns—Maidstone, Worcester, Stoke-on-Trent, Chester, Oxford, Coventry, Workington, Sunderland, and Birkenhead—where Sunday opening has been followed by Sunday closing.

The House of Lords, on the motion of Lord Harrowby, has ordered a number of important returns as to the Sunday labour of post-office servants, and it is hoped that these returns will show a great improvement. Efforts to check the working of cargoes in foreign and colonial ports on Sundays have been made. The efforts made both in the United States and in England to prevent the Sunday opening of the Chicago Exposition on Sundays have done good. The Senate, by 34 votes against 17, voted nearly 3,000,000 dollars for the exhibition on the express condition that it be closed on the Day of Rest, and those who favoured Sunday opening have, writes Dr. Atterbury, of New York, apparently abandoned all hope of any reversal of this decision.

The CHAIRMAN, who is president of the Association for the year, pointed out that an important step in the right direction had been taken on the Continent in restricting Sunday labour. It was with the real working-man that this matter rested, and he felt confident if a poll was taken the result would be in favour of Sunday closing. A serious obstacle to the movement arose out of the action of professed Christians who persisted in travelling on Sundays to hear a favourite preacher.

Mr. J. HODGE (president of the last Trades Union Congress) moved a resolution, declaring that the Sunday opening of museums, galleries, and public libraries was opposed by the meeting as tending to increase Sunday labour. Mr. BARTLEY, M.P., and Mr. ROBERT SCOTT supported the resolution, which was adopted.

The next resolution appealed to the Government, to both Houses of Parliament, to the London County Council, and to the Court of Common Council to uphold the laws which secure to the people their right to the rest of the Lord's Day.

SERVANTS' MISSION.—Another happy quarterly meeting in connection with this mission was held at Sloane Terrace, Chelsea, on Thursday last. Mr. James Goodchild, superintendent, presided. Hearty praise was offered for blessings given. Earnest helpful addresses were given by Mr. Palmer and others.

SILVER STAR SOCIETY.—At the annual meeting of this society, Mr. W. S. Robbins (hon. sec.) read the report, showing that during the past year 230 evangelistic open-air, temperance, and lantern meetings had been held, while much gospel, temperance, and healthy literature had been distributed. Earl Compton spoke encouragingly, urging continued service for Christ and sympathy for the suffering. The office of the mission is 23, Carlton-road, Manor Park, Essex.

THE LIBERATOR BUILDING SOCIETY failure has occasioned distress which will not be forgotten for many a day. Eight concerns with which the absconded J. S. Balfour was associated are now being wound up in bankruptcy. In every case there is a serious deficiency, the total loss exceeding seven millions sterling. The Liberator deficiency alone amounts to nearly three millions! Prince Christian has consented to act as patron of the Liberator Relief Fund, which increases far too slowly to promise much alleviation. The distress has been emphasised by the recent call upon the shareholders of the London and General Bank. Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, hon. sec. of the Relief Fund (16, Farringdon-street, E.C.), will be glad to hear from ladies willing to promote branches of the Women's Sympathisers' Fund.

HANTS VILLAGE COLPORTAGE.

SENDING the report of the Hants Village Colportage Mission, the superintendent writes:—The two Bible cars are soon going out for the season, and we want help in starting them with horses, attendants, stock of Bibles, and Gospel books, also a large supply of tracts and Gospel booklets for distribution amongst the village people and at markets, fairs, etc. God has very graciously blessed this effort during the past five years in this and adjacent counties, and very many will be expecting the visit of the cars this season. Our winter's work now closing has also been very encouraging and fruitful of good. The workers as yet have received no payment. This year we expect to have to meet the salary of two workers. The need for this work in the villages of Hants, Sussex, and Wilts increases day by day. Very dark is the outlook unless a most strenuous effort is made to teach the people the truths about Romanism and the principles of Protestantism.

J. HARRIS CHARLTON.
Southampton-road, Fareham, Hants.

Strikers in Bristol.

MR. H. OXLEY, 7, Ranelagh-street, Barton Hill, Bristol, writes:—

Some few months ago a strike took place in connection with the labourers on the timber wharf here, and labour demonstrations were commenced on Sunday mornings by the docks. It was laid on my heart to go amongst these men. I commenced by speaking to them, and was listened to by some hundreds. I told them that I thought of coming every Sunday, and was heartily invited to do so. With the help of a friend I distributed upwards of two thousand tracts, which were gladly received.

We have continued to go every Sunday morning since; the staff of helpers has increased to half a dozen; we conduct a Gospel service for about forty-five minutes, and as they congregate for their labour meetings, and also as they leave, we give away from two to three thousand tracts, which are eagerly received. If your readers will help me with gifts or grants of tracts I shall be extremely thankful.

House of Rest, St. John's Wood.

THE monthly meeting was addressed last Friday afternoon by Rev. L. Stanham, Vicar of St. Bartholomew, Islington. He brought before his hearers the thought of the Christian's victory through Christ over the law, sin, and death, his duty to be stedfast in the faith, and his privilege to be actively employed in working for God.

In the evening Rev. J. A. Bevan gave a very earnest address on Sanctification, viewed in several aspects. He dwelt specially on the fact that it was a doctrine to be apprehended only by faith.

Things that are Past.

Canticles ii. 11.—For lo, the winter is past.
1 John, ii. 8.—The darkness is past.
2 Cor. v. 17.—Old things are passed away.
Job xi. 16.—Thy misery is passed away.
Ps. xc. 9.—All our days are passed away.
Rev. xxi. 4.—The former things are passed away.
Jer. viii. 20.—The harvest is past . . . we are not saved.
Job xvii. 11.—My days are passed, my purposes are broken.

GOD WILL CALL the sigh prayer, and the prayer power; and, if I may venture to say it, the power of God will bow before the power that He has put into the sigh which is from Him.—Vinet.

HAMMERSMITH.—A series of pleasant Sunday afternoons for men were successfully started at the West End Baptist Church last Sunday, under the presidency of Rev. W. Page. Dr. Clifford gave a stirring address on "The Pursuit of Pleasure." An orchestra and choir rendered excellent music, and Mr. Lister Newcombe sang "Nazareth" as a solo. Next Sunday Prof. Gladstone gives the address.

SUICIDES IN FRANCE.—From statistics which have been compiled in France, it would seem that suicides in that country bear an important relation to the amount of alcohol consumed. From 1836 to 1840 the consumption of alcohol was upwards of 500,000 hectolitres, and during that period 137 persons committed suicide as the result of alcoholism, and from the same cause there were 226 accidental deaths. From 1880 to 1885, when the consumption of alcohol rose to 1,800,000 hectolitres, there were 868 suicides, and 537 accidental deaths, for which alcoholism was responsible—a very notable increase.—Medical Press.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Reading Y.M.C.A. is considering the purchase of new premises.

Winnipeg Association reports great interest during the past few months.

Fifty members and associates have joined the newly-formed Association at Dawlish.

Mr. Matthew Burnett has held a five days' Gospel temperance mission in connection with the Cornhill Y.M.C.A.

Branch associations for Italian-speaking young men and German-speaking young men have been formed in Philadelphia.

Mr. W. H. Ralston is resigning the secretaryship of the Burton-on-Trent Y.M.C.A., and taking that of the Birkenhead Association.

Mr. J. E. Wolfe has held a special series of meetings in Harting (Nebraska) in connection with which a large number of young men profess conversion.

At a series of ten days' meetings recently held at Royersford, under the auspices of the Association, by Mr. Moncher, many conversions are reported.

The Easter Monday Conference of the North-eastern District was held at West Hartlepool, and was attended by sixty delegates from eighteen Associations.

The West Bromwich Association has started a Sunday evening meeting for boys, at which the attendance has reached between seven and eight hundred.

Between 500 and 600 Sunday school superintendents and teachers weekly attend the class taught in Association Hall, Philadelphia, by Rev. James A. Worden, D.D.

Last year there were ninety conversions in meetings held under the auspices of the Marshalton Railroad Association (Iowa), and sixty of those professing conversion are known to have united with churches.

The Bradford Monthly states that the open-air meetings, the Sunday evening services, and the P.S.A. have lately been very successful and interesting. The Foreign Mission Band is also doing good work.

Mr. Northcote Willy, assisted by Mr. George Durrans, secretary of the Bury Y.M.C.A., has conducted a ten days' mission in connection with the Association. A genuine work has been done. Each evening open-air meetings were held.

Rev. W. Crosbie, M.A., of Nottingham, preached lately on behalf of new premises being erected for the Derby Y.M.C.A. This sermon has now been published by F. Carter, of Derby, under the title of A Noble Life, and will, we feel sure, secure a large circulation. It is eloquent, thoughtful, and suggestive, and ought to be widely read and seriously pondered both by young men and maidens.

A fourteen days' united mission has been held in connection with the Totterdown Association. The various Evangelical churches joined very heartily and harmoniously in the effort, which was signally blessed by God in the awakening of spiritual concern and in decisions for Christ. A united communion service was held on the last day of the mission, followed by a praise-and-testimony meeting.

The annual conference of the Associations in the Midland District Union was held at Worcester on Easter Monday. The report showed steady progress throughout the district. Five new Associations have been formed, and the membership has been increased by 509. Papers by Messrs. Hy. Johnson, of Sunderland, and Howard Lloyd, of Leicester, were read and discussed. In the evening the annual public meeting of the Worcester Association was held in the Guildhall, addresses being given by Messrs. W. H. Mills, H. Whitwell, and F. C. Bennett, travelling secretary.

The Chicago Association has laid hold of its portion of the World's Fair burden. Under the direction of the general secretary, Mr. L. Wilber Messer, it has for months been making preparation to look after the interests of the Y.M.C.A. during the continuance of the great Exposition. There will be on exhibition in the Liberal Arts building the literature and appliances of Association work in all its various departments. This exhibit will be in charge of a special secretary, and will be conducted also as a bureau of information within the grounds, with the special view of assisting young men along the lines of Association work.

The Ilfracombe association held last week a meeting in aid of the Seaside Home. The secretary, Mr. Thomas, stated that the present rooms had become totally inadequate for the members, who had doubled during the past two years. They had now 156 members and associates, and badly needed increased accommodation. A favourable opportunity presented itself of securing suitable premises at 122, High-street, which could be converted into a seaside home. Mr. W. R. Foster said that the home would only be open to Y.M.C.A. members, and he trusted it would be well supported by all. They did not want to make it a money-making affair, but would be satisfied if their expenses were covered.

The annual meeting of the Stockholm Y.M.C.A. was held on March 18, and proved most successful. After an address by Capt. E. Melander, the president, an account of the work was given by the secretary, Mr. Carl Fries. The number of members is now 656. Gen. A. Rappe, Minister of War, who spoke most sympathetically, said: "The strength of nation is our young men. Those who take care of them ought, therefore, to have the hearty support of the whole nation. Y.M.C.A. want to show young men to the Rock of Ages, where they will find a shield against all storms of sin and unbelief of our present age. Christ is the only Saviour in distress. He never fails to listen to the cry of a praying soul. We wish, therefore, the Y.M.C.A. a great success in their work by the blessing of Christ."

THE Y.W.C.A.

At Darjeeling the Y.W.C.A. has a small branch doing good and useful work.

At the annual meeting of the Brentwood branch about sixty sat down to tea. At the subsequent meeting the chair was taken by Dr. Weymouth, and Miss Perry (the secretary) read the report, which showed that the association was in a highly satisfactory condition, the number of members being sixty.

Special services were held at the Y.W.C.A. Institute, 3, Gipsy Hill, Upper Norwood, on March 19, conducted by Misses Ellis and Bamber. The good attendance was most cheering, and many outsiders were brought in through the kind invitations of the members of the working band, who took up their position each evening outside the institute, delivering booklets and Gospel portions to passers-by. Tokens of God's favour and blessing cheered and encouraged those who took part.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

Schools for deaf mutes at Columbus, O., and Jacksonville, Ill., have good Christian Endeavour societies.

In the Murshedabad district, Bengal, a flourishing Y.P.S.C.E. is led by Mr. and Mrs. Brockway. Both missionaries and native preachers and teachers find the meetings remarkably helpful and encouraging.

A Christian Endeavour day offering to the education of a scholar in a foreign missionary school was lately made by the Indian society at the Santee Agency, Neb. For each of its five years of existence this society can show another society started by its members.

April 17 is announced as the last day on which applications from delegates can be received for the great National Convention of the Y.P.S.C.E. at Bradford. Unregistered societies should at once communicate with the hon. sec. of the British Section, Mr. C. Waters, 56, Old Bailey, E.C. There are now in this country over 500 registered societies.

SAILORS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—In accordance with custom, the friends connected with the Rest provided hospitality for sailors on Monday week. An effort to hold an open-air meeting was the signal for opposition such as recent times have rarely witnessed. Drunken men led in the disturbance, and for an hour or more the Highway was fairly in the hands of the mob. The meeting was held nevertheless; and later on, in the Rest, a pleasant evening was spent by the sailors, most of whom were far from home and friends. What is better, the Word of God was blessed to the spiritual profit of some of the company. On Sunday evening last active opposition was again offered to the open-air preaching. The police afforded protection from violence; but the noise and din made by certain opponents tried the speakers sorely.

YOUNG PEOPLE AT LUCERNE.—There is to be a great summer gathering of young people in Lucerne August 5 to 19. Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mrs. Mary Davies, Miss Annie S. Swan, Rev. W. J. Dawson, Rev. Silas K. Hocking, Mrs. Crawford (Paris Correspondent of The Daily News), Rev. H. Price Hughes, Rev. C. A. Berry, and Rev. J. Reid Howatt will take a prominent part in the proceedings. The cost of the twelve days' tour, including the second-class return ticket (first-class on boat) and full hotel accommodation, will be £10 10s. Seven days will be spent in Lucerne, the remainder of the time being devoted to trips to the Rigi, Engelberg, the Brunig Pass, Lake Brienz, Grindelwald, Berne, etc. Parties will leave London every Tuesday and Friday during August, and the tickets will be available to return any time within forty-five days. An illustrated programme containing all particulars can be obtained by sending a stamped and addressed envelope to Mr. F. A. Atkins, Editor of The Young Man, 2, Amen Corner, London, E.C.

During the past month 19 orphan children f Glasgow, Greenock, Leith, Dundee, and other pl have been added to the large family of the Sail Orphan Society of Scotland, raising the numbe 340. The society has secured Mount Blow Ho Dalmuir, as a country home for the orphan child It has attached to it 24 acres of ground, par which will be let, and in all respects it will b suitable and healthy place for the children, and b great boon to many of the delicate ones who req extra care and attention. For the fitting-up furnishing about £300 will be required.

At the annual congregational meeting Gorbal's Tabernacle, Glasgow, Rev. John Robert said that theirs was now the largest congregation the presbytery of Glasgow, and he expected that the time he left for America in July it would be largest congregation in Scotland in connection the Free Church. Upwards of seventy were pared for the coming communion. He believed had blessed the preaching of the Word. In July was to join Mr. Moody for a while at the Chic Exhibition, but he hoped they would stick clo together. They need not be frightened—he coming back. So far as he could see, his life's w was in Glasgow. He proposed to visit the home every member of the church during the next th months.

Letters to the Editor.

BISHOPS, PRIESTS, AND DEACONS.

Dear Sir,—In writing of "Bishops, Priests, and Deacons," Mr. E. Maxwell has fallen into the popular error of calling these "the three orders." The Church of Rome, from which Episcopalians undoubtedly inherit their doctrine of the need of Bishops, never held that bishops and presbyters are distinct orders. Rome has seven orders, the highest of which is that of priest. Bishops are no more a different order from presbyters than deans, archdeacons, or archbishops. There is a difference of jurisdiction (derived solely from the Pope, and in England from the Queen), but none of order; just as Presbyterians have professors, principals, and moderators. It is taught by the Canon Law, and Popes and the Council of Trent would not allow the superiority of bishops to be of divine institution.

The doctrine of three distinct orders is exclusively Anglican, the Romish doctrine agreeing with Presbyterians in considering presbyters as the highest order, and both in Romish and Episcopal Churches presbyters share the power of ordaining.

The identity of bishops and elders is proved by Acts xx. 17-28, where Paul reminds the elders at Ephesus that the Holy Ghost had made them bishops.

Jerome and all the ancient writers acknowledge this identity. In the fifth century many villages had "bishops." Peter Lombard, the famous doctor in the twelfth century, says the Primitive Church had only two orders, presbyters and deacons; I say all the Reformers, and the most learned Bishops and divines of modern times, as Ussher, Usin, Lightfoot, Alford, etc.

The office of deacons, whether men or women (Rom. xvi. 1), was to "serve tables," to help the poor, the sick, and the young, and not to act as Rectors.

Faithfully yours,

H. C. M.

Sir,—The position of Evangelical ministers in the Episcopal Church is, as some think, justified, and as others think, discredited, by the ambiguity of the English word "priest." The truth is that the meaning attached to the word by usage is totally different from, though not necessarily inconsistent with, the meaning embodied in its etymology.

According to its derivation, "priest" ought to mean neither more nor less than "elder"—that is, presbyter, from which Latinised-Greek word it is derived through the old German Prester. Evangelical clergymen truly affirm, and Sacerdotalists admit, that they are presbyters, whether or not they mean anything more; nor would it be possible to deny this, in face of the authentic Latin text of the thirty-nine articles, in which the words Episcopus, Presbyter, and Diaconus are more than once used in conjunction.

But the word "priest" is never once used in this sense in the English Bible. Therein it always represents either the Hebrew "Cohen" or the Greek "Hiereus," of which the Latin equivalent is "Sacerdos"—that is, a man who has a right of direct access to God, or to a god, which others have not, or an official agent, who negotiates religious affairs on behalf of others. Now, Evangelicals deny, and their antagonists strenuously affirm, that Christian presbyters who have duly received episcopal ordination are priests in this sense; and it must be confessed that the Evangelical contention is not sustained by the official documents of the Anglican Church. It is true the word "sacerdos" is nowhere found in the thirty-nine Articles; and there are Latin copies of the Prayer-book to be found from which the same word is carefully excluded. But in the Latin Prayer-book of 1560 the word holds a conspicuous position. In the Daily Prayers the minister is usually called "minister," once "administrator sacrorum," and once "sacerdos sive minister."

In the Litany, "Bishops, Priests, and Deacons" is represented by "Episcopos, Pastores, et Ministros ecclesiæ." But in the Communion Service, "minister" occurs twenty-six times, "pastor" six times, "presbyter" three times, and "sacerdos" seven times. All these seven are characteristic. The priest (sacerdos) is to rehearse the commandments; to pronounce the declaration of forgiveness; to say the "Humble Access"; to say the prayer over the bread and wine; and to utter the final benediction; while the Scriptures are to be read, and the confession made, by "the priest, or some other minister whom he may appoint." Clearly, according to this teaching, some ministers are, and some are not, "priests"; and the functions reserved exclusively for the former are those which have always been insisted on as most important by the abettors of priestcraft. It be objected that the Prayer-book of 1560 is not now of authority, the obvious reply is that at every subsequent revision the Sacerdotalist party have been relatively more influential than they were in 1560.

To revise the formularies of the Episcopal Church so as to remove from them the taint of sacerdotalism is, I fear, impossible; nor would disestablishment make the task easier. The only available course for Evangelical clergymen to pursue is, to take advantage of the ambiguity of the standards; and whenever occasion may serve, emphatically to disavow all sacerdotal pretensions. This I have heard done by one bishop, and he by no means the least learned of his order. The kind of protest advocated by S. W. W. and Rev. M. E. Sadler—the inviting of persons not having the imaginary sacerdotal status to perform the reserved parts of the Communion Service—would be illegal, and would in all likelihood bring the protestor's ministry in the Established Church to a compulsory end. But there could be no valid objection to an Evangelical clergyman occasionally receiving the Communion from the hands of a non-episcopal minister, the latter in turn taking his place with his fellow-believers in the parish church. And Evangelical clergymen might take advantage of the "Lincoln judgment" to make a very emphatic and effective demonstration against sacerdotalist ritualism.

Why should not the Communion Table, remaining "within the chancel" according to law, be set far enough from the east wall to allow a clear passage around it—as was the case in Bristol Cathedral in Dean Elliot's time; and the minister stand at the northern part of the eastern side facing westward? Surely if the northern half of the western side is, legally, "the north side," the corresponding half of the eastern side is equally so. And if the priests must be permitted to enjoy their legal triumph in their Papistical "eastward position," the presbyters might base on the same judgment an indefeasible right to assume a Protestant westward position.

Milverton. T. G. Crippen.

Dear Sir,—In your last issue Mr. J. E. Matheison says, "We repeat our question; will anyone give us the answer? When did this pseudo-priesthood creep into the Church?" May I venture an answer by quotations? In his "Discourses on Church History," Rev. F. W. Aveling, M.A., says:—

> The apostles and teachers were ministers, not priests. The office of a minister is to preach and teach. He is the servant of the Church. But a priest acts as mediator between God and man. He is supposed to be a superior to a layman. He stands between him and God, and in God's name pronounces pardon. The early Church was happily free from priests. Up to the beginning of the third century, pagans reproached Christians because they had no altar, no priests, no sacrifices, no temple. For the Christian's temple is the whole world, or wherever two or three are gathered together in the Saviour's name; his altar is the cross of Christ; his priest and his all-sufficient sacrifice is his Saviour. In the early Church the ministers were with the people, and the people united with them in all the social ties and common sympathies of every day life. Tertullian, about the beginning of the third century, is the first to call them priests. From that time to the Reformation ministers became more and more decidedly priests.

The Jewish priesthood which Christ did away with, was a sort of caste. Only the Levites were priests, and these priests did nothing but go through religious ceremonies. They were not, as Christian ministers should be, men amongst men. This Jewish idea of the priesthood crept into the Church during the first three centuries, and increased every generation, till the Reformation checked it, by teaching the Gospel truth that we have only one Priest in our religion—viz., Jesus Christ. And the Roman Catholic revival in the Established Church in this country is but a revival of the same ideal. High Churchmen are only trying to revive those notions of priestcraft, to overthrow which the reformers shed their blood, remnants of which notions the High Churchmen say, with perfect truth, are to be found in the Prayer Book.

The Rev. H. C. G. Moule rightly says in his "Outlines of Christian Doctrine":—

> The ministry is a medium, not a mediator. If it wrongly withholds the holy sealing ordinance, or if that ordinance is on any account inaccessible, the true idea of the Church assures us that the benefit will come some other way to the believing man. The guilt and loss will be with the minister, not with the believer. It is remarkable that the Christian minister, as such, is never in the New Testament called hiereus (sacerdos). As one of the true Israel, he is "a king and priest to God" (1 Pet. ii. 9; Rev. i. 6; v. 9, 10), but on a footing precisely that of his lay brethren.

See also Jennings, Merle-d'Aubigné, Hole, and others.

Priest, by metaphor, is a name given to all Christians, because, purified by the blood of Christ, and brought into close intercourse with God, they devote their lives to Him and Christ alone. In the Christian dispensation, the name primitively given to the public ministers of religion was presbyteros, of which the English name "priest" is but a form derived through this old French or Norman prestre. Oh that all Christians would heed and obey that blessed word which says, "Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ!" (1 Pet. ii. 5 (R.V.).

In par. 6, 'the claims,' etc., should read 'the exclusive claims.' In par. 9, 'in showing the extreme' should read 'that the extreme.'"

THE BOOK OF THE KINGDOM.

Dear Sir,—Another than Dr. Jacob has summarised the New Testament Books as I wrote to you, as the founding, proclamation, regulations, conflict, and triumph of Christ's Kingdom.

Three of these four points are in his work, I find, with reference to Christ Himself. But the terse embodiment of them, as already given, is so admirable, whoever wrote it, that I am glad to be corrected in order to repeat it, like Burke, when he mispronounced in Parliament, Magnum vectigal est parsimonia.—Yours truly, C. S. Bird.

SCHISM: WHAT IS IT?

Sir,—There can be no question that much more liberal views prevail with regard to religious worship than existed 100, or even 50, years ago. Still, for all that, we hear from time to time the word schism applied to certain ideas of worship which are not in accordance with those held generally by members of (what is termed) the Established Church.

By some, schism is defined as separation from the Established Church; but if this definition be correct, then a border line, such as that between England and Scotland, makes the difference between orthodoxy and schism, and the orthodox Church in England becomes the schismatic in Scotland. In Ireland, as there is no established Church, there can be no such thing as orthodoxy or schism.

Others define it as separation from the Church of England (asserted by some of its adherents to be the only true Church), but according to this idea the Church of Scotland is schismatic, which its followers will be scarcely inclined to admit. The Roman Catholics say theirs is the only true Church, and all who differ from it are schismatics, so I think it is perfectly clear that schism is very different from what is expressed by either of these ideas.

Nowhere in the Bible is it said, Believe in this or that Church, but "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved," and, moreover, "In every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is acceptable to Him." St. Paul says, "There is one body (i.e. the Church of Christ or the body of believers in Christ) and one spirit—one Lord—one faith (i.e. in Christ)—one baptism (i.e. of the Spirit) one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Paraphrasing what he says in another place, I would ask—What is the Church of England, what is the Congregational Church, what is the Wesleyan Church?—but agencies by which ye believed. One may have planted, another watered, but it is God that giveth the increase. What is schism, then?

It is separation from the general body of Christian believers, or, in other words, the Church of Christ. Canon Wilberforce defines it as "The want of soul-love between members of the same external body, and also the absence of charity between spiritual members of the one body of Christ, even though not in the same external community." There is not the slightest doubt we all need more of the Spirit of Christ, and should do all we can to foster it in others. Let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but let us encourage, as far as possible, the spirit of brotherly love.—Your obedient servant,

A Member of the Church of Christ.

DEBT.

Dear Sir,—Very tenderly, the Lord helping me, would I deal with the children of misfortune in continuing this subject. Many, without doubt, have been brought into pecuniary difficulties through circumstances over which they have had no control. These, if real believers, shall call upon the Lord in the day of trouble, and be heard. He shall deliver them, and they shall glorify Him. But what shall be said for those who, in their present troubles, are but suffering the natural consequences of thoughtlessness, thriftlessness, ambition, or other form of pride? God is above his own laws, and is as free as He is mighty to succour the distressed; but a study of facts tells us that it is not often He interferes with the working of any one of his laws. He never works a miracle unnecessarily or from compulsion.

With some selfish aim to be attained by the venture, a man finds himself in some such position as that which the Lord Jesus occupied when He stood on a pinnacle of the temple. "Cast Thyself down," says the tempter, "for it is written He shall give his angels charge concerning Thee," etc. The Master met Scripture with Scripture. "It is written again," replied He, "thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." But the person in question, wresting Scripture to his own hurt, imagines God has bound Himself, by promise, to protect him from mischief, and makes the suggested plunge. The angels don't bear him up in their hands. He does dash his foot against a stone; and, maybe, it appears to him that God has been none too faithful to his word.

But God has not been unfaithful; he himself has been fooled. One may just as well expect to leap from a precipice and remain unbruised; to pass through a fire, and not be burnt; to trust oneself to boggy ground, and not sink, as to thrust oneself into certain circumstance, in spite of the Divine word and warning, and believe that God must necessarily come to the rescue. I will not say all, but I fear me that many who have allowed themselves to get entangled in money difficulties will have to go through life like those who have weakened the heart's action by unlawful exertion, the eyes with over-study, or the stomach with excess. The possibility of recovery may remain—the probability will generally be very remote.

Here I would have a word with young men who are desirous of entering the Church, and yet lack the means for entering upon a prolonged course of study. It has now become a fashion to borrow money for the theological college with the idea of easily repaying it after "ordination." It is a mistake; and oh, the humiliation it often entails upon those who fall into it. The fear of wounding the minds of personal friends forbids me to give many cases of those who have become lifelong sufferers through this very thing; but as, poor dear fellow, his earthly woes are now all ended, and none of his relatives are likely to be affected by what I write, I may mention the case of one young man I knew. I believe that his ambition to get the white tie round his neck was awakened by the success of a fellow mechanic in the same direction. Nothing would then do but he must "enter the Church" too. He may have had holy as well as "high" aims influencing him to the effort, but he certainly had nothing like the money needed for it. He borrowed, studied, was ordained, and even married; but, oh, his after agony! He found his income would do little more than pay personal expenses, and yet his creditors were clamouring for their money, and, I should say, threatening him with exposure, because not able to get it. He died in the greatest poverty.

I knew another dear fellow whom, after a friendship of some years, I quite lost sight of. Then, hearing his name, I made inquiries about him, to be told that he had starved himself to death while endeavouring to pay off money presumably borrowed. It ought to be a rule with every bishop, or other Church dignitary, receiving a young man to the ministry, to satisfy himself that, at least, the other is free from debt before allowing him to go further.

But possibly some one is asking whether I cannot suggest any means for retrieving matters where a person has fallen into difficulties, and would, by God's help, obtain honest deliverance. In answer to such a question, I would first say, avoid doing wrong to mend wrong. Don't rob Peter to pay Paul, don't borrow of one brother to pay another; above all, don't turn to the professional moneylender. Be sold up, even to the family Bible, before putting yourself in his clutches. The lion might spare the antelope that lies beneath his paw; the wolf might drop the lamb it had taken between i s teeth; and the python might uncoil itself from around the poor deer it had secured for a prey; but this fellow would never let you go while you had a walking-stick left.

As to doing. A very dear friend of mine once told us at an "experience meeting" that he began his Christian life £400 in debt. "Oh, how I prayed," said he, "but I didn't rise from my knees and sit down with an open mouth turned up towards heaven expecting the Lord to drop food or money into my mouth. I prayed, threw off my coat, rolled up my sleeves, and worked. The Lord answered my prayer by giving his blessing on my work; and now, I thank Him, I am above £400 to the good, instead of being in debt to that amount."

I can see no other remedy for debt than the one suggested by my friend. Pray and work—whether with the head or the hands, work. But work is now esteemed such dishonour that people professing the greatest regard for Christ's honour, will allow that honour to suffer rather than soil their hands with honest labour. I see no dishonour in it. The Master Himself was a carpenter, the most honoured of the apostles a tent maker. I have worked at manual labour in the timber trade from five in the morning till eight at night, and were I ejected from the Church, I know I could turn to it again without any sense of shame. There is much, even for Christians, in the old proverb, "God helps those who help themselves"—I mean with regard to earthly matters; but I believe He hates anything that approaches to "religious cadging," pride, or laziness.

If I am writing for anyone especially desirous of deliverance from debt, ponder the details of daily life, dear friend, and see what there is, in the way of self-indulgence, that you can give up for the sake of rolling odium from the name of Christ. Do you ever ride when you might, without injuring your health, walk? Do you feed and wage a servant for doing work you could do with your own hands? Do you, for the sake of position, or for keeping up appearances, spend money that really belongs to your creditors?

I might ask many other like questions, but time will not allow. Question yourself, and answer your own questions as under the eye of God. If discovering evil in your life—whether positive or negative—put it away; and the worst thing I wish you is that, as in the case of my friend, God may answer your prayers, and smile on your work.

DR. MACLAREN ON THE PSALMS.*

We very heartily welcome this as one of the most valuable additions to the Expositor's Bible series. The author has aimed to be expository, and it is safe to say that there are few writers who could have crowded into one volume so much clear and forceful exposition. The chapters are of necessity brief, but they are not meagre. No words are wasted; every sentence is weighty. Critical questions affecting date and authorship are only incidentally alluded to. But these brief allusions are not the least valuable part of the book. In a sentence or two the Doctor frequently shows that the conclusions of the critics are without sufficient foundation. Possessing the ability to look more deeply into the Psalmist's meaning, he sees harmony and order where others see discord and confusion. As an instance especially valuable, not only as correcting the conclusion of the critic, but as guiding to a true exposition, we quote the few opening sentences on Psalm xxiv.:—

"Ewald's widely accepted view that this psalm is a composite of two fragments rests on a somewhat exaggerated estimate of the differences in tone and structure of the parts. These are obvious, but do not demand the hypothesis of compilation; and the original author has as good a right to be credited with the uniting thought as the supposed editor has. The usually alleged occasion of the psalm fits its tone so well, and gives such appropriateness to some of its phrases, that stronger reasons than are forthcoming are required to negative it. The account in 2 Sam. vi. tells of exuberant enthusiasm and joy, of which some echo sounds in the psalm. It is a processional hymn, celebrating Jehovah's entrance to his house; and that one event, apprehended in its two sides, informs the whole. Hence the two halves have the same interchange of question and answer, and the two questions correspond, the one inquiring the character of the men who dare dwell with God, the other the name of the God who dwells with men. The procession is climbing the steep to the gates of the ancient Jebusite fortress, recently won by David. As it climbs, the song proclaims Jehovah as the universal Lord, basing the truth of his special dwelling in Zion upon that of his world-wide rule. The question, so fitting the lips of the climbers, is asked possibly in solo, and the answer describing the qualifications of true worshippers, and possibly choral (vv. 3—6), is followed by a long-drawn musical interlude. Now the barred gates are reached. A voice summons them to open. The guards within, or possibly the gates themselves, endowed by the poet with consciousness and speech, asks who thus demands entrance. The answer is a triumphant shout from the procession. But the question is repeated, as if to allow of the still fuller reiteration of Jehovah's name, which shakes the grey walls; and then, with clang of trumpets and clash of cymbals, the ancient portals creak open, and Jehovah 'enters into his rest, He and the ark of his strength.'"

Such a quotation indicates that the author is as skilful in discovering the true meaning of the Psalmist as he is in detecting the mistake of the critic. The whole treatise is equally useful. The devout and thoughtful student will find this volume most helpful and suggestive.

PARIS MISSION TO THE JEWS.—Miss Margaret A. Palmer, hon. treasurer of this mission, writes that the office of the polyglot missionary organ, The Truth, and the private address of Mr. and Mrs. Feingold and herself, is transferred from Rue de la Verrerie to 33, Rue des Archives.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

There are in Brazil four W.C.T. Unions, f removed the one from the other, but doing go work.

The White Ribbon Signal is a new Gosp temperance journal, started by women workers Victoria.

Drinking leads to drunkenness. Abstinence safe. A drunkard is an unsuccessful modera drinker.

The chief justice of Kansas stated lately that pr hibition is as well enforced as any criminal law the State.

W.C.T.U. work is spreading greatly, or, to use t words of an American contemporary, is "on a boon in Louisiana at present.

Michigan has lost an able temperance worker fro its ranks in the death of Mrs. Harriet B. Jaynes, w passed to her reward on February 28.

A series of profitable Gospel temperance servic were held in Owego, N.Y., by Mr. P. A. Burdic Crowded audiences listened attentively each night his earnest appeals upon different phases of temp rance work.

President Cleveland's first query concerning a candidate for a public place is said to be: "Does drink?" While not personally a total abstainer, is evidently discovering the value of the man w does not drink.

The daily papers state that owing probably to t splendid weather, the observance of Easter Mond as a bank holiday was productive of less drunkenne than usual in and about London, judging from t records at the various police-courts.

The National Temperance Fête at the Cryst Palace will this year be held on Tuesday, July 4, t arrangements being in the hands of the Nation Temperance Choral Union, with the cordial c operation of the principal temperance organisations

We understand that, owing to the difference opinion evoked by the publicity consequent on I Cameron's question in the House, the report of t Departmental Committee of the Home Office relati to habitual drunkards is being carefully gone ov again.

A Christian native of Damascus is trying to get licence for the establishment of a brewery in Jerus lem, but Djessid Pasha, the governor of Syria, he tates about granting the request,—"in deference," he says, "to the scruples of the Jewish and Christi residents."

A strong agitation, according to latest mail advice was on foot for opening the public-houses in Per for two hours on Sundays. The clergy and tempe ance bodies vehemently opposed the suggestio which was favoured by the Government, who will guided by the result of a ratepayers' poll on t subject.

The Isle of Man, and Douglas in particular, being cursed by almost free trade in drink. T population of Douglas is about 20,000, and the nu ber of licences in proportion to the population is to 149. In view of the state of things thus broug about, the vicar of St. Georges and two Nonco formist ministers are taking active steps, in spite violent abuse, to check the growing evil.

Keep right away from evil company is the advi given to Sunday School children by Rev. Mark G Pearse, who says: "Nothing will do more to he this than to sign the temperance pledge and to ke it. Strong drink is the very herald of the devil; opens all the gates of Mansoul, and brings in t legions of evil spirits to take possession. Let th lesson end by signing the temperance pledge."

A committee at Union Springs, N.Y., are tryi an experiment in assuming the exclusive sale liquor. They propose to allow no treating, drunkenness or approach to it, and no selling minors. They also reserve the right to refuse liqu to certain persons. They will sell no more than single glass except on a physician's order. CHICAGO NOTES.

The energy of preparation at the World's Fair grounds is perfectly marvellous. Wages are enormous, and the declaration that the work will be in readiness is likely to prove true. But the same energy is manifested in the religious departments, and several great undertakings are in full progress. The designs for the Sunday-school building have been adopted, and the work will be pushed to completion as soon as possible.

The American Tract Society has resolved to distribute 750,000 special tracts during the World's Fair, in or near the grounds. The commissioners will not permit handbills and tracts to be scattered broadcast, but these portions of the New Testament, and some new and appropriate material, will be given away at the designated stands.

The list of names now on the special list of Brother Moody's evangelistic corps numbers 250. There will be plenty of work for all to do.

The Moody Institute, as we call it, on the north side, is a veritable hive of industry, and sending out trained workers for the Master. It is a little strange how many foreigners drop in here, and take hold of work, while so many of our American boys and girls go somewhere else. We are glad of the constant welcome for all whom the Lord has called.

The greatest interest within the W.C.T.U. circle has been manifested during the past three weeks over the financial outlook of the great, new, and splendid Temple. It is a marvellous creation, and well worthy the skill and energy of a host.

Down at Jackson Park, where the "white city" shines in all its wonderful beauty, there is probably the busiest centre in all the world. Hundreds of cars are unloaded daily and the exhibits are coming in with a rush. The fair will open May 1, and enormous crowds are already coming. Hotel accommodation will certainly be adequate to the demand, and prices reasonable. John O. Foster.

In a communication to the Evangelist, dated Chicago, March 21, Dr. T. L. Cuyler writes:—Chicago, in spite of its smoke and grimy atmosphere and mucilaginous mud, has some rare fascinations. It is a marvellous city; and its godly people must see to it that Satan does not inundate its streets with beer-kegs and whisky-barrels, and Sabbath-breaking theatres, and all manner of abominations. It is the great battle-ground just now between the powers of light and darkness; and no braver soldiers for Christ are to be found on this continent. This morning I addressed the students in Mr. Moody's admirable "Biblical Institute." It has about two hundred earnest men and women preparing for Christian work at home and abroad.

EDUCATION AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The wonder is not that there are so few men offering for foreign mission work, but rather that there so many, considering the fact that in the education of most lads this paramount obligation is practically ignored.

Christian parents, if you give your sons to God for this work, you must train them for it from their infancy, not leaving their education to the world, the flesh, and the devil, as is so often the case. Remember that God holds you responsible for their training. If your end in view in it all is the Kingdom of God, then you must use adequate means suited to that end. Everything else must be subordinate—social position, wealth, prospects, friends, etc.

If any such things outweigh the interests of God's Kingdom in the training of a lad, we cannot wonder if they still do so in the choices of his after life.

Tripoli. Hermann E. Harris, B.A.

Evangelistic Mission.

The usual conference of Christian workers and others, convened by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, was held on Easter Monday. The meetings were presided over by Mr. Geo. Hucklesby. In the afternoon addresses were given by Mr. W. H. Seagram and Mr. A. M. Hewson, the first part of the meeting, as usual, being devoted to prayer. A goodly number sat down to tea, after which the hall was crowded, and eloquent addresses were given by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor and Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D.D.

A feature of the day was the sweet singing of the orphan girls from Mount Hermon Orphanage, who were entertained at tea.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.—In our brief notice last week of the congregational meeting at the Tabernacle, it should have been stated that Dr. James Spurgeon tendered his resignation of the pastorate, and that this was accepted by resolution by a considerable majority.

Obituary.

MISS SHRIMPTON.

Much sympathy will be felt for Mrs. Marriage Allen on account of the somewhat sudden and unexpected death of Miss Shrimpton, one of her devoted and successful lady visitors at the Shoreditch Christian Mission, where her loss is indeed keenly felt. "She was greatly used of God in winning souls; her visits to the homes of the people, and earnest pleading words at the mothers' meetings at 24, Charles-square, Hoxton, will never be forgotten by those who are so deeply feeling their loss." Her service in this mission was begun ten years ago. Remarkable ripeness and depth of Christian character have been growingly manifest.

M. LEON PILATTE.

The death is announced of M. Léon Pilatte, founder and for over twenty years editor of L'Eglise Libre, of Nice. This is a serious loss to French Protestantism. In early life he engaged in evangelistic work, and in his journalistic career he exercised a strong influence for good. Without belonging to any one Church organisation, he followed with interest the progress of the cause of truth and freedom among the French-speaking people. He was of a Romanist family, came to a knowledge of the simple Gospel at the age of seventeen, and lived to the advanced age of seventy-one. He edited a reissue of the works of Calvin, and was himself the author of several useful books, theological and historical.

MR. JOSEPH STANCOMB, OF YEOVIL.

Many will have heard with deep regret of the calling home of this well-known and highly-valued servant of Christ, Mr. Stancomb, who was seventy-five years of age, had ministered in the Word at Coker and Yeovil, besides visiting and speaking at other meetings and conferences. Says The Eleventh Hour:—"To know Mr. Stancomb was to love him, and the better he was known the more truly he was respected and esteemed. In his ministry he dwelt much on the heavenly calling of the Church of God and the oneness of all the members of the body of Christ in Him—the Head. He deeply felt the divisions amongst Christians and bore them before God in constant prayer; indeed, anything that dishonoured the name of the Lord was a heavy burden to him. The removal of such a man leaves a blank not soon filled up; but it is good to remember that the Lord watches over his people and is able to raise up helpers according to their need. Mrs. Stancomb, who is in very feeble health, and the family will, we are assured, have a special place in the prayers of many."

MR. CHARLES MORTON SAWELL.

Mr. C. M. Sawell, for over forty years an active and energetic official of the London City Mission, passed away on Monday morning at 2 o'c Originally educated for the Christian ministry at New College, owing to failure of health he entered the offices of the City Mission, and has seen its extension and development from comparatively small beginnings to its present position. In 1859 he was one of the original promoters of the theatre service movement, in company with Lord Shaftesbury, Mr. Samuel Morley, Mr. R. C. L. Bevan, Sir R. Fowler, and Mr. Geo. Moore, all of whom have entered into their rest and their reward. Mr. Sawell was possessed with enthusiastic zeal for the evangelisation of the masses of this overgrown metropolis. The poor of London had no warmer friend, and he will be sorely missed by a large circle, especially by the city missionaries, for whom he promoted the holiday homes at Ventnor, Folkestone, and Weston-super-Mare. The funeral will take place on Friday next; a memorial service will be held at Allen-street Congregational Church, Kensington, W., at noon.

MISS MAGGIE H. SCOTT.

This devoted young sister, who went to China in 1890, after having been greatly used of God in Canada and the States, fell asleep in Jesus at her own home in Ontario in February last. The American supplement of China's Millions says:—"When the call came to her to give her life in helping to bring the women of China to a knowledge of the Saviour, she most gladly responded and went forth to the service, accompanied by a younger sister and followed by the prayers and sympathy of her own family circle. She reached China in the beginning of the year 1890, and after a time at the training home at Yang-chau, she spent some time in the Kiang-si province, in the station of Nan-kang Fu. Both there and later on in Huei-cheo Fu, she had the joy of being able to tell many of the Saviour whose love filled her own heart and life. A few years of such service was granted to our sister, and then sickness and pain were again permitted to reach her, In sickness, as in health, the presence of the Saviour filled her soul with deep peace and joy, and her sick-room at Shanghai was often as the gate of heaven to others who were with her as well as to herself." At le 5th she was removed home, and lingered a few months among her own loved ones ere she passed away.

REV. DR. THOMAS BROWN.

Wide-spread regret, especially among the friends of the Free Church, will be caused by the news of the death, in the eighty-third year of his age, of Rev. Dr. Thomas Brown, senior minister of the Dean Free Church, Edinburgh, at his house, 16, Carlton-street. The late Dr. Brown was one of the now fast decreasing number of pre-Disruption members of the Free Church. In 1837 he was ordained minister of Kinneff. At the Disruption Dr. Brown left the Established Church, and, followed by the great majority of his congregation, founded the Free Church of Kinneff. That church had the benefit of his services until 1849, when he settled in the Dean Free Church, Edinburgh, the charge of which he held until his death. In April, 1890, he was appointed Moderator of the Free Church. Since that time he has continued to take an active part in the work of the Church, notwithstanding his advanced age. Some years ago a colleague and successor was appointed to him in the person of Rev. Archibald Bell. In the midst of his pastoral cares Dr. Brown found time to pay considerable attention to theological and literary and scientific studies. His most notable work was perhaps "The Annals of the Disruption;" but his writings have been numerous, and his scientific contributions, which relate chiefly to geology, have been much quoted.

MR. STRONACH OF ARDMEALLIE.

This "Disruption worthy," who played an important part in the famous "intrusion" scene at Marnoch, N.B., in 1841, died last week, after a long illness, at the age of ninety-eight. Mr. Stronach was the third son of the late Rev. William Stronach, minister of the parish of Marnoch. His name came into prominence in connection with the famous intrusion scene at Marnoch, when the Presbytery of Strathbogie inducted Rev. John Edwards as a minister, contrary to the will of the great majority of the congregation. Mr. Stronach stood firmly by the majority of the congregation, and at the settlement of Mr. Edwards his services as a magistrate were called into requisition for the purpose of keeping order in the church, although nothing of a kind requiring active intervention on his part occurred. A new church was built, and was opened in March, 1842. Mr. Stronach was throughout a warm supporter and bountiful benefactor of the church; and he and his wife, by a deed executed in February, 1883, gave stock of the Scottish Australian Investment Company, valued at fully £3000, for the benefit of the Free Church in Marnoch, the interest to be applied by the office-bearers of the church in maintaining the buildings and in other ways pointed out in the deed. This bequest enables the office-bearers to keep all the buildings in good order in all time coming. Mr. and Mrs. Stronach, in addition to this gift, also invested £1000 so that it yields nearly £50 yearly. This sum was directed to be applied each year to the Marnoch Church's contributions to the various schemes of the Free Church, so that these might not suffer when Mr. and Mrs. Stronach themselves ceased to contribute. Mr. Stronach was a man of singularly amiable and loving character, as well as a man of deep religious convictions.

PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY.—On Wednesday last week a successful meeting on behalf of this society was held in the Young Women's Christian Association rooms at Dover. A lecture was delivered by Captain Williams, R.N., secretary of the society, who asked for help in view of the new mission stations shortly to be opened at Bristol, Brighton, Bournemouth, and Wimbledon, for which missionaries are now being trained.

HASSOCKS MISSION CHURCH.—In connection with the undenominational Christian work carried on here, an interesting gathering was held on Thursday, April 6. A considerable number sat down to tea, after which bright encouraging "three minute" speeches were given by Pastor Albert H. Barker, and various friends. At 7.30 a public meeting took place, presided over by Mr. W. Willett (Brighton). A most helpful and spiritual address was delivered by Mr. H. J. Gammage (of the Connaught Institute).

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a special mission being held this week by Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver, in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Kentish Town-road.—For a mission at Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow Common, April 9—23, by Mr. George Hefford.—For blessing on the visit of Mr. and Mrs. Newman to London-road Hall, Kettering.—For much blessing on a mission in connection with St. Paul's, Southend, by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker, from April 9 to May 7.—That a friend may be kept from falling, and that the brightest days of his life may be given up to Jesus.—For one in very severe business difficulties, that God will reveal His will to her, that she may know what to do.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. J. H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a fourteen days' mission at Green Street Green, Orpington, Kent.

Mr. E. P. Telford has closed a mission in Newark, N.J., and the Lord has been giving much blessing in the work. The services have been held in the old Dutch Reformed Church, which is almost Presbyterian in doctrine and method.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has held an interesting series of children's services in the Avenue Church, Chicago. At the first meeting over 1800 were present, and at the close many professed conviction and conversion. The subsequent services continued to be accompanied by great interest.

Messrs. Crossley and Hunter have been evangelising with much interest in Toronto. The largest church, the Metropolitan, has been crowded night after night, and on Sundays hundreds of persons were not able to obtain access to the building. There have been some remarkable conversions.

Hyde Park.—Daily open-air meetings are being held near the Marble Arch, from 1 to 2 p.m. At first some interruption was experienced from the roughs, but this has now ceased, and hundreds stand round listening to the Gospel. The work is very encouraging, but more helpers are wanted, and would be welcomed by the leader any day.

Rotherhithe.—The eight days' mission at Oldfield-road, Rotherhithe, conducted by Mr. F. H. Dawe, of the Evangelisation Society, was concluded on Sunday last. The services have been well attended, the interest well sustained, and we doubt not that good results are following. Outdoor singing and invitations every night, and about 800 houses were visited and tracts left. L. E. A.

Leeds.—A series of special missions lately held in Branley and other places in the district was attended by great interest, much enthusiasm, and many tokens of blessing. Similar meetings have subsequently been held in Pudsey, Littlemoor, with good results. Short services have been held in various mills and factories, and in this way considerable interest has been aroused.

Newcastle.—Mr. A. Draper reports:—We have closed fourteen days of special evangelistic services at the Soldiers' Home, Spital Tongues. Local ministers and laymen conducted the services. We have had much of the presence and power of God. Sinners were saved, believers quickened, and others were deeply impressed. These meetings were held chiefly for the men and women belonging to the garrison. At the last meeting on Friday nearly everyone present testified to the receiving of blessing.

Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist, Aberdeen, conducted a fifteen days' mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A. in Portsoy, N.B. Mr. Smith's addresses attracted large audiences every night, until the Institute Hall was crowded. In the after meetings great numbers waited to be spoken with, and were ultimately led to Christ. A marked feature of the mission was the number of young men and women who were found in the after meetings in deep anxiety. Mr. Smith has succeeded in reaching the youth of the town.

Rev. Thomas Cook has concluded a mission at Spilsby, and the prayer and expectancy with which the visit has been anticipated have not been in vain. Showers of blessing have descended in every service. The services had been thoroughly advertised. A house-to-house visitation of the town was made just before the mission. Night by night, and each Sunday morning, the people came from miles round, and last Sunday evening the spacious sanctuary was crowded. The workers rejoice over young and old who have decided for Christ, and are confident that greater still will be the results arising from the quickened faith and zeal of many children of God.

Nottingham.—Messrs. Weaver brought to a close on Easter Monday what has proved to be one of the most successful missions in connection with our work. A converts' tea was held, when nearly 100 of those who have received blessing during the mission responded to the invitation. At the after-meeting Mr. Richard Weaver, who had conducted the services on Easter Sunday, presided. Wise words of counsel fell from the lips of the veteran evangelist, which we trust will live in the memories and bring forth fruit in the lives of those who have commenced the Christian life. Many were deeply moved at parting with the two young evangelists, who had been so wonderfully blest during their stay. W. Bell.

Hereford.—At the invitation of the Hereford Sunday-school Union, Mr. Newton Jones held a series of special services from March 18 to 23. On Sunday afternoon all the Nonconformist schools of the city were brought in procession to the Baptist Chapel, which was closely packed with scholars and teachers. Mr. Jones held the children spell-bound while he impressed the truth upon heart and memory. On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday the services were continued at 6.30 each evening for children, and at eight o'clock for adults; whilst on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday afternoons Bible readings were held at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. The whole were well attended, and proved a season of spiritual blessing to young and old alike. Those who passed through the inquiry room at the after meetings appeared to be calmly and intelligently impressed by the Spirit of God and the power of his truth. Some eighty-five of these enquirers (mostly children and young people) gave in their names, and they will become the charge of the various schools. The three Societies of Christian Endeavour connected with the Union were very helpful during the mission, the members largely supporting the preliminary meetings, and also doing yeoman service as workers during the week.

Personalia.

Miss Mary Reed, of Launceston, Tasmania, is coming to England to recruit her health.

Rev. D. W. Simon, D.D., has, we hear, accepted the principalship of the Yorkshire United College.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborne-Howe have arrived in England from their mission work in South-East Africa.

Mr. Henry Cook, of whose good work with the Gospel ships we gave some account last week, may be addressed, 47, Stoke-road, Gosport, Hants.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, who is now on his way home from the Antipodes, spent en voyage a day or two at Colombo. He fully hopes to be in time for the Pastors' College Conference.

Mr. Eugene Stock returned home on Thursday, looking all the better for his trip, and more deeply impressed than ever with the crying need for more workers in all parts of the mission field.

Rev. H. E. Crudgington, the pioneer missionary who, with Mr. Bentley, first reached Stanley Pool, and who has for the last eight years been labouring at Delhi, has just arrived home on furlough.

Bishop Suter, who retired from the Nelson see two years ago, lies in a precarious state in Nelson, in a house into which he was carried stricken with paralysis, after leaving Bishopsdale on his way for England.

Rev. R. Hoskins, of Cawnpore, has organised and trained a band of young men as musical evangelists. They are to go from village to village with native and English instruments, and sing and preach the Gospel.

Dr. Colin S. Valentine, Principal of the Medical Missionary Institute, Agra, has left Bombay for England, on account of the illness of Mrs. Valentine, who is in that country. He expects to return to India in six months.

Mr. Thomas Spurgeon telegraphs from Auckland, New Zealand, in reply to the invitation to occupy the pulpit at the Metropolitan Tabernacle for twelve months, from July, that he cheerfully and gratefully accepts the invitation.

Miss Mann, well and widely known for her devoted service in connection with the Women's Missionary Association of the Presbyterian Church of England, has unhappily met with an accident, which will probably lay her aside for some weeks.

Madame Rodriguez, of the Figueras Mission, is, we regret to hear, seriously ill, two doctors being in attendance. Friends will consequently understand delay in receiving the "Letter from Spain," which otherwise would have been issued by this time.

Mr. John G. Woolley arrived in New York on March 14. He is well satisfied with his six months' work in England. Much good has resulted to his Rest Island mission, near Minneapolis, Minn., which is the central thought of Mr. Woolley's life and work.

Rev. H. B. Macartney, jun., of Melbourne, who is to take part in the World's Christian Congress at Chicago, spent a week in Adelaide in search of information as to the religious condition of the city, before sailing to England at the beginning of last month.

Mr. Gerald Coultas, who has been engaged in evangelistic work over twelve years, and latterly for nigh three years engaged in mission work in the North of London, is now open to book engagements for missions.—Address: 142, Sandringham-road, Dalston, N.E.

Mr. Hermann Warszawiak, of New York, is directing an ever-growing work among the Jews. He trusts soon to be enabled to build a "Christ's Synagogue" as the centre of his mission. We have received from him an interesting letter, which we hope to insert next week.

Rev. David Baron, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, has promised to give short Bible readings at the noon prayer meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, five days during the week beginning April 17th. Mr. Baron's addresses are always of a helpful character, and the proposed series will deal with Old Testament subjects.

The Primate of New Zealand—Dr. Hadfield—has again announced his intention of resigning his bishopric of Wellington. The bishop's career precisely covers the whole period of the Church's growth in the colony. He was ordained over fifty years ago, Bishop Selwyn pressing him into service amongst the Maoris.

Rev. J. Bennett, D.D., having by his sudden death left his widow and four children almost wholly unprovided for, a few devoted friends are raising a fund in aid, believing that many who valued his teaching will gladly give a little towards the support of those he has left. The secretary is Mr. S. S. Bannister, 9, Redcliffe-gardens, S.W.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, after sending his motherless little ones to Norway to stay with relatives, proceeds at the end of the present week to Scotland to address meetings at Glasgow and elsewhere, on the work of God in the New Hebrides. He intends on April 28 to go to Norway for a time, to arrange about his young family before returning to his mission sphere.

REFORMED CHURCH OF SPAIN.

After encountering much opposition, and surmounting many difficulties, the Evangelical Temple in Madrid, in connection with the Reformed Church of Spain, has been duly inaugurated. At the opening the spacious building was filled with an audience composed of people of all classes. Among those who also attended were the pastors of the other Protestant congregations in Madrid, and representatives of the German Evangelical Mission and the British and Foreign Bible Society.

A Madrid paper, La Justicia, states that after the liturgical portion of the service the Bishop-elect of the Spanish Reformed Church, Don Juan Cabrera, delivered a brief address, speaking of the celebration under three aspects—social, historic, and religious. Pastor Fliedner, after offering the loving salutations of German Protestants, presented, on behalf of his fellow-countrymen, a cup and plate of gold. Don Cipriano Tornos spoke in enthusiastic terms of liberty of conscience.

The entire proceedings passed off quietly, and without any intervention on the part of the governor or his subordinates, who were at the meeting.

FAMINE IN KANSUH.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Hunt, one of our C.I.M. missionaries, pastor of the church at Ts'incheo, province of Kansuh, West China, in a letter lately received, says:—"The people here much need our sympathy. Corn is already at famine prices, and threatens to be still dearer. A small famine is raging, and a greater one is expected if this spring's snow and rain are not auspicious. Many people are going with only one meal a day this bitter weather (thermometer 18 deg.), and some are actually starving. Could you stir up a little practical sympathy for Kansuh when you receive this?"

I should be much obliged if you would permit me to make known the sad needs of these Kansuh poor, who at the best of times have little enough of the wherewithal to support life; so that any of your readers who desire it may have an opportunity to put into practical shape their compassion for these afflicted friends. I am quite sure that such a proof of their loving interest could not fail to impress those who would be the objects of their bounty, as has been the case in other parts of China. Any sums sent to the China Inland Mission, 2, Pyrland-road, Mildmay, N., marked, "For Ts'incheo Relief Fund," would be forwarded to Mr. Hunt.

Yours very truly,
Cecil Polhill-Turner.

Blunham Cottage, Sandy, Beds, April 7.

IMPERIAL MISSION HALL, HANLEY.—We have several times spoken of the excellent inter-denominational work carried on from this centre under the direction of Mr. Lancelot Middleton. The building was formerly a music-hall and circus, and has never yet been out-and-out secured for evangelistic effort. In order that the mission may be more firmly established by the property being placed under responsible trustees, it is desirable that the heavy debt on the building should be reduced. Local sources of help have for the present been exhausted, and, as there are important reasons why the trust-scheme should be completed this month, all who know the work will rejoice if Mr. Middleton's recently issued appeal to the Christian public should meet with a substantial response. Long-sustained anxiety regarding the work resulted a month ago in his health breaking down, but we are glad to learn that he is now recovering strength. Mr. Middleton's address is:—Highfield House, Hanley, Staffs.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we purpose giving a portrait and sketch of the late Rev. David Russell, of Glasgow.

We are frequently asked to reprint articles in separate form. But the difficulty is to get pamphlets into circulation. Letters to the papers, and articles in periodicals of every kind, are the most effective and speedy means of communication. Striking facts, tersely stated, with brief comments showing the tendency and significance of the facts, are in these hurrying and quick-thoughted but superficial days, the necessary and efficacious methods of conveying information and of moving public opinion.

Christian men do not use the secular papers as much as they might. Many a piece of intelligence concerning the churches, missions, and associations, would be inserted if promptly sent to the weekly or even the daily press. Reporters and correspondents generally write about the mere externals of religious intelligence, and entirely miss the spiritual aspects of the meeting or the events reported. They would often be pleased to have a paragraph supplied to them presenting the really salient points. Secretaries of the Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., Y.P.S.C.E., P.S.A., and every other organisation should be trained and expected to consider the provision of communications to the Press one of their most privileged and important responsibilities.
